But the better to disclose the sensible grossenesse of this errour, I trust, Gentle Reader, it shall not bee, neither painefull, nor vnprofitable for thee, to consider a few other such examples and phrases of speech commonly and familiarly vsed by the Catholike learned Fathers to like purpose. Therefore, as Chrysostome saith: We receiue in the holy Mysteries the Onely begotten Sonne of God, meaning by Faith Onely, not by Mouth, euen so hee writeth of the Sacrament of Baptisme: Si quis tibi Purpuram aut Diadema dedisset, nonne præ quouis auro accepisses? Ego verò tibi non Ornatum Regium tribuam, sed ipsum Regem induendum exhibeo. Et quomodò, inquies, Christum poterit quis induere? Audi, quid Paulus dicat: Quotquot in Christum Baptizati estis, Christum induistis: If any man had giuē thee a Princely Robe or a Crown, wouldest thou not set more by it, than by any Gold? But I will giue thee not a Princely Robe, but the Prince himselfe, to put vpon thee. Thou wilt say, How may a man put on Christ vpon him? Heare what S. Paul saith: As many of you, as are Baptized in Christ, haue put on Christ. Here Chrysostome teacheth vs, that in Baptisme we receiue, not onely the Kings Princely Robe, but also the King himselfe. S. Cyril saith: Discant omnes, ne, antequam firmiores sint Catechumeni Christum

I doubt not, but M. Harding will better bethinke himſelfe, and not require vs, to take all theſe ſayings, without any maner of fauourable expoſition, barely, and nakedlie, as they lie. Otherwiſe he muſt nedes incombre himſelfe with a great number of inconueniences.

Of theſe phraſes and maners of ſpæch, S. Auguſtine giueth his iudgment in this ſort: Omnia ſignificantia videntur quodammodò earum rerum, quas Significant, ſuſtinere perſonas: All Signes or Tokens ſeeme in a manner to beare the perſons of the things themſelues, that they Signifie. As for example he ſaith: Sicut dictum eſt ab Apoſtolo, Petra erat Chriſtus: quoniam Petra illa, de qua hoc dictum eſt, Significabat Chriſtum: So the Apoſtle ſaith, The Rocke was Chriſt: For that the Rocke, whereof it was ſpoken, Signified Chriſt. Auguſt. de Ciuitate Dei, lib. 18. cap. 48.

Likewiſe Athanaſius ſaith: Qui Regis Imaginem videt, Regem videt, & dicit: En tibi Regem. Nequetamen duos Reges conſtituit: neque Imaginem particulam eſſe Regis, neque Regem particulam Imaginis eſſe iudicat: Hee that ſeeth the Image of a King, ſeeth the King, and ſaith: Behold there is the King, and yet (ſo ſaying) hee maketh not two Kings: Nor thinketh he, either that the Image is a parcell of the King, or that the King is parcell of the Image. Athan. Oratio. contra Sabellij Gregales.

S. Gregory in plainer wiſe ſaith thus: Eundem Agnum Johannes oſtendendo, Eſaias prævidendo, Abel offerendo loquutus eſt. Et quem Iohannes in oſtenſione, quem Eſaias in loquutione, Hunc Abel ſignificando in Manibus tenuit: Iohn the Baptiſt by pointing with his finger, Eſaias by foreſeeing, Abel by offering ſpake all three of one Lambe. And Abel by ſignifying, held the ſame Chriſt in his hands, whom Iohn held by pointing, and whom Eſaias held by Prophecying. Againe he ſaith: Intus ad Chriſtum reſpicit, quem per conſiderationem portat in Corde: Inwardly he beholdeth Chriſt, whom by Meditation he beareth in his Heart. Gregor. in Iob. lib. 29. Cap. 18. Greg in 1. Reg. cap. 2. lib. 2.

Such amplifications and vehement, and extraordinary ſpæches, notwithſtanding in ſome caſes they may bæ dangerous, yet oftentimes they ſæme neceſſary, the better to quicken the dulneſſe and negligence of the people. And therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith: Behold: The Lambe of God is ſlaine: The Blood euen now is drawen from his ſide: and the whole people is coloured and made red and bloody with the ſame: Not for that it was ſo indæd: but to lift vp, and to withdraw the Hearts of the people from the outward Corrup- Chryſoſt. de Sacerdot. lib. 3.

tible Creatures of the Bread and Wine, to a Spirituall and Mysticall vnderstanding, that is to say, to the Eating and Drinking of the very Body and Blood of Christ. And to that end he saith: Aquilas appellat, vt ostendat, ad alta eum oportere contendere, qui ad hoc Corpus accedit: He calleth vs Eagles, to shew, that he must mount on high, and fly aloft, who so will approch neere to that Body. Likewise he saith: In Cœlum vocat nos, ad Magni Regis Mensam: Christ calleth vs vp into Heauen, vnto the Table of the great King. And againe: Illum Sursum sedentem hic degustamus: We being heere beneath, taste him sitting in Heauen aboue. So saith S. Hieronme: Ascendamus cum Domino in Cœnaculum Magnum, stratum, atque mundatum: & accipiamus ab eo Sursum Calicem Noui Testamenti: Let vs ascend vp with our Lord into that great Dining Chamber adorned and made cleane, and there aboue let vs receiue of him the Cup of the New Testament.

Chrys. ad Popul. Antioshen. homil. 61.

Hieronym. ad Hedibiam.

So saith S. Augustine: Vbi fuerit Corpus, illuc Congregabuntur Aquilæ, id est, in Cœlum: Illuc Congregabuntur Aquilæ: dictum est de Spiritualibus, qui eius Passionem, Humilitatemque imitando, tanquam de eius Corpore saturantur: Where as the Carkase shall be, thither shall the Eagles resort together: that is to say, Into Heauen: Thither shall the Eagles resort together; This is spoken of the Spirituall Faithfull men, that following his Passion and Humilty, be filled, as it were, with his Body.

Aug. Quæst. Euangelic. lib. 1. cap. 42.

So saith Leo: Circa hoc Corpus Aquilæ sunt, quæ alis circumuolant Spiritualibus: About this Body there are Eagles, that flie about with Spirituall wings.

De Cons. dist. 2 In quibus.

Thus are the Faithfull made Eagles. Thus is the Earth become Heauen: Not for that Christs Body is pulled downe, as M. Harding imagineth, but for that our mindes and affections be lifted vp. For so Chrysostome himselfe expoundeth his owne meaning: Hodie nobis Terra facta est Cœlum, non stellis de Cœlo in Terram descendentibus, sed Apostolis ad Cœlum Ascendentibus. Quia effusa est Copiosa Gratia Spiritus Sancti: & Vniuersum Orbem operata est Cœlum: non immutans Naturam, sed voluntatem emendans: This day the Earth is made Heauen: not by the Starres comming downe vpon the Earth: but by the going vp of the Apostles into Heauen. For the abundant grace of the Holy Ghost is powred out, and hath turned the whole World into Heauen: not by changing of nature, but by correcting the wil of man. Likewise againe he saith: Apostoli in Terra constituti, in Cœlo conuersabantur. Et quid dico, in Cœlo? Altiores erant Cœlo: etiam alio Cœlo: Et ad ipsum Dominum peruenerunt: The Apostles dwelling in the Earth, had their conuersation in Heauen. But what say I, in Heauen? They were higher then Heauen: yea then the second Heauen, and came euen vnto the Lord himselfe. Againe he saith: Dauid terram in Cælum vertit: & Homines facit Angelos: Dauid turneth the Earth into Heauen: and of men he maketh Angels. Againe he saith in this selfe same place by M. Harding alleged: Vt Terra nobis Cælum sit, facit hoc mysterium. Ascende igitur ad Cæli portas, & diligenter attende: Imò non Cæli, sed Cæli Cælorum: & tunc, quod dicimus intueberis: This Mystery causeth, that vnto vs the Earth is Heauen. Ascend vp therefore vnto the Gates of Heauen: and marke diligently. Nay, I say not, Vnto the Gates of Heauen: but Vnto the Gates of the Heauen of Heauens. And so shalt thou see the things that I tell thee.

Chrys. ad Hebraos, hom. 16.

Chryso. de pœnitent. homil. 6.

Chrysost. in 1. Cor. homil. 24.

Now iudge thou, good Christian Reader, how true it is, and how agreeable with S. Chrysostomes Doctrine, that M. Harding saith: Must we flie so high, that wee looke not to find this Body in Earth? Can we not eat this Body, except we flie vp into Heauen? Can we not come by it, but there? Can we not Eat him, but there? Yes forsooth. We need not goe out of the Earth for the matter. If it be so, then may you rest in the Earth, and tarrie there still, and neuer trouble your eies to loke vp to Heauen.

Verily, Chrysostome when he saith, We receiue the Sonne of God, maketh mention neither of Transubstantiation, nor of Reall and Fleshly Presence, nor of Eating with Mouth or Teeth, but onely sendeth vs to the force and working of Faith and Spirit: whereby onely, and by no way else, we receiue and Eat in deed, and Verily the Body of Christ.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuision 6.

In Iohan. Tract. 50.

And S. Augustine saith: How shall I holde him, being Absent? How shall I reach my hand vp to Heauen, to lay hold vpon him sitting there? He answereth: Reach thither thy Faith, and then thou hast laid hold on him.

M. Harding.

Vpon these words of S. Iohn, The Bishops and Pharisеis gaue commandement, that if any knew where Iesus were, hee should shew it, that they might apprehend him, S. Augustine expounding the same Iohn 11.

S. Augustine speaketh not of receiuing Christ in the Sacrament, but by Faith onely.

same in a contrarie sense, saith: Let vs now shew the Iewes where Christ is: would God they would de heare, and lay hold on him. Where he speaketh not of receiuing Christ, so as we receiue him in the Sacrament, but of receiuing him by Faith only. And there he willeth and exhorteth the Iewes to come to the Faith, and teacheth them how they may profitably lay hold on Christ, whom their Forefathers laid hold on with violent hands to their damnation. Let them come to the Church (saith he) let them heare where Christ is, and lay hold on him. After certaine words he maketh this obiection to himself: Well, the Iew answereth me, How shall I hold him that is Absent? How shall I reach vp my hand to Heauen, that I may lay hold on him, which sitteth there? Reach thither thy Faith (saith Augustine) and then thou hast laid hold on him. Then followeth in the same line that which plainely declareth all this to be meant of laying hold of Christ by Faith, not by receiuing the Communion: Parentes tui tenuerunt Carnem: tu tene Cor. Thy Forefathers (thou Iew) tooke hold on Christ in Flesh: take thou hold on him in thy Heart. There he sheweth how Christ may be holden, though (concerning the visible and Sensible Presence of his Body) he be in Heauen at the Right Hand of the Father. All this, and whatsoeuer is said there vpon the Text before recited, implieth not so much as any colour of argument against the Truth of Christs very Bodie in this most blessed Sacrament. And thus all your allegations and reasons concerning this matter be sufficiently answered.

And by Faith only we receiue Christ in the Sacrament.

* He speaketh not of the receiuing of the Sacrament, but he speaketh of the receiuing of the Very Bodie of Christ, which is wrought only by Faith.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

It is true that M. Harding saith: S. Augustine in this place speaketh nothing of purpose and Specially of the Sacrament. Certainely it had beene great vanity for him to will his Hearers to seeke for the Sacrament in Heauen aboue. But hee speaketh of the embracing and holding the very Body of Christ, being now in Heauen. Which thing is wrought onely by Faith, and none otherwise, whether it be in the Sacrament, or without the Sacrament. Infinite sentences haue been uttered by the Holy Fathers to like purpose.

To touch, to Hold Christ.

S. Augustine saith: Accedite ad eum, & illuminamini: Quid est, accedite, nisi Credite? Come vnto him, and receiue the Light: What is Come vnto him, but, Beleeue in him? Againe Ambulando non laborabitis: Ibi enim Acceditis, vbi Creditis: Your walking shall not be painfull to you: For there ye Come to him, where ye Beleeue in him. Aug. aduersus Iudaos, cap. 9. August. in Iohan. Tract. 48.

Againe he saith: Exijt de Manibus eorum: Non enim apprehendere eum potuerunt, quia Manus Fidei non habuerunt: Christ departed out of their hands: For they could not lay hold on him, because they had not the Hands of Faith. Againe: Christus non recte tangitur: id est, non recte in eum creditur: Christ is not well touched: that is to say, Christ is not well Beleeued. Likewise againe he saith: Sunt in Corde Spirituales Manus: There be certaine Spirituall Hands in the Heart. And therefore S. Ambrose saith: Stephanus in Terris positus, Christum tangit in Cœlo; Steuen being in the Earth, (by Faith) toucheth Christ being in Heauen. August. in Iohan. Tract. 121. August. de Natura & Gratia, Cap. 69. Ambr. Ser. 58.

But as S. Augustine so often saith, Wee embrace and hold Christ by Faith; so is not M. Harding able to shew that he euer once said, Wee hold Christ with Mouth or Teeth, or receiue him downe into Our Bellies. And therefore S. Ambrose saith: Non Corporali tactu Christum, sed Fide tangimus: We touch not Christ by Bodily touching; but we touch him by Faith. And againe: Fide Christus tangitur: Fide Christus videtur: Non Corpore tangitur: Non Oculis comprehenditur: By Faith Christ is touched: By Faith Christ is seene: He is not touched with our Bodies: He is not holden with our Eies: Likewise S. Augustine saith: Dominus consolatur nos, qui ipsum iam in Cœlo sedentem Manu contrectare non possumus: Sed Fide contingere (possumus) The Lord Comforteth vs, that cannot now Touch him with Hand, sitting in Heauen: But by Faith wee may touche him. Ambr in Luc. lib. 10. cap. 24. Ambr. in Luc. lib. 6. cap. 8. Aug. in Epist. Iohan. Tract. 1.

Now, forasmuch as M. Harding saith: S. Augustine in this place maketh no mention of the receiuing of Christs Body in the Sacrament, it shall not be from the purpose to consider what he hath written otherwhere touching the same. Thus he saith: Christus est Cibus noster, quo nihil dulcius: Sed si quis habeat Palatum sanum in Corde: Christ himselfe is our Meat, then which Meat there is nothing more sauoury, so that a man haue a sound taste in his Heart. Againe he saith: Dominus dixit se Panem, qui de Cœlo descendit, hortans vt Credamus in eum. Credere enim in eum, hoc est Manducare Panem Viuum. Qui Credit in eum, Manducat: Inuisibiliter Saginatur, quia Inuisibiliter renascitur. Infans Intus est: Nouus Intus est: Vbi nouellatur, ibi satiatur: Our Lord calleth himselfe the Bread that came from Heauen, exhorting vs to Beleeue in him. For to Beleeue in him, that is to Eat the Bread of Life. He Eateth, that Beleeueth in him He is fedde Inuisibly, because hee is new borne Inuisibly. Inwardly he is an Infant: Inwardly he is new. Where he is renued, there is he filled. August. in Iohan. Tracta. 7. August in Iohan. Tract. 26.

So saith Eusebius Emissenus, as he is alleged by Gratian: Cùm ad Reuerendum Altare Cœlestibus Cibis fariandus accedis, Sacrum Dei tui Corpus & Sanguinem respice, Honora, Mirare, Mente Continge: Cordis Manu Suscipe: & maximè hausturo Interio- De Cons. Dist. 2. Quia corpus ri assume: When thou commest vnto the Reuerend Altar, (or, Communion Table) to be Fedde with the Heauenly Meats, behold the Holy Body and Blood of thy God: Honour it: Wonder at it: Touch it (not with thy Bodily Mouth but) with thy Minde: Receiueit (not with thy Bodily Hand, but) with the Hand of thy Heart: and specially take it with thy Inner taste.

Aug. Ferm. 2. Paschatis, Serm. 1.

Therefore S. Augustine saith: Quisquis cum Fide & timore Verbum Dei audis, consolatur te Fractio panis. Absentia Domini non est Absens. Habeto Fidem: & tecum est, quem non vides. Ideò Dominus absentauit se Corpore ab omni Ecclesia, & Ascendit in Cœlum, vt Fides ædificetur: Whosoeuer thou be that with Faith and Feare heareſt the Word of God, the Breaking of Bread doth Comfort thee. The Absence of our Lord is not Absent. Haue thou Faith: and he whom thou seeſt not is with thee. Therefore our Lord as touching his Christ absent from all his Church.

Body, hath Absented himselfe from all his Church, and is Ascended into Heauen, that our Faith may bee edified.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 50.

And in this selfe same place that M. Harding saith maketh so little for our purpose, he saith thus: Quomodò tenebo Absentem? Quomodò in Cœlum manum mittam, vt ibi sedentem teneam? Fidem mitte, & tenuisti. Parentes tui tenuerunt Carne: Tu tene Corde. Quoniam Christus Absens, etiam Præsens est. Nisi Præsens esset, à nobis ipsis teneri non posset. Sed quoniam verum est quod ait, Ecce ego vobiscum sum vsque ad consummationem Sæculi, & abijt, & hic est: redijt, & nos non deseruit. Corpus enim suum intulit Cœlo: Maiestatem autem non abstulit Mundo: How shall I hold Christ being Absent? How shall I thrust my hand into Heauen, that I may hold him sitting there? Send vp thy Faith, and thou holdeſt him. Thy Fathers (the Iewes) held him in Flesh: Hold him thou in thy Heart. For Christ being absent, is also Present. Vnleſſe he were Present, wee could not hold him. But for asmuch as it is true that he saith, Behold, I am with you vntill the end of the World, therefore he is gone, and yet is here. He is come againe, and hath not forsaken vs. For hee hath aduanced his Body into Heauen: but hee hath not withdrawen his Maiestie from the World.

All these things well considered, whereas M. Harding in the end concludeth with these words: Thus all your allegations and reasons, concerning this Matter, be sufficiently answered: I doubt not, but his discreet and indifferent Reader will thinke, he crew long before it was day.

The Apology, Chap. 15. Diuision 1.

NEither can wee away in our Churches with these Shewes, and Sales, and Markets of Masses, nor with the carrying about, and worshipping of the Bread: nor with such other Idolatrous, and Blasphemous fondnesse: Which none of them can proue, that Christ, or his Apostles euer ordeined, or left vnto vs. And we iustly blame the Bishops of Rome, who, without the Word of God, without the Authority of the

In Ceremoniario Rom. Eccle.

Holy Fathers, without any Example of Antiquity, after a New Guise, doe not onely set before the People the Sacramentall Bread to bee worshipped as God, but doe also carry the same about vpon an ambling Palfrey, whether soeuer themselues iourney: in such sort, as in Olde Times the Persians Fire, and the Reliques of the Goddesse Isis were solemnly carried about in Procession: and haue brought the Sacraments of Christ to be vsed now as a Stage Play, and a solemne sight: to the end, that Mens eies should be fedde with nothing else, but with madde gazings, and foolish gaudes, in the selfe same matter, wherein the Death of Christ ought diligently to be beaten into our Hearts, and wherein also the Mysteries of our Redemption ought with all Holinesse and Reuerence to be executed.

(a) Vntruth. For wee honour the Holy Mysteries: & you profanely dishonour them.

(b) Vntruth. For as it is now vsed, there is no viler dishonour, nor greater Blasphemie.

M. Harding.

The things which it liketh your Satanicall Spirit with blasphemous word to (a) dishonour, and bring in contempt, are such, as neither your praises can make more praise worthy, nor your vpbraidings any whit of lesse estimation. If any by the stinking breath of your vile words bee puffed away into your damned side, whosoeuer they be, they shew themselues to haue beene light (I hasse not found Wheat. Yet for good folkes sake, that I may leaue your vile Eloquence to your selues, and answer the matter by you railed at, and belied, and otherwise not disprooued: I pray you, good Sirs, the (b) Masse being the highest, and most Honourable Seruice that is done to God in his Church, (which otherwhere being alreadie prooued, I treat not of in this place) why shoulde not a Priest, by whom Matth. 3. Luc. 3.

A Priest may iustlie enioy his necessary liuing for seruing at the Altar, & for saying Masse. We know no Worshippers of Bread.

whom only it is, and may be done, (c) being called to that vocation, or state of life, haue reward and liuing for it? Raile against the Masse, and Priests seruing at the Altar of God, vntil your tongues burne in your head in Hell Fire: We tell you, Priests of the Catholike Church sell (d) not the Fruit and Merit of Christs Blood offered in the Masse, but onely for their Ministery and labour, require necessary sustenance of Life.

But for your Defense, yee confesse, that ye cannot away with the carrying about and worshipping of Bread: No more cannot wee. To whose charge lay yee this? Be there any such Idolatours now, that worship Bread? They would be knowen. (e) God forbidde we should suffer Idolatours to liue amongst vs. Soothly in the Catholike Church we know none. If ye cannot away with the Honour which * all deuout Christian people doe to the * blessed Sacrament, (we meane to Christs Body, and Christ himselfe * present in Substance vnder * the Formes of Bread) then cannot we take you for Christians. Mocke, scoffe, iest, and raile at vs with the Iewes; wee dare not, but Honour our Lord Christ, where soeuer our Faith findeth him verily and in Substance present.

If through feruent zeale (as sometime it happeneth) abuses in certain places haue crept in, no good Catholike man (f) defendeth them. Marry we know all is not to be abrogated that misliketh your corrupt taste. (g) And much is right Holy Deuotion pleasant in the sight of God, and therefore allowed in the Church, which your hot Spirit calleth Idolatrous and Blasphemous fondnes. And though the Ceremony and maner wherby such Deuotion is shewed, cannot be proued by ordinance of Christ, or of the Apostles, expressed in Scripture, yet Christian people doubt not, but God accepteth their good hearts.

The Bishop of Rome ye blame vniustly: might say also proudly. For procuring * Honour and worship to Christ in the Blessed Sacrament, he hath the * Word of God, * the authoritie of all Holy Fathers, and * the examples of antiquity, as (h) I haue at large prooued in my answer to your companion Master Iewell his eighth Negatiue Article. But the ambling Horse offendeth you. Why be ye not also offended with the Asse and her fole, that bare the (i) same Body at Ierusalem, which the Horse beareth at Rome: then Visible and weighty, now Inuisible, and of no weight? That was done in pompe to the honour of Christ, and so is this. Ye say this is done after a new guise. So then was that. Neither is it true which yee say, that the Bishops of Rome doe carrie about with them the Sacrament whither soeuer they iourney.

Lib. Ceremoniarū. Eccl. Rom. Sectione 12. ca. 1. Baldachinū.

(k) Ye might haue learned in that Book, out of which ye allege that matter to scoffe at, that such a solemnity is vsed specially when the Pope rideth in Pontificalibus. Then (as the Booke telleth) a white Palfrey, trapped, gentle, and faire, with a cleere sounding bell hanging at his necke, is ledde, which carrieth the Monstrance, or Pyx, with the most Holy Body of Christ, ouer the which noble Citizens shall bear a Canopie. Thus the Booke of Ceremonies.

(l) And I pray you, what euill is this? If it be good to carry about that most Holy Body, by which as Christ once redeemed vs, so by the same deuoutly honoured of faithfull people, and caried abroad, and brought to certaine places, hath in old times (as yet also doth continually) to the great comfort & help of sundry persons being in distresse, wrought miraculously healthfull remedies. If the Israelites found helpe at Gods hand by (m) bringing the Arke into the field with them, as they marched forward against the Philistians: If the Philistians cried out for feare when they perceiued the Arke to bee in the Israelites Armie, and said: Venit Deus in Castra, Væ nobis: God is come into their Tents. Alas, wee are vndone, &c.

1. Regum 4. 1. Regum 5.

In the order of this Ceremonie nothing appeareth to a christian man vnseemly or vnreasonable.

And concerning the order of the Ceremony, whereas (n) the people be desirous to behold the Bodie of their redeemer with their Faith by their carnall eie directed to the Forme of Bread, no man is able to hold vp on hie the Sacrament, so as conuenient it were to be done, both to satisfie their Deuotiō, & to maintaine their Faith: for the Pope himselfe commonly is an aged man, & therefore ouer weake (o) for that Seruice, specially arraied in Pontificalibus, as in such solemnities he is. Againe, the instrumēt that serueth for that purpose is so great and weighty, (for so it appertaineth to the honor of Christ) the way so long, the aire for the more part there so hot, as no other man is well able, for lack of strength, to bear it so as meet it is to be borne. In this case (o) why may not a horse be put to that seruice, to supply that which by natural weakenesse faileth in man? Wherin he serueth not as one that beareth a male, but as the Asse that bare Christ, as the Kine that drew the Arke.

The custome of carrying the Sacrament where the Pope goeth is neither new, nor strange.

Neither ought the custome of bearing the most holy Body of Christ where the Pope goeth, seeme New and Strange. For we read in the life of the Blessed Martyr Steuen the First, who was Pope of Rome aboue thirteen hundred yeeres past, that Tharsitius the Deacon (who at length also suffered death for Christ) bare our Lords Body, at what time he attended vpon the Blessed Man Pope Steuen, as he went to his Martyrdome. Who desireth to see this described at large, the same may hee finde in (that Great fond Fabular) Simeon Metaphrastes a Greeke writer, wel approued and highly esteemed in the Greek Church: In vita Stephani Primi.

For witnesse wherof we haue S. Ambrose, who describeth how certain faithfull persons carried (p) this Blessed Sacrament with them when they went to the Sea, of whom his brother Satyrus obteined the same in a shipwracke, and by helpe thereof, hanging it in a stole about his neck, seeking for none other succour cast himselfe into the Sea, and miraculously escaped safe to land. Neither is the same by him done without a speciall Mysterie, though vnknowne to the more part. Although, saith a learned Pope, a reason cannot be giuen of all things, whatsoeuer haue bene brought in vse by our Forefathers: yet I thinke, quoth he, that therein lie hidden profound Mysteries.

This Defender followeth Iulia, Lucia, Porphyrius, Celsus, and such other wicked Infidels.

Contra Celsum li. 6. de Mithra. Vide Suidam in dictione.

I report me now to the secret Consciences of good Christiā people, whether the Bishops of Rome vse not the Blessed Sacrament reuerently and honorably, or no, but rather (q) as the Persians Fire, and the Relques of the Goddesse Isis, as a stage play, mad gazings, and foolish Gaudes, as it liketh this wicked Chams brood to raile. Wherein they follow the steps which Iulian the Apostata, Lucian, Porphyrius, Celsus, and such other prophane Hell hounds haue trodden before them. For after the like maner, they railed at the Holy Mysteries of Christian Religion, namely Celsus, who, as Origen writeth of him, obiected to the Christians the Sacrifices of Mithra, (which was an Idoll that the Persians worshipped, and called it the Sunne) from whence (he said) they had taken all their Sacraments, Rites, and Ceremonies. And right so (as we find in S. Augustin writing against the Manichees) the Paynims found fault with the Christian people for * Honor done to the * Body and Blood of Christ vnder * Formes of Bread and Wine, saying that they Honoured Bacchus and Ceres.

(c) Vntruth. For Christ neuer called his Disciples, or sent them a-bread to say Masse.

(d) Alas, they haue it not. Otherwise for money it should away.

(e) God forbid there should bee water in the Sea.

* Vntruths, and most fond & blasphemous follies.

(f) Yet not one of your Catholike Prelates amendeth them.

(g) Vntruth, fōd and Heathenish, for God himselfe saith, In vaine they worship me.

* Vntruths foure together: For he dishonoureth Christ. Hee hath neither Gods VVord, nor the Authority of all the Fathers, nor the examples of Antiquity.

(h) Note that in the same one little Article M. Harding hath sent vs twelue great Vntruths.

(i) Vntruth. For this is onely the Sacrament of that same Body.

(k) Doth M. H. scoffe at these gāes, or speaketh hee in earnest?

(l) VVhy should a wise man speake so fondly? Read the Answer.

(m) They did it against Gods will, and speedde thereafter. Read the Answer.

(n) Graue Confiserations.

(o) A horse supplieth the Popes office.

(p) It was a great abuse of the Sacrament: and yet without either Pyx, or Pump, & therefore was afterward vtterly taken away throughout y whole Church of God.

(q) If ye had not these games īō thence, then tell vs from whence ye had them.

* Most vaine vntruths. For S. Augustine speaketh neither of Adoration, nor of Christs Body, nor of Formes.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Sale of Maſſes.

Concerning theſe Satanical Spirits, and ſtinking breaths, and vile words, and ſuch other like flowers of your Eloquence, M. Harding, I confeſſe my ſelfe to bee farre inferiour, and neuer able to make you anſwer. It is true that ye ſay, The Workeman is worthy of his hire. S. Paul ſaith: The Lord hath appointed, that who ſo Preacheth the Goſpell, ſhould liue by the Goſpell. But where did Chriſt euer ſay vnto you, Goe into all the World, & ſay priuate Maſſe, and offer me vp vnto my Father for Remiſſion of Sinnes? What Apoſtle, what Prophet, what Doctour, what Father euer taught you ſo to doe? If ye ſet your ſelfe a worke without Commiſſion, and runne forth when no man biddeth you, then are ye your owne men: and of reaſon ought to pay your ſelues.

Conſtitutiõ Othonis Legatine, Fol. 143. If your Maſſes, as you ſay, were neuer ſet to open ſale, wherefore then was this Decree written in the Councell of Oxford; Venalitatem Miſſarum diſtrictè inhibemus? Wee ſtraightly forbid the ſale of Maſſes? Thinke you that ſo many wiſe Fathers would forbid that thing that neuer was vſed? In the like Conference holden at Wormes, the Biſhop of Sidon being there preſent, durſt not ſay, as you dare ſay, there was no ſuch vnlawfull Sale, but onely ſaid, It was out of ſeaſon to talke thereof. His words be theſe: In Colloquio Wormatien. Conceſſu. 5. Quid attinebat de Miſſis venalibus, de Mercatu Indulgentiarum, &c. mentionem intempeſtiuam inducere? What was it to the purpoſe to ſpeake of the Selling of Maſſes, and Pardons, out of ſeaſon?

The Prieſts (yée ſay) of the Catholike Church ſell not the fruit and Merit of Chriſts Blood. No maruell: For they haue it not to ſell. But if ye had Chriſt himſelfe, ye would ſet him to ſale as other your Fathers haue done before you. Such a one was he, of whom S. Gregorie writeth: Ieſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum Hæretico, accepta Pecunia, venundedit: Gregor. Lib. 2. Epiſt. 33. He tooke money, and ſold Ieſus Chriſt our Lord vnto an Heretike. And when the Biſhop of Rome ſelleth his Pardons, what other thing would he ſeeme to ſell, but onely the Fruits and Merits of the Blood of Chriſt?

Ye ſay further: God forbidde wee ſhould ſuffer Idolaters to liue amongſt vs. And yet your néere friends haue thought ye haue not beene farre from the maintenance of Idolatry. Polydorus Virgilius intreating of the worſhipping of Images, ſaith thus: Polydor. de Inuentorib. Rer. lib. 6. cap. 13. Eò inſaniæ deuentum eſt, vt hæc pars Pietatis parùm differat ab impietate: They are ſo farre proceeded in madneſſe, that this part of Holineſſe is not farre from wickednеſſe. And Ludouicus Viues ſaith, he ſeeth no great difference betweene certaine Chriſtians worſhipping their images, and the Old Heathens adoring their Idols.

Ye ſay: The carrying about of the Sacrament is right Holy Deuotion, pleaſant in the ſight of God and Chriſtian people doubt not, but God accepteth their good hearts. Euen ſo, no doubt, as whe he ſaid ſometime vnto the Iewes, Eſai. 1. Quis requiſiuit iſta de manibus veſtris? Who required theſe things at your hands?

Augu. de Conſent. Euãgeliſt. lib. 1. cap. 18. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Socratis ſententia eſt, Vnumquemque Deum ſic coli oportere, quomodò ſe ipſe colendum eſſe præceperit: The iudgement of Socrates is this, that euery God ought ſo to be worſhipped, as he himſelfe hath commanded. Againe he ſaith: Conſtat, Fidem ſtultam non ſolùm minimè prodeſſe, ſed etiam obeſſe: Aug. in Quæſt. ex Veteri Teſtam. quæſt. 43. It is certaine, that a Foolish Faith not onely doeth not good, but alſo hurteth.

Chryſoſtom. in Act. Hom. 49. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Tales ſunt Diabolo venandi artes: qui prætextu pietatis laqueos tegit: Such ſleights of hunting hath the Diuell: vnder the colour of Holineſſe he hideth his ſnares.

Gabr. Lect. 26. But as touching the ſolemnity of carrying the Sacrament, your owne Doctour Gabriel Biel could haue told you: Chriſtus non dedit Diſcipulis Sacramentum, vt ipſum honorificè conſeruarent: ſed dedit in ſui vſum, dicens, Accipite, & Manducate: Chriſt gaue not the Sacrament to his diſciples to the end they ſhould keepe it with Honour: But hee gaue it to them for their vſe, ſaying to them, Take and Eat. Likewiſe ſaith Humbertus: Chriſtus non tantùm Benedixit Panem, & réſeruauit frangendum in craſtinum: nec fregit tantùm, & repoſuit, ſed fractum ſtatim diſtribuit: Citatur à Caſſandro in Liturgijs. Chriſt did not only Bleſſe the Bread, and reſerue it to be broken the next day: Nor did he only breake it, and lay it vp: but beeing broken, ſtraightway he deliuered it.

Vaine Deuotion.

All this ſtrange ſolemne Feſtiuall guiſe Pope Vrbanus the Fourth learned, not of Chriſt, or Paul, but only by the Reuelation of Dame Eue the Anchoriſſe: and by her good aduice founded the New Feaſt of Corpus Chriſti, and cauſed the Sacrament to be borne about in Proceſſion.

Chryſ. in Mat. Homil 51. But the ancient and worthy Father Chryſoſtome ſaith: Diſcamus Chriſtum ex ipſius voluntate honorare: Nam qui honoratur, eo maximè honore lætatur, quem ipſe vult: non quem nos optamus: Let vs learne to honour Chriſt after his owne will: For hee that is honoured, delighteth moſt in that honour that he himſelfe would haue: not in that honour that we can fancie. Notwithstanding, when the Sacramentall Bread is carried onely vpon a horse, and the Pope himselfe is borne aloft in a Chaire of Gold, vpon the shoulders of sir or eight Noble men, I pray you, whether of them hath greater Honour?

wee

Vaine Deuotion.

For the rest, The Pope (saith M. Harding) is an old man: he rideth in his Pontificalibus: he is loden with apparell: The Pix is weightie: The weather is hot: There is none other Creature to ply his roome. Therefore it is lately concluded in Louaine in great solemne sadnesse, that a horse must be had in to play the Popes part, and to carry the Monstrance.

Here, forasmuch as M. Harding hath purposely made mention of the Popes riding in his Pontificalibus, and the Solemnity and Pompe thereof is knowne to few, it shall not be impertinent, briefly to disclose the order thereof. Thus therefore it is written in the Ceremoniary of Rome: Sic Papa equitat in Pontificalibus in aliquam Ciuitatem. Cardinales descendunt ex equis, & accedunt reuerenter ad Papam, & osculantur illi pedem. Episcopus Ciuitatis accedit ad Papam cum debitis reuerentijs, & offert illi Crucem osculandam: quam Pontifex reuerenter, cum Mitra tamen osculabitur. Non enim commodè poterit ei abstrahi equiti ab equestribus. Si tamen placuerit & Mitram deponere, non erit inconueniens. Deinde Prelatus incipiat Antiphonam, Ecce Sacerdos Magnus: Thus the Popes Holmesse rideth into any City in his Pontificalibus. The Cardinals light from their horses, and come reuerently vnto the Pope, and kisse his foot. The Bishop of the Citie commeth likewise to the Pope with due reuerence, and offereth him the Crosse to kisse: which the Pope shall kisse reuerently, keeping on his Miter notwithstanding. For while he sitteth on horse backe, his horsemen cannot very easily take off his Miter and set it on againe. Howbeit, if it shall like him to put off his Miter, it shall be no great inconuenience. Afterward the Bishop shall begin this Antheme, Behold the Great Priest. And so he pricketh forth along in his Pontificalibus. Ceremon. Section. 12. cap. 5.

The carrying out of the Arke of God into the field, in the time of Eli the high Priest, boadeth no very good Argument for the carrying of the Sacrament. For at that time the Army of Israel was ouerthrowen, thirtie thousand Souldiers were slaine, and amongst them the two Sonnes of Eli: The Arke was taken: Eli himselfe fell backe from his Chaire, and brake his necke. Therefore, M. Harding, ye shall haue much adoe to make good your Procession by this example. 1. Regum 4.

This matter (ye say) hath beene proued by sundry Miracles. First, whether there haue beene any such Miracles wrought, or no, it is vncertaine. But were it granted, yet may not your Miracles alwaies stand for good proofes. Your owne Doctor Alexander de Hales saith: Miracula fiunt aliquando humana procuratione: aliquando Diabolica operatione: Miracles be wrought sometime by the working and procurement of men: and sometime by the conueiance of the Diuell. Alexand. Halen. Part. 4. qua. 53. Mem. 4. Articul. 3.

The tales that ye alledge of Tharsitus and Satyrus, make nothing, either for the Adoration of the Sacrament, or else for the Popes Pallfrey. Women, and Children, and Lay men vsed then to carrie home the Sacrament in their Napkins, and to keepe it in forcelets, as in my Former Reply it is largely shewed. But these were abuses of the Mysterie: and therefore afterward were abolished. Articulo 1.

The carrying of the Sacrament Actorum 19.

It greeueth you much that we say, The Pope causeth the Sacramentall Bread to be carried before him vpon a Horse, as the Kings of Persia vsed in old times to carry the Fire, which they called Orimasda, and imagined the same to be their God. And therefore yee cry out in your Passion, Chams brood, Helhounds, and whatsoeuer might serue you best: euen with like Sobriety and Modestie, as they who sometime in the like case cried out, Magna Diana Ephesiorum: Great is Diana of the Ephesians. Howbeit, other example more agreeable to resemble your folly we could finde none.

Neither may ye iustly and truely say, ye haue receiued none of your Orders and Vsages from the Heathens. Your owne Glosse noteth vpon the Decrees: Clerici euntes ad Tumulos mortuorum, portabant secum Sacramenta Corporis & Sanguinis Christi: & super Tumulos ea distribuebant. Et hæc Consuetudo facta fuit a Gentibus: The Clerks (or Priests) going to the graues of the dead, carried with them the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of Christ, and made distribution thereof ouer the graues. And this same Custome was vsed among the Heathens. Nicolaus Leonicenus saith: Isidis Sacerdotes in Ægypto vtebantur Lineis vestibus, & semper erant detonso capillo: quod etiam per manus traditum ad nostra vsque tempora peruenisse videtur. Siquidem ij qui apud nos Diuino Cultui, & Sacris Altaribus præsident, barbam comámque nutrire prohibentur: & in Sacris vtuntur Lineis amictibus: The Priests of the Goddesse Isis in Ægypt, vsed to weare Linen Surplices, and euermore had their head shauen: Which thing seemeth to haue beene derined from them, vnto our time, from hand to hand. For they that among vs Minister Gods Seruice, and serue the Holy Altars, are forbidden to suffer the haire of their head, or their beard to grow: And in their Diuine Seruice they vse Linen garments. Epiphanius saith, De Cons. Dist. 1. Non oportet. In Glossa. Nicol. Leonicenus, In Varia Historia, Lib. 2. Cap. 21.

Epiphan. lib. 3. Hæres. 79. De Collyridianis, that the Heretikes called Collyridiani, vsed to set forth, and to carry about Bread (no doubt but the Sacrament) in the Honour of the Blessed Virgin Marie. Nazianzenus seemeth thus to complaine of some such vnseemely behauiours in his time: Quid referam, saith he, τὰ Μυστήρια κωμῳδούμενα? What shal I speake of the Holy Mysteries turned now into a play, or a Comedie? For so Claudius Du Sainctes, your own Doctor expoundeth these words: Mysteria in Comœdias conuersa.

Nazianzen. ad Hieronem.

Claud. Du Sãctes, de Liturgijs, in Præfat.

Of the like disorder of the Heathens Apuleius seemeth to say, Dicimus. Deos incedere humanis pedibus: Wee tell you, that our Gods goe on mens feet. The whole difference between you and them in this behalfe standeth onely in this, that your God goeth on Horse feet and theirs on Mans feet.

Apuleius, li. 1.

But the Holy Sacrament of Christs death, was neuer appointed vnto vs to this end, to be carried thus about in open shew, but only to be receiued as Christ himself commanded, in remembrance of his Body and Bloud. And therefore S. Cyprian saith: Recipitur, non includitur: It is receiued: It is not shut vp.

Cyprian de Cœna Domini.

That yee allege as out of S. Augustine, That the Painimes found fault with the Christian People, for Honour done to the Body and Blood of Christ, vnder your formes of Bread and Wine, it is an open, and a manifest Vntruth. For S. Augustine in that place speaketh not one word, neither of the Body and Blood of Christ: nor of your Formes and Accidents: nor of any maner Adoration, or Honour done vnto the Sacrament. It shall behoue you to write hereafter more aduisedly: otherwise the Learned will say, ye either know not, or care not what ye write. This Obiection of S. Augustine is answered more at large in my Former Reply.

August contra. Faustum. li. 20. cap. 13.

The carriing of the Sacrament

Touching the matter it selfe, S. Augustine saith: Deus meus vbique præsens est, vbique totus, nusquam inclusus: qui possit adesse secretus, abesse non motus: My God is euery where Present, euery where whole, shut vp, or inclosed no where: Able secretly to be Present, and to be Absent without mooning. And S. Chrysostome saith: Magnum, crede mihi, bonum est, scire quid sit Creatura, & quid sit Creator: & quæ sint Opera, quis verò Opifex. Si enim hoc diligenter scirent discernere Hæretici, nunquam vtique omnia confunderent, & quæ Sursum sunt, facerent Deorsum. Non dico, quòd Cœlum & Stellas deorsum, Terram autem sursum ducerent: sed quòd Regem ab excelsis Sedibus deducentes, cum Creaturis & Operibus collocauerint: Creaturam verò Diuinis honoribus affecerint: Beleeue mee, it is a great matter to vnderstand what is the Creature, and what is God the Creatour: What are the Workes, and what is the Workeman. For if these Heretikes could make diligent difference heereof, they would not thus make confusion of all things, nor place those things beneath, that be aboue. I meane not, they either pull downe the Heauen, or the Starres, or set vp the Earth (in their place:) but that they pul downe the King himselfe from his high Throne, and place him amongst his Workes and Creatures: and of the other side, worship a Creature with Godly Honour.

Besides, where they say, and sometime doe perswade fooles, that they are able by their Masses to distribute and apply vnto mens commodity all the Merits of Christs Death, yea, although many times the parties think nothing of the matter, and vnderstand full little what is done, this is a Mockery, a Heathenish Fansie, and a very Toy. For it is our Faith that applieth the Death and Crosse of Christ to our benefit, and not the Act of the Massing Priest. Faith had in the Sacraments (saith Augustine) doth iustifie, and not the Sacraments. And Origen saith: Christ is the Priest, the Propitiation, and Sacrifice: which Propitiation commeth to euery one by meane of Faith. And so, by this reckoning we say that the Sacraments of Christ, without Faith, doe not once profit these that be aliue: a great deale lesse doe they profit those that be dead.

Origen. ad Roman. lib. 3. c. 3.

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth, enclosed. For this is your Catholike Doctrine, as shall appeare.

(b) Your owne Scholastical Catholike Doctors, M. Harding: read the Answer.

(a) Lest any peece of your Apology should be without a witnesse, for proofe that ye are his children who is the Father of lies, ye make vs to affirme, that by our Masses we distribute & aply to men indifferently, howsoeuer they be disposed, for so ye meane, as it appeareth partly by that ye say heere, and specially by your Doctrine otherwheres vttered, all the Merits of Christs Death. But tell vs, (b) who euer taught this Doctrine in the Catholike Church?

Yea God is so good, and prone to bestow his mercy, that, not only when a man is through Faith prepared for it, he giueth it abundantly vnto him: but also though he, as of his owne part, haue no Faith presently, presently, yet for others sake, which are Gods dearely beloued friends, he fareth the better, and hath that gift obtained to him. (c) As when S. Steuen praied at his death for those that persecuted him, for whom praied he then, but for those, who had no faith at all in Christ? And when this grace was giuen vnto them, as that from their lewishnesse they came to the Faith of Christ, who shall exclude that blessed Martyr from this worship and honour, that through his praier, as by one speciall meane, that grace was applyed vnto them?

(c) A proper shift. We speake of Sacraments. M. Harding answereth vs of Praier.

The effect of S. Steuens Praier. Act. 9. Serm. 1. de Sanctis. Contra duas epist. Pelagian. ad Bonifacium, lib. 1. cap. 19.

What effect his praier tooke, if any man thereof doubt, he may thinke it to haue wrought much for the benefit of others of lesse malice, seeing that it did so much in Paul. Who as the Stripture saith, yet breathing out threatnings and slaughter against Christs Disciples, was so changed & conuerted, that of a Persecutor he became an Apostle. For as S. Augustine writeth, Si Sanctus Stephanus sic non orasset, Ecclesia Paulum non haberet: If S. Stephen had not praied so, the Church should not haue had Paul. Now if those that be no Priests without publike authority of Consecrating the Body and Blood of Christ, yet by way of praier do obtaine, that men be conuerted to the Faith, which is the applying of one fruit of Christs Merits, much more the publike Minister and Bishop, which assumpted from among men is ordained for men in matters belonging to God, that he may offer vp gifts and Sacrifices for sinnes.

Hebr. 5. What kinde of applying is in the Sacrifice of the Masse. Li. 1. de Vocat. Gentium, ca. 4.

And now, if yee list to learne what kinde of applying wee vse in our Masses, we doe offer vp vnto God first (d) his Sonne representing his Passion, and celebrating the memory of the same (e) according to Christs Institution.

(d) Vntruth, blasphemous, and horrible.

(e) Vntruh, For Christ neuer bade you to offer him vp vnto his Father.

But what measure of good we procure them, to God only is that knowne. If (as the learned Bishop Prosper saith) the grace of our Sauiour passe ouer some persons, (as wee see it to happen) and if the Praier of the Church (wherein the Sacrifice is contained, after S. Augustines Minde) be not admitted for them: it is to be referred to the Secret iudgements of Gods iustice, and it is to be acknowledged, that the depth of this secret may not be opened in this life.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Thus ye say, M. Harding: Ye make vs to affirme, that by our Masses we distribute, and apply to men indifferently the Merits of Christs Death: howsoeuer they be disposed, in token, that yee are the Children of him, who is the Father of lies. Therefore ye say, Tell vs who euer taught this Doctrine in the Catholike Church?

The applying of Christs Death.

If you be so vnskilfull, M. Harding, and so farre to seeke in your owne Doctors, then it may please you to vnderstand, that the most Catholik pillers of your Catholike Church haue euen thus taught vs. Thomas de Vio, otherwise called Caietanus, a Catholike Cardinall of your Catholike Church of Rome, in the Conference he had at Augusta in Germany, with Doctour Luther said thus: Fides non est necessaria accessuro ad Eucharistiam: Faith is not necessary for him, that will receiue the Sacrament of thanke-giuing. Notwithstanding otherwhere he acknowledgeth this was an error: and confesseth, it was commonly receiued and beleeued of many euen in your Catholike Church of Rome. Thus he writeth: In hoc videtur communis multorum Error, quòd putant, hoc Sacrificium ex solo Opere Operato habere certum Meritum, vel certam satisfactionem, quæ applicatur huic, vel illi: Heerein standeth the Common Error of many, that they thinke, that his Sacrifice hath a certaine Merit or Satisfaction, which is applied to this man or to that man, (not by meane of the Faith of the receiuer, but) by the Onely meane of the Worke that is wrought (by the Priest.) Gabriel Biel saith: The Priest receiueth the Sacrament: and the Vertue thereof passeth into all the members of the Church. Iacobus de Valentia saith: The Priest is the mouth of the Body. Therefore when the Priest receiueth the Sacrament, all the members are refreshed. Againe he saith: Nos communicamus Ore Sacerdotis: We that be of the People doe Communicate or receiue the Sacrament, by the mouth of the Priest. Thomas of Aquine your Angelicall Doctor saith thus: Sicut Corpus Domini semel oblatum est in Cruce pro debito Originali, ita offertur iugiter pro quotidianis delictis in Altari: As the Body of our Lord was once offered vpon the Crosse for debt of Originall Sinne, so it is daily offered vpon the Altar for the debt of Daily sinnes.

This Doctrine not long sithence, was holden for Catholike and was strongly maintained by your Catholike Doctors. Catharinus, one of the worthies of your Late Chapter of Trident, saith: Apparet, quòd pro peccatis sub Nouo Testamento, post acceptam Salutaris Hostiæ in Baptismo efficaciam commissi, non habemus pro peccato Hostiam illam, Catharinus, de Incruento Sacrificio Noui, & Æterni Testamenti.

The applying of Christs Death.

Iam quam Christus obtulit pro Peccato Mundi, & pro delictis Baptismum Precedentibus: Non enim nisi semel ille Mortuus est: Et ideo semel duntaxat Hostia illa ad hunc effectum applicatur: It appeareth that for the Sinnes committed vnder the new Testament, after that we haue receiued in Baptisme the power of the Healthful Sacrifice, we haue no more that Sacrifice for Sinne, which Christ once offered for the Sinne of the World, and for Sinnes committed before Baptisme. For Christ neuer died but once. And therefore that Sacrifice of Christ crucified, is applied vnto vs once onely to this effect.

Hereby M. Harding, ye may see that this Doctrine lacketh no defense amongst your Catholikes. The summe and meaning hereof is this, That our Sinnes committed after Baptisme, are not forgiuen by the Death of Christ, but onely by the Sacrifice of the Masse. Which thing what it seemeth to you, I cannot tell: But vnto all godly eares it seemeth an horrible great blasphemy.

Here to speake of Prayers, specially in so large a sort, it was farre impertinent to your purpose, as being vtterly no part of this question.

The Merits of Christs Death wherof we entreat, are conueied vnto vs by God, and receiued by vs. God conueigheth them to vs only of His Mercy, and we receiue them Only by Faith. But the waies, whereby either to procure Gods Mercy, or to enkindle our Faith, are many, and sundry. Gods Mercy is procured sometime by Prayer, sometime by other Meanes. But to breed or increase Faith in vs, there are moe waies, then can be reckoned. Some men are moued onely by the Hearing of Gods Word: Some others by the beholding and weighing of Gods Miracles. Iustinus the Martyr, was first allured to the Faith by the Cruelty of the Tyrants, and by the Constancie and Patience of Gods Saints. S. Cyprian saith: Tanta est vis Martyrij, vt per illam credere etiam cogatur, qui te vult occidere: So great is the power of Martyrdome, that thereby euen he is forced to beleeue, that would kill thee. S. Augustine saith, He was stirred vp to come to Christ, by reading a Heathen Booke written by Cicero, called Hortensius. Thus he saith: Ille Liber mutauit affectum meum, & ad te ipsum, Domine, mutauit Preces meas: That (Heathen) Booke changed my minde, and turned my praier, O Lord, vnto thee.

Aug. Confess. lib. 3. cap. 4.

Among other causes, the Sacraments serue specially to direct and to aid our Faith: For they are, as S. Augustine calleth them, Verba Visibilia, Visible Words: and Seales and Testimonies of the Gospell.

August. contra Faustum lib. 19 cap. 16.

All this notwithstanding, we say, It is neither the Worke of the Priest, nor the Nature of the Sacrament, as of it selfe, that maketh vs partakers of Christs Death, but onely the Faith of the Receiuer. S. Augustine saith: Vnde est ista tanta Virtus Aquæ, vt Corpus tangat, & Cor abluat, nisi faciente Verbo? Non quia dicitur, sed quia creditur: From whence hath the Water this great power, that it toucheth the Body and washeth the Heart, sauing by the Working of the Word? Not for that it is pronounced, but for that it is beleeued.

August. in Ioh. Tract. 80.

So saith Hesychius: Gratia Dei comprehenditur Sola Fide: The Grace of God (of our part) is receiued by Onely Faith. So saith Cyrillus: Siclus Fidei nostræ Formam habet: Si enim Fidem obtuleris tanquam Pretium, à Christo, velut Ariete immaculato in hostiam dato, accipies Remissionem Peccatorum: The Sicle hath the Forme of our Faith: For if thou offer vp thy Faith, as the price, thou shalt receiue Remission of thy Sinnes from Christ that vnspotted Ramme, that was giuen for a Sacrifice.

Where ye say, Yee offer vp Christ, the Sonne of God, Really, and Substantially vnto God the Father, If ye speake in your dreame, it is a very pleasant fantasie: but if yee be awake, and know what ye say, then is it a great blaspemy: as in my former Reply it may appeare more at large.

No maruel. It was receiued of the Painims long ere the Apostles were borne.

And as for their Braggs, they are wont to make of their Purgatory; though we know, it is not a thing so very late risen among them, yet is it no better then a blockish, and an Old Wiues deuice.

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth.

(b) This fantasie were somewhat, if we had no Purgation in Christs Blood.

Purgatory seemeth not to vs a thing that we should much brag of, no more then ye will brag of Hell. We tremble at the remembrance of it rather then brag of it. Well howsoeuer it be, will ye, nill ye, (we see) ye be driuen to confesse the same to be no new thing.

Indeed if you call them Papists, among whom the Doctrine of praying for the dead, (a) whereof necessarily followeth the Doctrine of Purgatory, is deliuered, taught, and holden: then are the Apostles, who deliuered it by Tradition, (as Chrysostome & Damascene report) Papists. First, (b) forasmuch as nothing nothing that is defiled commeth into the kingdom of Heauen, and ſome depart out of this life though in the Faith of Chriſt & Children of the Euerlaſting Kingdome, yet not throughly and perfectly cleane: it remaineth, that ſuch after this life before they come to the place of Euerlaſting ioy, haue their Purgatió. Furthermore the Apoſtle ſaith, Seing then we haue theſe promiſes dearly beloued, let (c) vs cleanſe our ſelues from al filthines of the Fleſh & Spirit, making perfect our ſatisfaction in the fear of God. Who ſeeth not heerof to follow, that to many, which be iuſtified, ſomwhat of ſatisfaction and holineſſe lacketh? Which if they be taken from hence before they attaine to the meaſure of Holineſſe requiſite, bee they then after this Life in ſtate to be purged and cleanſed?

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Heere are we come to the Paper Wals, and Painted Fires of Purgatory. For ſo it liked M. Harding not long ſithence, pleaſantly to ſport at it in the Pulpits, as a bug meet only to fray Children. Yet now, vpon better aduice, and deeper ſtudy, hee trembleth, God wote, and quaketh for feare, to remember the torments, that ſome body hath ſithence told him to be there. Howbeit, let him not ſo much diſmay himſelfe. The Pope, as hee either firſt made it, or receiued it by hand from the Heathens, and firſt allowed it, euen ſo hath he the whole Iuriſdiction and Power ouer it, and commandeth in, and out at his pleaſure.

Power ouer Purgatory.

Whether ye make braggs heereof, or no, I leaue it in queſtion. Certainly for this, and other like cauſes, One of your fellowes ſaith: Excepto Peccato, Papa poteſt quaſi omnia facere, quæ Deus poteſt: Sinne excepted the Pope can do in a manner al things that God can doe. Another ſaith: Animæ exiſtentes in Purgatorio, ſunt de Iuriſdictione Papæ: & Papa, ſi vellet, poſſet totum Purgatorium euacuare: The Soules being in Purgatory, are (in the Popes peculiar, and) vnder the Popes Iuriſdiction: and the Pope, if it might ſtand with his pleaſure, were able (to make goale deliuery, and) to auoid all Purgatorie. And to this purpoſe, The Pope himſelfe Commandeth, and Chargeth the Angels of God, to fetch foorth from thence, whomſoeuer, and how many ſoeuer he will haue deliuered, as heerafter in a place more conuenient it ſhall better appeare. If theſe ſeeme to bee no bragges, then let them hardly bee called by ſome other name, that may ſeeme to pleaſe you better.

Ye take good hold in that we confeſſe, This Imagination of Purgatory is no new fanſie. Howbeit, your aduantage heerein is not ſo great. There haue beene errors and great errors from the beginning. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Origenes, ipſum Diabolum atque Angelos eius poſt grauiora pro Meritis, & diuturniora ſupplicia, ex illis Cruciatibus eruendos atque ſociandos Sanctis Angelis credidit: The ancient learned Father Origen beleeued that the Diuell himſelfe and his Angels, after great and long puniſhment, ſuffered for their wickednes, ſhal be deliuered from their torments, and ſhall be placed (in Heauen) with the Holy Angels of God. Origen himſelfe ſaith: There were ſome, that thought, that Chriſt ſhould goe downe into Hell, and there be Crucified againe, to ſaue them that by his preaching and Former Death could not bee ſaued. Againe the ſame Origen ſaith of himſelfe: Ego puto, quòd poſt Reſurrectionem ex mortuis indigebimus Sacramento eluente nos, atque Purgante: I thinke, that after wee ſhall riſe againe from the Dead, wee ſhall haue need of the Sacrament (of Baptiſme) to waſh vs, and to purge vs cleane.

Euen in Pauls time there were ſome, that being aliue, were Baptized for the Dead. And by the Councell of Carthage it appeareth there were ſome, that vſed to thruſt the Sacrament into the Mouth of the Dead Body, meaning thereby, as it may bee thought, to procure ſome releeſe for the Soule. The words be theſe: Placuit, vt Corporibus Defunctorum Euchariſtia non detur. Dictum eſt enim à Domino, Accipite, & Edite. Cadauera autem nec Accipere poſſunt, nec Edere: Wee thinke it good, that the Sacrament bee not giuen to the Bodies of the Dead. *For our Lord ſaith, Take and Eat. dition. This is as true, as that S. Peter said Masse in Rome with a Golden Cope, and a Triple Crowne. Unlesse perhaps some man will thinke, whereas S. Paul saith: Homines priuati Veritate, existimantes quæstum esse pietatem: They be men void of Truth, thinking that their gaine is godlinesse: Or, whereas S. Peter saith: Per auaritiam fictis sermonibus negotiabuntur de vobis: Through couetousnesse by fained talke they shall make sale of you. The Antiquity of Purgatory

As for Praier for the Dead, which (ye say) yee haue receiued by Tradition from the Apostles, notwithstanding it were granted to bee true, yet doth it not euermore import Purgatory. For Chrysostome and Basil in their Liturgies, make their publike & solemne Praier in this sort: Offerimus tibi Rationalem hunc cultum, pro in Fide requiescentibus Maioribus, Patribus, Patriarchis, Prophetis & Apostolis, Præconibus & Euãgelistis, Martyribus, Confessoribus, &c, Præcipuè verò pro Sanctissima, immaculata, super omnes benedicta, Domina nostra Deipara, & semper Virgine Maria: We offer, O Lord, vnto thee this reasonable seruice for them, that rest in Faith, Our Elders, Our Fathers, the Patriarkes, the Prophets, the Apostles, the Preachers, the Euangelists, the Martyrs, the Confessours, &c. Specially for the most Holy, without spot, blessed aboue all, our Lady Gods Mother, and euer Virgin Mary. S. Cyprian saith in like manner: Sacrificamus pro Martyribus: We make Sacrifice for the Martyrs. Yet, I trow, ye will not conclude hereof, that the Patriarkes, Prophets, Apostles, Preachers, Euangelists, Martyrs, Confessours, and the Blessed Virgin Mary, were all in Purgatory. Otherwise you would much enlarge the Popes Dominion.

Cyprian. lib. 3. epist. 6.

Of the other side, in your Masses for the Dead, ye haue vsed to pray thus: Libera eos à Tartaro: è profundo Lacu: ex Ore Leonis: Deliuer them, O Lord, (not from Purgatory, but) from Hell: from that deepe Dungeon: from the Lions Mouth. I trow, yee are not so much thrall vnto the Pope, that for his sake ye will turne the Lions Mouth, the Deepe Dungeon, and all the World, and Hell it selfe, into Purgatory.

Thus ye see, M. Harding by your owne Doctrine, ye may pray for the Dead, and yet be neuer the nere of your Purgatory.

But to helpe forward the matter, at the least by some Naturall reason, yee say thus: Forasmuch as nothing that is defiled, commeth into the kingdome of Heauen, and some depart out of this Life, though in the Faith of Christ, & Children of the Euerlasting Kingdome, yet not throughly & perfectly clean, it remaineth that such after this Life, before they come to the place of Euerlasting ioy, haue their Purgation. To warrant your Minor in this argument, ye bring in the words of S. Paul as rightly, and as well to purpose, as your manner otherwise is commonly to handle the Scriptures: Though our outward man bee corrupted and weakened (which words S. Ambrose expoundeth thus: By Oppression, by Stripes, by Hunger, by Thirst, by Cold, by Nakednesse) Yet our Soule is renewed, and made stronger day by day. And againe: Let vs clense our selues from all filthinesse of Flesh and Spirit. Ergo, (say yee) Wee must confesse by force of these words, that there must needs be a place, wherein to purge vs clean after this life. Heere may we a little put you in remembrance by the way: If wee clense our selues, according to these words of S. Paul, from all maner filthinesse, both of Flesh, and of Spirit, I beseech you, what remaineth there then further, to bee Purged in Purgatory.

2. Cor. 4.

2. Cor. 7.

Howbeit to proue the Imperfection, and Corruption of Nature, that euermore hangeth in our Flesh, yee might, in my iudgement, haue alleged many other authorities, farre more pregnant and clearer, then these. Esay saith: All our righteousnesse is likened vnto a fowle stained cloat. Iob saith: Inter Sanctos eius nemo est Fidelis: Et Cœli non sunt mundi in conspectu eius Among the Saints of God, there is none Faithfull: The Heauens are not cleane in his sight. S. Paul saith: I know, there is no good thing in my Flesh. S. Augustine saith: Let the Apostles of Christ themselues say, O Lord, forgiue vs our offences.

Esai. 64.
Iob. 15.
Rom. 7.
August. in Psalm. 143.

Such Imperfections and Corruptions, while wee liue, wee euermore carry in our Flesh. Therefore, say you, To bee purged heereof, that wee may bee cleane, and fit to enter into Heauen, we must needs passe thorow the Fires of Purgatory. By this meane ye haue well enlarged the Popes Iurisdiction. For this being true, neither is there, nor neuer was there any Creature, neither Prophet, nor Apostle, nor Martyr, nor Angell, nor Archangell, nor Heauen it selfe, Christ only excepted, but of force must needs be cleansed in your Purgatory. And therefore Origen, a great fautor of this errour, saith thus: Ve ego arbitror omnes nos necesse est venire in illum Ignem: etiamsi Paulus aliquis sit, vel Petrus: As I suppose, all wee must needes come into that Fire: Yea although it bee Paul or Peter. And therefore he saith, as it is alleged before: Ego puto, quod & post Resurrectionem ex Mortuis indigebimus Sacramento eluere nos, atque Purgare. Nemo enim absque sordibus Resurgere poterit. Neque vllam puto posse animam reperiri, quæ vniuersis statim vitijs careat: I thinke, that after the Resurrection from the dead, wee shall need the Sacrament (of Baptisme) to wash vs, and to make vs cleane. For no man can rise againe without filth. Neither doe I thinke, there can anie Soule bee founde, voide from all maner of Sinne. Vncleansed.

But all these be vaine fantasies: I meane, as well these of M. Harding, as also the other of Origen. S Iohn saith: Sanguis Iesu Christi Filij Dei purgat nos ab omni Peccato: The Blood of Iesus Christ the Sonne of God Purgeth vs, and maketh vs cleane from all our Sinnes. The Prophet saith: In what houre soeuer a Sinner shall repent and mourne for his Sinnes, he shall be safe. Esay saith: If your Sinnes shall be as red as Scarlet, yet shall they be made as white as Snow. S. Paul saith: Christus Purgationem Peccatorum nostrorum fecit: Christ (by his Blood) hath wrought the Purgation of our Sinnes. Therefore S. Cyprian saith: Sanguis tuis, Domine, non quærit vltionem: Sanguis tuus lauat crimina, Peccata condonat: Thy Blood, O Lord, seeketh no reuenge: Thy Blood washeth our Sinnes, and Pardoneth our trespasses.

1. Iohan. 1. Esai. 1. Hebr. 1. Cypr. de Passione Christi.

And whereas you tell vs, out of some Heathenish fantasie, that Sinnes cannot bee washt away, but with long tract of time, and paine in Purgatory, S. Cyprian saith: In eodem Articulo temporis, cùm iam anima festinat ad exitum, & egrediens ad labia expirantis emerserit, Pœnitentiam Clementissimi Dei benignitas non aspernatur. Nec Serum est, quod Verum est: In that very moment of time, euen when the Soule is readie to passe, and is euen at the lippes of the party, readie to yeeld vp the Spirit, the goodnesse of our most Mercifull God, refuseth not repentance. And whatsoeuer is trulie done, is neuer too late.

Cyprian. De Cœna Domini.

S. Chrysostome saith: Latro in Cruce neque vno die opus habebat. Et quid dico, vno die? Neque breui hora. Tanta est Dei erga nos Misericordia: The Theefe on the Crosse needed not so much as one day, to repent himselfe. What speake I of one day? No, he needed not one houre. So great is the Mercy of God towards vs.

Chrysost. in Genes. homil. 27.

Of the other side, if any man depart hence without repentance, S. Augustine saith: Imparatum inueniet illum Dies Domini, quem Imparatum inuenerit suæ Vitæ huius vltimus dies: Him shall the day of the Lord finde vnprouided, whom the last day of this life findeth vnprouided. S. Ambrose saith: Qui hic non accipit Remissionem Peccatorum, ibi non erit: He that heere in this Life receiueth not Remission of his Sinnes, shall not bee there. And S. Hierome expounding these words of Christ, Thou shalt not goe forth hence, vntill thou hast paid the last farthing, saith thus: Significat semper non exiturum esse: quia semper soluat nouissimum quadrantem, dum sempiternas Pœnas terrenorum Peccatorum luit: Christs meaning is, that hee shall neuer come out: for that hee must euermore pay the last farthing, whiles hee suffereth Euerlasting Punishment for his Sinnes committed in this world.

Aug. epist. 80. Ambros. De Bono Mortis. Hieron. in Lamentationes Hieremiæ, lib 1. cap. 1.

So saith S. Augustine: Donec soluas nouissimum quadrantem: Miror, si non eam significat Pœnam, quæ vocatur Æterna: Vntill thou pay the last farthing: I maruell, but he meaneth that paine, which is called Euerlasting.

Aug. de Serm. Domini in Monte, lib. 1.

Hereby, M. Harding, I thinke it may partly appeare, that you maintaine your Painted Fire, and Paper Walles, with Painted Authorities, and Paper Reasons. Verily the Christian people of the East Church of God, which sometime was as great, and as famous, as the Church of the West, notwithstanding they beleeued in God and his Christ, and knew, there was both Hell and Heauen, yet in your Purgatory they had no skill. One of your Doctours saith: Vsque in hodiernum diem Purgatorium non est à Græcis creditum: Vntill this day of the Grecians, or of the East Church, Purgatorie was neuer beleeued. Therefore yee cannot iustly say, that your fantasie herein was euermore accounted Vniuersall or Catholike.

Augustine indeed sometime saith, there is such a certaine place: sometime he denieth not, but there may be such a one: sometime he doubteth: sometime againe he vtterly denieth, there is any at all, and thinketh, that men are therein deceiued by a certaine Naturall good will, they beare their friends departed. But yet of this one erroz hath there growen vp such a harueste of those Massemongers, that, the Masses being sold abroad commonly commonly in euery Corner, the Temples of God became shoppes, to get money: and the soules were borne in hand, that nothing was more necessarie to be bought. Indeed there was nothing more gainefull for these men to sell.

M. Harding.

Well railed. If your reasons or authorities were so pithy as your mockes and scoffes, be spitefull yee were to be heard. But thankes be to God, that such shrewd beasts haue short hornes. Now to S. Augustine. And as Festus said to S. Paul, Hast thou appealed to Cæsar? to Cæsar shalt thou goe. So say wee to you, though not hauing that authority ouer you, which Festus had ouer S. Paul. To Augustine ye referre this matter, and by Augustine shall ye be iudged. Act. 25.

(a) It was a good point of skill, with a good countenance to passe them ouer.

(a) I would allege vnto you sundry places of these Scriptures, which may sufficiently proue Purgatorie to a Christian man, that is not contentious, but that wil we doe hereafter as occasion serueth. Now to S. Augustine. We say plainly, that S. Augustine affirmeth Purgatory, and that it (b) cannot be shewed where he doubteth of it, much lesse where he vtterly denieth any such to be. In sundry places of his workes he expounded the words of S. Paul to the Corinthians of Purgatory, where the Apostle saith, that the workes, which he builded vpon the foundation (which is Christ) shall be tried by Fire. In the 21. Booke De Ciuitate Dei, after that he hath declared his iudgment touching paines of diuers sorts, which men suffer for sins committed, he saith thus: but paines temporall some suffer in this life only: some after their Death: some both now and also then, yet before that most seuere and last iudgement. S. Augustine affirmeth Purgatory plaine & expresse worke. 1. Cor. 3.

(b) Vntruth. It shall be shewed. Read the answer. O, so carefull this good man is for our cares.

May it therefore please you Sirs, to read S. Augustine in some such places (for to read all that he hath written to that end were very much, and a great let to your Domesticall cares) and that I thinke assure ye will secretly agree in iudgment with vs, though for shame and consideration of the stage ye play your part on, openly the same ye will not confesse. And therefore in his Booke De Hæresibus ad Quodvultdeum, he condemneth Aërius of Heresie (and so consequently all others that be of his opinion) because to the heresies of the Arians he had added this also, that none ought to pray or make oblations for the dead. Lib. 3. Hypognostica in fine.

(c) Vntruth, Manifest. read S. Augustines words in the Answer.

(d) Vntruth. For the margin was so noted by Erasmus

Where ye make S. Augustine very vncertaine in this point, as though he said sometime there is such a certain place, sometime there may be such a one, sometime he doubted of it, sometime plainly denied any such to be either ye vnderstand not S. Augustine, or ye say contrary to your owne knowledge. Verily ye be too bold with him (c) First that he denieth Purgatory, that is false. And where ye allege Hypognostica in the margin of your Booke, read it once againe at my request, & your selues will say, the place proueth not your purpose. The author of that worke whether he were S. Augustine, which Erasmus beleeueth not, or whosoeuer he was, denieth not Purgatory: but that after the day of generall iudgement there is any place of Euerlasting rest or paine, but kingdom of Heauen and Hell, that he denieth. Which we also denie. And there he speaketh against the Pelagians, who as S. Augustine writeth of them ad Quodvultdeum, promised to Infants dying without Baptisme a certaine euerlasting and blessed life without & besides the kingdom of God. Which Heresie in sundry places he reproueth. It seemeth the word Purgatorium, noted in the margin of that Booke (d) by the vnlearned Printer, beguiled you. Which sheweth how profoundly ye be seene in the Doctours. Heref. 88.

(e) Vntruth. blasphemous against the Blood of Christ. Read the Answer.

The thing he doubteth of, touching this matter is this: Whether those temporall paines doe only punish for the (e) satisfaction of the iustice of God, or also doe purge and correct the soules of the dead in such wise, as temporall paines are woont to doe in this life. But now whether the smart and sorrow of things left behind, which proceeded in this life of Carnall affection, remaine also to the soules after their departure from the Body, whereof S. Augustine sheweth himselfe to stand in doubt in Enchiridio ad Laurent. cap. 68. & 69. and whether the fire which Soules feele in Purgatory as it paineth them (f) so also doe by degrees diminish & correct those Veniall & Secular affections, which they carried with them at their death; or whether death it selfe do so end them, as there remaine not any correction of the minde yet being vicious, but onely the punishment of the sin past: that is the thing, whereof S. Augustine (g) seemeth to haue doubted. In effect his question is, whether the fire of Purgatory be not (h) double. The one which punisheth the veniall sinne past, the other which diminisheth and taketh away the affection of sinne yet remaining. Of the first he doubteth not: of the other he saith: Non redarguo quia forsitan verum est, I say not against it, for peraduenture it is true. What is the S. Augustine doubted touching Purgatorie. De Ciuit. Dei lib. 21. cap. 26.

(f) O graue Commentarie, and a wise matter to be called in question.

(g) This whole matter is concluded with seeming and likelihood.

(h) Double Fire in Purgatorie: Double Follie.

Scriptures to proue Purgatory.

The places of the Scriptures, which yee thought it best to passe ouer, and whereby your Purgatory by your iudgement vndoubtedly may be proued, if a man be not very contentious, I trow, be these: Verily, Verily, I say vnto you, he that heareth my word, and beleeueth in him that sent me, hath Euerlasting Life: and shall not come into damnation: but hath passed from death vnto life. Or that Esay the Prophet saith of Christ: He was wounded for our trangressions: He was broken for our iniquities: The chastisement of our Peace was vpon him, and with his stripes we were made whole. Or that S. Paul saith: Christ hath taken the Obligation that was against vs, and hath fastened it vnto his Crosse. Or that S. Iohn saith: Blessed be the dead that die in the Lord. Euen so saith the Spirit, For they rest from their labours, and their workes follow them. He saith not, they be in Purgatory: but they rest from their Labours. And againe: They shall hunger no more: They shall thirst no more. For the Lambe, which is in the middes of the Throne, shal gouerne them, and shall lead them (not into Purgatory, but) vnto the liuely Fountaines of Waters, and God shall wipe away all teares from their eies. These, or such otherlike places, I trow, they bee, whereby yee assure your selfe so certainely of your Purgatorie.

S. Augustine doubteth.

As for S. Augustine, notwithstanding his Authority be great, and his Learning déepe, yet in these cases, as it shall well appeare, hée can be but a doubtfull Iudge. And a doubtfull Iudge, so farre forth as he doubteth, is no Iudge. Your owne Canon telleth you: In erroris Labyrinthum nonnulli intricando impingunt, cùm antè iudicant, quàm intelligant: Many men giuing Iudgement before they can vnderstand, by entangling themselues fall into a Maze of errour. For how can he pronounce sentence of that hée confesseth he knoweth not? Or how can hée assure vs, that is not able to assure himselfe? Touching the certainety of this Doctrine, to allege on or two places out of many, S. Augustine writeth thus: Tale aliquid, etiam post hanc Vitam fieri, incredibile non est: & vtrùm ita sit, quæri potest: Some such thing (hée meaneth the Fire of Purgatorie) to bee after this Life, it is not incredible: And whether it be so, or no, † It may be a qnestion. * As much as I thinke.

And againe he saith: Quis sit iste modus, & quæ sint ista Peccata: quæ ita impediant peruentionem ad Regnum Dei, vt tamen Sanctorum amicorum meritis impetrent indulgentiam, difficillimum est inuenire: Periculosissimum definire: Ego certè vsque ad hoc tempus, cùm inde satagerem, ad eorum indaginem peruenire † non potui: What meane this is, and what Sinnes these be which so let a man from comming vnto the Kingdome of God, that they may notwithstanding obtain Pardon by the Merits of holy friends, it is very hard to finde, and very dangerous to determine. Certainly I my selfe, notwithstanding great studie and trauell taken in that behalfe, could neuer attaine to the knowledge of it. Thus touching Purgatorie S. Augustine saith: Whether there be any such place after this Life, or no, It may be a question: Perhaps it is true: As much as I thinke: I cannot tell: I could neuer attaine to the knowledge of it.

Aug. de Ciuit. lib. 21. cap. 27.

† Non potui. I could neuer attaine to the knowledge.

By these it is plaine, that S. Augustine stood in doubt hereof, whether there bée any such Purgatorie Fire, or no. Therefore vndoubtedly hée tooke it neither for an Article of the Christian Faith, (for thereof it had not béene lawfull for him to doubt) nor for any Tradition of the Apostles.

Yée say: S. Augustine neuer doubted whether there were any such place of Purgatorie, or such Fire, or no: but onely whether the torments there doe satisfie the Iustice of God for sinne, or no: and whether the same torments doe by degrees diminish the Veniall Sinnes and Secular Affections which the Parties carried with them, or no. These, you say, were S. Augustines doubts. Notwithstanding, what should any question be raised hereof? Plato, and Virgil, and other Heathen Writers, from whom this Doctrine first flowed abroad, would some haue put you quite out of doubt. Virgil, hereof amongst others saith thus.

Quin & supremo cum lumine vita reliquit,
Non tamen omne malum miseris, nec funditus omnes
Corporeæ excedunt pestes: Penitusque necesse est
Multa diu concreta, modis inolescere miris.
Ergo exercentur pœnis, veterumque malorum
Supplicia expendunt: Aliæ panduntur, inanes
Suspensæ ad ventos: Alijs sub gurgite vasto
Infectum eluitur scelus, aut exuritur igni.

Æneid. 6.

But read you S. Augustine M. Harding: you, I say, that, to vse your owne words, are so profoundly seen in all the Doctours, that ye may boldly despise all others whatsoeuer: Read, I say, S. Augustine: examine better the places, and weigh the words: and ye shall find that he neuer neither mentioneth, nor toucheth any of these your pretty fantasies: but saith plainely: Whether it be so, or no, it may be a question: I reproue it not: For perhaps it is true.

S. Augustine doubteth.

And are ye so Profoundly seene in all the Doctours, and Scriptures, M. Harding, that yee thinke there is either Fire, or Water, or any other Creature, wherewith to satisfie the Iustice of God against Sinne, sauing onely the Blood of the Lambe of God, that taketh away the Sinne of the World? Or thinke you that S. Augustine would turne vs from the Satisfaction of Christ, and send vs to seeke for any other? Certainly S. Augustine himselfe saith: Valeat mihi ad Perfectionem liberationis tantùm Pretium Sanguinis Domini mei: Let only the Price of the Blood of my Lord auaile mee to the Perfection of my deliuerie.

Aug in Ps. 25.

Againe he saith: Quando aliquis se conuerterit ad Deum, prorsus illi omnia dimittuntur. Nemo sit sollicitus, quòd aliquid ei non dimittatur: Whensoeuer any man turneth himselfe vnto God, all things vtterly are forgiuen him. Let no man be doubtfull, lest any thing happily be not forgiuen. Chrysostome imagineth God thus to say of a Sinner: Vnum tantùm requiro, vt confiteatur Peccata, & ab eis desistat: Nec vltrà Infero Pœnam Peccatis: This thing only (saith God) I require of a Sinner, that he confesse his Sinnes (vnto mee) and leaue the same. Afterward I lay no more Punishment vpon his Sinnes. Likewise againe he saith: Ego Fideiubeo: Si quis nostûm recedat à Peccatis; ex animo, & verè Promittat Deo, se ad illa non rediturum, nihil Deum requisiturum ad Satisfactionem: I will stand bound in Gods behalfe: If any of vs forsake his Sinnes with all his heart, and make true Promise vnto God, that he will no more returne vnto them, that then God shall require nothing else vnto Satisfaction. He that knoweth not thus much, hath no great cause to vaunt himselfe of his profound knowledge in the Doctours. But if Gods Iustice against your Sinne be fully satisfied by the Blood of Christ: If the Only price of our Lords Blood haue wrought the perfection of your deliuerie: If there remaine nothing vnforgiuen: If God require no further punishment: What should you seeke for other Satisfaction in your painted Fires, and smokes of Purgatorie?

Chryso. in Genes. Hom. 44.

Chrysost. de B. Philogonio.

Double Fire.

To conclude, ye say thus: In effect S. Augustines question is, whether the Fire of Purgatorie be not double. Oh, M. Harding, if ye were simple, and meant simply, ye would not so vainly double the point. I beseech you, what double Fire of Purgatory meant S. Augustine? Or, where was he euer so double in dealing? By your double Diuinitie, and profound knowledge in the Doctours, ye haue at the last skilfully found out a Double Purgatory Fire, and a Double Purgatorie. Howbeit, as you are now troubled about the Fire of your Purgotorie: so were some others of your friends not long sithence as much troubled about the Water. Sir Thomas Moore said, and held for certaine, that in all Purgatorie there is no Water: no, not one droppe. And that, hee said, hee would proue by the words of the Prophet Zacharie: Eduxisti vinctos tuos de Lacu, in quo non erat Aqua: Thou hast deliuered thy Prisoners out of the Dungeon, wherein there was no Water.

Sir Thomas Moore. Zachar. 9.

Of the other side, Roffensis saith: Yes, there is in Purgatorie good store of Water. And that, he saith, hee can proue by the Prophet Dauid: Transiuimus per Ignem & Aquam: & eduxisti nos in refrigerium: Wee haue passed thorow Fire and Water: and thou hast brought vs forth into a place of refreshing. Albertus and Roffensis say, The Executioners and Ministers of Purgatorie bee Holy Angels: Sir Thomas More saith, Out of doubt they bee no Angels, but verie Diuels. So handsomely these dreames agree together.

The Bishop of Rochester. Psalm. 65.

To returne to the matter. Where ye say, We much mistooke the place of S. Augustine, being deceiued by the ignorant note in the Margin; where also ye so plesantly sport your selfe with our Profound knowledge in the Doctours: the words of S. Augustine that ye meane bee these: Primum Locum Fides Catholicorum, Diuina Authoritate, Regnum credit esse Cœlorum; vnde non Baptizatus excipitur: Secundum, Gehennam; vbi omnis Apostata, & à Christi Fide alienus, Æterna Supplicia experietur: Tertium penitùs ignoramus: imò, nec esse in Scripturis Sanctis inueniemus: The First Place the Catholike Fauth, by Gods Authoritie, beleeueth to be the Kingdome of Heauen; from whence whosoeuer is not Baptized is excluded: The Second Place the same Catholike Faith beleeueth to be Hell; where all Renegates, and whosoeuer is without the Faith of Christ, shall taste Euerlasting Punishment: As for any Third Place, wee vtterly know none: neither shall wee finde in the Holy Scriptures that there is any such. If these words make not against your Purgatorie, yet truly

August. Hypognost Lib. 5.

No Third Place.

in any appearance, they make but slenderly for your Purgatory. S. Augustine saith: Any other Third place (after this Life, besides Heauen and Hell) we vtterly know none. Neither can we find in the Holy Scriptures that there is any such.

But if all these three places, Heauen, Hell, and Purgatorie, had beene certainly known, and Universally receiued in the Church, and yet besides these three places, the Pelagian Heretikes would haue deuised, as you imagine, another seuerall Place, to receiue the Soules of such Children as departed out of this Life without Baptisme, then could not S. Augustine haue truely said, Tertium Locum ignoramus: We know no Third place: But rather hee should haue said, Quartum Locum ignoramus: Fourth place we know none. For by your iudgement, the doubt had beene, not of the Third Place, but of the Fourth. And it had bene a great ouersight for S. Augustine, in the reckoning only of Foure Places, to haue forgotten One: and specially such a One too, as hath beene found more gainefull of late yeeres than the other Three: But his words bee plaine: Heauen wee know: and Hell wee know. But any third place, besides Heauen and Hell, we know none.

Fourth Place.

Augustine denieth Purgatory

This word, Purgatorium, was noted in the Margin, not by the Printer, as you say, but by Erasmus, a man of famous memorie, whose name for learning and iudgement, hath at all times among the Learned bene much esteemed: with whom your young Louanian Clergie may not well compare, in the profound knowledge of the Doctours; without great blushing. And thus much touching this one Place of S. Augustine, wherein it hath pleased you so deepely to charge vs with grosse ignorance. But for better trial of his iudgement herein, ye should haue considered what hee hath written otherwheres to like purpose.

In his Epistle to Hesychius hee saith thus: In quo quemque inuenerit suus nouissimus dies, in hoc eum comprehendet mundi nouissimus dies. Quoniam qualis in die isto quisq; moritur, talis in die illo iudicabitur: In what state his owne last day shall find each man, in the same state the last day of the World shall find him. For such as euery man in this day shall die, euen such in that day shall he be iudged. Againe: Qualem inuenit Dominus cùm hinc vocat, talem & iudicat: As our Lord findeth a man when he calleth him hence, euen so hee iudgeth him. And againe: Qui in hac vita Deo non placuerit, habebit quidem Pœnitentiam in Futuro Sæculo de malis suis: sed indulgentiam in conspectu Dei non inuenier. Quia etsi erit ibi stimulus pœnitudinis, nulla tamen erit correctio voluntatis: Whoso in this Life shall not please God, shall in the World to come haue Repentance for his Sins: But pardon in the sight of God he shal not find. For although there shall bee there the pricke of Repentance, yet there shall be no amendment of the will. Againe he saith: Vnusquisque cum causa sua dormiet, & cum causa sua resurget: Euery man shall die with his owne cause, and rise againe with his owne cause. Olympiodorus saith: In quocunque loco, &c. deprehendetur homo cùm moritur, in eo gradu atque ordine permanet in Æternum: In what place or state soeuer a man shall be found when he dieth, in the same state and degree shall he remaine for euer.

Aug. Epist. 80.

Augu. in Apocalyp. Hom. 11.

Aug. ad Petrũ, Diacon. cap. 3.

August. in Iohan Tract. 49.

Olimpiodor. in Eccles. Cap. 9.

But to reckon vp all that might bee said in this behalfe, it would bee long. A simple man, M. Harding, without any profound knowledge of the Doctours, may easily see, that these sayings will hardly stand with your Doctrine of Purgatory. Your owne Rossensis saith: Nemo nunc dubitat Orthodoxus, an Purgatorium sit: De quo tamen apud Priscos vel nulla, vel quàm rarissima fiebat mentio. Sed & Græcis ad hunc vsque diem non est creditum. Quamdiu enim nulla esset cura de Purgatorio, nemo quæsiuit indulgentias: No Catholike man now doubteth of Purgatory: Whereof notwithstanding among the ancient Fathers there is either no mention at all, or very seldome. Yea euen vntill this day the Grecians beleeue it not. For so long as there was no care for Purgatory, no man sought after Pardons. By which witnes it appeareth that Pardons and Purgatory were brought in iointly both together. And as the case now standeth, and as most men thinke, the Pope could be contented to lose both Heauen and Hell, to saue his purgatory.

Polydor. de Inuentorib. lib. 8. cap. 1.

The Apology, Chap. 17. Diuision 1.

AS touching the multitude of vaine and superfluous Ceremonies, we know that S. Augustine did grieuously complaine of them in his owne time: and therefore haue we cut off a great number of them, because wee know, that mens consciences were encombred about them, & the Churches of God ouerladen with the. Neuertheless, we keep still, & esteeme, not only those Ceremonies, which we are sure were deliuered vs frõ the Apostles, but some others too besides, which we thought might be suffered without hurt to the Church of God: for that we had a desire that all things in the Holy Congregation might, as S. Paul commandeth, bee done with comelinesse and in good order. But as for al those things which we saw, were either very superstitious, or vtterly vnprofitable, or notsome, or mockeries, or contrary to the holy Scriptures, or else vnseemly for sober and discreet people, whereof there bee infinite numbers now adaies where the Roman Religion is vsed: These, I say, we haue vtterly refused without all manner exception, because we would not haue the right worshipping of God to be any longer defiled with such follies.

M. Harding.

S. Augustin, whom ye allege wrongfully against the Ceremonies of the Catholike Church, speaketh only of the cutting away of such maners & rites as be crept into some one particular Country neither conteined in Holy Scriptures, nor established by Councels of Bishops, nor confirmed by Custom of the whole Church But how proue you by that place, that you may pull down Altars & Images, disallow the Vow of pouerty, Lent, Oile? &c. S. Augustine referreth the taking away of any Custome, or maner, vnto due Authoritie, exhorting it to be done, Vbi facultas tribuitur: Where Power is giuen to doe it. Neither else may it be done lawfully at all, &c. Ye thinke we haue many ridiculous and fond things in our Ceremonies. If we had, (a) as indeed we haue not, would ye laugh at them, as Cham did at the nakednesse of his Father Noe? &c. Laugh on yee cursed Chananees: but wee will dance before the Arke: wee will (b) shere our head with Paul, &c.

(a) Vntruth. For S. Augustine speaking of his time, saith, Tam multis Præsumptionibus ita plena sunt omnia, &c.

[b] Then be yee circumcised, as Paul vvas. For this vvas onely a Jevvish Ceremonie.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This matter had bene ouer cold, had not M. Harding a little enflamed his choler in the end, and cried out vpon his Cursed Cananees. His Altars, his Images, his Vowes, his Lents, and his Oiles, bee answered sufficiently otherwheres. S. Augustines words concerning this matter are pregnant and plaine: Hoc nimis doleo, quia multa quæ in Diuinis Libris salubertimè præcepta sunt, minùs curantur: & tam multis Præsumptionibus sic plena sunt omnia, &c. This thing grieueth mee, that so many things holesomely commanded in the Holy Scriptures, are not regarded: and all things are full of so many Presumptions, &c. And againe: Quamuis ista contra Fidem non sint, tamen ipsam Religionem quam Paucissimis & Manifestissimis Celebrationum Sacramentis Misericordia Dei liberam esse voluit, seruilibus oneribus ita premunt, vt tolerabilior sit conditio Iudæorum: qui etsi tempus libertatis non agnouerint, Legalibus tamē sarcinis, nō humanis Præsumptionibus subijciuntur: Albeit these things be not against the Faith, yet with seruile burdens they so oppresse our very Religion, which God of his mercy would haue to bee free, vnder very few, and most manifest Sacraments of Diuine Seruice, that the state of the Jewes is much more tolerable (then the state of the Church of Christ.) For the Iewes, notwithstanding they knew not of the time of Libertie, yet were they subiect to the Packs and burdens of the Law (of God:) and not vnto the Deuices and Presumptions of Men.

August. Epist. 119.

Aug. in eadem Epist.

Of such Deuices and Presumptions Chrysostom saith: Non dicunt, Cur Legem Mosis, sed, Cur Traditionem Seniorum transgrediuntur? Vnde patet, eos multa innouasse, cùm Deus contra vetuisset, ne quid adderent, aut minuerent. Sed illi, cùm timerent ne Principatum amitterent, ceu Legum Latores, vt maiores esse viderentur, plurima innouarunt. Quæ res ad tantam peruenit nequitiā, vt precepta sua custodirent, magis quàm præcepta Dei: The Pharisees say not vnto Christ, Wherefore doe thy Disciples breake the Law of Moses, but, Wherefore do they breake the Traditions of the Elders? Whereby it appeareth, that they had altered many things, whereas God had commanded, that they should neither adde, nor diminish: But fearing lest they should lose their Authoritie as if they had beene Law Makers, to the end they might seeme the greater, they altered much. Which thing (in the end) grew to such a wickednesse, that they kept their owne commandements more than the Commandements of God.

Chrys. in Matthæ. Homil. 52.

In like maner saith S. Cyril: Vellent suam Doctrinam, & Paternas Traditiones ab hominibus potiùs suscipi, atque in admiratione honorèque haberi. Quicquid igitur Christo credentium accesserit, sibi detractum putant: The Pharisees would that men should receiue and magnifie their Doctrine, and the Traditions of the Fathers: Therefore how many soeuer Faithfull men came vnto Christ, they thought so many were lost from them.

Cyril. in Iohan. Lib. 8. Cap. 1.

It is not true that ye say, Traditions may not bee changed or abolished without the generall consent of the whole Church. For Ceremonies as they neuer grew together at one time in all places, so can they not lightly be abolished together at one time in all places. Socrates saith plainely: Videtur mihi, multa modò in his Regionibus, modò in illis, Consuetudinem obtinuisse: It seemeth vnto mee, that many things haue beene receiued by Custome,

Socrates Lib. 5. Cap. 21. Ἐμοὶ δὲ φαίνεται ἐπὶ πολλὰ κατὰ χώρας συνήθειαν ἰσχύσαι.

Custome, now in one Countrey, and now in another. Againe hee saith: In vniuersum certè, & in omnibus Obseruationibus piarum precum, non possunt duæ Ecclesiæ inueniri, quæ prorsus inter se consentiant: Verily to speake vniuersally, in all maner of Obseruations or Formes of Common Praier, there cannot two Churces be found, that agree thorowly betweene themselues. Socrates eodem loco.

S. Augustine saith plainely: Omnia talia, &c. vbi facultas tribuitur, sine omni dubitatione relegenda existimo: All such things, in my iudgement, ought to be cut off as soon as iust occasion or Power is giuen, without any maner of doubting. Aug. epist. 119.

So saith Pope Steuen: Si nonnulli ex Prædecessoribus & Maioribus nostris fecerunt aliqua, quæ illo tempore potuerunt esse sine culpa, & postea vertuntur in errorem & Superstitionem, sine tarditate aliqua, & cum magna Authoritate à posteris destruantur: If sundry of our Predecessors, or Elders, haue done certaine things, which at that time might well be done without hurt, and afterward are turned into error and Superstition, without any staggering, and with great Authority, let them be destroied and abolished by the Successors. Dist. 63. Quia Sancta.

Ceremonies.

And Pope Damasus saith: Quod ratione caret, extirpare necesse est: Whatsoeuer wanteth reason, must of necessity be rooted out. Dist. 68. Chorepiscopi.

We laugh not, as ye say, M. Harding, at the nakednesse of our Father. Our Father is in Heauen, the Father of Light, the God of Glorie: and in him there is no nakednesse. We laugh not at any of these things, but we say with S. Augustin, as it is alleged before, Hoc nimis doleo, &c. This thing very much greeueth me, that so many things holesomely commanded in the Holy Scriptures, are not regarded: and that al things are ful of so many presumptions. August. Epist. 119.

And that as S. Chrysostome saith, These things are called vpon and more regarded then the Lawes and Commandements of our Father. Chrys. in Mat. the Homil. 52.

Our Father saith of you, and of your fellowes: Volunt facere, vt obliuiscatur Populus meus nominis mei propter somnia sua: They will cause, that my people shall forget my Name, for loue of their Dreames. Ierem. 23.

Our Father saith: Two euils haue my People done: They haue forsaken me the Fountaine of the water of life: and they haue ript vp to themselues broken Cesterns, that can hold no Water. Ierem. 2.

Our Father saith: What is Chaffe vnto the Corne? Who hath required these things at your hands? Ierem. 23.

To be short, heerof Christ himselfe saith thus: Euery plant that my Heauenly Father hath not planted, shall be plucke vp by the rootes. Isai 1. Matth. 15.

The Apologie, Chap. 18. Diuision 1.

VVE make our Prayers in that tong which al our People, as meet is, may vnderstād, to the end they may (as S. Paul counselleth vs) take common commodity by Common Prayer, euen as all the Holy Fathers & Catholike Bishops, both in the Old and New Testament, did vse to pray themselues, and taught the People to pray too: lest, as S. Augustine saith, Like Parots and Ouels we should seeme to speake that we vnderstand not. Neither haue we any other Mediator and Intercessor, by whom we may haue accesse to God the Father, but onely Iesus Christ, in whose onely name all things are obtained at his Fathers hand. But it is a shamefull part, and ful of Infidelity, that we see euery where vsed in the Churches of our Aduersaries, not only in that they wil haue innumerable sorts of Mediators, and that vtterly without the Authority of Gods Word. (So that, as Ieremie saith, The Saints be now as many in number, or rather aboue the number of the Cities: and poore men cannot tell to which Saint it were best to turne them first. And though there be so many as they cannot be told, yet euery one of them hath his peculiar duty & office assigned vnto him by these folks, what thing they ought to aske, what to giue, & what to bring to passe.) But besides this also, in that they do not onely wickedly, but also shamefully call vpon the Blessed Virgin Christs Mother, to haue her remember that she is the Mother, and to command her Son, and to vse a Mothers authoritie ouer him. Ierem. cap. 2. & 11.

(a) This is M. Hardings legierdumaine. For we speake onely of such Mediators as wee ought to pray vnto.

(b) As if S. Paul had euer willed vs to pray to Saints.

M. Harding.

There is but one Mediator of Saluation, who is Christ onely: & the Saints be his friends be Mediators of Intercession. 1. Corinth. 1.

We haue but only one Mediator to Saluatiō, Iesus Chriſt, by whose merits God is reconciled vnto vs. But where ye say, that beſides the ſame one Mediator ye haue none other that (a) may pray or make Interceſſion for you, that point of falſe beleefe ye may keepe to your ſelues. We had rather hold with (b) S. Paul, who as he is praied for of al Chriſtian men, ſo he doubted not to ſay to the Corinthians, that he hoped to eſcape danger, Adiuuantibus vobis in Oratione pro nobis: By the helpe of you in praier for vs. If one good man may helpe another in this life by Praier, whiles he hath yet ſomewhat of his owne to bee carefull for: much more the Saints, which are dissolued, & reigne with Christ, can helpe vs with their perfect Praier. Ye can tel, I trow) that S. Hierome made this argument within little of twelue hundred yeeres past. Neither make we them Gods, as ye would seem to say by the place (which being spoken by the Prophet Ieremie of very Idols) ye apply to the friends of Christ; whom Dauid saith to be vnto him most honourable, and their Dominion to be most strong. There is no cause why ye should wonder if diuers Cities do gladly acknowledge some one holy Angel, Apostle, Martyr, or Confessor, as their chiefe Patron and friend. For if (as it is written) Michael the Archangell was once Prince of the Iewes, and stood alwaies for the children Gods people: it is not to be doubted but that Christiã people haue now also their (c) Patrons. To this purpose (d) some apply that which is written, Fulgebunt iusti, & tanquam scintillæ in arundineto discurrent: iudicabunt nationes, & dominabuntur populis, & regnabit Dominus illorum in perpetuum: The iust men shall shine, and like sparkes of fire in dry kickes, shall runne abrod: they shall iudge nations and beare rule ouer peoples, and our Lord shal raigne ouer them for euer. S. Ambrose is of that opinion plainely, where he saith, writing vpon S. Luke: Sicut Angeli præsunt, ita & ij qui vitam meruerint Angelorum: As the Angels be ouer Nations, so they also which deserue the life of Angels.

(c) Vntruth, proceeding, of vain dotage.

(d) A graue Authority, taken out of the very Portuise.

Concerning the offices that ye say we appoint vnto the Saints, ye must vnderstand, that as God hath shewed by any Miracle what good works he hath wrought by this Saint, rather then by that: so the people desire to obtain of God, by the same Saints praier, that thing wherein they may (e) coniecture that God hath giuen him most grace. And because our Lady the blessed Virgin Mary hath more grace geuẽ to her then any other Creature, (except ye can name (f) a greater grace then to be the Mother of God) therefore al Christian Nations are most bold to desire in praier to be releeued by her Intercession, & Mediation of her praier made to her Son Iesus Christ (who we doubt not) heareth her most gladly, as no lesse intending to do good by her continually to vs, then we are sure that by her he hath done for vs those great benefits which continually we do receiue, for so much as he tooke Flesh of her. And seeing that Christ is the first begotten among many Brothers, we that are called into one Heritage with him, and by him may take heart to account Christs Mother for our Mother, specially whereas he said to Iohn his Disciple, and in him to all the children of Grace, Behold thy Mother.

(e) This is the certainety of M. Hardings praier It hangeth of a blind coniecture.

(f) It is a greater grace to bee the Childe of God.

If now any Spirituall man, such as S. Bernard was, deepely considering the great honour and dignity of Christs Mother, doe in excesse of minde (g) Spiritually sport and dally (as it were) with her, bidding her to remember that she is a Mother, and that thereby she hath a certaine right to command her Son, and require in a most sweet manner that she vse her right: is this either impiously, or impudently spoken? Is not he rather most impious and impudent that findeth fault therewith? If euer any of you had practised in contemplation any of that sweetnesse which is in Canticis Canticorum, ye should haue found, that there the Spirituall Soule is bolder with God her Creator and Spouse, then S. Bernard euer was with our Lady, being but a Creature, and a member of the same Church with him.

(g) Open Blasphemy is Spirituall dalliance. O when will M. Harding confesse a fault!

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Mediator of Intercession.

Ye say, there is one only Mediatour of Saluation: but there are many Mediatours of Intercession. And thus with this pretty simple distinction ye conueigh your selfe away inuisibly in a cloud. But to cut off quarrels, M. Harding, let vs haue that one only Mediatour of Saluation: and then afterward take to you your other Mediators of Intercession at your pleasure.

Nowbeit, if Christ only be the Mediatour of Saluation, wherefore then doe you thus call vpon the Blessed Virgin Christs Mother, Salua omnes qui te glorificant? Saue them all them that glorifie thee? Here you intrude vpon Christs office, and make the Holy Virgin a Mediatour, not only of Intercession, as you say, but also of Saluation.

M. Harding fol. 358. a.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. A Wrangler will neuer lacke words, &c. When wee say to the Virgin, Saue vs, we meane thus: Pray for vs to God, that we may be saued. The Answer. It appeareth well by you, M. Harding, that a Wrangler will neuer lacke shift of words. To desire Saluation of any Creature, and that for glorifying and praising of the same, it is nothing else, but vaine and childish Blaspemy. We can desire no more of God himselfe. And yet by wrangling words it must bee holpen. When ye say to the Blessed Virgin, Saue vs, your meaning is this, as you say, Pray for vs to God that we may be saued.

1. Timoth. 2. Mediatour.

First we tell you, as S Paul hath taught vs: There is one Mediatour betweene God and Man, Christ Iesus being Man. Hereunto ye make answere: There are two Mediatours; the one of Saluation, which onely is Christ: the other of Intercession, or Praier, which (you say) may belong to the Saints of God. Here I reply, and shew you by your owne Praiers, and by the practise of your Church of Rome, that contrary to your owne Distinction, you desire Saluation of our Lady, and so make her a Mediatour, not onely of Praier, but also of Saluation. Unto this you answer, that by these words, Saue vs, ye meane nothing else, but, Pray for vs. Thus you can shift Praying into Sauing, and Sauing againe into Praying, at your pleasure. All this notwithstanding, we must thinke you deale plainely, and want words, and are no Wrangler.

But if you craue nothing of our Lady, but onely her Praier, what shall we then doe with, Meritis & Precibus suæ piæ Matris? Here are not onely Praiers, but also Merits. Must we thinke, that Merit and Praier in your Diuinity is all one thing? What shall we doe with these words, that were wont to ring in all your Churches, Monstra te esse Matrem? Shew thy selfe to be the Mother: and let him know it? That is to say, Command him: He is thy Sonne.

Nowbeit

Howbeit, perhaps you will likewise turne Commandement into Praier: And thus when you list, Saluation is Praier, Merit is Praier, and Commandement is Praier. So easily an ill thing may be smothed. And all this can you defend, and saue vpright, without wrangling.

Wherefore say yee thus of Thomas Becket, of whose Sainthood, for ought that I know, yee may well stand in doubt: Tu per Thomæ Sanguinem, quem pro te impendit, Fac nos Christe scandere, quò Thomas Ascendit: O Christ make vs to Ascend vnto Heauen, whither Thomas is Ascended, euen by the Blood of Thomas, that hee shed for thy sake. Heere you seeke, not onely Intercession, but also Saluation in the Blood of Thomas. Tu per Thomæ.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. This is an obiection for a Cobler, as the other was, and not for a Diuine, whose duti e it were to depend of things and not of words, &c. Now because, we know, it was a most gracious gift of God, that he gaue S. Thomas grace to die for his Honor, when we desire to be holpen by his Bloud, representing the memory of S. Thomas vnto Christ, &c. Your words bee faire M. Iewel, but your Heart vnawares to your selfe, doth Honour the Idol Caluin, more then Christ Iesus &c. The trimme Strumpet of Caluines setting out pleaseth you well. It is that foule and blinde heart of yours, that shall condemne you &c. M. Harding. fol. 358. b 359. a. 363.

The Answer. Alas good Christian Reader, that euer man should thus wastefully beslow his words. I am afraid we see a Member of him, of whom Daniel saith: Consurgit Rex impudens facie: There shall rise vp a Prince with an impudent face, that shall neuer be ashamed of any thing, what soeuer he say or doe. S. Peter saith: There is no other name or Creature giuen to men vnder Heauen, whereby we shal be saued, but only the name of Christ Iesus. And therefore the ancient Father Origen saith: Ipse solus est Hostia pro peccatis: & ipse est Hostia, Sancta Sanctorum: Christ onely is the Sacrifice for sinnes: he is the Sacrifice, the Holy of Holy. Leo saith: Nullius insontis occisio propitiatio fuit mundi: The Death of no Innocent was the Sacrifice or Redemption of the world. Yet heere wee are taught, to seeke our Saluation in the Blood of Thomas Becket, of whose Vertue and Innocency we may well stand in doubt. Notwithstanding ye tell vs, This was an obiection for a Cobler. Daniel. 8. Antichrist. Act. 4. Orig. in Leuit. homil. 4. & 5. Leo Epist. 81.

But it was a most gracious gift of God (you say) that he gaue this Thomas grace to die for his Honour. For his Honour, say you? Now for shame, M. Harding, aduise your selfe better what you write, perhaps some man of simplicity will beleeue you. The very true cause of Thomas Beckets Death, was his Ambition, and Vanitie, and wilfull maintenance of manifest wickednesse in the Clergy, to the great dishonour of Gods Holie name, as by the Writers of that time it doth well appeare. For proofe whereof, it may please you to read the Storie of Guilielmus Neubrigensis, that lined in the same age.

It is written, that this Thomas Beckets Father was a Iew, and a Beere-Brewer of London, and that from his House began a fire in the time of King Steuen, that consumed all the one side of London, from the Bridge where he dwelt, vnto Temple Barre. Newbrigensis saith, that King Henrie the Second, tooke him into his speciall fauour, and being only the Archdeacon of Canterbury, made him Lord Chancellor of his Realme, & so intreated him with al kind of Honour, that he seemed to Raigne aswel as the King: and that afterward he promoted him to the Archbishopricke of Canterbury, and sent him to the Councel of Toures, then holden in France. Being there as vpon some remorse of Conscience, he misliked, and secretly refused the Kings gift, and resigned his Archbishopricke vnto the Pope, & receiued it again at his hands, and so secretly & in couert, betraied his Princes Right vnto a stranger. At his return, there grew a great question within this Realm, touching the prerogatiue of the Clergy. The Iudges complained that there were many Robberies, and Rapes, and Murders, to the number of one hundred then presently committed within the Realm by Ecclesiastical persons, & therfore made request in Parliament, that there might be some good consideration had of it, for that they themselues being Temporall Ministers, had neither Law nor Iurisdiction to deale against them. As for the Bishops (saith Nubrigensis) whose part it was to see such disorders corrected, of so many thousand wicked Priests, they neuer disgraded, nor punished so much. as one. For they (saith he) seeking more carefully how to maintaine the Dignity and Liberties of their Clergy, then the Correction of their manners, thinke they doe good seruice to God, and his Church, if they maintaine wicked Priests against the good Order of common Weales: Whereby (saith he) it commeth to passe, that the Priests that should shine, as Starres in the Heauens, hauing free liberty to do what they list, care neither for God nor for Man. For redresse hereof, the King was earnestly minded to take Order by his Parliment. All the rest of the Bishops, not one excepted, agreed thereunto and confirmed the same vnder their Seales. Only Thomas Becket, the Archbishop of Canterbury, stood stiffe & stout, and would not yeeld. Afterward when he saw the Kings displeasure grew against him, in the morning before he should come to make his answer, hee caused the Masse of S. Steuens office, solemnely *Guilielm. to be ſong before him, with this Preface, Sederunt Principes, &c. The Kings ſate down to ſpeake againſt me, and the wicked ſought to perſecute me. This done, he tooke his ſiluer Croſſe in his hand and got him boldly to the Court. But perceiuing that the King was much moued and miſliked his ſtoutneſſe, the next night following, he fled ouer into France, and afterward ſought aid of the Pope. At the laſt, being reconciled vnto his Prince, and returning againe into England, he brought with him the Popes Suſpenſion, and thereby Suſpended all the Biſhops of this Realme, and would neuer agree to releaſe them. By meane whereof the whole Countrey being ſore diſordered, ſhortly after enſued his death. This is the true Story of Thomas Becket. So ſtoutly he maintained the Robberies, the Rapes, the Murthers and open wickednelle of his Clergy, and would not ſuffer any Law to paſſe againſt them. Neubrigenſis ſaith: This ſtoutneſſe in him, I can in no wiſe commend. He boiled (ſaith he) with zeale of iuſtice, but whether it were according to knowledge, or no, God onely knoweth. All this notwithſtanding, M. Harding, you tell vs, That God gaue him a ſpecial grace to die for his honor, & that by his bloud we ſhalbe holpen & ſaued, & come to Heauen. Put hereto what ſenſe ye will: verily to vſe your owne words, this Diuinity is much fitter for a Cobler, then for a graue man of your profeſſion.

Ambro. in Sermone 6. De S. Margarita.

Wherefore doth S. Ambroſe ſay, if it were S. Ambroſe that wrote the Booke: Reddere debemus Sanctis honorificentiam, qui nobis ſalutem profuſione ſui Sanguinis peperunt: qui tam Sacra Hoſtia pro noſtra propitiatione Domino ſunt oblati? Wee muſt yeeld honour vnto the Saints, which haue procured Saluation for vs, by the ſhedding of their Blood: which alſo were offered vp vnto the Lord, ſo holy a Sacrifice for our Saluation? If we haue Saluation in the Blood of Saints, then is not Chriſt the Onely mediatour of our Saluation.

Mediator of Interceſſion.

He is no indifferent Umpeere, that firſt diuideth Offices equally betweene two, and afterward allotteth both Offices to one alone.

Notwithſtanding the End and Office, as well of Interceſſion, as alſo of Saluation, is, to reconcile vs vnto God, and to procure vs Mercy. But this is Chriſts onely Office: He reconcileth vs vnto God: he preſenteth vs vnto the Throne of Grace. And therefore, as S. Paul ſaith, he euermore maketh Interceſſion for vs. And for that cauſe alſo hee ſaith: Vnus eſt mediator Dei & Hominum, Homo Chriſtus Ieſus: There is One mediatour betweene God and Man, Chriſt Ieſus being Man.

S. Paul (you ſay) Requireth the people to make Interceſſion and to pray for him. This is true. And God hath commanded, that all the Faithfull ſhould pray one for another. But S.

Auguſt. contra epiſt. Parmen. lib. 2. cap. 8.

Paul neuer required the people to pray to Saints. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Paulus non facit ſe mediatorem inter Populum & Deum: Sed rogat, vt pro ſe orent inuicem omnia membra Corporis Chriſti: Paul maketh not himſelfe a mediatour betweene God and the People: but requireth, that they Pray one for another, being all the Members of the Body of Chriſt. Againe he ſaith of S. Iohn: Si Iohannes ita diceret, Hoc ſcripſi vobis, vt non peccetis: Et ſi quis peccauerit, mediatorem me habetis apud Deum, & ego exoro pro peccatis veſtris, Sicut Parmenianus quodam loco mediatorem poſuit Epiſcopum inter Populum & Deum, quis eum ferret honorum, atque Fidelium Chriſtianorum? Quis ſicut Apoſtolum Chriſti, & non ſicut Antichriſtum intueretur? If S. Iohn would ſay, This haue I written vnto you that yee Sinne not: and if yee Sinne, yee haue mee your Mediatour before God, and I will intreat for your Sinnes, As Parmenian (the Heretike) in a certaine place, made the Biſhop a mediatour betweene God and the People, what good and faithfull Chriſtian man could abide him? Who would looke vpon him, as the Apoſtle of Chriſt, and not rather thinke him to be Antichriſt?

Aug. in eod. lib.

Here, M. Harding, your fondly diſtinction of Interceſſion, and Saluation, can not ſaue you. For Parmenian neuer thought the Biſhop was a mediatour of Saluation. And yet S. Auguſtine ſaith, If S. Iohn would haue ſaid ſo much of himſelfe, hee had not beene the Apoſtle of Chriſt, but rather ſhould haue beene iudged and taken for Antichriſt.

Yee thinke, The words of the Prophet Hieremy ſpoken of Idols and Falſe Gods, may not iuſtly bee applied to the Saints of God. Indeed of the Saints part, it were great blaſphemy to call them Idols. For they ſee God face to face, and euermore be with God in glory. But in reſpect of your horrible abuſes, and vaine fantaſies, the Words of the Prophet bee rightly applied. For you in your Imagination, of the Saints of God, haue made Idols, and haue ſo multiplied and increaſed the ſame, that the number of them, hath farre paſſed the number of all your Townes and Cities. And therefore the Ancient Father Epiphanius, applieth the like words of the ſame Prophet Hieremie, vnto the Bleſſed Virgine Marie, being then idolatrouſly abuſed by the Heretikes, called Collyridiani, euen as the ſame Bleſſed Virgin, and other Saints are by you abuſed now. Thus he writteth: Ne quis comedat de errore, qui eſt propter S. Mariam.

Tametſi

Tametsi enim Pulchrum sit lignum, tamen non est ad Cibum. Etsi Pulcherrima est Maria, & Sancta, & Honorata: at non ad Adorationem. Hæ verò Mulieres, colentes Mariam, rursus renouant Fortunæ Mixturam, & præparant Mensam Diabolo, non Deo: Quemadmodum scriptum est, Pascuntur Cibo impietatis. Et rursus, & Fœminæ terunt Pollinem, & Filij colligunt ligna, vt faciant Placentas oleo subactas Reginæ Cœli. Compescantur à Hieremia tales Mulieres: & ne turbent Orbem terrarum. Ne dicant, Honoramus Reginam Cœli: Let no man eat of this Errour, touching S. Mary. For though the tree be faire, yet is not this Fruit to be eaten. Although Mary be Beautifull, and Holy and Honourable, yet is shee not to be adored. But these Women worshipping S. Mary, renue againe the Sacrifice of Wine mingled in the Honour of the Goddesse Fortuna, and prepare a Table for the Diuel, and not for God. As it is written in the Scriptures, They are fedde with the meat of Wickednesse. And againe, Their Women boult flower, and their Children gather sticks, to make fine cakes, in the Honor of the Queene of Heauen. Therfore let such Women be rebuked by the Prophet Hieremie, and let them no more trouble the world. And let them not say, We Worship the Queen of Heauen. Ἀναμφίλεκτον τὸ ξύλον τὸ λίχνευς.

Here we see, the words, that were spoken of the Heathenish Idols, are applied by Epiphanius, vnto the Mother of Christ, not to defate the Blessed Virgin, but to declare the fond errours of those Heretikes.

As for the distribution of Offices and seuerall duties, limited and appointed to euery Saint in his degree, it shall be best for modesties sake to say nothing. S. Augustine speaking of the Heathens, from whom this part of your Diuinity, M. Harding, was first deriued, saith thus: Dicebat, ita esse vtilem cognitionem Deorum, si sciatur, quam quisque Deus vim, aut potestatem habeat, cuiusque rei. Ex eo enim poterimus, inquit, scire, quem cuiusque rei causa Deum aduocare, atque inuocare debeamus: ne faciamus, vt Mimi solent & optemus à Libero Aquam, à Lymphis Vinum: Varro said, the knowledge of the Gods is profitable, if a man vnderstand what power and authority each God hath in euery thing. For so saith he, we may know, whom to call vpon, and whom to pray vnto: Lest happily wee doe, as certaine Mimi are wont to doe, that is to say, lest of Bacchus, the God of Wine, we beg Water, or of Lymphæ, the Goddesse of Water, we beg Wine. Distinct Offices. August. de Ciuit. li.4.ca.12.

These things hauing their beginning among the Heathens, haue sithence beene brought euen into the Church of God, and all the Saints in Heauen haue beene appointed, each one in Order, to his seuerall Office: Lest any one should intrude into anothers rome. Antoninus saith, in his time, where S. Paul and Friar Dominicke were painted together, the manner was, vnder the Image of S. Paul to write these words, Per hunc itur ad Christum: We may come to Christ by this Saint: But vnder the Image of Friar Dominicke, they wrote thus: Sed magis per istum: Yet much rather by this Saint. Whereby was meant, that Friar Dominicks Office and authority before God, was somwhat better, and of more credit than S. Pauls.

Whereas ye teach the people thus to pray vnto the Blessed Virgin: Monstra te esse Matrem: Command thy Sonne: Vse thy Motherly authority ouer him: Let him know thee to be his Mother: This, you say, is no blasphemy, but a Spirituall dallying. Now verily, M. Harding, this must needs be a blessed kinde of Diuinity, that can turne Praier into Dalliance.

One of your Beaupéres of Louaine, as a man carrying his Face in his hand, saith boldly, These words were neuer vsed in your Church. And therefore hee saith with good courage: Interim à bonis istis viris quæro, Cur non nominant illas Ecclesias, quæ Virginem Matrem tam impudenter appellant? Cur eas inquam non nominant? In the meane season (saith he) this question I demand of these honest men: Why name they not those Churches, which so impudently call vpon that Virgin Christs mother? I say why doe they not name them? Your modesty herein, M. Harding, is more praise worthy. You are contented to grant the fact, and pleasantly to excuse it by a Spirituall dallying. Copus. Dialog. 3. pag. 340.

But yee may tell your saide Fellow, that this kinde of Praier was vniuersally vsed throwout all your whole Church of Rome: that Men, Women, and Children, Learned, and Vnlearned were taught and forced thus to pray: Thou art the Queene of Heauen: Thou art the Lady of Angels: Command thy Sonne: Shew thy selfe to bee the mother. Yee may tell him, that Cardinall Bembus, sometime the Popes Secretary, calleth the same Blessed Virgin: Dominam, & Deam nostram: Our Lady and Goddesse. Tell him, that Ambrosius Catharinus in your late Chapter at Trident, representing as you say, your whole Catholike Church, calleth the same Blessed Virgin, Gods Fellow, by these words: Fidelissima eius Socia: Gods most Faithfull Fellow. Bembus in epist. ad Carolum 5. Concil. Trident. Session. 2. Nic. Cusan. ex. citation lib. 8. Hoc credit.

dem Dei, & Virginis Mariæ Matris, quòd ipſa ſub Principatu Authoris Mortis nullo vnquam tempore fuit. Non indiguit Virgo Liberatore qui ipſam abſolueret à ſententia in Adam & in poſteros lata. Maria non eſt deleta de Libro Mortis: quia nunquam in eo ſcripta fuit: This thing turneth to the praiſe of God, and of the Virgin Mary the Mother, that ſhe was neuer at any time, vnder the Princehood of the Author of Death. That Virgin needed no deliuerer, that ſhould Redeeme her from the Sentence pronounced againſt Adam and his poſterity. Mary was neuer raſed out of the Booke of Death, for ſhe was neuer written in it. Here we are taught, that Mary the Virgin is our Lady and Goddeſſe, that ſhe is Gods Fellow, and that ſhe had no need to be ſaued by the Death of Chriſt. What is blaſphemy if this be none? Yet this is the Diuinity of the Clergie of Rome.

Concil. Oxon.

We may further tell him, that in your Councell of Oxford, Chriſts name is quite forgotten, and left out: and Our Ladies name put in place: For thus it beginneth: Authoritate Dei Patris, & Beatæ Virginis, & omnium Sanctorum &c. By the Authority of God the Father, and of the Bleſſed Virgin, and of all Saints. Notwithſtanding ye may well anſwer as before, that all this was no manner blaſphemy againſt God, but onely a prety Spirituall Dalliance: euen ſuch Dalliance, I trow, as S. Paul meaneth by theſe words,

1. Cor. 10.

Sedit populus ad manducandum, & bibendum: & ſurrexerunt ad Ludendum: The people ſate downe to eate and drinke: and roſe vp againe to Play or Dallie, that is to ſay, to commit Idolatrie.

Mother of God. Childe of God.

You ſay, Our Lady the Bleſſed Virgin hath more grace giuen her, then any other Creature, except ye name a greater grace, ſay you, then to be the mother of God. Verily, M. Harding, to be the Child of God it is a great deale greater grace then to be the Mother of God. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Beatior ergo Maria fuit, Percipiendo Fidem Chriſti, quàm Concipiendo Carnem Chriſti. Materna Propinquitas nihil Mariæ profuiſſet: niſi fœliciùs Chriſtum Corde, quàm Carne geſtaſſet: Mary was more bleſſed (or fuller of Grace) in that ſhe receiued the Faith of Chriſt then in that ſhe Conceiued the Fleſh of Chriſt. Motherly kindred could haue done Mary no good, vnleſſe ſhe had borne Chriſt more Bleſſedly in her Heart, then ſhe bare him in her Fleſh.

Augu. de Sancta Virginitate cap. 3.

And againe he ſaith: Mater mea, quam appellaſtis Fœlicem, inde Fœlix eſt, quia verbum Dei cuſtodiuit: Non quia in illa Verbum Caro factum eſt: My Mother, whom ye haue called Bleſſed, therefore is Bleſſed, becauſe ſhe hath kept the word of God: Not becauſe the Word in her was made Fleſh.

Auguſt. in Ioh. Tract 10.

Therefore ſaith Epiphanius: Chriſtus dixit, Quid mihi, & tibi eſt mulier? Nondum venit hora mea. Quò non putarent aliqui, magis eximiam eſſe Sanctam Virginem, mulierem eam appellauit: veluti prophetans, quæ eſſent futura in terra Sectarum & Hæreſeon genera: vt ne aliqui nimiùm admirati Sanctam, in hanc Hæreſim, eiuſque deliramenta dilabantur. Eſt enim Ludibrium tota res, & anicularum fabula, & vt ita dicam, tota hæreſis Tractatio: Chriſt ſaid vnto his Mother, Woman, what haue I to doe with thee? My houre is not yet come. Leſt any man ſhould think Our Lady was of greater excellency, hee called her Woman, as it were prophefying of the Kinds and ſects of Hereſies, that were to come into the World. Leſt any man hauing too great opinion of that Holy Saint ſhould fall into this Hereſie, & into the dotage of the ſame. For indeed the whole matter is but a mockery, and an Old Wiues tale, and ſoothly to ſay, nothing elſe, but the handling of an Hereſie. Origen heereof ſaith:

Epiph. li. 3. hæreſ. 79. contra Collyridian.

Si menſuram tranſcenderit Charitatis, & qui diligit, & qui diligitur, in Peccato eſt: If Loue paſſe the meaſure of Charity, as well hee that Loueth, as alſo hee that is Loued, is in Sinne.

Origen. in Lucam, homil. 25.

But touching the matter it ſelfe, S. Ambroſe ſaith: Ideò ad Reges itur per Tribunos, & Comites, quia homo vtique eſt Rex: & neſcit, quibus debeat Rempublicam credere. Ad Deum autem, quem nihil latet, Omnium enim merita nouit, promerendum, ſuffragatore non eſt opus, ſed mente deuota. Vbicunq; enim talis loquutus fuerit ei, reſpondebit illi: Therefore we are brought vnto the preſence of Kings by Lords and Officers: becauſe the King is a man, and knoweth not to whom he may commit his Realme. But to obtain Gods fauour, from whom nothing is ſecret, as knowing what euery man is meet to haue, we need no ſpokeſman, but a deuout mind. For whereſoeuer ſuch a one ſpeaketh vnto God, God wil anſwer him.

The Apologie, Chap. 19. Diuiſion 1.

VVE ſay alſo, That euery perſon is borne in Sinne, and leadeth his life in Sin: That no body is able truly to ſay, his Heart is Cleane; That the moſt righteous perſõ is but an vnprofitable Seruant: That the Law of God is perfect and requireth of vs, perfect and full Obedience:

That

That we are able by no meanes to fulfill that Law in this worldly life: That there is no one mortall Creature, which can be iustified by his owne deserts in Gods sight: And therefore that our only succour and refuge is to flie to the Mercy of our Father by Iesu Christ, and assuredly to perswade our mindes, that he is the obtainer of forgiuenesse for our Sinnes: And that by his Blood, all our spots of Sinne be washed cleane: That he hath pacified and set at one, all things by the Blood of his Crosse: That he by the same One onely Sacrifice, which he once offered vpon the Crosse, hath brought to effect and fulfilled all things, and that for that cause he said, when he gaue vp the Ghost, It is finished, as though he would signifie, that the price and ransome was now full paid for the Sinne of Mankind. If there be any, that thinke this Sacrifice not sufficient, let them goe in Gods name and seeke a better. We verily because we know this to bee the Onely Sacrifice, are well content with it alone, and looke for none other: and forasmuch as it was to be offered but Once, we command it not to be renued againe: and because it was full, and perfect in all points and parts, we do not ordaine in place thereof any continuall succession of offerings.

(a) A vaine folly. For Gods Law was written for Men in Earth, not for Angels in Heauen.

(b) A horrible heresie S. Augustine saith, Deus iubet aliqua quæ nō possumus facere.

(c) A fond question. For God punisheth infants for their originall sin: yet are they by no meanes able to auoid it

(d) The cause heereof is Gods Mercy. S. Augustine saith: Omnia mādata facta deputantur, quando quicquid non factum est ignoscitur.

(e) Vntruth. For wee make not God vniust, but we confesse our selues to bee sinners.

M. Harding.

Ye make a Sophisticall argument, when ye reach, because the Law of God requireth of vs full obedience, that therefore it cannot be satisfied in this Life by any meanes. For when ye say, It requireth of vs full obedience, if ye meane (a) such full obedience as is required only in this Life, then conclude ye falsly, that we can by no meanes satisfie it. But if ye meane such full obedience, (a) as is only performed in Heauen, then yee conclude well, that we in this life cannot fulfill such perfection, as is required in Heauen. But then haue ye said nothing to the purpose. For wee know what marke ye shoot at, by your doctrine vttered in other places: your meaning is (b) that no man in this Life is able by the Grace of God to fulfill the Commandements. Wee beleeue, God commandeth vs nothing impossible to vs. (c) Otherwise how could he iustly punish for not dooing that Commandement, which by no meanes wee are able to fulfill: We are sure that God punisheth no man vniustly: for Non est apud Dominum Deum nostrum iniquitas: There is no iniquity in our Lord God.

God commandeth not that which is impossible to a man in grace.

Deut. 30. Rom 10. Matth. 11. 1. John 5.

Moses speaking of the fulfilling of the Commandements of God, which also S. Paul repeateth, saith, that they are not aboue vs in Heauen, neither farre from vs beyond the Sea: but hard by thee (saith he) is the word in thy mouth and in thy Heart, that thou maist doe it. And Christ saith, Iugum meum suaue est, & onus meum leue: (d) My yoke is sweet, and my burthen light: and S. Iohn, His Commandements be not heauy. He then, that saith, we can by no meanes fulfill the Law of God, maketh (e) God vniust and euill or impotent, and not able to giue so much grace, as may helpe to fulfil his Law. Let the discreet Reader iudge, what blasphemy your words containe. Belie vs no more hereafter. This is our Doctrine, better founded in the word of God, and in the Tradition of the Apostles, and in the custome of the whole Church, then that ye shall euer be able to ouerthrow it. Blaspheme, and barke against it ye may: ouercome it yee cannot.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

All other things hereby you touched, M. Harding, I will passe ouer: thinking it sufficient, to note a few words of the Possibility and performance of the Law: and so much the more, for that ye seeme therein in some part, to renue the Pelagian Heretikes old condemned errour.

Possibility of the Law.

As touching that full and perfect Obedience, that is required of vs by the Law, ye answer, There are sundry sorts of perfection namely, that there is Perfection in Children: Perfection in Men: Perfection in Angels: and Perfection in God. And further yee say, That in this Life we cannot fulfill such Perfection, as is required of the Angels of God in Heauen: And this answer ye make, touching the Obedience, and Performing of the Law: as if ye would say, The Law of God was giuen to Angels, and is to be performed, not in the Earth, but onely in Heauen: And, as if God had said to those blessed Spirits, Thou shalt not Kill: Thou shalt not commit Adultery: Thou shalt not steale: Thou shalt not couet, &c. In your sundrie Perfections of Children, Men, Angels, and God, I haue no skill, The Apologie meant onely of that Perfection, that is required in Man. Howbeit, in euery kind they say, Perfectum est, cui nihil deest: That thing is perfect, that is full and absolute and wanteth nothing.

And here, lest ye should deceiue your selfe by wrong measure, God himselfe hath shewed you, what Perfection hee requireth in man. Thus he saith: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy Heart, with all thy Soule, and with all thy Power: Thou shalt not turne, neither to the Right hand, nor the Left: Accursed is he, that standeth not in euery thinge that is written in the Law, to performe the same. And S. Iames saith: Whoso offendeth in one Commandement

Matth. 5.

Vnperfect Perfection

Commandement, is guilty of all. And Chriſt ſaith: Be ye Perfect (not meaſuring your ſelues by your owne ability, but) as your Father is perfect, which is in Heauen. And yet heereby he meaneth not the Perfection, that is in God, and his Angels, but onely that Perfection, that is required in man.

Hieronym. ad Cteſiphont. contra Pelagianos.

S. Hierome ſaith, The Pelagian Heretikes in old times, vſed the ſame ſhifts that you vſe now. For whereas the Catholike learned Fathers ſaid, No man is Perfect, and void of Sinne, they anſwered euen then euen in ſuch ſort, as you doe now; No man is Perfect in ſuch degree of Perfection as God is Perfect. S. Hieromes words be theſe: Aiunt, ad Comparationem Dei, nullum eſſe Perfectum: quaſi Scriptura hoc dixerit: They ſay, (euen as you M. Harding, ſay) that in Compariſon of God, no man is Perfect: As though this were the ſayings of the Scriptures. And therefore hee ſaith vnto them: Nunquid præcepit mihi Deus, vt eſſem, quod Deus eſt? Vt nihil inter me eſſet, & Dominum Creatorem? Vt maior eſſem Angelorum faſtigio? Vt haberem, quod Angeli non habent? I beſeech you, hath God commanded me, that I ſhould bee the ſame, that God is? That there ſhould be no difference (in Perfection) betweene mee, and my Lord the Creatour? That I ſhould be aboue the Highneſſe of Angels? Or that I ſhould haue, that the Angels haue not? It was in vaine therefore M. Harding, thus to borrow the Pelagians Weapons, and to make matter of this Perfection. For we ſpeake not of Angels, but onely of Men.

Aug. de Gratia & libero Arbitr. cap. 16.

Further, to intreat of the Perfect fulfilling and accompliſhing of the Law, I meane, ſo farre as the Law requireth, the Pelagian Heretikes herein alſo ſaid, euen as you ſay, and none otherwiſe. S. Auguſtine thereof reporteth thus: Magnum aliquid Pelagianiſſe ſcire putant, quando dicunt, Non iuberet Deus, quod ſciret ab homine non poſſe fieri. Quis hoc neſciat? Sed ideò iubet aliqua, quæ non poſſumus, vt nouerimus, quid ab ipſo petere debeamus: The Pelagians thinke themſelues cunning men, when they ſay, God would not command that thing, that he knoweth a man is not able to doe. And who is there, that knoweth not this? But therefore God Commanded vs to doe ſome things, that we are not able to doe, that we may vnderſtand, what wee ought to crane of him.

Hieronym. ad Cteſiphont. contra Pelagianos.

S. Hierome ſaith vnto one of the ſame Pelagians: Facilia eſſe dicis Dei mandata: & tamen nullum proferre potes, qui vniuerſa compleuerit: Ye ſay Gods commandements be eaſie: And yet ye are able to ſhew vs no man, that euer fulfilled them altogether.

Hieronym. contra Pelagianos. lib. 1.

Therefore againe he ſaith vnto them: Noli ponere in Cœlum os tuum, vt per Eſſe & Eſſe poſſe, ſtultorum auribus illudas. Quis enim tibi concedet, poſſe hominem facere, quod nullus vnquam hominum potuerit? Set not thy face againſt Heauen, to mocke fooles eares with theſe words, Be and Can be. For who will grant you, that a man can doe that thing that no man euer was able to doe?

Aug. de Spirit. & liter. cap. 1.

Likewiſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Dixi fieri poſſe, vt ſit homo ſine Peccato, ſi Voluntas ei non deſit, ope Diuina adiuuante: Sed tamen præter Vnum, in quo omnes viuificabuntur, neminem vel fuiſſe, vel fore, in quo hîc viuente eſſet iſta Perfectio: I ſaid, It is poſſible, that a man may be without Sinne, if he want not will, the Power of God aſſiſting him: And yet I ſaid, that beſides Onely Chriſt, in whom all men ſhall be quickened to Life, there was neuer man, nor neuer ſhall bee, who being in this life, ſhall haue this Perfection. S. Auguſtine ſaith: No man can attaine to this Perfection: and hee ſpeaketh of the Perfection, that is required, not of Angels, but of Men.

Matth. 5. Philip. 3.

Ye will ſay as the Pelagians did, wherefore then doth Chriſt ſay, Be yee Perfect? Wherefore doth S Paul ſay, As many of vs, as be Perfect, &c. Hereto S. Hierome anſweareth thus:

Hieron. aduerſ. Pelagianos, li. 1

Quid ergo ſapimus? Imò quid ſapere debemus, qui Perfecti non ſumus? Imperfectos nos eſſe confiteri, & nondum comprehendiſſe, nec dum accepiſſe. Hæc eſt Hominis vera Sapientia, Imperfectum eſſe ſe noſſe. Atque, vt ita loquar, Cunctorum in Carne Iuſtorum Imperfecta Perfectio eſt: What then doe we thinke, or what ought we to thinke that be not Perfect? We ought to Confeſſe, that we are Vnperfect, and that we haue not yet gotten, nor taken (that Perfection) that is required. This is the true wiſedome of a Man, to know himſelfe to be Vnperfect. And as I might ſay, the Perfection of all iuſt men liuing in the Fleſh is Vnperfect.

Hieronym. ad Cteſiphont.

Againe he ſaith: Iuſti appellantur, non quòd omni Vitio careant, ſed quod Maiori parte Virtutum commendentur: They are called Iuſt men, not for that they be void of all manet Sinne, but for that they are furniſhed with the greater part of Vertues. So likewiſe ſaith S.

Aug. ad Bonifac. li. 3. ca. 7.

Auguſtine: Virtus, quæ nunc eſt in homine Iuſto, hactenus Perfecta nominatur, vt ad eius Perfectionem pertineat etiam ipſius Imperfectionis & in Veritate agnitio, & in humilitate Confeſſio: The Vertue, that is now in a iuſt man, ſo far forth is called Perfect, that it pertaineth to the Perfection thereof, both in truth to know, and in humility to confeſſe, that it

Yet neuertheleſſe wee may truly vſe S. Hieromes words, vttered in the defenſe and right of this ſame cauſe: Hæc dicentes, non adulamur vitijs, ſed Authoritatem ſequimur Scripturarum, quòd nullus homo ſit abſque Peccato. Sed concluſit Deus omnia ſub Peccato, vt Omnium miſereatur: Notwithſtanding wee ſay thus, yet wee flatter not Vices: but we follow the Authority of the Scriptures, that there is no man without Sinne. But God hath ſhut vp all things vnder Sinne, that he may haue Mercie of all. Againe he ſaith: Perſpicuum eſt, omnem hominem, quamuis ad Perfectionem venerit, tamen indigere Miſericordia Dei; & plenam Perfectionem ex Gratia, non ex Merito poſſidere: It is moſt certaine that euery man, yea although he be growen to Perfection, yet needeth the Mercie of God: and that he enioieth full Perfection, not of his owne Deſeruing, but of Grace. Euen ſo S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ipſa Iuſtitia noſtra tanta eſt in hac vita, vt potius, Peccatorum Remiſſione conſtet, quàm Perfectione Virtutum: Our very Righteouſneſſe it ſelfe is ſo great in this Life, that it ſtandeth rather in Forgiueneſſe of Our Sinnes, then in Perfection of Righteouſneſſe. Hieron. in Ezechiel. Lib. 14. Cap. 46. Aug. de Ciuit. lib. 19. cap. 27.

The Apology, Chap. 20. Diuiſion 1.

BEſides, though we ſay, we haue no meed at all by our owne Workes, and Deedes, but appoint all the meanes of Our Saluation to bee in Chriſt alone, yet ſay we not, that for this cauſe men ought to liue looſely, and diſſolutely: nor that it is enough for a Chriſtian to bee Baptized onely, and to Beleeue; as though there were nothing elſe required at his hand. For true Faith is liuely, and can in no wiſe be idle. Thus therefore teach we the People, that God hath called vs, not to follow riot and wantonneſſe, but, as S. Paul ſaith, vnto good Workes, to walke in them: That we are deliuered from the Power of Darkeneſſe, to the end that wee ſhould ſerue the Liuing God: To cut away all the remnants of Sinne, and to worke Our Saluation in feare and trembling: that it may appeare, that the Spirit of Sanctification is in Our Bodies, and that Chriſt himſelfe dwelleth in Our Hearts.

Merit, and Mercie.

M. Harding.

With what face can theſe Defenders affirme that they teach the people to walke in good workes, whereas beginning the treatiſe of workes in this preſent Apologie, they ſay that we haue (a) no helpe or aid in our workes and deeds? For ſo their Latine word, Præſidium, doth ſignifie, which in the Engliſh is turned into Meed. What Maſters, is this the way to make men worke well, to tell them before hand that their workes be nothing worth, and that they helpe them neuer a whit? Why then let the Labourers Prouerbe take place, I had rather play for nothing, then worke for nothing. (b) Is there any Labourer ſo madde, as to worke for nothing? Firſt ye tell the Labourers, that there is no helpe for them, in their workes, and then ye cry vnto them to labour: (c) yea forſooth, as hard as they liſt. Is not this to mocke God, and the World? Whereas ye ſpeake to Chriſtian men, to thoſe that bee Baptized, to ſuch as haue Faith; yet ye tell them they may worke as much as they will, (d) but all in vaine, &c. Ergo, then although a liuely Faith cannot be idle, and ſome true Faith is liuely, yet in another ſenſe (e) there is a true Faith which is not liuely, but idle. Which true Faith ſhall become liuely, and haue great aid in workes; if it will learne to leaue idleneſſe, and practiſe that in will and heart, which it beleeueth in vnderſtanding.

(a) No aid or helpe vnto Saluation. Otherwiſe this report is vntrue.

(b) Nazianzen. Si Mercenarius es, tamen expecta mercedem. De Sancto Baptiſmo.

(c) Is not this a folly, M. Harding? Gods Truth is no mockerie.

(d) Vntruth. For wee ſay with S. Paul, Your works ſhall not be in vaine in the Lord

(e) Vntruth. Read the Anſwer.

But whereas theſe Defenders would no helpe or aid to be in Chriſtian mens works, that (f) Hereſie may not ſo eſcape. Chriſt being demanded of one, what good he ſhould doe to obtaine Euerlaſting Life, ſaid: If thou wilt enter into Life, keepe the Commandements. To keepe the Commandements is a worke: to enter into Life is ſome helpe to a man. Therefore it is falſly ſpoken, that in our workes there is no helpe for vs. Againe Chriſt ſaith, Whoſoeuer forſaketh his houſe, or brothers, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my ſake; he ſhall receiue an hundred fold, and ſhall inherit Life Euerlaſting. S. Paul ſaith, God will render to euery man according to his worke. To thoſe that ſeeke for glory, and honour, and incorruption, according to the ſufferance of good workes (hee will render) Life Euerlaſting.

That good workes helpe vs. Matth. 19.

(f) Vntruth. For it is no Hereſie: it is the Faith of Chriſt. Read the Anſwer. Luc. 17.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Yéere yee trifle, M. Harding, although not much beſides your common wont, yet ſomewhat aboue your ordinarie. Our Doctrine héerein is grounded vpon theſe words of Chriſt, When yee haue done all, ſay that ye be vnprofitable Seruants, and therefore haue deſerued nothing. Indéed of late yéeres this hath béene the Generall Doctrine of your Schooles: Vita Æterna eſt Merces debita pro noſtris Meritis: Vita Æterna, niſi eſſet Merces debita, eſſet incerta: Quia debitum certum eſt; Miſericordia incerta, Euerlaſting Life is a reward due for our deserunges. If Euerlasting Life were not a due reward, it were vncertaine. For due debt is certaine: Mercy or fauour is vncertaine. Thus haue you vtterly drowned the Grace of God, and the Saluation that wee haue onely in Iesus Christ: and haue turned the most Comfortable Doctrine of the Gospell into a Dungeon of Desperation.

Then (say you) let the Labourers Prouerbe take place, I had rather play for nothing, then worke for nothing. Verily, M. Harding, when other reason could not serue you, it was reason your Labourers idle reason should take place. Howbeit, if yee will doe nothing at Gods request, of good will, without reward, but must be hired onely for your Pennie, then may your Labourer, be he neuer so simple, easily tell you, ye are not the Childe of God, but onely a Hireling, and a Labourer. For the Naturall loning Childe will Obey his Father, not for reward, but of loue, only because he is his Father.

Gregor. Nazianz. de Sancto Baptismate. ἐργάτης εἶναι, ἢ παῖς τοῦ πατρός. Καὶ εἰ μὲν μισθὸν ἐργάτης μένει, τοῦτο αὐτὸ μισθός, τὸ τοῦ παιδὸς χαρίζεται.

Gregorie Nazianzene saith: Si Seruus es, time plagas: Si Mercenarius, tantùm specta mercedem. At si supra hos es etiam Filius, reuerere tanquam Patrem tuum. Beneficio, quia pulchrum est obsequi Patri. Et quamuis nihil aliud futurum sit, tamen vel hoc ipsum erit merces tua fecisse quod gratum esset Patri: If thou be a bond-Slaue, then feare the whip: If thou be a Hireling, then looke onely for thy reward. But ouer and besides these, if thou be a (Naturall) Childe, then reuerence (God as thy Father. Doe well, because it is good to Obey thy Father. Yea, and although thou shalt haue nothing else, yet euen this shall be thy reward that thou hast beene obedient to thy Father.

Hilar. in Psal. 118. Caph.

S Hilarie saith: Nos, si semel ieiunamus, satisfecisse nos arbitramur: Si aliquid ex horreo domesticarum facultatum inopi damus, impleuisse nos iustitiam credimus, &c. Sed Propheta totum à Deo sperat: totum à misericordia eius expectat: If we fast once, wee thinke wee haue satisfied. If out of the barnes of Our household store wee giue somewhat to the Poore, we beleeue we haue fulfilled the measure of Righteousnesse. But the Prophet hopeth all of God: and trusteth all of his Mercie.

Matth. 5.

Christ saith to his Disciples: Let your Light so shine before men, (not that yee may be rewarded, but) that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your Father which is in Heauen.

Aug. Confess.

S. Augustine saith: Minus diligit te, qui diligit aliud præter te: O God, he the lesse loueth thee, that loueth any other thing besides thee. Likewise S. Basil saith:

Basil in Ps. 32. μόνη δὲ τῶν ἐλπίδα τὴν σωτηρίαν, τὴν ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ.

Qui non fidit suis rectè factis, nec expectat ex operibus iustificari, solam habet spem salutis Misericordias Dei: He that trusteth not to his owne good deeds, nor hopeth to be iustified by his works, hath the Onely hope of his Saluation, the Mercies of God.

Further ye say: A true Faith may be idle, and vtterly without workes: and therefore ye thinke it not true that wee say, A true Faith is liuely, and can in no wise be idle. Yeere perhaps yee will set Faith vpon the Last, and racke her to a larger sise. For so Latomus one of your fellowes saith, that Socrates and Plato, and other Heathen Philosophers had as good vnderstanding, and Faith in Christ, as had Abraham. And Andradius another of your fellowes saith, that the Heathen and Infidell Philosophers had the Righteousnesse of Faith, and Euerlasting Life. His words be these: Philosophi qui ab inani Deorum multitudine abhorruerunt, &c. Illos tu illa Fide, Deique cognitione destitutos dices, per quam scilicet impius iustificatur, & ex qua iustus viuit? The Philosophers that abhorred and shunned the vaine multitude of Gods, &c. Wilt thou say, they lacked that Faith, and that knowledge of God whereby the wicked is iustified, and whereby the Righteous liueth? Another of your neere fellowes saith: Petrus non Fidem Christi, sed Christum, Salua Fide, negauit: Peter denied not the Faith of Christ, but he denied Christ, his Faith neuertheles being safe. If ye call this True Faith, M. Harding, that may be found in Heathens, and Infidels, and may well and safely stand with the abiuring of Christ, then without question your True Faith may be without good workes. But S. Paul, whose words we ought rather to credit, saith farre otherwise: He that hath no regard to his owne, specially such as be of his household, hath denied the Faith, and is worse then an Infidell. Againe he saith: They say they know God: but by there workes they denie God. S Iohn saith: Whoso saith he knoweth God, and keepeth not his Commandements, is a Lier, and the Truth is not in him. S. Iames saith: Faith without workes is dead: And the Diuell beleeueth, and trembleth for feare. But a Dead Faith is no more a True Perfect Faith, then a Dead Man is a True perfect Man. As for the Faith of Diuels, in deed and verily is no Faith.

Certainely S Augustine saith: Qui Fidem habet sine spe & dilectione, Christum esse credit: non in Christum credit: He that hath Faith without Hope and Charity, beleeueth that there is Christ. But he beleeueth not in Christ. Againe he saith: Inseparabilis est Bona Vita à Fide, quæ per dilectionem operatur: Imò verò ea ipsa est Bona Vita: Good Life can neuer be diuided from Faith, which worketh by Loue: Nay rather that same verie Faith it selfe is Good Life.

Ambros. Li. 6. Epist. 36.

S Ambrose saith: Vbi quis cœperit luxuriari, incipit deuiare à Vera Fide: As soone as a man beginneth to liue wantonly, he beginneth to flee from the True Faith. Origen saith:

Omnis

Omnis qui credit in eum, non erubescit: Erubescit autem omnis qui peccat: Ergo qui adhuc ruborē peccati incurrit, credere non videtur: Whosoeuer Beleeueth in God, blusheth not: But euery man blusheth that worketh Sinne. Therefore hee that yet blusheth for his Sinne, seemeth not to beleeue. And againe he saith: Malè credit quicunque peccat: Whosoeuer sinneth, Beleeueth ill. Orig in Epist. ad Rom. lib. 8. cap. 10. Origen. in Ezechiel. Hom. 9.

To the like, S. Cyprian saith: Quomodo dicit se credere in Christum, qui non facit quod Christus facere præcepit? How doth he say he Beleeueth in Christ, that doth not the thing that Christ Commanded.

Merit, and Mercie.

If ye will beleeue none of all these, being ancient and Learned Fathers, yet beleeue your owne Doctour Cusanus, a Cardinal of Rome. Thus he saith: Non potest Mens scire Deum, & non diligere: Non potest esse vera scientia Dei, vbi non est Charitas: The Minde cannot know God, and not loue him. There can be no true knowledge of God, where there wanteth Charity. Nicol. Cusan. Excitationum, lib. 5.

Heereby it is plaine, that True faith is liuely and worketh full: and that an Idle Faith is indeed no Faith at all.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Did not you know the Answer, M. Iewell? Nothing is more common. You belie the Scripture. That is the Answer to you. And your Forefathers, euen vp to Luther, haue alwaies belied it: and being told of it, will not yet amend, no more than the Diuell whom they follow. All thing may be dead in two sorts, either because it had life in it of his owne, or else because it had it of another thing, &c. Now it is to be considered, whether Faith hath life in it selfe, of his owne Nature, as a man hath, (for then a dead Faith is no Faith) or else whether Faith hath life of another thing, to wit, of Charity, and then a dead Faith is a true Faith, &c. S. Iames giueth vs to vnderstand, that Faith hath Life of another thing, like as the Body hath Life of the Soule. For he saith, Sicut enim Corpus sine Spiritu mortuum est, ita & Fides sine Operibus mortua est: As the Body without the Soule is dead, so is Faith dead without Workes. Not as the man is dead without the Soule, but as the Bodie is dead without the Soule, so is Faith dead without works. But the Body being without the Soule, is still a true Naturall Bodie. Therfore Faith being without good Workes, is still a true Reall Faith. And so M. Iewell is tried a Lier. The Answer. I am weary of your Follies M. Harding. And were it not for some satisfaction of the simple, I would not vouchsafe them of any answer. Whereas I onely allege these words of S. Iames, Faith without works is dead, you tell me, that I belie the Scripture. And this (you say) shall bee mine Answer. Of such hasty Answers you haue giuen store. I thanke God, I beleeue the Scriptures: I belie them not. I would not willingly belie a Child, much lesse the Euerlasting Word of God: For I know it is Holy. M. Harding 370. b. 371. a. A man without a Soule. Iacob. 2.

But how, and wherein haue I so foulely belied the Scriptures? You answer mee: A thing may be dead in two sorts: either because it had life in it of his own, or else because it had it of another thing. Faith hath life of it selfe; and Faith hath Life of Charity. All this may bee granted. But what conclude you hereof, M. Harding? If Faith haue Life of it selfe, haue I therefore belied the Scriptures? Behold S. Iames words: Thus he saith: Faith without Workes is dead: Of the other side behold my words: Thus I say: Faith without Works is dead. Now compare these words together. I increase nothing: I minish nothing: I alter nothing: I report S. Iames words plainly and simply, as hee spake them. With what good Countenance then can you so vncivilly tell mee, that I haue belied the Scriptures? Your Reader, bee hee neuer so friendly bent vnto you, must needs doubt somwhat of your dealing. If ye proceed accordingly, you will be able shortly to tell vs that S. Iames himselfe hath belied the Scriptures. For the words that I speake, and you condemne, be S. Iames.

Faith (you say) hath Life of another thing, like as the Body hath of the Soule. Not as the man is dead without the Soul, but as the Body is dead without the Soul, so is Faith dead without good Works. Thus you say. But helpe vs, I pray you, that wee may better vnderstand your meaning. Ye speake in Parables. We need a Commentarie. A man (say you) dead without a Soule? What meaneth this talke, M. Harding? Ye lay the way for vs, I trow, and would entrappe vs in the darke. Who euer heard of a Man without a Soule? I haue sometimes heard of a Man without wit, and of words without sense, or reason: But of a Man without a Soule hitherto I neuer heard, vnlesse happily you meane the Man in the Moone.

Now let vs view the handsomenesse of your Distinction. These bee your words: Not as a Man is dead without a Soule; but as a Body is dead without a Soule. A man that had any Soule would thinke there should bee some difference betweene these speeches. Not as the one (you say) but as the other. But what if the One and the Other bee both one? Consider better of your words, I beseech you. What is a Man without a Soule, but onely a bare dead Body? Or what is such a Dead Body, but onely a Man without a Soule?

Merit, and Mercie.

Where was your Soule, M. Harding, when you deuiſed theſe diſtinctions without a difference?

Yet ye tell vs: A Body being without a Soule, is ſtill a true Naturall Body: Ergo (ſay you) Faith being without good works, is ſtill a true Reall Faith. Firſt, M. Harding, you know it is commonly ſaid in all Schooles, Omnis ſimilitudo claudicat. You might ſoone haue found the fœblenelle of this Reaſon. It will ſerue you onely to mocke Children. Howbeit, let vs vſe your owne grants. You ſhall ſee them conclude againſt your ſelfe. For a Body without a Soule, notwithſtanding it be a true Naturall Body, yet hath it neither ſenſe, nor Life, but is indeed and verily a dead Bodie. Euen ſo your Faith without good works, notwithſtanding any truth or Realty ye can giue vnto it, hath in it neither life, nor ſenſe, but indeed and verily is a dead Faith, and therefore no Faith at all.

But who taught you to ſhape out theſe prętty Similitudes, and ſo vnſkilfully to liken Faith vnto the Body, and good works vnto the Soule? The wiſe and learned haue rather likened True Faith to the Soule, and good works to the Body. For as the Body hath no life of it ſelfe, but only of the Soule, euen ſo Workes haue no life of them ſelues, but onely of Faith.

Iacob. 2.

Yet you ſay: Faith without Works is neuertheleſſe a true and Reall Faith. Verily, M. Harding ſo is Fire without heat a true and a Reall Fire. Of ſuch a Faith S. Iames ſaith: Dæmones credunt, & contremiſcunt: Diuels beleeue, and quake for feare. If the wicked without good workes haue a true and a Reall Faith, then may you alſo ſay, that the Diuell likewiſe hath a true and a Reall faith. This Faith is no Faith, M. Harding. It is only an Imaginary, and a Mathematicall phantaſie. It is not that Faith whereby wee are made the Children of God. Hereof S. Paul ſaith thus: Habent ſpeciem pietatis: virtutem autem eius abnegant: They haue a ſhew and a face of godlineſſe: but the vertue and power thereof they forſake viterly. Of ſuch a Faith the Angell ſaith in the Apocalyps:

Apocalyp. 3.

Thou haſt a name of Life, & yet art thou dead. Such is Faith without works, a Face without Godlineſſe, a Shew without Subſtance, a Name without Life.

M. Iewell (you ſay) is tried a Lier. And why ſo? Becauſe hee ſaith, as S. Iames ſaith, Faith without Works is dead, and therefore as S. Auguſtine ſaith, no Faith at all. But M. Harding, contrary to S. Iames expreſſe and plaine words, telleth vs, that Faith without Works, is a true and a Reall Faith, and is liuely and forcible in it ſelfe: And yet is hee tried a truſtie Man.

But you ſay: Good works haue their reward: and therefore (ye ſay) this Hereſie may not ſo eſcape. Whether good workes ſhall be rewarded, or no, it was no part of Our queſtion. For wee vndoubtedly beleeue the words ý are written by S. Iohn: Opera illorum ſequuntur illos: Their works follow after them. Wee beleeue the words that Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples:

Matth. 10.

He that giueth a cuppe of cold Water to any of theſe little Ones for my ſake, ſhall not loſe his reward.

1. Corinth. 15.

We beleeue that, that S. Paul ſaith: Your worke ſhall not be in vaine in the Lord. We grant, Good Works haue their reward: But the ſame Reward ſtandeth in Mercie and Fauour, and not in Duty.

Thus therefore we ſay: Conſidering the weakneſſe and ſinfull corruption of Our Nature, there can be no workes in vs, ſo pure and perfect, that we may thereby of Right, and of dutie, deſerue Euerlaſting Life. And this, M. Harding, is no Hereſie, but the very plain Senſe and Subſtance of Gods Word, and the vndoubted Doctrine of the Ancient Catholik Fathers of the Church.

Merit, and Mercie.

Againe he saith: Coronat te in Misericordia & Miserationibus. So saith Origen: Ego vix mihi persuadeo, vllum opus esse posse, quod ex debito remunerationem deposcat. I doe scarcely beleeue that there can be any worke that may of duty require reward. Againe he saith: Dicite vos esse Seruos inutiles. Nam etsi omnia fecerimus quæ præcepta sunt, non tamen bonum aliquod fecimus. Nec enim si verè bona essent, essemus inutiles. Omne autem bonum nostrum non propriè, sed abusiuè bonum dicitur: Say ye (saith Christ) that ye be vnprofitable Seruants. For notwithstanding wee haue done all things that are commanded, yet haue we done no good thing. For if our doings were good indeed, then were we not vnprofitable. But any good deed of ours is called good, not rightly, or duly, but by abuse of speech. So saith S. Augustine: Si Deus vellet pro Meritis agere, non inueniret, nisi quod damnaret: If God would deale with vs according to that we haue deserued, hee should finde nothing, but that hee might condemne. Therefore, M. Harding, Waldensis one of your great Doctours, hauing well and circumspectly weighed the matter of euery side, at the last concludeth thus: Quid dignum facimus, vt participes Cœlestibus fieri inueniamur? Apostolo dicente, Existimo quòd non sunt condignæ passiones huius temporis ad futuram gloriam, quæ reuelabitur in nobis: Reputo igitur saniorem Theologum, fideliorem Catholicum, & Scripturis Sanctis magis concordem, qui tale Meritum simpliciter abnegat: What worthy thing doe we, that we may be found in the Fellowship of the Heauenly Spirits? The Apostle saith, I iudge that the afflictions of this time are not worthy of that Glory that shall be reuealed in vs. Therefore I take him to be the sounder Diuine, the Faithfuller Catholike, and more agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, that vtterly denieth all such kinde of Merit.

The Apology, Chap. 21. Diuiſion 1.

The cauſe of Reſurrection.

TO conclude, we Beleeue, That this our ſelfe ſame Fleſh wherein we liue, although it die, and come to duſt, yet at the laſt ſhall returne againe to Life, by the meanes of Chriſts Spirit which dwelleth in vs: And, That then verily, whatſoeuer we ſuffer here in the meane while for his ſake, Chriſt will wipe away all teares and heauineſſe from our eies: And, That we through him ſhall enioy euerlaſting Life, and ſhall for euer be with him in Glory. So be it.

M. Harding.

Laſt of all, ye beleeue (as ye ſay) that this very Fleſh ſhall returne to Life, and that for the Spirit of Chriſt which dwelleth in vs. There is no doubt but the Spirit of Chriſt is ſufficient to raiſe vp their Bodies in whom it dwelleth. But we ſay, that the raiſing of our fleſh is alſo aſsigned in Holy Scripture to the Reall and Subſtantiall eating of Chriſts Fleſh, becauſe it is writtren: He that eateth my Fleſh, and drinketh my Bloud, hath Life Euerlaſting: And I will raiſe him againe in the laſt day. Therefore the Reſurrection of the Fleſh is not only aſsigned in Holy Scripture to the Spirit of Chriſt, but alſo to the worthy eating of his Fleſh. And thus we haue confuted the Doctrine wherein ye declare your Faith: and the chiefe grounds whereon ye build your new Goſpell we haue diſproued.

* Vntruth. For ſo the Fathers of the Old Law, & all Chriſtian Infants ſhould bee vtterly excluded fro Reſurrection.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

The woords wherein ye finde fault, M. Harding, are not ours, but S. Pauls. If they be falſe, why did he write them? If they bee true, why doe you blame them? Here ye ſeeme to checke S Paul, and not onely vs. Ye ſay: The raiſing of our Fleſh is alſo aſſigned in the Holy Scripture to the Reall and Subſtantiall eating of Chriſts Fleſh. But whence had ye theſe woords, M. Harding? Where found ye theſe Scriptures? Diſſemble no longer: Deale plainly, and ſimply: It is Gods cauſe. For a ſhew ye alledge theſe woords of Chriſt, written by S. Iohn: He that Eateth my Fleſh, and Drinketh my Bloud, hath Life Euerlaſting: And I will raiſe him vp againe in the laſt day. Theſe woords wee know: and the eating of Chriſts Fleſh we know: But where is your Reall, and Subſtantiall, and Carnall Eating? Where did S. Iohn euer tell you that Chriſts Body is Eaten with Teeth, and conueied further in ſuch groſſe and fleſhly wiſe into the belly? S. Auguſtine expounding the ſame woords, ſaith thus: Crede & Manducaſti: Credere in Chriſtum, hoc eſt Manducare Panem viuum: Iſte Panis Interioris Hominis quærit eſuriem: Beleeue thou (in Chriſt) and thou haſt Eaten (Chriſt.) To Beleeue in Chriſt, that is the Eating of the Bread of Life. This Bread requireth the Hunger of the Inner Man. And Nicholas Lyra one of your owne Doctors, ſaith: Theſe woords of S. Iohn pertaine nothing to the Sacrament. Thus he ſaith: Hoc Verbum nil directè pertinet ad Sacramentalem vel Corporalem Manducationem: This ſaying (of the ſixth of Iohn) pertaineth nothing directly to the Sacramentall, or Corporall Eating. It was ſome ouerſight of your part, M. Harding, to ſeeke to proue the Eating of the Sacrament by ſuch woords, as by your owne Doctors iudgement pertaine nothing to the Sacrament.

Addition. ☞ It was more ouerſight of you, M. Iewel, to blemiſh your credit by belying my Doctor, if Lyra be my Doctour. For I yra neuer ſaid the words that you allege, &c, It appeareth how falſly you haue belied Lyra. The words which you allege, are not the words of Nicholas Lyra mine own Doctour, as you ſay, but of one Matthias Doring, &c. You haue deceiued your Reader with falſe forgerie &c. You haue alſo foulely corrupted this poore Doctour Doring, with cutting off his words, pretending him to ſpeake of theſe words of S. Iohn, He that eateth my Fleſh, and drinketh my Blood, hath Life euerlaſting: Addition. ☞ euerlasting: And I wil raise him againe in the last day, which I alleged, whereas indeed he spake only of these special words of S. Iohn, Nisi manducaueritis Carnem Filij Hominis, &c. That the truth may be known, and your Falshood detected, &c. The words, that you allege, be not Lyraes, but one Dorings, &c.

Matthias Doring.

The Answer. Such Errors, such Ouersights, such Blemishing of credit, such Belying of Doctours, such Deceiuing of Readers, such Corruption, such Falshood, such Forgerie. Either there was some maruellous great cause, M. Harding, why yee should thus raise the Country with Hue and Crie, or else your Reader must néeds thinke, your head was disordered with some vanity. What was the cause then of all this stirre? you say, I haue alleged Nicolas Lyra in stead of Matthias Doring. This was an error, I will easily grant you. But Falshood, or Forgery, or Belying of Doctors, or Deceiuing of Readers, I beleeue few sober men would haue called it. For what if I mistoke Lyra in stead of Doring? what could I haue gained by all that Forgerie? Is not the Authoritie of Matthias Doring, as good as the Authoritie of Nicolas Lyra? were they not both Franciscan Fryars, of one Order, of one Religion, and of one Profession? You know that Nicolas Lyra, Paulus Burgensis, and Matthias Doring are all three so ioined together, not onely in one Booke, but also oftentimes in the one side of the leafe, that vnlesse a man bee very watchfull, hee may some take one of them for an other. And yet, whom soeuer a man shall happen to take of these three, there is small choice in the taking. Such poore aduantages must be faine to helpe you, M. Harding, when you finde your selfe scanted of better shifts.

But (you say) I haue also fouly corrupted this poore Doctor Doring. What Pouerty you find in him, I cannot tell. Wise men weigh Learning neither by Pouerty, nor by Riches. Notwithstanding I doubt not, but poore Doctor Doring in his time was thought to bee as good a Doctor, as Doctor Harding. But wherein haue I so foulely corrupted him? Verily, M. Harding, I haue neither changed any one of his words, nor altered any part of his meaning. He saith, The words spoken by Christ in the sixt Chapter of Iohn belong not Directly to the receiuing of the Sacrament: and to that purpose I haue alleged him. Now therefore M. Harding, for the better triall of your credit, let vs suffer Matthias Doring to tell his owne tale. Thus he saith: Illud dictum ex litera non habet fundamentum. Ideò de Sacramentali Communione, nec quoad Clerum, nec quoad Laicum habet vim præceptiad omnes, secundùm verum eius intellectum: Quia ex eodem contextu literæ, declaratur, de qua manducatione & potatione intelligi debeat, videlicet de Spirituali: Quia sequitur, Qui manducat meam Carnem, & bibit meum Sanguinem, in me manet, & ego in eo. Quod Beatus Augustinus exponens ait, Hoc est Manducare illam escam, & bibere illum potum, in Christo Manere & Christum manentem in se habere: quod nihil est aliud, quàm esse in Charitate Christi. Hoc autem nihil directè pertinet ad Sacramentalem vel Corporalem manducationem. Nam hoc verbum fuit dictum antequã Sacramentum Eucharistiæ esset iustitutum Ex illa igitur Litera de Sacramentali Communione non potest fieri Argumentũ efficax. Primùm enim id, de quo agitur, debet esse in rerum natura. De Eucharistia igitur Sacramentali, quæ nondum fuit, tam alta sententia proferri non potuit: nisi quis curiosus Hæreticus diceret, illa verba dicta de vsu Sacramenti Eucharistiæ prognosticè per modum Propheti æ. Sed sic dicere, non potest in aliquo passu Sacræ Scripturæ fundari. Eadem igitur facilitate contemnitur, qua probatur: præsertim quum constet ex Euangelij rotundo textu, quosdam huic præcepto satisfeciisse, quos constat nunquam Sacramentaliter Communicasse. Ideo Augustinus ait, has Propositiones simul esse veras: Non Manducans, Manducat: & Manducans, non Manducat. Dato opposito, sequeretur, neminem esse in charitate, nisi Sacramentaliter Communicantem: quod est erroneum dicere: That saying hath no foundation or warrant in the words written by S. Iohn. Therefore to speake of receiuing of the Sacrament, in true vnderstanding, it hath no force of commandement, neither touching the Clergy, nor touching the Laity. For in the same course of words it is opened sufficiently, of what Eating and Drinking it ought to be taken: I meane (not of the Sacramental, but) of the Spiritual Eating and Drinking. For it followeth, He that Eateth my Flesh, and Drinketh my Blood, abideth in me, and I in him. Which words S. Augustine expoundeth thus: This is the Eating of that meat, and Drinking of that drinke, for a man to dwell in Christ, and to haue Christ dwelling in him: which is nothing else but to be in the loue of Christ. But this pertaines nothing directly to the Sacramentall or Bodily Eating. For this was spoken long before the Sacrament was ordained. Therefore out of those words they can make no good proofe, touching the Communion of the Sacrament. For first it is needfull, that the thing whereof we speake, haue a present being. Therefore so Heauenly a saying could not then be spoken of the receiuing of the Sacrament, for that at that time the Sacrament as yet had no being: Vnlesse some curious Heretike will say, that the said words in the sixth of Iohn were spoken of the Sacrament by way of Prognostication or by a Propheſie. But that saying can haue no Foundation in any part Matthias Doring in Psalm. 110.

Nothing directly to the Sacrament.

No profe touching the Sacrament.

Could not bee spoken.

By way of Prognostication.

The cause of Resurrection.

part of the Scriptures. And therefore it is as easily despised, as it may be proued: forasmuch as it appeareth euidently by the Gospell, that certaine haue satisfied this Commandement (and haue eaten Christs Flesh, and dronken his Blood) that certainely were neuer partakers of the Sacrament. For that cause S. Augustine saith, These two sayings be both true, He that Eateth not, Eateth: And, He that Eateth, Eateth not. Otherwise it would follow, that no man can be in the Loue of Christ, vnlesse he be partaker of the Sacrament: which thing to say, it were great error.

It were great error.

Now, M. Harding, let your Reader iudge indifferently betweene vs, touching this Forgery Matthias Doring saith: Your saying hath no warrant of the Scripture. He saith: These words (in the sixth of Iohn) cannot directly pertaine to the receiuing of the Sacrament, for that the Sacrament at that time was not ordained: He saith, You are a curious Heretike, if you thinke, these words were spoken by Prognostication or by Prophesie: He saith, We may aswell despise your fantasie, as you can proue it: He saith, That to apply these words to the receiuing of the Sacrament, it were great error. And for proofe of his owne iudgement herein, he allegeth the authority of S. Augustine. I cannot see, in what kinde of speech hee could more clearely haue expressed his meaning.

M. Harding fol. 375. a.

But you will say, Matthias Doring spake not of the words, that you allege; Which are these: He that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, hath life euerlasting, and I will raise him again at the last day: But onely, and specially of these words, Vnlesse ye eat the Flesh of the Sonne of Man, you shall haue no life in you. Of these words (you say) Matthias Doring spake, and not of the other. What fond folly is this, M. Harding? Why should you so vainely deceiue the World? What difference finde you betweene these two sentences? Were they not both vttered in one Chapter, in one place, at one time, by one Mouth, and to one purpose? If the one part pertaine to the Sacrament, what hath the other offended, that it may not likewise pertaine to the Sacrament? What cause, what reason, what authority, haue you to the contrary? If you haue any, let it appeare: Otherwise, your Reader will thinke, you talke without ground, ye care not what. I protest before God, it pitieth me to see your follies.

Matthias Doring speaketh not only or specially of one or two words, as you say, but generally of all the words that Christ spake in the sixth Chapter of S. Iohn, Touching the Eating of his Flesh, and drinking of his Blood: Which words, he saith, Pertaine not directly to the receiuing of the Sacrament. And his reason is this: For saith he, When Christ spake these words, the Sacrament as yet was not ordained. I beseech you doth not this reason include as well the one sentence, as the other? When Christ spake these words, Nisi ederitis carnem Filij Hominis, &c. The Sacraments (saith Matthias) was not yet ordained. And was it suddenly ordained, before he could vtter the next words following? The next words are these that you haue alleged, He that Eateth my Flesh and Drinketh my Blood, hath life Euerlasting, and I shall raise him vp at the last day. Neither these words nor the former pertaine directly to the Sacrament.

As Matthias Doring saith, euen so saith Michael Vehe, an other of your owne Doctors: Quam nihil firmitatis habeat hæc ratio, hinc claret, quod verbis Christi abutitur in peregrino sensu Quæ enim de Spirituali manducatione, &c. How weake this reason is it appeareth hereby, that he abuseth Christs words in a strange meaning. For the words that were spoken of the Spirituall Eating, hee wresteth to the Eating of the Sacrament: of which Eating of the Sacrament, Christ in those words in the sixth Chapter of S. Iohn speaketh nothing. Which thing is well proued by this reason: For many haue Spirituall Life by the Grace of God, and be liuely Members of Christs Body, that were neuer partakers of the Sacrament, &c.

Michael Vehe, contra Lutherum Tract. 5.

In a strange meaning.

Wresteth.

Christ spake nothing of.

So likewise saith Eckius, speaking of the sixth Chapter of S. Iohn: Ad Sacramentum his oculus non est habendus: In this Chapter we may haue no eie vnto the Sacrament. I could allege more of your owne Doctors to like purpose. But my head is weary of your wrangling.

Eckius de vtraque specie.

Iohan. 6.

Christ saith further: Vnlesse ye Eat the Flesh of the Sonne of Man, and Drinke his Blood ye shall haue no Life in you. If there be none other Eating of Christs Body, whereby we shall liue, but only your Fantasticall and Fleshly Eating with Mouth and Teeth, then I beseech you, what Life haue Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Moses, Aaron, and other Holy Patriarkes and Prophets, that were before the comming of Christ? What Life haue a great number of Holy Martyrs? What life haue Christian Children, that being Baptized in the Blood of Christ, depart this life before they can receiue the Sacrament: that is to say, by your strange exposition, before they haue Really and Substantially Eaten the Flesh of Christ? Will ye say, They haue no Life? Or, will ye condemne them all to Euerlasting Death? Or, must we thinke, they shall neuer rise againe? Certainly S. Augustine saith precisely: Qui Manducat, habet Vitam: & qui non manducat, non habet Vitam:

August. in Ioh. Tract. 26.

tam: Whoso eateth (the Flesh of Christ) hath Life: and whoso eateth it not, hath no Life. Here of we must néds conclude by your Diuinity, that Araham, Isaac, Iacob, Moses, and other godly Fathers, that neuer receiued the Sacrament haue no Life, but are dead for euer, without hope of Resurrection.

The cause of Resurrection.

But to leaue your fantasies, M. Harding, the cause of Our Resurrection, as S. Paul saith, is the Spirit of God, that dwelleth in vs. Origen saith: Resurgemus propter Spiritum habitantem in nobis: Necesse est enim Spiritui reddi habitaculum suum: Wee shall rise again because of the Spirit, that dwelleth within vs: For of necessity the Spirit must haue his house restored vnto him. S. Augustine saith: Hæc mea tota spes est, & omnis fiducia. Est enim in ipso Iesu Christo Domino nostro Vniuscuiusque nostrum portio, Caro & Sanguis. Vbi ergo portio mea regnat, ibi ego me regnare credo: This is my whole hope, and all my trust. For in Christ Iesus our Lord is flesh and blood, which is a Portion of each of vs. Therfore where a Portion of mine raigneth, there I beleeue, that I raigne too.

1. Cor. 15. Orig. ad Rom. cap. 8. lib. 6. Aug. Meditation. cap. 15.

S. Cyril saith: Quamuis Mors propter peccatum in Naturam nostram insilijt, semen, quia Filius Dei Homo factus est, omnes profectò Resurgemus: Although Death be fallen into our Nature because of Sinne, yet becausse the Sonne of God is made man, doubtlesse we shal all rise againe. Likewise againe he saith: Sic vos effeci participes Diuinæ Naturæ, cùm Spiritum meum fecerim habitare in vobis. Christus enim in nobis est per Spiritum, Corruptionem nostram in Incorruptionem Commutans: So I made you partakers of the Diuine nature, when I caused my Spirit to dwel in you. For Christ is in vs by his Spirit changing our Corruption into Incorruption. Thus the Spirit of God is the cause and the worker of our Resurrection. And to come nere vnto you, the Sacraments of Christ are also meanes and instruments, and seales hereof, but not the causes. S. Cyrill saith: Quod mystica Communio Resurrectionis quædam sit Confessio, verbis Christi ipsius probatur: Ait enim, Hoc est Corpus meum: Hoc in memoriam mei facite: That the Mysticall Communion is a certaine Confession of the Resurrection, it is prooued by the words of Christ himselfe. For hee saith: This is my Body: Doe this in Remembrance of mee. And therefore in the Councell of Nice, the holy Pylleries are called Resurrectionis nostræ Symbola: The Pledges or Tokens of our Resurrection. And S. Ambrose (speaking distinctly hereof, saith: Non iste Panis, qui vadit in Corpus, sed Panis Vitæ Æternæ, qui animæ nostræ Substantiam fulcit: It is not this Bread (of the Sacrament) that passeth into the Body: but it is the Bread of Euerlasting Life, (that is to say, the very Body of Christ it selfe) that sustaineth the Substance of our Soule.

Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 4. cap 15. Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 9. cap. 47. Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 12. cap. 58. Concil. Nicen. De Con. dist. 2. Non iste.

And to put the matter further out of doubt, the same force vnto Resurrection, that is applied vnto the Sacrament of Christs Body, is also, and in as ample sort giuen to the Sacrament of Baptisme.

S. Basil saith: Dies Paschatis est Pignus Resurrectionis: Baptisma verò est potentia & vis ad Resurrectionem: Easter day is a pledge of Resurrection: but Baptisme is a power and strength vnto Resurrection.

Basil. de Sanct. Baptismate. τὸ δὲ βάπτισμα δύναμις ἐστὶ πρὸς τὴν ἀνάστασιν.

Againe hee saith: Resurrectionis gratiam in die Resurrectionis excipiamus: Vpon the day of Christs Resurrection, Let vs receiue (Baptisme, which is) the Grace of Resurrection.

Ignatius saith: Vt Credentes in mortem eius, per Baptismum participes eius Resurrectionis efficiamini: That beleeuing in his death, By Baptisme ye may be made partakers of his Resurrection. Therefore in the Councell of Woormes it is written thus: In aquas demersio, in Infernum descensio est: Et rursus, ab Aquis emersio, Resurrectio est: The dipping into the Water, is the going downe into Hell: and the comming out from the Water is the Resurrection.

Ignatius ad Trallien. Concil. Woormatien. cap. 5.

In the end, M. Harding, ye blow vp merily your owne Conquest, and thus ye say: We haue confuted the Doctrine, wherin ye declare your Faith, and the chiefe grounds wheron ye build your new Gospell, we haue disprooued. But with so simple prowes, and so many Untruths, M. Harding, as for Honours sake, may not well be shewed in your triumph.

Heere endeth the Second Part.

THE

THE THIRD PART.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuision 1.

BEhold, these are the horrible Heresies, for the which a good part of the World is at this day condemned by the Bishop of Rome: And yet were neuer heard to plead their cause. He should haue commenced his sute rather against Christ, against the Apostles, and against the holy Fathers. For these things did not only proceed from them: but were also appointed by them: Except perhaps these men will say (as I think they will indeed) that Christ neuer instituted the Holy Communion, to be diuided amongst the Faithfull: Or, that Christs Apostles and the ancient Fathers said Priuate Masses, in euery corner of the Temples now ten, now twenty together in one day: Or, that Christ & his Apostles vanished all the Common people from the Sacrament of his Bloud: Or, that the thing that they themselues doe at this day euery where, and do it so, as they condemne him for an Heretike which doth otherwise, is not called of Gelasius, their owne Doctour, plaine Sacrilege: Or, that these be not the very words of Ambrose, Augustine, Gelasius, Theodoret, Chrysostome and Origen; The Bread and Wine in the Sacraments remaine still the same, they were before: The thing which is seene vpon the holy table, is Bread: There ceaseth not to bee still the Substance of Bread, and Nature of Wine: The Substance and Nature of Bread, is not changed: The selfe same Bread as touching the Materiall Substance, goeth into the Belly, and is cast out into the priuy: Or, that Christ the Apostles and Holy Fathers praied not in that tongue, which the people might vnderstand: Or, that Christ hath not perfourmed all things by that one offering which hee once offered vpon the Crosse: Or, that the same Sacrifice was Vnperfect, so that now we haue need of another.

(a) Who so wanteth dissolution, and vicesdnes may seeke it at Rome.

(b) Vntruth. For in the time of Augustine, Ambrose, Hierome, &c. there were more Christians in the World, than be at this present.

(c) Good causes against God.

(d) One dreame to proue another

(e) vntruth. For it stoode in diuiding of the Sacrament.

(f) Howsoeuer Christ and his Apostles did, the Pope and his Clergie cannot doe amisse.

(g) Vntruth, plain & sensible For this Order was not from the beginning.

M. Harding.

What make ye of a good part of the World? The greater is the number of those ye haue seduced, the more greeuous shall bee your Iudgement. There be not yet many yeares past, that ye boasted of your poore small flocke, alluding to the fewnesse of Flocke, that liued with Christ in Flesh, and made their fewnesse an argument of the vncerte truth. But now that through your euill teaching (a) the world groweth more to be dissolute and wicked, ye boast of your number This is certaine, touching grounds of truth, the Church erreth not, as that which enioieth Christs promise: & your Congregation teaching the contrary, must therfore be taken for the Children of the Father of lies. Though tenne or twenty Masses were not said in one day by Christ, the Apostles, or Fathers, as yee seeme, with the Faith was first Preached, (b) and few beleeued, no Churches (which here are not without prophane malice ye name Temples) yet being built, this is no sufficient reason, why we may not now, where the Faith is generally receiued, haue sundry Masses in one Church in one day. Yee make much adoe about both Kinds, and to aggrauate the matter, ye vse the odious Terme of banishing the people from the Cuppe We teach the people for (c) good causes to be content with one kinde, doing them to vnderstand, they receiue the whole Body of (d) Christ Flesh and Blood no lesse, than if they receiued both Kinds. The Sacrilege which Gelasius speaketh of, consisteth (e) in diuiding Christ, and the same hee imputeth to the Manicheis, as haue another where declared. And therefore as that toucheth not vs, who do not diuide Christ, but in the Sacrament giue to the people whole Christ, so it sheweth you to be either slanderous or ignorant. To M. Iewels challenge, Artic. 1.

As for the tongue of the Church Seruice (f) howsoeuer Christ, the Apostles and holy Fathers praied, the vse of the Latine tongue vsed in the Seruice of the Latine Church, is not by any reason or authority ye can bring yet, so farre disproued, that the Church ought to condemne the order (g) from the beginning receiued, and hitherto continued.

The

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Few or Many.

We make no crakes of our numbers, M. Harding, but humbly giue God thankes that maugre all your practises and policies, hath published and proclaimed the name of his Sonne in euerie place throw the world. The truth and force thereof greeueth you now, as it did others your Fathers before you, that cried out in an agonie: What shall we doe? All the World runneth after him. Of them S. Cyrill saith: Quicquid Christo credentium accellerit, sibi detractum putant: As many Faithfull Beleeuers, as are gotten to Christ so many they thinke, are lost from themselues. Iohan. 12. Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 8. cap. 1.

Notwithstanding, the truth of God hangeth neither of many, nor of few. Liberius the Bishop of Rome, said sometime to the Arian Emperour Constantius: Non; ego solus sum, idcirco minor est ratio Fidei: Although I be alone, yet the account of Faith is therefore no whit the lesse. Christ compareth the kingdome of God vnto a peece of Leauen, which being little in quantity the woman taketh, and laieth in a great lumpe of dough, vntill the whole be all Leauened. Theod. l. 2. c. 16 Matth. 13.

Chrysostome saith: Nemo paucitatem vestram deploret. Magna enim est virtus Prædicationis. Et quod semel fermentatum est, rursus fermentum ad cætera efficitur: Let no man bewaile the small number of you. For great is the Vertue of Preaching. And whoso is once Leauened, is himselfe made Leauen to Leauen others. Chrys. in Matth. homil 47. In Proœmio.

It is noted in the Glosse vpon the Clementines: Veritas pedetentim cognoscitur: Truth is knowen by little and by little. And S. Ambrose: Constat Diluuium eodem numero, quo cumulatum est, esse diminutum: It is knowen, that the Flood in the time of Noe, as it grew by degrees, so by degrees it abated. Origen saith: Ego concitabo eos in non Gentem. Nos sumus non Gens, qui pauci ex ista Ciuitate credimus, & alij ex alia. Et nusquam Gens integra ab initio credulitatis videtur assumpta: I shall prouoke them by them, that are no people. We are they, that were no people, that beleeue in Christ, a few in this Citie, and a few in another. And neuer was there any Nation, that was taken whole at the first beginning of the Faith. The meaning heereof is this, that God calleth men, not altogether, but now a few, now more, as vnto his secret wisedome semeth best. So it is written in the late Councell of Basil: Spiritus Sanctus non illuminat omnes eodem tempore: Sed vbi vult, & quando vult, spirat. The Holy Ghost doth not giue light to all men at one time: but breatheth where it will, and when it will. Clemē. in Gloss. Ambr. de Noe & Arca, ca. 17 Orig. in Psalm. 36. Homil. 1. In Concil. Basil. in epist. Synodali pag. 152.

This is the counsell and the hand of God, M. Harding. We may say vnto you, as Tertullian said sometime vnto the Heathens: Exquisitior quæque crudelitas vestra, illecebra est magis Sectæ, Plures efficimur, quoties metimur à vobis. Semen est Sanguis Christianorum: Your earnest cruelty is an entisement and a prouocation vnto this Sect: As often as yee reckon vs, yee finde vs moe and moe. The seed heereof is Christian Blood. Arnobius said sometime vnto the enemies of the Crosse of Christ, Nonne hæc saltem fidem vobis faciunt argumenta credendi, quod iam per omnes terras, in tam breui tempore, & paruo, immensa nominis huius Sacramenta diffusa sunt: At the least, do not these proofes make you beleeue that yee see, the great Secrets of this Name (of Christ) are powred abroad in so short space thorow all Countries. Tertull. in Apologet. Arnobius ad uer. Gent. lib. 1.

Fight not against God, M. Harding. There is no Wisdome, there is no Counsell against God. Prouerb. 21,

This is certaine (ye say) touching the grounds of Faith, the Church erreth not. Whether your Church haue erred, or no, and in what grounds it hath erred, it shall better appeare heereafter. Truely S. Bernard saith of your Church, euen of your Church of Rome: Intestina, & insanabilis facta est plaga Ecclesiæ: The wound of the Church is within the bowels and past recouery. And againe: Hæc sunt infœlicissima tempora, quæ præuidit Apostolus, in quibus homines sanam Doctrinam non sustinent: These be the vnhappie daies, that the Apostle saw before when men cannot abide sound Doctrine. This was S. Bernards iudgement of your Church, that it would heare no sound Doctrine: and that it for that cause seemed vtterly past recouery. Therefore so certainely to assure your selfe of a thing vncertaine, it was no wisedome. Wee may say of your Popes and Bishops, whom onely yee meane by the name of your Church, as S. Hierome said sometime of certaine others your Fathers long agoe: Non tam indignentur nobis hæc exponentibus & Prophetis vaticinantibus, quam Dominum deprecentur, & studiosè agant, ne de Sacerdotibus, qui Violant Sancta Domini, esse mereantur: Let them not take stomacke against vs, that expound these things, nor against the Prophets that foretolde these things: But let them pray vnto God, and take good heede that they bee not of those Priests, that defile the Holy things of the Lord. Berna. ad Clerum in Concil. Rhemen. Berna. in Cantica, homil. 33. Hieronym in Sophon. cap 3.

Churches (ye say) not without profaine malice, yee call Temples. Malice come vnto him, M. Harding, Psal.10.

Church. Temple.

1.Cor.3. 2.Cor.6.16.

Harding, that Malice meaneth. The Prophet Dauid saith: The Lord in his holy Temple: S.Paul saith: Your Bodies be the Temples of the holy Ghost: Know yee not that ye be the Temple of God. If any man defile the Temple of God, the Lord will destroy him: Ye are the Temple of the liuing God: What agreement is there betweene the Temple of God, and an idoll? So many times S.Paul nameth Temples together in one place: and yet, I thinke, without any great profane Malice. But it shall be lawfull for you, M.Harding, to make new Sinnes, and to say, The Apostles of Christ were malicious and wicked, onely for that they called the Church of God by the name of Temple. Would God ye had not turned Gods Temple into the Synagogue of Satan. Wee see by your practise, it is true, that S.Chrysostome saith: Sicut de Templo omne bonum egreditur, ita etiam de Templo omne malum procedit: As euery good thing proceedeth from the Temple, so euery ill thing proceedeth likewise from the Temple.

Chrys. in Matth. Homil.38. in opere imperf.

Halfe Cõmunion.

In defense of your Halfe Communion, ye say, For good causes ye teach the people to be content with one Kind. And thus yee force the poore people contrary to the expresse word of Christ, contrary to the example of the Apostles, and all the holy Fathers in the Primitiue Church, and contrary to the generall vse and order of a whole thousand yeeres, to giue eare to your good causes. But these causes, no doubt, are great and worthy: Otherwise ye would not weigh them against God. But wherefore are they dissembled? Why are they not tolde vs? Your owne Doctours Alphonsus de Castro, and Iohn Gerson, haue laid them out in this wise particularly and at large: The danger of shedding: The carrying from place to place: The fouling of the Cuppes: The trouble of Mens Beards: The reseruing for the Sicke: The turning the Wine into Vineger: The engendring of Flies: The Corruption or Putrefaction: The Loathsomnesse that may happen for so many to Drinke of one Cup: The impossibility of prouiding one Cup, that may be sufficient to serue all the People: In some places Wine is deare: In some places the Wine will be frorne.

Alphon. aduersus hæres. lib.6. De Eucharist. Section vltima. Iohan. Gerson. de communione Laicor.

These, M.Harding, be the fairest and greatest of your good causes. And yet haue you thus concluded in your late Chapter at Trident: Si quis dixerit, Sanctam Ecclesiam Catholicam non iustis causis, & rationibus adductam fuisse vt Laicos, atque etiam Clericos non conficientes, sub Panis tantummodò specie Communicaret, aut in eo errasse, Anathema sit: If any man shall say, that the holy Catholike Church, without iust causes and reasons her moning doth Communicate both the Laity and also Priests, vnlesse they Minister, vnder the onely Forme of Bread, or that the Church hath erred in the same, Accursed be hee. Therefore Tertullian saith rightly of you: Credunt sine Scripturis, vt credant contra Scripturas: They Beleeue without the Scriptures, that they may beleeue against the Scriptures.

Conc. Trident. de commun. sub vna specie, ca.2.

Tertull. De Præscriptionib.

But specially, I beseech you, M.Harding, consider well these words of S.Hierome and see, whether ye apply them to your selues or no; In consummatione Mundi scrutabitur Dominus Hierusalem, id est, Ecclesiam suam cum Lucerna, & vlciscetur super viros Contemptores, qui noluerunt Seruare Custodias suas, id est, Mandata Domini Contempserunt: & insuper Ratione se peccare dicentes, blasphemauerunt in Cordibus suis: In the end of the World our Lord shall search Hierusalem, that is to say, his Church with a Candle, and shall wreake himselfe vpon the Despisers, that would not keepe their watches, that is to say, that despised the Commandements of God: and ouer and besides this, saying, they had good causes and reasons, wherefore they should offend (and breake Gods Commandements) they blasphemed in their Hearts.

Hieronym. in Sophon. cap.1.

That yee surmise of Gelasius is most vntrue. He speaketh not one Word thereof the diuiding of Christ as you imagine: nor had he any cause so to speake. But he saith in most plaine wise, It is Sacrilege to doe the same thing that you doe, that is to say, to diuide the Sacrament, and to Minister the one part, as ye doe without the other. Looke better on your Bookes; and confesse the truth, as ye shall finde it. The wordes be these: Aut integra Sacramenta percipiant, aut ab integris arceantur. Quia diuisio vnius eiusdemque Mysterij sine grandi Sacrilegio non potest peruenire: Either let them receiue the whole Sacraments, or else let them be driuen from the whole. For the Diuision of one and the same Mystery (or Sacrament) cannot happen without great Sacrilege. He speaketh not of the Diuision of One Christ, as you tell vs, but of the Diuision of One Mystery.

De Con. dist. 2. Comperimus.

Otherwise touching Christ, wee say with S.Paul: Vnus Dominus Iesus Christus: There is One Lord Iesus Christ. And wee protest with the Bishops of the East in the Councell of Chalcedon: Accursed be hee that parteth Christ: Accursed be he that diuideth him.

That you say, The order of your Latine Seruice hath euermore beene vsed in the Latine Church from the beginning. It is vtterly vntrue, For proofe whereof I remit you to my Former Replie in the third Article, and the fiftéenth Diuision.

The rest that ye allege, is not worthy the Answering.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuision 2.

All theſe things muſt they of neceſſity ſay, vnleſſe perchance they had rather ſay thus, That all Law and Right is locked vp in the Treaſurie of the Popes breaſt, and that, as once one of his ſoothing Pages and Clawbacks did not ſticke to ſay, the Pope is able to diſpenſe againſt the Apoſtles, againſt a Councell, and againſt the Canons and Rules of the Apoſtles: and that he is not bound to ſtand, neither to the Examples, nor to the Ordinances, nor to the Lawes of Chriſt.

Diſpenſe againſt Gods Word.

M. Harding.

It is no reaſon that Diuines be required to make good whatſoeuer is written by the Canoniſts or Schoolemen.

To ſay that all Law and Right (your Latine terme is Fas) is locked vp in the Treaſury of the Popes breaſt, it were abſurd and vnreaſonable. Marry to ſay that the Lawes reſt in the Popes breaſt, after a certaine meaning, as heereafter ſhall bee declared, it is * not altogether beſide truth and reaſon. But Sirs, what if ſome meane Writer or Gloſſer vpon the Canon Law ſpeake ſomewhere out of ſquare, if all ſhould be exactly tried by the Scripture, will yee lay that to our charge? Shall the Faith of the Catholike Church thereby be called in doubt and queſtion? Wee take not vpon vs to defend all that the Canoniſts, or Schoole men, ſay or write, &c. In this kinde, or order, be many things, which may rather bee called Rules of maners, then Principles, or ſuch as wee terme, Axiomata, of our Faith. Theſe, although they be found written in the Scripture, foraſmuch as they haue been commanded by an occaſion, and for ſome cauſe, they may for cauſe, and occaſion, and, as we finde in C. Lector, for neceſſity, by Gods Deputy and Vicar be ſupplied, holpen, expounded. And, if the caſe ſo require, hee In the ſame, for a certaine cauſe, with a certaine perſon, for a certaine time, with certaine circumſtances, may diſpenſe by the ſame ſpirit they were firſt founded and inſtituted withall, and with the ſame intention, to wit for ſome ſpeciall good, and furtherance of godlineſſe. Such adminiſtration of Gods Law, and ſuch diſpenſation thereof, as of a precious Treaſure, not free, or at libertie and pleaſure, but an euen, iuſt, and good diſpenſation, they doe attribute to Gods Vicar, whom this Defender calleth the Popes paraſites, Pages, and Clawbacks, himſelfe a very Page, Slaue, and Clawbacke to the Diuell.

* Not altogether beſide truth: A cold Defenſe.

Another demandeth a queſtion: Vtrùm Papa ex Plenitudine Poteſtatis poſſit omnia? Whether the Pope by the Fulneſſe of his Power may doe all things?

Another ſaith: Si totus Mundus ſententiet contra Papam, videtur quòd ſtandum eſſet ſententiæ Papæ: If all the World would giue ſentence contrary to the Pope, yet it ſeemeth wee ought to ſtand to the ſentence of the Pope. These, M. Harding, by your iudgement, are neither Pages, nor Paraſites: but good, ſad, and earneſt friends; ſuch as ſpeake roughly and plainely to vtter their minde without flattery.

This doubtleſſe is it that Daniel ſo long before Prophecied of him: Dabitur illi os loquens grandia: He ſhall haue a mouth giuen him, vttering great and præſumptuous matters. For indeed, notwithſtanding all this glorious glittering of painted Authoritie, yet one of the Popes owne men ſaith, Papa non poteſt facere de quadrato rotundum: The Pope (notwithſtanding his Priuileges, and all his power) cannot make a ſquare thing round. S. Bernard ſaith: An Regula non concordat cum Euangelio, vel Apoſtolo? Alioqui Regula iam non eſt Regula: quia non eſt recta: Doth not the Rule, agree with the Goſpell, or with the Apoſtle? Otherwiſe that Rule, is no Rule at all: for it is crooked; it is not ſtraight.

And therefore Pope Zoſimus in more ſober wiſe ſaith thus: Contra Statuta Patrum condere aliquid, vel mutare, ne huius quidem Sedis Authoritas poteſt: The Authoritie of this See cannot order or change anie thing contrary to the orders of our Fathers.

Iſidorus ſaith: Is qui præeſt, ſi præter voluntatem, vel præter quod in Scripturis Sanctis euidenter præcipitur, vel dicit aliquid, vel imperat, tanquam Falſus Teſtis Dei, & Sacrilegus habeatur: He that is in Authority, if he ſpeake or command any thing, beſides the will and meaning of Gods Word, or otherwiſe then is expreſly commanded in the Scriptures, let him be taken as a Church-robber, and as a falſe witneſſe againſt God.

The Apology, Chap. 1. Diuiſion 3.

We, for our part, haue learned theſe things of Chriſt, of the Apoſtles, of the Deuout Fathers: and doe ſincerely with good Faith teach the People of God the ſame. Which thing is the onely cauſe why we at this day are called Heretikes of the Chiefe Prelate (no doubt) of Religion. O immortal God, hath Chriſt himſelfe then, the Apoſtles, and ſo many Fathers all at once gone aſtray: Were then Origen, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Chryſoſtome, Gelaſius, Thodeoretus, forſakers of the Catholike Faith? Was ſo notable a conſent of ſo many Ancient Biſhops, and Learned Men, nothing elſe but a conſpiracie of Heretikes? Or, is that now condemned in vs, which was then cõmended in them? Or, is the thing now, by alteratiõ only of on mans affections, ſuddenly become Schiſmatike, which in thẽ was counted Catholike? Or, ſhall that which in times paſt was vndoubtedly true, now by & by, becauſe it liketh not theſe men, be Iudged falſe? Let them then bring forth another Goſpell, and let them ſhew the cauſes, why theſe things, which ſo long haue openly bin obſerued, & wel allowed in the Church of God, ought now in the end to be called in againe. We know well enough, that the ſame Word which was opened by Chriſt, and ſpread abroad by the Apoſtles, is ſufficient both to our Saluation, and also to vphold and maintain all Truth, and to confound all maner of Heresie. By that Word onely doe we condemne all sorts of the Old Heretikes, whom these men say we haue called out of Hell againe. As for the Arians, the Eutychians, the Marcionites, the Ebionites, the Valentinians, the Carpocratians, the Tatians, the Nouatians, and shortly, all them which haue a wicked opinion, either of God the Father, or of Christ, or of the Holy Ghost, or of any other point of Christian Religion, for so much as they be confuted by the Gospell of Christ, we plainely pronounce them for detestable and damned Persons, and defie them euen vnto the Diuell. Neither doe we leaue them so, but we also seuerely and straitly hold them in by Lawfull and Politike punishments, if they fortune to breake out any where, and bewray themselues,

our

M. Harding.

Wee for our part know, as now we haue proued, that ye haue not learned these things of Christ, nor of the Apostles, nor of the Fathers: but of Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Caluin, Peter Martyr, Bucer, and such other Apostates: and that ye do most fally and wickedly lead the people into the pit with you. And therefore ye are iustly condemned by the Church, and deemed Heretikes, &c.

How condemne ye the Donatists, seeing with them ye breake and throw downe the holy Altars of God, on which (as Optatus writeth) the Body and Blood of Christ was wont to be laid? &c.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Hereto, M. Harding, the whole grosse summe of your Answer in effect is this: Yee fally and wickedly lead the people: ye are Apostates: ye are Heretikes: ye are Impudent and rebellious Children: ye are Despisers of God: Mockers of your Mother: and peruerters of the Apostles: ye vtter Lies: yee speake Blasphemies. At the last ye say, The Diuell dwelleth in our hearts, as in his shop. This is a hastie kinde of Logike, M. Harding. Ye must néeds bee hard hearted that will not yeeld to such Arguments.

To leaue other your waste words, of Vigilantius, Iouinian, Manichee, Aërius, and such others, in the end yee pronounce your Definitiue Sentence, as a Iudge and condemne vs for Heretikes, for that wee haue taken downe your Shoppes and gainefull Boothes which ye call the Holy Altars of God. Verily this must needs be thought either extreme rigour, or great folly, of the remouing of a stone to make an Heresie. Such Heresies, I trow, S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, Optatus, and other Learned Fathers knew but few. Altars.

Neither is there any good sufficient reason to be shewed, wherefore it should more bee Heresie in vs to take downe your needlesse and superstitious Wals, which yee had erected of your selues, without Commission, then it was lately in you, to teare in sunder, and to burne our Communion Tables: in the erection and vse whereof wee had the vndoubted example, both of Christ himselfe, and also of the ancient Catholike Fathers. I say nothing of your Cruelty in burning so many Bibles, and Bookes of Gods Holy word: so many of your Brethrens Bodies: so many Temples of the Holy Ghost.

As for the Altars, which Optatus saith the Donatists brake downe, they were certainly Tables of Wood, such as we haue, and not Heaps of stones, such as yee haue: as in my former Replie made vnto you it may better appeare. S. Augustine reporting the same Storie, saith: The Donatists in their furie brake downe the Altar Boords. His words bee these: Lignis eiusdem Altaris effractis. Likewise saith Athanasius of the like furie of the Arians: Subsellia, Thronum, Mensam Ligneam, & Tabulas Ecclesiæ, & cætera quæ poterant, foras elata, combusserunt: They carried forth and burnt the Seats, the Pulpit, the Wooden Boord, the Church Tables, and such other things as they could gette.

Touching your Stone Altars, Beatus Rhenanus saith: In nostris Basilicis Ararum superadditia structura nouitatem præ se fert: In our Churches the building vp of Altars added to the rest, declareth a nouelty. This learned man telleth you, M. Harding, that your Stone Altars are but newly brought into the Church of God: and, that our Communion Tables are old and ancient, and haue beene vsed from the beginning.

B. Rhen. in Epistola præfixa Liturgiæ Chrysostom.

We haue such Altars, M. Harding, as Christ, his Apostles, S. Augustine, Optatus and other Catholike and Holy Fathers had, and vsed, whose examples to follow wee neuer thought it to be such Heresie.

But Optatus saith: The Body and Blood of Christ was woont to bee laid vpon the Altar:

Altars.

and with these words ye would faine abuse your simple Reader, as if Christs Body lay there Really, Fleshly, Verily, and in deed. But ye should remember that S. Augustine saith, Sacramentum Corporis Christi secundùm quendam modum Corpus Christi est: Et Sacramentum Sanguinis Christi secundùm quendam modum Sanguis Christi est: The Sacrament of Christs Body (not verily and in deed, but) after a certaine maner of speech is Christs Body: And the Sacrament of Christs Blood after a certaine maner of speech is the Blood of Christ. This maner of spæch your owne Glosse thus expoundeth: Vocatur Corpus Christi, id est, Significat Corpus Christi: It is called the Body of Christ, that is to say, It Signifieth the Body of Christ. And as Optatus saith: Christs Body and Blood were laid vpon the Altar, or Communion Table; euen so S. Augustine saith, The whole people was in the Communion Cuppe, and laid vpon the Holy Table. These be his words: Vos estis in mensa: Vos estis in Calice: You are vpon the Table: You are in the Cuppe. As the People is vpon the Table, so is Christs Body vpon the Table. The People is not laid there verily, and in deed, but onely in a Mysterie: Euen so the Body of Christ, as Optatus saith, is laid there, not verily, and in deed, nor in Reall and Fleshly Presence, but in a Mysterie.

But the World seeth now right wel, thanks be giuen to our God, that we haue neither bred, nor taught, nor kept vp these Monsters. In good fellowship, I pray thee, whosoeuer thou be, read our Bookes: they are to be sold in euery place. What hath there euer been written by any of our company, that might plainely beare with the madnesse of any of those Heretikes? Nay, I say vnto you, there is no Country this day so free from their Pestilent infections, as these be, wherein the Gospel of Christ is freely and cõmonly preached. So that if they weigh the very matter with earnest vpright aduisemẽt, this thing is a great Argument of our part, that this same Doctrine which wee teach, is the very Truth of the Gospell of Christ. For lightly neither is cockle wont to grow without Wheat, nor yet the chaffe without the Corne. For from the very Apostles times, who knoweth not how many Heresies did rise vp euen together, so soon as the Gospell was first spread abroad? Who euer had heard tell of Simon, Menander, Saturninus, Basilides, Carpocrates, Cerinthus, Ebion, Valentinus, Secundus, Myrcosius, Colorbasius, Heraclio, Lucianus, Scuerus, and other like before the Apostles were sent abroad? But why stand we reckoning vp these? Epiphanius reherseth vp fourescore sundry Heresies; and Augustine many moe, which sprang vp euen together with the Gospell. What then? Was the Gospell therefore not the Gospel, because Heresies sprang vp withall? Or was Christ therefore not Christ? Or, was Christ and his Gospell the cause of these Heresies?

And yet, as we said, doth not this great croppe, and heape of Heresies grow vp amongst vs, which do openly, abroad, & frankly teach the Gospel. These poisons take their beginnings, their encreasing and strength amongst Our Aduersaries, in blindnesse, & in darknes, amongst whom Truth is with Tyranny and Cruelty kept vnder, and cannot be heard but in corners, & secret meetings. But let them make a proofe: Let them giue the Gospell free passage: Let the Truth of Jesus Christ giue her cleere light, and stretch forth her bright beames into al parts: & then shal they forthwith see how all these shadowes straight wil vanish and passe away at the light of the Gospell, euen as the thick Mist of the night consumeth at the light of the Sun. For whilest these men sit still, and make merry, & do nothing, we continually represse and put backe all those Heresies which they falsly charge vs to nourish and maintaine.

Libertines. The Doctrine of the Libertines Gospel.

As for Libertines, what other Substance hath your Gospell, besides carnall liberty, and licentious liuing? To breake the Vow of Chastity, solemnely made to God, by whose grace, and your endeuour, it might well haue been kept, and to breake it for wantonnesse, and to satisfie lust; is not that proper to Libertines. To giue ouer fasting, watching in praier, and Confession of Sinnes, which should be made to a Priest, by *whom only (except in case of necessity) God promised forgiunnesse: To regard no Tradition, though it came from the Apostles: briefly, to teach that al kinde of outward Godlinesse is superstitious, and Pharisaicall, and that euery man must without staggering, or doubting, beleeue that himselfe shall be saued, if he haue Faith, * do he what him list, is this no point of Liberty? What made so many malapert Prentises, pleasant Courtiers, discoursing Parliament Machiauellists, and all other whatsoeuer flesh-wormes, Merchants, idle artificers, to embrace your Gospel, rather then the grauer and deuouter sort of men, which be weaned from the pleasure of this life; but that it was plausible to the World, and pleasant to the Flesh, from which that kinde of men are most hardly drawne? and yet forsooth doe not ye foster vp Libertines.

* Most vaine Vntruth. See the Answer.

* Vntruth, ioined with vile slander.

Who can reckon the Sects that be in Germany, being *fixteene or moe professed in some one towne? *Bemeland is almost as ful of Heresies as of Houses. *Silesia is as bad: and *Morauia, a Countrey there adioining is neuer a whit better. And yet doe not these Sects budde where your Gospel is freely and openly preached?

Bemeland, Silesia, Morauia.

* Foure great Vntruths all together.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Libertie.

Here, M. Harding, I haue purposely left out a great heape of your talke, not thinking it needful to answer all your voide words. Hauing no more regard what ye say, it was no hard matter for you to call vs Libertines, and to say, The Gospell that we preach hath none other Substance, but carnall Liberty, and licentious Liuing. If ye had remembred either the City of Rome, where ye haue been, or the Towne of Antwerpe, or Louaine, where ye now dwell, ye could not well without blushing haue charged vs with Carnall Liberty.

Our Wantons, and Flesh-wormes, for so it liketh you to call them, haue been contented to forsake Fathers, Mothers, Wiues, Children, Goods and Liuings, and meekely to submit themselues to the extreeme terror of all your Cruelties, and to yeeld their Bodies vnto the death: to be starued for hunger: and to be burnt in Fire, Onely for the name and Gospell of Iesus Christ. So delicate Flesh-wormes, and such Wantons are they. Ye will say, as your wont is when ye haue nothing else to say, They died stubbornely in wilfull errour. Yet I reckon ye will not say, They died in great pleasance, or Carnall Libertie. It is a strange kinde of Fleshly wantonnesse, for a man to deny himselfe, and to take vp his Crosse, and to follow Christ. And yet is this the whole Substance of our Gospell.

Iustinus the Martyr, notwithstanding he was an Heathen, and thought then, euen as you doe now, that the Professors of the name of Christ were nothing else but a sort of wanton and wilfull people, yet when he saw how constantly they died, and how patiently they suffered whatsoeuer was laid vpon them, hee was at length conuerted himselfe, and by their example became a Christian. Thus Eusebius reporteth his words: Ego ipse Platonis Disciplinis delectatus, &c. I my selfe taking pleasure in Platoes Doctrine, and hearing the Christians ill spoken of, and seeing them to go couragiously and boldly to their Death, and to suffer al such things as were thought most terrible, I thought it a thing impossible, that such men should liue wickedly, or in Wantonnesse.

Euse. lib. 4. ca. 8

Ἐπεὶσὰ ἀδύνατον εἶναι τὰ κρυπτὰ ἡμῶν ἀλλοτρίᾳ γνώμῃ κατεχόμενα αὐτῶν.

So likewise writeth Sozomenus touching the same: The Christians being spoiled of their goods, and regarding nothing that they had, being hanged on gippets, and suffering all maner torments so without care, or sense, as if their Bodies had not beene their owne, neither allured with flattery, nor amazed with threats, they gaue all men thereby to vnderstand, that they suffered these things (not of Wantonnesse, but) for some great reward.

Sozo. li. 1 ca. 1.

Δῆλον πᾶσιν ἐποίουν, ὡς ἄρα μείζονος ἄθλου τῆς ἀγῶνος τοῦτον ὑπομένουσι.

The Prophet Dauid saith: In quo corriget adolescens viam suam? In custodiendo Sermones tuos: Whereby shall a yoong man (not grow to be a Fleshly Wanton, but) amend his life, and correct his way? He answereth: (O Lord) by the keeping of thy words.

Psal. 116.

Therefore we may iustly say to you, as Cyrillus said sometime to Iulianus the Regenerate in like case: Etiam pueri in Sacris Litteris enutriti, statim fiunt religiosissimi, etiamsi minùs eloquentes: Euen our Children being brought vp in the Holy Scriptures, straightway become most godly, although not so eloquent, or wel-spoken.

Cyril. contra Iulian. Lib. 7. Pag. 162.

If there be any such Flesh-wormes and Wantons this day, they be not the Gospellers, which word so much offendeth you: they be of you, and of yours, M. Harding, that is, not the professors, but the mockers, and wilfull despisers of the Gospell.

Ye say: Confession should be made vnto the Priest, by whom Only (ye say) God hath promised forgiuenesse of Sinne. I beseech you, where finde you this Promise? Shew the words: Alege the Place: Regard your Credit. Otherwise ye will be noted of Vntruth. Where did God, or Christ euer say, Forgiuenesse of Sinne is giuen Only by the Priest? If it bee so Chryſ. de Pœnitent. & Confeſſione. ſo indeed, then why doth Chryſoſtome ſay, Nunc neceſſa. iũ non eſt præſentibus Teſtibus confiteri. Solus Deus te confitentem videat? Now it is not needfull to make Confeſſion in the Preſence of Witneſſes. Let God Only ſee thee making thy Confeſſion? Why doth S. Hierome ſay, Apud Deum non Sententia Sacerdotum, ſed reorum vita quæritur: It is not the Sentence or Abſolution of the Prieſt, but the Life of the Sinner that is regarded before God. Howbeit, hereof we haue ſufficiently ſaid before.

Hier. in Matth. Cap. 16.

One Head One Iudge

Luther (ye ſay) firſt procured that men ſhould acknowledge no One Head and Iudge: Whom (as by your report S. Cyprian ſaith) they might obey as the Vicar of Chriſt. Of this One Head, and One Iudge, neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles euer told vs. S. Cyprian, as it is ſaid before, ſaith thus: Chriſtus Parem dedit Apoſtolis omnibus poteſtatem: Chriſt gaue vnto all his Apoſtles Equall Power. And S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Quicunque diſiderat Primatum in Terra, inueniet in Cœlo Confuſionem: Whoſoeuer ſeeketh the Primacie in Earth, hee in Heauen ſhall finde Confuſion.

Cyprian. De Simplicitate Prælatorum. Chryſ. in Mat. Hom. 35. in Opere Imperfect.

The place of S. Cyprian touching One Head, and One Iudge, is well alleged by you, M. Harding: but ill applied. It is true that S. Cyprian ſaith, The People ought to obey, One Iudge, or One Head, as the Vicar of Chriſt. But that by the ſame One Head, or Iudge, he meant either the Biſhop of Rome, or any one other certaine ſeuerall Biſhop, it is moſt vntrue. S. Cyprians meaning is, as I haue otherwhere more largely declared, that in euery Dioceſſe the people ought to know One Biſhop as Head and Iudge, and him to obey, as the Vicar of Chriſt. One Head, or Iudge, I ſay, in euery Dioceſſe: not One Vniuerſall Head ouer all the World. For proofe whereof, M. Harding, read S. Cyprians Epiſtle vnto Florentinus Pupianus, and ye ſhall finde that he vſeth the ſelfe ſame words of himſelfe, and not of the Pope: and I doubt not but ye will much maruell, and miſlike your owne error. His words be theſe: Vnde Schiſmata & Hereſes obortæ ſunt, & oriuntur, niſi dum Epiſcopus, qui Vnus eſt, & Eccleſiæ præeſt, ſuperba quorundam præſumptione contemnitur? Wherehence haue Schiſmes and Hereſies ſprung vp, or wherehence do they ſpring, vnleſſe it be, that the Biſhop, which is One, and ruleth the Church, by the proud preſumption of certaine is deſpiſed?

Cyprian. lib. 4. Epiſt. 9.

Here S. Cyprian calleth himſelfe that One Biſhop, and that One Head, and Iudge of the Church. Yet was he only the Biſhop of Carthage in Aphrica: and not the Pope, or Biſhop of Rome. Heereof I haue ſpoken more at large in my Former Reply.

Artic. 4. Diuiſ. 5.

Touching the Pope, wherein he may be knowne for Chriſts Vicar, it were hard to ſay: vnleſſe it be for that whereſoeuer the Pope is preſent, there Chriſt is away. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Qui vanam gloriam non deſiderat, ille debet, Chriſti Vicarius factus, Chriſti Iuſtitiam prædicare: He that deſireth not vaine glorie, being made Chriſts Vicar, ought to preach the Iuſtice of Chriſt.

Chriſ. in Mat. Homil. 6. in Opere Imperfect.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuiſion 1.

VVHere they ſay, that we haue fallen into ſundry Sects, & would be called, ſome of vs Lutherans, and ſome of vs Zuinglians, and cannot yet well agree among our ſelues touching the whole Subſtance of our Doctrine; what would theſe Men haue ſaid if they had been in the firſt times of the Apoſtles & holy Fathers, when one ſaid, I hold of Paul: another, I hold of Cephas: another, I hold of Apollos? When Paul did ſo ſharply rebuke Peter? When vpon a falling out Barnabas departed frõ Paul? When as Origen mentioneth, the Chriſtians were diuided into ſo many factions, as that they kept no more but the name of Chriſtiãs in common among them, being in no maner of thing elſe like to Chriſtians: When, as Socrates ſaith, for their Diſſenſions, & ſundry Sects, they were laughed & ieſted at openly of the people in their Stages, & common game-playes: When, as Conſtantine the Emperor affirmeth, there were ſuch numbers of Variãces & Braulings in the Church, that it might iuſtly ſeem a Miſery far paſſing all the former Miſeries: When alſo Theophilus, Epiphanius, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Ruffine, Hierome, being all Chriſtians, being all Fathers, being all Catholikes, quarrelled one againſt another with moſt bitter, & moſt remedileſſe contentions without end: When, as ſaith Nazianzene, the parts of one Body were conſumed & waſted one of another: When the whole Eaſt part of the Church was diuided frõ the Weſt, only only about leauened Bread, and only for the keeping of Ester day: which were indeed no great matters to be striued for? And when in all Councels New Creeds and New Decrees continually were deuised?

Dissensiõs among the Fathers.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

The summe of M. Hardings answer hereto is this: That the bitter dissentions, that in Old times fell out amongst the Learned and Godly Fathers, stood rather * in matters of maners, and other small quarrels, then in cases and questions of Faith. For triall of the truth herein, it may please you to consider well these few.

* A manifest Vntruth of M. Hardinges.

Papias, Apollinaris, Victorinus, Tertullianus, Irenæus, Lactantius, and others, defended the Heresie of the Chiliastæ, that said, Christ after the generall Iudgement should dwell heere a thousand yeeres together vpon the Earth. Irenæus held, that Man at the beginning, when he was first created, was vnperfect. Clemens Alexandrinus and Iustinus held, That the Angels fell and offended God, in that they desired the company of Women. But it shall be in vaine to stand long herein. For of such examples there is great store.

Hieronym. 4. Hierem lib. Iren. li 4 c. 7 & 11. Clemen. Strom. lib. 4. & 5. Iustinus in Apologia.

To come nére the purpose: Theophilus called Epiphanius, Hæresiarcham, that is, The Grand Captaine, and Father of Heretikes. Gennadius saith: S. Augustine was not farre off from being an Heretike. S. Hierome writing vnto S. Augustine saith thus: In Epistola tua quædam Heretica esse iudicaui: I iudged, that there were certaine Heretical errours in your Epistle. Pope Bonifacius 2. said, that Aurelius the Bishop of Carthage, and S. Augustine, and other godly and learned Fathers in the Councell of Aphrica, were prickt on, and inspired by the Diuell. S. Augustine willeth S. Hierome to acknowledge his errour, and to recant. Thus he saith: Accipe Seueritatem Christianam ad illud opus corrigendum atque emendandum: & καλαμίδα, vt dicitur, Cane: Take vnto you Christian Seuerity, to correct and amend that Booke (of yours:) and recant your error.

Eraſm. in Vita Chryſoſtomi. Gennadius, de Eccleſiaſt. Scriptoribus. Hieron. in Epiſt. ad Aug. cuius initium eſt, Crebras ad me. Bonifa. 2. in Epiſt ad Eulalĩ. Aug. ad Hieronym. epiſt. 9.

Thus much I thought good briefly to touch: not meaning thereby to deface the authoritie of the Ancient Fathers: but somewhat to open the truth of M. Hardings tale, and to shew that these and other like Bishops and Fathers, notwithstanding they were learned, and godly, and worthy Members of the Church of God, yet were they not void of their infirmities.

Erasmus a man of great Iudgement, saith thus: Illis temporibus, ingeniosa res fuit esse Christianum: In those daies it was a great point of cunning to know how to be a Christian Man.

Eraſ. in Præf. in Tom. 2 Hieronyms.

And againe: Illa ætate in Chartis erat Fides potiùs quàm in animo: ac penè tot erant Symbola, quot professores: At that time (of the Ancient Fathers) the Faith was in Bookes rather then in the Heart. And in a maner there was as many sundry Creeds as there were Professors of the Faith.

Ibidem.

Therefore Clemens Alexandrinus saith: The Heathens thus vpbraid the Christians for the strifes and dissensions that were among them: Vos Christiani dissidetis inter vos, & tot Sectas habetis, quæ licet omnes Christianismi titulum sibi vendicent, tamen alia aliam execratur, & condemnat. Quare vestra Religio vera non est, nec a Deo originem ducit: Ye Christians dissent among your selues: and maintaine so many Sects, Which Sects, notwithstanding they all Claime the title of Christian Religion, Yet one of them curseth and condemneth an other: Therefore your Religion is not true, nor hath her beginning or ground from God.

Clemens Stromat. lib. 7.

The Apologie, Chap. 4. Diuision 1.

VVHat would these Men (trow ye) haue said in those daies? Which side would they specially then haue taken? And which would they then haue forsaken? Which Gospell would they haue beleeued? Whom would they haue accounted for Heretikes, and whom for Catholikes? And yet, what a stirre and reuell keepe they this day, onely vpon the two poore names of Luther, and Zwinglius? Because these two men are not yet fully resolued vpon some one certain point of Doctrine, therefore would they needs haue vs thinke, that both of them were deceiued: that neither of them had the Gospell: and, that neither of them taught the truth aright.

M. Harding

M. Harding.

After many things by theſe Defenders alleged, for proofe of diſſenſion to haue been among the Apoſtles, the Faithfull people in S. Pauls time, the Biſhops and holy Fathers of the Primitiue Church, whereby they would perſwade, if they could, that their owne diuiſion into ſects and diſſentions, is not a marke of falſe Doctrine: at length, as though they had won the field, & tried themſelues proper men, triumphing ouer vs, as though we had nothing to ſay, with a great courage they demand this queſtion of vs, which though it be but one in effect, yet with a kind of brauery they ſeeme to diuide into ſundry branches, and thus they ſay: What would theſe men (they meane the Papiſts) then, trow yee, haue ſaid in thoſe daies? Which ſide would they then haue taken, and which would they haue forſaken? Which Goſpell would they haue beleeued? Whom would they haue accounted for Heretikes, and whom for Catholikes?

A fourefolde answer vnto foure queſtions. Epiſtola 1. The Firſt Answer.

Touching theſe foure interrogatories, if we had then beene aliue, being of the minde we be now of, we would haue requited you with foure anſwers of the holy and moſt learned Father S. Hierome, and would haue ſaid, as in the like ſtate of times in a learned Epiſtle he ſaid to the learned Pope Damaſus, touching the Hereſies, which he found in Syria at his firſt comming thither from Rome. Firſt, Mihi Cathedram Petri, & fidem Apoſtolico ore laudatam conſului conſulendam: inde nunc meæ animæ poſtulans cibum, vnde olim Chriſti veſtimenta ſuſcepi. Which words, taking vpon me the perſon of all Faithfull and Catholike folke, thus I Engliſh? In theſe controuerſies, I haue thought good for counſel (what I ought to beleeue) to repaire to the Chaire of Peter, and to the faith of the Roman Church, praiſed by Paul the Apoſtles owne mouth. And from thence now require I the food of my ſoule, frō whence I receiued the garments of Chriſt. To ſpeake the ſame more ſhortly and more plainly: In the Catholike Church I looke to haue the food of my ſoule to euerlaſting life, in which I was Chriſtened.

The Second Answer.

Secondly we would with him haue ſaid, one ſpeaking for all, directing our words (as he did) to thoſe that be of the Catholike Faith, whom ye call Papiſts: Vos eſtis lux mundi, vos ſal terræ, vos aurea vaſa & argentea: hic teſtacea vaſa vel lignea, virgam ferream & æternum operiuntur incendium: Ye are the Light of the World, ye are the Salt of the Earth, ye are Golden and Siluerne Veſſels: here (among the Goſpellers) are the Earthen and Woodden Veſſels, which muſt abide the iron Rod, and flame euerlaſting.

The Third Answer.

Thirdly with him (one likewiſe bearing the perſon of all) we would haue ſaid to Pius the Fourth that now ſitteth in Peters Chaire, as he then ſaid to Damaſus: Ego nullum primum niſi Chriſtum ſequens, beatitudini tuæ, id eſt, Cathedræ Petri, Communione conſocior. Super illam Petram ædificatā Eccleſiam ſcio. Quicunque extra hanc Domum agnū comederit, Prophanus eſt: Si quis in Arca Noë non fuerit, peribit regnante Diluuio. Making none but Chriſt firſt of all whom to follow, I ioine in fellowſhip of Communion with thy Holineſſe, that is to ſay, with the See of Peter. Vpon that Rocke I know the Church is builded. Whoſoeuer eateth the Lamb without the compaſſe of this houſe, he is prophane. If any remaine without the Arke of Noë, he ſhall be loſt, when the flood commeth.

The Fourth Answer.

Fourthly touching the Authors of this New Goſpell, with the ſame Hierome we ſay, al vnder the perſon of one: Non noui Vitalem, Meletium reſpuo,, ignoro Paulinum. Quicunque tecum non colligit, ſpargit, hoc eſt, qui Chriſti non eſt, Antichriſti eſt. Vitalis I know not, Meletius I refuſe, Paulinus I wote not what hee is (theſe were head Heretikes in S. Hieromes time). Whoſoeuer gathereth not together with thee (holy Paſtor) he ſcattereth abroad, that is to wit, who is not of Chriſts ſide, he is of Antichriſts ſide. To trāſfer this to our ſelues, the names changed, the caſe remaining like, for our anſwere to our Goſpel Prelates, we ſay: Luther we know not: Zuinglius, Oecolampiadius, Bucer, Peter Martyr, Latimer, Ridley, Cranmer, Hooper, we reiect and refuſe: Caluin, Beza, Iewel, Filkinton, Grindal, Horne, and their fellowes, what they are we wote not. We ſee they are not gatherers with the ſupreme Paſtor of the Catholike Church, but ſcatterers.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

It appeareth by that hath bene already ſaid, that the Goſpell of Chriſt is now miſliked and doubted of you, as it was in old times of the Infidels and Heathens. Chryſoſtome thereof ſaith thus: Venit Gentilis, & dicit, vellem fieri Chriſtianus: Sed neſcio, cui adhæream. Multæ inter vos ſunt pugnæ, ſeditiones, ac tumultus. Neſcio, quod dogma eligam, quod præferam. Singuli dicunt, Ego Verum dico: The Infidel or Heathen commeth and ſaith: I would be a Chriſtian man: but I know not whom I ſhould follow. There is much ſtrife and diſſenſion and trouble amongſt you. I cannot tell what Doctrine to chuſe to ſet before other. For euery one of you will ſay: I ſay the Truth. As ye agree with them in ſome of Words, ſo I pray God, yee agree not with them in Faith and Spirit and contempt of God. The ſame Chryſoſtome ſpeaking, not only of the Heretiks, but alſo of the Faithfull Chriſtians, that were in his time, ſaith thus: Hanc ob cauſam ridiculi facti ſumus, & Gentibus, & Iudæis: dum Eccleſia in mille partes diſcinditur: For this cauſe we are ſcorned and laughed at, both of Iewes and Gentiles: while as the Church is thurſt into a thouſand parts.

Chryſ. in Acta. homil. 33.

Chryſ. in epiſt. ad Galat. cap. 1.

Therefore it was not amiſſe, M. Harding, to demand you this queſtion, which of theſe ſides ye would haue followed: and which of all theſe Goſpels ye would haue beleeued. For it may well be thought, that being minded as they were, ye would haue anſwered, as they did.

But ye ſay, ye would rather haue ſaid, as S. Hierome ſometime ſaid to Pope Damaſus, touching the Hereſies, which he found in Syria.

If yee would vſe S. Hieromes anſwer, M. Harding, and would ſay vnto the Pope, as S. Hierome ſaid, perhaps ye ſhould deſerue no great thankes for your labour. For

S. Hierome

S. Hierome in that ſelfe ſame place, beſide ſundry others, vtterly denieth the Primacie of the Biſhop of Rome. His words bee plaine: Ego nullum Primum, niſi Chriſtum, ſequens, Beatitudini tuæ, id eſt, Cathedræ Petri Communione conſocior: I following no Firſt Man, (that is to ſay, no Head, or Chiefe) but onely Chriſt, am ioined as a fellow in Communion vnto thy Bleſſednesse, that is to ſay, vnto Peters Chaire. S. Hierome telleth the Pope, Hee knoweth No Firſt, No Chiefe, No Head, no not the Pope himſelfe, but onely Chriſt. Againe, hée ſaith not, I am thrall and ſubiect to thy commandements: But, I am ioined, as a Fellow in Communion vnto thy Bleſſednesse. Fellowſhip will hardly ſtand with that Vniuerſall power, which you imagine the Pope ought to haue ouer the whole Church of God. Verily the Pope himſelfe would take it in ſcorne, if you this day would follow Saint Hierome, and call him your Fellow.

Hieronym. ad Damaſum. Nullum Primũ Beatitudini tuæ Communione Conſocior.

But S. Hierome ſaith, Hee agreeth in Faith and Religion with Damaſus. And what great maruell is this, that being a godly Learned man, hee would leaue Vitalis, and Meletius, and other Heretikes, and rather ioine himſelfe to that Biſhop, whom hée knew to be godly and Catholike? Hereof hée writeth thus himſelfe: Vineam Chriſti exterminant vulpes: Vt inter lacus contritos, qui aquam non habent, difficilè, vbi Fons Signatus, & Hortus ille concluſus ſit, poſſit intelligi. Ideò mihi Cathedram Petri, & Fidem Apoſtoli Ore laudatam cenſui conſulendam: The Foxes deſtroy the Vineyard of Chriſt: ſo that among theſe broken ceſternes, that haue no Water, it is hard to vnderſtand, where is that Sealed Fountaine, and that encloſed Orchard. Therefore I thought it good, to hearken to S. Peters Chaire, and to that Faith, which was commended by the Apoſtles mouth.

Hieronym. ad Damaſum.

Recourſe to Peters Chaire.

S Hierome from his youth was brought vp in Rome: He was Chriſtened in Rome: He had bene a Student in Rome: He had taught a Schole in Rome: He had bene Secretary to Damaſus the Biſhop of Rome: He was a Prieſt of Rome: And of late they haue furniſhed him alſo with a Cardinals Hat, as if hee had beene a Cardinall of Rome: And as it is thought by ſome, ſaving for ſome diſpleaſure, that certaine of the Clergie had conceiued againſt him, he was like to be choſen the Biſhop of Rome. What great maruell therefore is it, if he had ſome ſpeciall affection to the Sée of Rome? Alphonſus de Caſtro ſaith: That the Franciſcan Friars be ſworne to Duns: and that he heard a Dominican Friar ſay openly in his Sermon, That he was to be ſuſpected, as an Heretike, that in any thing diſſented from Thomas of Aquine. There is no man lightly, but hath a ſpeciall credit in ſome one Man before all others.

Alphonſ. aduerſ. hæreſ. lib. 1. cap. 7.

But how holdeth this argument, M. Harding: S. Hierome ioined with a godly Biſhop: Ergo, we muſt ioine with a wicked Biſhop? Or, S. Hierome agréed in Faith and Religion with Damaſus: Ergo, we muſt agrée with one, that doth all things of purpoſe contrary to Damaſus? So might you ſay, The Godly people of the Iewes were bound to obey Aaron and Moſes: Ergo, all others that followed afterward, were likewiſe bound to obey Annas and Caiphas.

The Faith of Chriſt, M. Harding, goeth not alwaies by Succeſſion. The Biſhops of Rome haue bene Arians, Neſtorians, Monothelites, and otherwiſe found in horrible Hereſies, as hereafter ſhall be ſhewed. Would ye in ſuch caſes haue recourſe to ſuch a one, only for that he ſitteth in Peters Chaire? Would ye ſay to ſuch a one, You are the Salt of the Earth: You are the Light of the World? Would ye ſay, This is the Faith that was commended by the Apoſtles Mouth?

Truly, S. Hierome himſelfe, when he ſaw abuſes or errors maintained in the Church of Rome, made ſmall account of S. Peters Chaire. For thus he ſaith: Quid mihi profers vnius Vrbis conſuetudinem? Potentia Diuitiarum, & paupertatis humilitas, vel ſublimiorem, vel inferiorem Epiſcopum non facit. Cæterùm omnes Apoſtolorum Succeſſores ſunt: What telleſt thou me of the Cuſtome of that one City (of Rome)? The power of Riches, and the humility of poverty cannot make a Biſhop either higher or lower. All Biſhops are the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles.

Hieronym. ad Enagrium.

As for Luther, Zuinglius, Peter Martyr, Caluine and others (ye ſay) ye know them not. Neither doth it ſo greatly force, whom you liſt to know. God giue you grace to know your ſelues. The Lord is able to know his owne. 2. Tim. 2.

Touching the diſſentions in Religion, which yee imagine to bee amongſt vs in the Church of England, I will ſay nothing. It greeueth you full ſore, to ſée, that in all the Articles of the Faith, and in the whole ſubſtance of Doctrine, we doe ſo quietly ioine together. The ancient Father Leo, of the like caſe, ſaith thus: Diabolus Gentium vocatione cruciatur, & quotidiana poteſtatis ſuæ deſtructione torquetur: dolens vtique ſe deſeri, & Verum Regem in locis omnibus adorari. Parat fraudes: Fingit diſſenſiones: The Diuell is vexed in the calling of the Gentiles, and tormented with the daily deſtruction of his power: he is ſorie, that he is forſaken, and that the true King is worſhipped in all places. He deuiſeth ſnares: he deuiſeth diſſentions.

Leo in Epipha. nia, Serm. 6.

is sore grieued with the calling of the Heathens (to the Faith) and with the daily increasing of his power: sorrowing to see himselfe forsaken and (Christ) the True King to be worshipped in all places. Therfore he deuiseth Guiles: and imagineth dissentions.

The Apologie, Chap. 5. Diuision 1.

BVt good God, what maner of fellowes be these, which blame vs for disagreeing? And do al they themselues, weene you, agree well together? Is euery one of them fully resolued, what to follow? Haue there bin no strifes, no quarrels, no debates amongst themselues at no time? Why then do the Scotists and the Thomists, about that they call Meritum Congrui, & Meritum Condigni, no better agree together? Why agree they no better among themselues, concerning Originall Sin in the Blessed Virgin: Concerning a Solemne Vow, and a Single Vow? Why say their Canonists that Auricular Confession is appointed by the positiue Law of man: & their Schoolemen contrariwise, that it is appointed by the Law of God? Why doth Albertus Pius dissent from Caietanus? Why doth Thomas dissent frō Lombardus, Scotus from Thomas, Occamus from Scotus, Alliacensis from Occamus? And why do their Nominals disagree from their Reals? And yet say I nothing of so many diuersities of Friars and Monkes; how some of them put a great holinesse in Eating of Fish, & some in eating of Herbs: some in wearing of Shooes, and some in wearing of Sandals: some in going in a linnen garment, and some in wollen: some of them called white, some blacke: some being shauen broad, and some narrow: some stalking vpon patens, some going barefooted: some girt, and some vngirt. They ought I wis to remember, there be some of their owne company, which say, that the Body of Christ is in his Supper Naturally: contrary, other some of the selfesame company denie it vtterly. Againe, that there bee others of them, which say, the Body of Christ in the Holy Communion is rent and torne with teeth: and some againe, that denie the same. Some also of them there bee, which write, that the Body of Christ in the Sacrament is quantum, that is to say, hath his perfect quantity in the Sacrament: Some others againe say nay. That there be others of them, which say, Christ did Consecrate with a certaine Diuine Power: some, that he did the same with his Blessing: some againe that say, he did it with vttering Fiue Solemne chosen words: and some, with rehearsing the same words afterward againe. Some will haue it that, when Christ did speake those Fiue words, the Materiall wheaten Bread was pointed vnto by this Demonstratiue Pronoune Hoc: Some had rather haue, that a certaine vagum indiuiduum, as they terme it, was meant thereby. Againe, others there bee that say, Dogges and Mise may truely and in very deed eat the Body of Christ: and others againe there be that stedfastly deny it. There be others, which say, that the very Accidents of Bread and Wine may nourish: others againe there be, which say, that the Substance of the Bread returneth againe by a Miracle: what need I say more? It were ouer long and tedious to reckon vp all. So vncertaine, and full of doubts is yet the whole Forme of these Mens Religion and Doctrine, euen amongst themselues, from whom it sprang, and grew vp first. For hardly at any time doe they well agree between themselues: except it be peraduenture as in times past, the Pharisees and Sadducees: or as Herod and Pilate accorded together against Christ.

M. Harding.

The diſſenſions, with which the Defenders charge the Catholike Church,

Whatſoeuer yee bring for ſome ſhew of diuerſity and diſſenſion to be found among the Catholikes, it may be reduced to two heads. The one containeth a diuerſitie in points of learning: the other in trades of Life. Concerning matters of learning, thanked be our Lord, for that the very enemies of the Catholike Church, cannot charge the Catholikes with diſſenſion in any of the grounds and Articles of our Faith. As for ſmall matters and queſtions diſputable on both ſides, they may therein diſſent on learned man from another without blame, the Faith remaining inuiolated.

But, good Sir Defender, what meant you to name the Nominals and Reals? Vnderſtand you what they be? If a man ſhould vpon the ſudden demand of you that queſtion (a) perhaps you would be to ſeeking of an anſwer. Sir if you be an Oxford man, as I ſuppoſe you be, you may remember, if euer you learned your Logicke after that trade it was taught in, when wee reſorted to the Parua there, what adoe was made in daily diſputations for exerciſe of young wits, about Genus and Species, and the reſt of the Vniuerſals whether they were termini Primæ, or Secundæ intentionis, whether they were entia Relia, or Rationis. Which is a matter pertaining to Logicke, not to Diuinity. Now ſome Schoolemen be of the opinion, that the fiue Vniuerſals be termini, or nomina ſecundæ intentionis, and they be called thereof Nominals. Some hold opinion, they are entia realia, and thereof they be named Reals, &c. In the behalfe of thoſe holy Religious men, wee tell you, ye are too blame to belie them. For what Diſcipline and order of life ſoeuer they haue addicted themſelues vnto, for better opportunity to ſerue God, truth is truth, they put not great Holineſſe (as ye ſay) in eating of Fiſh, nor of Herbes; in Shooes, nor in Sandals; in Linen nor in Woollen garments; in white, nor in blacke; in broad, nor in narrow Crownes: in going on Patens, nor on the bare ground; in girding themſelues, nor in being vngirded. They be not ſo ignorant as to put Holineſſe in ſuch outward things, though there obedience performed in the humble obſeruation of theſe outward things according to their rule, be an holy thing. Theſe things they vſe for reſtraint of their will, and for diſcipline, according to the order and rule, vnder which, the better to ſerue God, they haue promiſed obediently and humbly to liue. Neither put they more Holineſſe in the things by you ſcoffed at, then Elias did in his Mantle and Leatherne girdle, wherewith he girded his loines; then Iohn Baptiſt did in eating of Locuſts and wild Hony, in wearing a garment of Camels haire, and in girding himſelfe about the loines with a skinne

(a) A great doubtfulqueſtion. Euery poore Logician may eaſily know it.

The Catholike Religious men put no holineſſe in outward obſeruances.

To what end be thoſe obſeruances of the Religious Elias. 4. Reg. 1. Iohn Baptiſt. Matth. 3.

But I pray you, Sirs, who be ye? if we would follow your lightnes, haue we not like matter of diuerſity in outward things to twit you withall; but that your diuerſity is with breach of due order and Law, & that of religious men is according to order, and rule? If yee thinke diuerſity in things of their owne Nature indifferent, as Meats, Apparell, Shauing, &c. worthy to be reprehended, and deduce from thence an argument of mutuall diſſenſion; among your miniſtring Clergie is not likewiſe diuerſitie found: Do not ſome among you weare ſquare Cappes, ſome round Cappes, ſome butten Cappes, ſome onely Hattes; Do not ſome weare ſide gownes hauing large ſleeues, with Tippets, which is not wel liked of your ſect, ſome of more perfection Turkey gownes, Gaberdines, Frockes, or night gownes of the moſt lay faſhion for auoiding of Superſtition? The thing is indifferent and may be yeelded vnto, ſaith the one ſect; they be the Popes ragges, and may not be worne, ſaith the other Sect. And therefore they will rather be iuſtly put from that which iuſtly they cannot keepe, then yeelde one iote. Neither her Maieſties Commandement, nor their Metropolitanes decree care they for. They had rather ſeeme to the people, whom they vſe for their Clawbackes, and to whoſe iudgement they ſtand or fall, ſtout champions of their owne Goſpell, then meeke followers of Chriſts Goſpell. Such mightie Sampſons, ſuch conſtant Laurences your iollie Goſpell breedeth.

Chriſts Body torne with teeth, how is it vnderſtanded? Berengarius Recantation.

Some ſay, the Body of Chriſt in the Communion is torne and cruſhed with Teeth, ſome denie it: yea forſooth, and both meane right well. The hundred and thirteene Biſhops aſſembled in Councell at Rome vnder Pope Nicolas the Second, preſcribed ſuch forme of Recantation to Berengarius the firſt actor of the Sacramentarie Hereſie, openly there to pronounce, acknowledge, and with ſubſcription to ratifie, as he ſhould confeſſe the very true body of Chriſt, not only the Sacrament thereof, ſenſibly and in verity to bee handled with the hands of the Prieſts, (b) to be broken and cruſhed with Teeth of the Faithfull. By which words theſe Fathers mind was to expreſſe a verity of Reall preſence (c) a true eating of Chriſts body indeed and to exclude the only ſpirituall eating, ſo as the ould Fathers did eat Chriſt in their Manna. Neither is this Doctrine diſſonant from the fathers, ſpecially from Chryſoſtome who hath the like words, Homil. 45. Johan. Howſoeuer our Sauiour Chriſt conſecrated, with a certaine diuine power, or with his almighty Bleſſing, or with vttерance of words, or with repeating the ſame words; whatſoeuer the Pronounce (Hoc) pointeth or ſignifieth in the words of Conſecration; whatſoeuer your Dogges and Miſe haue Eaten, or your ſelues haue troden vnder your wicked feet; whether the accidents doe nouriſh or Subſtance returne; what narrow points ſoeuer the Schoolemen after toſſing of arguments to and fro, as there maner is, haue agreed or diſagreed vpon; the matter is ſubtile and curious, neither determined by definitiue ſentence of the Church in any Councell. And therefore ſith it containeth no Article of our Faith, let vs not be offended with the whetting and ſharpening of their ſubtile wits in matters neither to the Truth of Gods word preiudiciall, nor to the vnderſtanding and iudgement of any man, hurtfull.

(b) This was a blaſphemous & horrible errour.

(c) Tre true eating of Chriſtes Body is ſpirituall this imagined eating with Mouth & Teeth is Heathenish and Fantaſticall, and hath no truth.

Curious queſtions not determined by Holy Church in any Councell.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Touching your Nominals, and Reals, M. Harding, if ye had beene ſo cunning and ſkilfull, as yee make your ſelfe, ye would not haue ſent vs backe to learne your Firſt and Second Intentions amongſt Children. But that ye may vnderſtand your owne errour and certainely ſee, that theſe two Houſes, your Nominals and your Reals haue heeretofore kept a ſtirre, not onely in Logicke but alſo in your Scholaſticall matters of Diuinitie, without further ſearching of the bottome thereof, I pray you onely to conſider theſe few Authorities.

Veſelus, ſometime for his great fame in learning, named Lux Mundi, writeth thus: Veſelus.

In

In Nominalibus si quid Fidei contrarium putarem, hodiè remearem, vel ad Formales, vel ad Reales: If I thought there were anie thing in the Nominals contrary to the Faith, I would presently leaue them and goe either to the Formals, or to the Reals.

Illyricus de Sectis, pag. 80. Eras. in Moria.

Another saith: Ex Sententiarijs, alij Terminales, aut Nominales esse volunt: alij Reales: Of the Doctors of the Scholastical Diuinity, some will be called Terminales or Nominales, and some Reales. Another saith: Citiùs è Labyrinthis temet explices, quàm ex inuolucris Realium, Nominalium, &c. in quibus omnibus tantum est eruditionis, vt putem Apostolis ipsis opus fore alio Spiritu, si cogerentur istis de rebus cum hoc Nouo Theologorum genere conserere manus: Yee may sooner winde your selfe out of a Maze, then out of the shifts and corners of these Reals, and Nominals, &c. in whom there is such aboundance of learning, that I thinke the Apostles themselues should haue need of another Spirit, if at any time they should bee driuen to encounter with this New kinde of Diuines. Here, M. Harding, your Nominales and Reals, are called a New kinde, not of Logicians, but of Diuines. And if ye consider well Vdalrichus Zasius, ye shall finde, that your said Nominals and Reals, haue intruded themselues, not onely into Diuinity, but also into the Ciuill Law. Therefore it was somewhat out of reason, to tell vs this tale, of your Seconde and First Intentions.

Vdal. Zasius, de Generum obligatione.

Holines in Apparell.

Concerning Apparell (ye say) yee set not great Holinesse, neither in Shooes, nor in Sandales, &c. Whereby yee would seeme to giue vs to vnderstand, that ye set some Holinesse in these things, although not great. Neither doth it appeare, that the Pharisei euer made any great account of Holinesse of their garments. Yet notwithstanding vnder the colour and shadow thereof, they deceiued the people. And therefore Christ saith vnto them, Woe bee vnto you, ye Scribes and Pharisei: And vnto the people he saith: Beware of them that loue to goe in long Robes. Of such men Seneca saith: Personam habere malunt, quàm faciem: They will rather weare a Visard, then a Naturall face. Another saith: Dolosi Hominis, dolosæ vestes; Crafty Man, Crafty Coat.

Concil. Gangren. cap. 12.

But if no man euer reckoned any Holinesse to be in your apparell, wherefore then was this Decree so long agoe written in the Councell of Gangra, Si quis Virorum putauerit Sancto proposito, id est continentiæ, conuenire, vt pallio vtatur, tanquam ex eo Iustitiam habiturus, &c. Anathema sit: If any man thinke it agreeable to his holy purpose, of Continent life, to weare a Cloke, as though thereby he may bee iustified, &c. Accursed bee hee. Or, wherefore doth S. Chrysostome crie out against such follie, vsed, as it may appeare, in his time? O impietatem! Maiorem Sanctitatem in vestimentis suis volunt ostendere, quàm in Corpore Christi &c. Vt desperans de Misericordia Dei, confidat in veste Hominis: O the wickednesse heereof! They will shew more holinesse in their owne apparell, then in the Body of Christ, &c. That he, that despaireth of Gods mercie, should put his trust in the garment of a man.

Chrys. in Matth. homil. 43. in opere imperf.

Or wherefore doth Thomas of Aquine tell vs so certainly, that the wearing of Francis or Dominikes Cowle had power to remoue sinne, as well as the Sacrament of Baptisme? Or, wherefore doth your Bishop, in hallowing the Priests Vestiments, say thus: Vt Sacerdotes tui hac Sacra veste induti, ab omnibus impulsionibus, seu tentationibus malignorum Spirituum muniti, & defensi esse mereantur: That thy Priests wearing this holy Vesture, may deserue to be shielded and defended from all assaults and tentations of the wicked Spirits?

Thom. Aquinas. In Pontifical. in Benedic. ad Vestimenta Sacerdotal.

Durand in Rational ls. 3. ca. 1

To be short, wherefore doe your Doctors keepe such hot Scholes amongst themselues, whether if the Sextine happen to mend his hallowed Vestiment with a threed vnhallowed, the whole Vestiment be not thereby become vnhallowed? How could these so doubtfull matters euer haue fallen in question amongst your fellowes, if yee had beene fully and throughly perswaded, that there is no Holinesse in your Apparell? The ancient Father Lactantius saith: Vestes, Gemmas, & cætera, quæ habentur in pretio, si quis putet Deo chara, is planè, quid Deus sit, nescit: If any man thinke that apparell precious Stones, or other like things, that we haue in estimation, are pleasant or delectable vnto God, vndoubtedly he knoweth not what is God.

Extr. de Conse. Eccle. vel Altaris, Quod in dubijs. Lactan. li. 6. cap 25.

But (ye say) whatsoeuer your Apparell be, yet your Obedience is very Holy. The Obedience, yee meane, is to doe whatsoeuer your Abbat shall bid you doe: as to carie baskets from Palestino to Damasco: to sit seauen yeres together in silence, without speaking of any word: for the space of twelue monthes, twice euery day to water a dead tree: and briefly, to doe whatsoeuer fond busines ye be commanded: as it is written of one, that at the commandement of his Abbat, threw out his childe into the streame. This, I trow, is that Obedience that ye commend to be so holy. In vita Iohannis Damasceni. Cassianus Lib. 4. Cap. 27.

But S. Paul saith: Yee are bought with a price: Make not your selues slaues vnto Men. And S. Ambrose saith: Serui Hominum sunt, qui humanis se subijciunt Superstitionibus: They are the Slaues of Men, that make themselues subiect vnto Mens Superstitions. God himselfe saith vnto you: Who required these things at your Hands? S. Hierome saith: Virosfuge, quos videris Cathenatos: quibus fœminei, contra Apostolum, sunt crines: hircorum barba: nigrum pallium: & nudi Patientia frigoris pedes. Hæc omnia argumenta sunt Diaboli: Flee those men that thou shalt see goe in chaines: that, contrarie to the Apostles commandement, weare long haire, as women: that are bearded like Goats: that haue vpon them a blacke Cloke: that goe barefoote, patiently bearing the cold. All these be tokens of the Diuell. Alphonsus de Castro, one of your owne, saith: Paulus quidem iussit Captiuare intellectum nostrum, sed in obsequium Christi, non autem in obsequium Hominum: Indeed Paul hath Commanded vs to submit our vnderstanding, but vnto the Obedience of Christ, not Vnto the Obedience of Men. 1 Corinth. 7. Ambros. 1. Corinth. 7. Esai. 1. Hieronymus ad Eustochium, de Virginitate seruanda. Alphonsus aduers. Hares. Li. 1. Cap. 7.

The godly learned men, at whose persons it pleaseth you so rudely to scoffe, that refuse either to goe in your Apparell, or otherwise to shew themselues like vnto you, haue age sufficient, and can answer for themselues. Notwithstanding, thus much I may say in their behalfe: Neither doe they commend any maner of Apparell, as Holy; nor doe they condemne any Apparell, as Vnholy. That is your proper and peculiar erro*r*, M. Harding, to make so deepe account of outward shewes.

Choice of Apparell.

They know that Eusebius saith: Iustinus Martyr preached the Gospell of Christ, being apparelled as an Heathen Philosopher: And yet the Philosophers weed was no hinderance to the Gospel. They know that Iohn the Euangelist preached Gods word at Ephesus, wearing vpon him the Bishops Brouch, as if he had beene a Bishop of the Iewes. S. Augustine saith: Nihil sanè ad istam pertinet Ciuitatem, quo Habitu, vel more viuendi, si non est contra Diuina præcepta, istam Fidem, qua peruenitur ad Deum, quisque Sectetur. Vnde ipsos quoque Philosophos, quando Christiani fiunt, non habitum, vel consuetudinem Victus, quæ nihil, impedit Religionem, sed falsa Dogmata mutare compellit: It pertaineth nothing vnto this City (of God) in what kinde of Apparell, or in what order of Life, so that it be not against God, any man follow this Faith, whereby we come vnto God. Therefore when Philosophers become Christians, the Church compelleth them not to change their Apparell, or maner of Liuing, which can nothing hinder Religion, but onely doe compelleth them to change their false Opinions. S. Hilarie saith: Ad Ecclesiæ decus detracta à Diabolo Gentium spolia diuiduntur: The spoiles of the Heathens, taken from the Diuell, are divided to the Furniture and the Ornament of the Church of God. S. Hierome saith: Episcopus, Presbyter & Diaconus, & reliquus Ordo Ecclesiasticus in Administratione Sacrificiorum Candida Veste procedit: The Bishop, Priest, and Deacon, and the other Ecclesiasticall Companie at the Administration of the Sacrifice, come forth in white Apparell. S. Chrysostome vnto the Priests and Deacons saith thus: Hæc est dignitas vestra: hæc Corona: non quia, induti Tunicam candidissimam, per Ecclesiam ambulatis: This is your dignity: This is your Garland: not that ye walke thorow the Church in white Apparell. Euseb. Lib. 4. Cap. 11. Ἐν Φιλοσόφου σχήματι τὴν ἀρίστην τῶν λόγων. Euseb. Lib. 3. Cap. 41. ἐν τίνι τρόπῳ πρακτέον. Aug. de Ciuit. lib. 19. cap. 19. Hilar. in Psalmum 67. Hier. aduersus Pelagian. li. 1. Chrys. in Mat. Homil. 83.

They say not therefore, that the Apparell is either Holy, or Vnholy: but they may truly say, the same Apparell of your part hath beene fouley abused to filthy purposes. They may iustly say, they would not gladly in any appearance shew themselues like vnto them that haue so vntruly, and so long deceiued the World. And herein they are not without sundry Authorities, and Examples of the godly Fathers. S. Augustine saith, his Mother left bringing of Wine and Cakes to the Church, not for that it was vngodly, or vnlawfull of it selfe so to do, but onely for that shee was warned, it was a resemblance of the superstion of the Heathens: and therefore shee left it. S. Gregorie speaking of the three Sprinkelings or Dippings into the Holy Font, saith thus: In Vna Fide nihil efficit Consuetudo Ecclesiæ diuersa. Tamen quòd Hæretici id facerent, negant idem esse à Catholicis faciendum: The Faith being One, the diuersity of Customes hurteth nothing. Yet forasmuch as Heretikes haue thus done, they say that the Catholikes may in no wise doe the same: Not for that the thing it selfe was ill of it selfe, but for that they would not seeme to follow Heretikes. Aug. Confess. lib. 6. cap. 2. Quòd Superstitioni Gentilium essent similima. Gregor. Lib. 1. Epist. 41.

Gabriel Biel saith, the Church of Rome thought it good to vse common Leauened Bread at the Ministration of the Holy Mysteries, lest in vsing vnleauened Bread they should bee thought Gabriel Lect. 38.

thought to follow Ebion the Heretike. Tertullian reasoneth vehemently, that a Christian man ought not to goe with a Laurell Garland vpon his Head: and that for none other cause, but only for that the Heathens vsed so to goe. Whereupon Beatus Rhenanus giueth this note: Non solùm ab his temperandum fuit, quæ manifestam præ se ferrent impietatem, sed etiam ab illis quæ possent indifferentia vocari, hoc est, quæ essent neque Bona, neque Mala: partim, ne quisquam infirmior ex Christianis offenderetur: partim, ne Ethnici in suis erroribus confirmarentur, dum rectius putant esse quod etiam Christianos obseruare vident: It was meet for them to refraine, not onely from such things as haue a manifest shew of wickednesse, but also from such things as might be called indifferent, that is to say, neither Good, nor Ill: partly, least any of the weaker Christians should be offended: partly also, lest the Heathens should be incouraged in their errours, thinking that thing, for that the Christians themselues doe it, to be the better. Againe Tertullian saith: De hoc primo consistam, An cum ipsis quoque Nationibus Communicare in huiusmodi Seruus Dei debeat: siue habitu, siue victu, vel quo alio genere lætitiæ eorum: Heerein will I first stand, whether it be lawfull for the Seruant of God to Communicate with whole Nations in such things: either in Apparell, or in Diet, or in any other kinde of their Mirth.

And S. Basil saith: Χερόδετα τὰ περιττὰ ἐκ Ἐκκλησίας θεοῦ: Let needlesse and superfluous things be put to silence in the Church of God. To be short, Origen saith: Quærendum est, quid hoc sit quod sequitur, Non fiant ei reliquiæ: Ne aliqua, inquit, rescindatis Chaldæorum, aliqua reseruetis. Ob id iubet, ne pusillum quidem relinquatur in ea: We must examine what is meant by this that followeth, Leaue her no maner of remnant. The meaning is this, Abolish not certaine of the Superstitions of the Chaldees, reseruing certaine: Therefore he commandeth that nothing be left in her, be it neuer so little. Howbeit, I take not vpon me to enter into the Conscience of others. Let each man abound in his owne sense.

Yet, M. Harding, forasmuch as ye make such a reckoning of your Antiquity, as if all your Orders and Ceremonies had vndoubtedly béene conueied ouer vnto you from Christ himselfe, and his Apostles, may it therefore please you to vnderstand, that at the beginning there appeareth no such distinction or difference of Apparell in the Ministerie. Valafredus Abbas saith: Veteres Communi indumento vtentes, Celebrabant Missas: The Old Fathers said Masse, (that is to say, Ministred the Holy Communion, hauing on their owne common Apparell.

Augustin in Regula Monarch.

S. Augustine in his Rule to his Clerkes, or Monkes, writeth thus: Ne sit Notabilis habitus vester: Let not your Apparell be Notable. S. Hierome describing the order of the Church at Bethleem, saith thus: In veste nulla discretio: nulla admiratio: Vtcunque placuerit incedere, nec detractionis est, nec laudis: In Apparell there is no difference: there is no wondering. Howsoeuer any man list to goe, it is neither slandered, nor praised. And Pope Cœlestinus the first saith: Discernendi sumus à plebe, Doctrina, non Veste: Conuersatione, non Habitu: Mentis puritate, non Cultu. Si enim studere incipiemus Nouitati, Traditum nobis à Patribus ordinem calcabimus, vt locum vacuum Superstitionibus faciamus. Docendi potiùs sunt rudium animi, quàm illudendi. Nec Imponendum est illorum oculis, sed mentibus infudenda præcepta sunt: Wee must bee knowen from the Laypeople by our Doctrine, not by our Coat: By our Conuersation, not by our Apparell: By the pureneſſe of our Minde, not by the attire of our Body. For if we once beginne to deuise Noueltie, wee shall tread our Fathers Orders vnder foot, and make roome for Superstition. The mindes of the ignorant ought to bee taught, and not to be mocked. Neither may wee goe about to dasell their eies: but rather ought to powre holesome Doctrine into their Hearts. Heere you see, by the Popes owne iudgement, that your superstitious choice of apparell serueth not for increase of Holinesse, but rather for the deceiuing and mocking of the people. To conclude it is noted in your owne Glosse vpon the Clementines: Clerici Sæculares non habent certum habitum, cùm non sit expressum in iure de Colore, vel Forma: per quæ, vel quorum alterum oportet habitum discerni: Secular Priests haue no certaine apparell appointed them, forasmuch as there is no expresse mention made, neither of the Colour, nor of the Forme: by which two differences, or by the one of them, Apparell must be discerned.

But lest ye should conceiue ouer great opinion of so small a matter, and thinke there can bée none other Apparell méet and comely for the Clergie, but only yours: or, that without the same, the whole Church of Christ must nèds goe to wracke: may it like you therefore to remember what the Ancient Father Origen hath written of you in this behalfe: Non solùm apud Iudæos, sed etiam apud nos, multos est inuenire peccata huiusmodi peccantes, & glutientes Camelos, in eo, quòd maxima delicta committunt. Poſidonius writing the life of S. Auguſtine, ſaith thus: Veſtis eius, & calceamenta, & lectualia ex moderato & competenti habitu erant: nec nitida nimiùm, nec abiecta plurimùm. Quia his plerunque vel iactare ſe nimiùm homines ſolent, vel abijcere: ex vtrò que non quæ Ieſu Chriſti, ſed quæ ſua ſunt, quærentes: Auguſtines Apparell, Shooes and Bedding were of a competent and meane making. neither ouer freſh, nor ouer homely. For in ſuch things men vſe oftentimes either to vaunt, or to abaſe themſelues aboue meaſure: in either ſide ſeeking their owne, and not that Pertaineth to Ieſus Chriſt. Poſidon. in vita Auguſt.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ex cæteris eius operibus poteſt conijci, vtrùm hoc Contemptu ſuperflui cultus, an Ambitione aliqua faciat. Quia & ſub ouina pelle vastandos Lupos Dominus præcepit: We may gather by the reſt of his workes, whether he doe thus (attire himſelfe) in contempt of Superfluous Apparell, or elſe for Ambition, that hee may be noted. For our Lord hath commanded vs to beware of the Woolfe, euen vnder the Sheepes skinne. Aug. de Serm. Domini in Monte, lib. 2.

Againe he ſaith: Illum parcum habitum, ac neceſſarium, etiam Simulatores ſæpius vſurpant, vt incautos decipiant: That homely kind of Aparell, ſtanding onely in neceſſaries, Hypocrites and Diſſemblers doe for the more part counterfeit, to the end they may deceiue men before they be ware. Thus much onely by the way, leſt ye ſhould thinke more of your Coat then it is worthy. Auguſt. in eodem libro.

Some ſay, The Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament is Torne and Cruſhed with Teeth: and ſome denie it. Yea forſooth (ſay you) and both meane right well. Thus would ye not ſay M. Harding, if ye knew what it were to Eat the Body of Chriſt.

Chriſts Bodie Torne & Cruſhed with Teeth.

S. Cyprian ſaith: Iſte Panis replet Mentem, non ventrem: This Bread feedeth the Minde, and not the Belly. We Eat it with the Spirituall Tooth of our Faith, not with the Materiall Tooth of our Body. Your very Gloſſe, be it neuer ſo blind was able to ſee that theſe words, To teare, and to Cruſh Chriſts Body with your bodily Teeth, can hardlie haue ſo Catholike and ſo good a meaning as you imagine. The words thereof be theſe: Niſi ſanè intelligas verba Berengarij, in maiorem incides Hæreſim, quàm ipſe habuit. Et ideò omnia referas ad Species ipſas: Vnleſſe thou diſcretly vnderſtand theſe words of Berengarius, thou ſhalt fall into a greater Hereſie then he had any. Therefore theſe words muſt haue relation to the formes, and not vnto Chriſts very Body. It followeth therefore that the Catholike Conſtruction that you gather hereof muſt nèds bee this: Chriſts Body is Cruſhed and Torne with Teeth, that is to ſay, Chriſts Body is not cruſhed, nor Torne with Teeth. Germans lips be not ſo far aſunder, but ye may eaſily ioine them together by ſuch Conſtructions. Cypria. de Cœna Domini. De Conſ. Diſt. 2. Ego Berengarius. In Gloſſa.

But Chryſoſtome ſaith in like wiſe: Dentes inſerimus in Carnes Chriſti: We thruſt our Teeth into the Fleſh of Chriſt. Oh, M. Harding, you cannot bee ignorant of Chryſoſtomes extraordinary or vehement maner of ſpeech: and therefore yée are the more to blame, thus of purpoſe and wittingly to abuſe your Reader. For as Chryſoſtome ſaith, We thruſt our Teeth into Chriſts Fleſh; ſo hee ſaith likewiſe, Chriſt is ſlaine vpon the Communion Table, and his Blood is powred from his ſide. Likewiſe he ſaith vnto a ſlanderer of his neighbour: Linguam tuam humano Sanguine rubefeciſti: Thou haſt died thy tongue redde in mans Blood. So S. Hierome ſaith: Detractatores vitus Carnibus Saturantur: Slanderers are filled with liue Fleſh. So ſaith S. Cyprian: Crucì hæremus: Sanguinem fugimus: & intra ipſa Redemptoris noſtri vulnera linguam figimus: Wee Cleaue to the Croſſe: and ſucke the Blood: and we faſten our Tongues within the wounds of our Redeemer. In Gloſſa. Chryſoſtom. in Encæniis. Chryſo. ad Roman. Homil. 2. Hierony. in Iobum, cap. 19. Cypra. de Cœna Domini.

Theſe and other like phraſes, commonly vſed in the ancient Fathers, may not be racked to the extremity of the words: but rather ought fauourably to bee applied to the meaning: which was, by the Materiall Tooth, and Tongue of the Body, to expreſſe the Spirituall and inward Eating and ſucking of the Minde. So S. Auguſtine ſaith: Figura ergo eſt, præcipiens Paſſioni Domini communicandum, & ſuauiter atque vtiliter recondendum in memoria, quòd Caro Chriſti Crucifixa pro nobis, & vulnerata ſit: Therefore it is a Figure, or a Figuratiue phraſe of ſpeech, Commanding vs to be Partakers of Chriſts Paſſion, and comfortably and profitably to lay vp in our Hearts, that his Fleſh was Crucified, and wounded for our ſakes. Auguſt. de Doctrin. Chriſtiã. lib. 3. cap. 16.

As for your Conſecration, Corpus quantum, Non quantum, Non per modum quanti, Individuum Vagum, &c. which lately were the Subſtantialleſt points of all your Doctrine, ctrine, it is sufficent for you now to say, They are no Articles of your Faith. Such Grace haue you for aduantage, to make your Faith more, or lesse at your pleasure. Touching your Dogs, and Mise, whether they eat the very Body of Christ, or no, and that Substantially, Verily and in deed, yee seeme still to stay in doubt, as not yet being well assured of this Article of your Faith. But this is a most certaine and vndoubted Article of our Faith, that no Creature can Eat the Bodie of Christ, but he that is a member of Christs Body. S. Augustine saith: Hoc est manducare illam escam, & illum potum bibere, in Christo manere, & Christum manentem in se habere: This is the Eating of that meat, and the Drinking of that Drinke; for a man to dwel in Christ, and to haue Christ dwelling with him. And therefore we say, whosoeuer will hold that a Dogge or a Mouse may Eat the very Body of Christ, and that Really, and in deed, or who so staggereth, or doubteth whether it may be so, or no, Accursed be he.

You say your Contentions betwéne your two contrary Armies, the Thomists, and the Scotists, and other Schoolemen, stand only in certaine termes Metaphysicall. As, Verùm Ens, & Vnum differant ratione, an reipsa: The Truth whereof is very agréable to the rest of your Doctrine. For, to leaue a whole world of the endlesse contentions that are among you, Alphonsus one of your owne Doctors saith, that one of your Thomists doubted not to pronounce openly in the behoofe of his Master: Quisquis à B. Thomæ sententia discesserit, suspectus de Hæresi est censendus: Whosoeuer forsaketh the iudgement of Thomas of Aquine, must be taken as suspected of Heresie. I thinke ye vse not to place your Heresies in termes Metaphysicall.

Alphons. de Heresib. lib 1. c. 7.

Erasmus that liued in that age, and wel vnderstood of the furies of your Schooles, saith thus: Qui Thomam sequuntur, & à Scoto, & à Gersone dissentiunt, eos penè habent pro Hæreticis: They that follow Thomas, and dissent from Duns and Gerson, account them in a maner as good as Heretikes.

Erasm. contra Latomum.

Dominicus à Soto and Catharinus were both learned men: both of your side: both sworne to the Pope: both present at your late Chapter at Trident. Yet thus doth the one of them greet the other: Tu permanes in sensu damnato per Synodum: Thou remainest stil in a sence condemned by the Councell. Catharinus condemneth Cardinall Caietane for two hundred sundry errors: and some of them hee calleth, wicked and Antichristian. These Termes must needs be very Metaphysicall, M. Harding, that can yeeld you such Heretical, and Antichristian errors.

Dominicus à Soto contra Catharinum.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision. 1.

They were best therefore to goe and set peace at home rather among themselues. Of a truth Vnity and Concord doth best become Religion: Yet is not Vnity the sure and certaine marke, whereby to know the Church of God. For ther was the greatest Vnity that might be, amongst them that worshipped the Golden Calfe, & among them which with one voice iointly cried against our Sauiour Iesus Christ, Crucifie him. Neither because the Corinthians were vnquieted with priuate dissensions: or because Paul did square with Peter, or Barnabas with Paul: or because the Christians vpon the very beginning of the Gospell, were at mutuall discord touching some one matter, or other, may we therefore thinke, there was no Church of God amongst them. And for those persons, whom they vpon spight call Zuinglians, and Lutherans, in very deed they of both sides be Christians, good Friends, & Brethren. They vary not betwixt themselues vpon the Principles and Foundations of our Religion, nor as touching God, or Christ, or the Holy Ghost, or the meanes of Iustification, or of Euerlasting Life, but vpon one only question, which is neither weighty, nor great: neither mistrust we, or make doubt at all, but they wil shortly be agreed. And if there be any of them which haue other opinion then is meet, we doubt not but ere it be long they will put apart all affections, and names of parties, & that God will reueale the Truth vnto them: so that by better considering and searching out of the matter, as once it came to passe in the Councel of Chalcedon, all causes and seeds of dissention shall be thoroughly pluckt vp by the root, and be buried, and quite forgotten for euer. Which God grant.

M. Harding

M. Harding.

The Defenders be like in conditions to ſuch honeſt women as commonly wee call Scolds. Becauſe Vnity pleaſeth you not, as being that through lacke whereof your New Church is of al good men deteſted, and of the meaneſt very much ſuſpected, ye ſay it is not a ſure and certain marke, wherby to know the Church of God. Yes, Maſters, among other notes and markes of the true Church, Vnitie is one. Not euery Vnitie, but vnity in the Holy Ghoſt, which giueth life to that one Body the Church, whereof euery faithfull is a member, and Chriſt the Head, and powring Charity abroad in our Hearts, ſo linketh all right beleeuers together in the bond of peace, as they all ſay one thing, think one thing, tauour one thing. The Vnity that is the note and marke of the true Church, whereof we ſpeake, is that for which the Church is called one, and being gathered and knit together, profeſſeth Vnity of Faith, of good wil and mutuall loue together, and of Sacraments. The Vnitie of them who worſhipped the Golden Calfe, and with one conſent againſt our Sauiour cried, Crucifige, was farre diſtant from the Vnitie which is a note of the Church, and is the worke of the Holy Ghoſt. Such is the Vnitie of the Diuels, who conſpire againſt Chriſt and all his with one conſent. Such Vnitie is often times in Theeues. Such Vnitie is found in you, and all your Sects. For be ye neuer ſo diuers, and at variance within your ſelues, yet ye ioine together in wicked amity and Vnity againſt the Church of Chriſt. And therefore S. Auguſtine compareth you, and all ſuch as ye be, to Sampſons Foxes, that were ſundred by the Heads, and tied together by the tailes.

Vnitie.

Neither ſay we, that among them who varie in ſmall points, and things not pertaining to the grounds of Faith, there is no Church. For all that certaine of the Corinthians in the Primitiue Church were at ſquare, howſoeuer Paul told Peter that he thought good: Though Barnabas and Paul agreed not about John Marke, yet were they of Chriſts Church: what elſe? But where ye bring this for excuſe of the Lutherans and Zuinglians, and other Sects ſprung out of them, the cauſe is not like pardie. For lay on what ye liſt, and lie ſo long as ye liſt, their diſſentions cannot be diſſembled; much leſſe can they bee accorded, &c.

1. Cor. 1. Galat. 2. Act. 15.

Yet leſt they, whoſe fortune is not to ſee ought therof written elſe where, ſhould miſtruſt my report, as all doe eſpie your lying; the words of Nicolaus Gallus, your own Doctor of Luthers Schoole, here I will reherſe: Non ſunt leues inter nos concertationes de rebus leuibus, ſed de ſublimibus Doctrinæ Chriſtianæ articulis, de Lege & Euangelio, de iuſtificatione, & bonis operibus, de Sacramentis, &c. The ſtrifes (ſaith he) that be amongſt vs be not light, nor of light matters, but of the high Articles of Chriſtian Doctrine, namely, of the Law, and of the Goſpel, of iuſtification, and of good works, of the Sacraments, &c. Here, as ye ſee, he reckoneth vp a great many of the weightieſt points of our Religion, whereof they diſſent among themſelues. But I doubt what I may call weight, and great, ſeeing theſe good fellowes cal the controuerſie which is betwixt the Lutherans and the Zuinglians, concerning the body of our Sauiour Chriſt neither weighty, nor great. But as they make a foule lie therein, ſo do they allo in ſaying, they varie not betwixt themſelues, but vpon on'y queſtion. Of the diſſention that is between the Lutherans & Zuinglians, thus pitifully complaineth Nicolaus Amſdorfius in his booke entituled Publica confeſſio puræ Doctrinæ, himſelfe being an earneſt Lutheran: The world goeth with vs worſe and worſe daily. All things do prognoſticate the vtter ruine of the Goſpel; and that in place of the Goſpel we ſhall haue nothing but meere errors, and the ſame very notable. (Then after a few words) Now Brentius (ſaith he) & the Adiaphoriſts (they be a ſpecial Sect of the Lutherans) being at the communication or conference at Wormes, would not condemne Zuinglius and Oſiander, becauſe they were trimme men in the tongues, and well ſeene in Humanity. And as for vs and our ſide, becauſe we refuſed to agree vnto that communication vnleſſe they were condemned, they dreſſed vs vilely with their ſcoffes & railings, thruſt vs out of the communication, and compelled vs to goe away, &c. Item after a few.

In Theſibus & Hypotipoſibus, fol. vlt.

There be that ſay they condemne Zuinglianiſme: But the Preface of Brentius to Maſter Iames the Miniſter of Goppingen his Booke witneſſeth farre otherwiſe. For there they goe about (a Gods name) to conciliate good Father Luther, and Zuinglius, and make them friends one with another: Quod planè impoſſibile eſt: Quis enim vnquam audiuit contradictoria poſſe redigi in concordiam? Which is impoſſible? For who euer heard that cõtradictions may be accorded? (But the Maſters of the Apology make no doubt at all, but they will ſhortly be agreed.) Such childiſh and impoſſible things they ſticke not to ſet forth, who would be counted the Teachers of the World, as though we were but blocks and Aſſes. But as for the Hereſies and errors of Zwinglius and Oſiander, with a quiet conſcience we cannot embrace. Neither can we ſubſcribe & yeeld to their departing away, and new gewgawes, which haue diuided themſelues from Luther. Thus far Amſdorfius, and much more there to the ſame purpoſe, which heere I leaue to blot the paper withall. To conclude, thus all men may plainly ſee how the Maſters of this Defence be conuinced of foule lying by their owne Doctors and Schoolefellowes, beſide the thing it ſelfe that giueth manifeſt euidence againſt them. But ſuch ſtuffe in their writings and Preachings is not geſon. Leauing others I report me to M. Iewels late Sermõ made at Pauls Croſſe on the Sunday before Aſcenſion day laſt, in which (if vniforme report made by ſundry there preſent be true) he abuſed certaine Honourable and Worſhipfull perſonages, and of common people a great multitude, with lies worthy rather to be chaſtiſed by Lawes, then to be confuted with words. But be it as it is written: Qui in ſordibus eſt, ſordeſcat adhuc.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

It pitieth me M. Harding, to ſee your trifling. If ye thought it ſo good ſkill, for aduantage of your cauſe, to compare vs to Scolds, wherefore then did not you, although not throughout your whole Booke, yet at leaſt in the ſelfe ſame place, where yee ſo deepely charge vs with ſcolding, refraine better from ſuch wild ſpeaches, as might ſeeme to proue your ſelfe a Scold? For I beſeech you, call your words a little to remembrance: and conſider indifferently what women they be that commonly vſe the like. Thus yee ſay: Euen ſo, good Sirs, proudly, wickedly, and fondly ye obiect: ye ſhew your Clerkly proweſſe ye bragge:

Vnitie.

yee boaſt: Now haue you told your ſcoulding tale: Yee ioine in wicked amity againſt the Church of Chriſt: The founders of your Church: The Apoſtles of your Goſpell: Yee are conuinced of foule lying: All men doe eſpie your lying: Lie on ſo long as ye liſt: He that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill. These be your words, M. Harding, all together in one place. If you can finde ſo many the like in all our whole Apologie, condemne vs hardly, and call vs Scolds.

Vnity we loue, and honour it as the greateſt comfort of Chriſtian hearts. But if Vnitie be the onely and vndoubted token of the Church of God, woe then bee to you, and to your fellowes. For by that token agreeing ſo ill amongſt your ſelues, ye ſhould ſeeme to haue no Church.

But, as we haue ſaid, all they that agree together are not therefore euermore of the Church. Herod and Pilate were made friends, and agreed together. Dauid ſaith: The Kings and Princes of the earth haue met, and agreed together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt. S. Iohn ſaith of the friends and fauourers of Antichriſt: Hi vnum Conſilium habent, & vires ac poteſtatem ſuam tradent Beſtiæ: hi pugnabunt cum Agno: Theſe ſhall haue all one Counſell (and one Minde:) and ſhall deliuer ouer their ſtrength and their power vnto the Beaſt: and ſhall fight againſt the Lambe.

Luc. 23. Pſalm. 2. Apoc. 17.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: Expedit & ipſis Dæmonibus obaudire ſibi inuicem in Schiſmate: It is good euen for the Diuels themſelues to be obedient one of them vnto another in their Diuiſion. Symmachus, and other like maintainers of the Heathenith Idolatry, ſaid: Æquum eſt quicquid omnes colunt, vnum putari: It is meet that whatſoeuer all men worſhip, be counted One. And thus the Heathens and Infidels would they ſeeme to hold by Vnity.

Chryſ in Mat. Hom 29. in Opere imperfect. Ambroſ. Lib. 5. Epiſt. 30.

If your Vnity, M. Harding, be ſo ſound and ſo certaine as yee would ſeeme to make it, why then doe you condemne your ſelues one another of Hereſie? Certainely Hereſie importeth Diuiſion, and not great Vnity. The whole ſhew and ſubſtance of your Vnity ſtandeth in this: To giue eare to your ſelues, and to put Chriſt to ſilence. But the true and Chriſtian Vnitie is this: That the whole Flocke of Chriſt heare the voice of the only Shepheard, and follow him. The band of Vnity is ſimple Veritie: which M. Harding, foraſmuch as ye haue forſaken, ye haue no great cauſe to talke much of Vnitie.

Iohan. 10.

As for Sampſons Foxe-tailes, it ſeemeth ye lackt ſomewhat to play withall. Otherwiſe they ſerue you heere to no great purpoſe. For if there be any diſſenſion amongſt vs, it is not in any Article of the Faith, but only in ſome particular point of learning: The like whereof hath beene betweene S. Auguſtine, and S. Hierome, and others the learned, godly and Catholike Fathers of the Church. And thus contrary to Sampſons Foxes, notwithſtanding one or other haue beene diuided in ſome certaine Concluſion, as it were in the Tailes, yet we ioine thorowly all together in one Head, in one Goſpell, in one way of Saluation, and in one ſumme of Religion: and all together, with one Mouth, and one Spirit, we glorifie God the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

Lutherans Zuinglians.

Concerning the diſagreement that is betweene the Lutherans, and the Zuinglians, touching the Being of the Body of Chriſt in one only place, or in many, we ſay, that in reſpect either of Saluation, or of other Article, of God the Father, or of the Sonne, or of the Holy Ghoſt, or of any other the Grounds and Principles of the Chriſtian Faith, it is not weighty. In that reſpect we ſpeake it only. Otherwiſe we ſay the errour is weighty. Such errours in ſundry the Ancient Fathers haue beene diſſembled, and paſt in ſilence. S. Hilary ſeemeth to ſay, That Chriſt receiued not Fleſh of the Bleſſed Virgin: And, That the ſame Fleſh of Chriſt was impaſſible, and could feele no griefe.

Hilar. de Trinitate, Lib. 10. Hominis habitus eſt: Origo non Hominis. Naturam non habens ad dolendum.

Origen ſaith: Quidam putant Chriſtum in Futuro Sæculo iterum pati oportere, &c. Some men thinke that in the world to come Chriſt muſt ſuffer in his Body, or be Crucified againe. Brentius ſeemeth to hold, that Chriſts Body is infinite, and in all places, as is the Godhead: which error it ſeemeth was defended by ſome in S. Auguſtines time. And therefore he ſaith: Cauendum eſt, ne ita Diuinitatem aſtruamus Hominis, vt Veritatem Corporis auferamus: We muſt take heed we doe not ſo maintaine the Diuine Nature of Chriſt, being man, that we take away the Truth of his Body. These errours, notwithſtanding they were great in themſelues, yet in reſpect of other greater errors, haue beene diſſembled. And therefore Iacobus Andreas, albeit he could not be ignorant of this diſſention, being himſelfe a party to the ſame, yet he ſaith, Quòd vociferantur, noſtros de ſumma Euangelij nondum conſentire, mendacium eſt: Whereas they cry out (as M. Harding doth) that we cannot agree among our ſelues about the Subſtãce of the Goſpel, it is a very great vntruth.

Orig. ad Rom. Cap. 6. Lib. 5. Brentius. Aug. Epiſt. 57. ad Dardan. Iacob. Andræ. de Authoritat. Scripturæ, Pa. 178.

But you ſay: The Maſters of the Apologie tell vs, they doubt not but theſe parties wil be reconciled. And yet Nicolaus Amſdorfius (with whoſe words yee are aſhamed to blot your paper) taketh the matter to be impoſſible. And heere yee thinke yee haue driuen vs neere the wall, ſpecially finding vs ſo farre diſagreeing in iudgement from a Doctor, as you call him, of our owne.

But

But, M. Harding, ye might better haue considered, that Amsdorfius and we speake of sundrie matters, and therefore our sayings may well stand together.

Amsdorfius saith, the Doctrine and Termes standing still, as they doe, it is not possible by any maner of Construction, to make the parties agree. But our trust in God is, that they, that are deceiued, shall finde their owne errour, and alter their Tearmes, and correct their Iudgements, and submit themselues vnto the truth, and so ioine togethet all in one.

So S. Augustine saith: Recte dicitur, Glacialem niuem calidam esse non posse. Nullo enim pacto, quam diu nix est, calida esse potest: It is wel said, Snow frorne or congealed can neuer be hot. For as long as it is Snow, it is not possible to make it hot. And yet the liquor that now is frozne, may afterward be resolued and made hot. Aug. in secunda disputat. contra Fortunatum.

So likewise he saith of the Heretikes named the Manichees: Sic delirant Manichæi sed resipiscant, & non sint Manichæi: Thus fond are the Manichees: But let them amend their errors, and no more be Manichees. August. contra. Faust. l. 24. c. 2.

What is there so contrary in iudgement, as a Iew and a Christian? Yet God hath promised, That hee will turne the Hearts of the Fathers (the Iewes) vnto their Children: and the Hearts of the Children (the Christians) vnto their Fathers. And Saint Paul saith: Iudæi, si non permanserint in incredulitate, inserentur. Potens enim est Deus iterum inserere eos: The Iewes shal be grafted into the Tree, if they abide not in Vnbeleefe. For God is able to graft them in againe. What is there so contrary as Light and Darkenesse? Yet the Prophet saith: Illumina tenebras meas: O Lord lighten thou my darkenesse. To conclude, what is so contrary, as the Kingdome of the Pope, and the Kingdome of Christ? And yet wee trust, it is not impossible, but the Pope himselfe may once turne to God and confesse his errors, and professe the Gospell of Christ, that he now oppresseth. Malach. 4. Rom. 11. Psal. 17.

These things considered, M. Harding, it was no deadly Sinne, to say, wee trust, that these matters of variance betweene the Lutherans, and the Zuinglians, will once be accorded: and that all causes, and seeds of dissention shall bee thoroughly pulled vp by the roots, and be buried and quite forgotten for euer. This change God hath already begun to worke, not onely in sundry learned Men, but also in great Cities, in good Vniuersities, and in whole Countries. Therefore, we trust, our hope is not in vaine. Lutherans Zuingliãs.

As for the lies, which (it liketh you well to say) M. Iewell made openly at Pauls Crosse. I doubt not of your modesty, but ye would haue blased them better, if ye had thought them worth your colours. Such generall and so great exclamations, vpon so simple reports, stand not alwaies with greatest wisdome. He is too rash to be a Iudge, that pronounceth before he know the cause. What I said there, forasmuch as ye touch nothing in particular, it is needlesse to make rehearsall. But well I remember, I might truely haue said, M. Harding commonly misalleged, misreporteth, misconstrueth, corrupteth, wresteth and falsifieth the ancient Councels and Holy Fathers. I could haue said, M. Harding is often times direcly contrary to himselfe. I could haue said, M. Harding in one Booke hath vttered two hundred fiue and fiftie great vntruths. These M. Harding, your Conscience knoweth, had beene no Lies: and therefore not meet to bee chastised by any Lawes.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision 1. and 2.

But this is the heauiest and most greeuous part of their slanders, that they call vs wicked and vngodly Men, and say we haue throwne away all care of Religion. Though this ought not to trouble vs much, whilest they themselues that thus haue charged vs, know ful well, how spightfull, and vntrue their slander is. Iustine the Martyr is a witnesse, that all Christians were called ἄθεοι, that is, a Godlesse people, as soone as the Gospell first began to be published, and the name of Christ to be openly declared. And when Polycarpus stood to be iudged, the people stirred vp the President to slea and murder all them, which professed the Gospell, with these words, αἶρε τοὺς ἀθέους. That is to say, Ridde out of the way these wicked and Godlesse Creatures. And this was, not because it was true, that the Christians were Godlesse indeed, but because they would not worship stones and stockes, which then were honoured as God. The whole World seeth plainly enough already, what wee and ours ours haue endured at these mens hands for Religion and our onely Gods cause. They haue thrown vs into Prison, into Water, into Fire, and haue embrued themselues in our blood: not because we were either Adulterers, or Robbers, or Murtherers, but onely for that wee confessed the Gospell of Iesus Christ, and put our confidence in the liuing God: And for that we complained too iustly & truly (Lord thou knowest) that they did breake the Law of God for their owne most vaine Traditions: And that our Aduersaries were the very foes to the Gospell and enemies to Christs Crosse, so wittingly, and willingly, and obstinatly despising Gods Commandements.

Wherefore, when these men saw they could not rightly finde fault with our Doctrine, they would needes picke a quarrell, and inueigh and raile against our maners, surmising, that we doe condemne all wel doings: that wee set open the doore to all licentiousnesse and lust, and lead away the people from all loue of Vertue. And in very deed, the life of all men, euen of the deuoutest and most Christian, both is, and euermore hath beene such, as one may alwaies finde some lacke, euen in the very best and purest conuersation. And such is the inclination of all Creatures vnto euill, and the readinesse of all men to suspect, that the things which neither haue been done, nor once were meant to be done, yet may be easily both heard and credited to be true. And like as a small spot is soone espied in the neatest and whitest garment, euen so the least staine of dishonesty is easily found out in the purest and sincerest life. Neither take we all them, which haue at this day embraced the Doctrine of the Gospell, to bee Angels, and to liue cleerely without any mote or wrinkle: nor yet thinke we these Men neither so blinde, that if any thing may be noted in vs, they are not able to perceiue the same euen thorow the least creuic: nor so friendly, that they will construe ought to the best: nor yet so honest of nature or courteous, that they will looke backe vpon themselues, and weigh our liues by their owne. If so be we list to search this matter from the bottome, wee know that in the very Apostles times there were Christians, through whom the name of the Lord was blasphemed and euil spoken of among the Gentiles, Constantius the Emperour bewaileth as it is written in Sozomenus, that many waxed worse and worse, after they had fallen to the Religion of Christ. And Cyprian in a Lamentable Oration setteth out the corrupt maners of his time: The wholesome Discipline, saith hee, which the Apostles left vnto vs, hath idlenesse, and long rest now vtterly marred, euery one studied to encrease his liuelihood: And cleane forgetting, either what they had done before whilest they were vnder the Apostles, or what they ought continually to doe hauing receiued the Faith; they earnestly laboured to make great their owne wealth with an vnsatiable desire of couetousnesse. There is no deuout Religion, saith he, in Priests, no sound Faith in Ministers; no charity shewed in good works, no forme of godlinesse in their conditions: Men are become effeminate, and womens beauty is counterfetted. And without reciting of many moe Writers, Gregory Nazianzene speaketh thus of the pittifull state of his owne time: Wee, saith he, are in hatred among the Heathen for owne vices sake, we are also become now a wonder, not onely to Angels, and men, but euen to all the vngodly. In this case was the Church of God, when the Gospell first began to shine, and when the fury of Tyrants was not as yet cooled, nor the Sword taken of from the Christians neckes. Surely it is no new thing that men be but men, although they be called by the name of Christians.

M. Harding.

Loe a greeuous and a heauy caſe, that the world calleth you wicked and vngodly men, I wis they be to blame for it. And ſo be they that call them theeues, which come to be promoted to Lyborne: For, God knoweth, little haue you deſerued, ſo to be called, &c.

THE FOVRTH PART.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuiſion 1.

BVT will theſe men, I pray you, thinke nothing at all of themſelues, whiles they ſo maliciouſly accuſe vs? And hauing leaſure to behold ſo farre off, and to ſee what is done both in Germany & in England, haue they either forgotten or can they not ſee what is done at Rome? Or, will they accuſe vs of their owne life being ſuch, as no man is able to make mention thereof but with ſhame? Our purpoſe heere is, not to take in hand at this preſent, to bring to light & open to the World thoſe things, which were meet rather to be hid and buried with the workers of them. It beſeemeth neither our Religion, nor our modeſty, nor ſhamefaſtneſſe. But yet he, which giueth commandement that he ſhould be called the Vicar of Chriſt and the Head of the Church, who alſo heareth, that ſuch things be done in Rome, who ſeeth them, who ſuffereth them (for we will goe no further) may eaſily conſider with himſelf, what maner of things they be. Let him in Gods name call to minde, and let him remember, that they be of his own Canoniſts & Schoole Doctors, which haue taught the people, that Fornication betweene ſingle folke is no ſin: (as though they had fet that doctrine from Mitio in Terence) whoſe words be: It is no ſinne (beleeue me) for a young man to haunt Harlots. Let him remember they bee of his own, which haue decreed, that a Prieſt ought not to be put out of his Cure for Fornication. Let him remember alſo, how Cardinall Campegius, Albertus Pighius, and others many moe of his owne, haue taught, that the Prieſt, which keepeth a Concubine, doth liue more holily and chaſtly then he which hath a Wife in Matrimonie. I truſt, he hath not yet forgotten, that there be many thouſands of Common Harlots in Rome: and that hee himſelfe doth gather yeerely of the ſame Harlots aboue thirty thouſand Ducats, by the way of an annual penſion. Neither can he forget, that he himſelf doth maintaine openly Brothel Houſes, and by a moſt filthy lucre doth filthily and leaudly ſerue his owne luſt. Were al things then pure and holy in Rome, when Ioane a Woman, rather of perfect age, then of perfect life, was Pope there, and bare her ſelfe as the Head of the Church: And after that for two whole yeeres, in that holy See ſhe had plaid the naughty packe, at laſt going in Procеſſion about the Citie in the the ſight of all her Cardinals and Biſhops fell in trauell openly in the ſtreetes?

M. Harding.

* By the Anſwer it will appeare that this lie is plaine Truth.

First, who ſeeth not, *what a notorious lie they make in the preface and entry to the matter? Say they not they take not vpon them, at this time to bring to light and to the view of the World thoſe doings, which ought rather together with the Authors of them to be buried? And that ſo to do, their Religion, their ſhamefaſtneſſe, their bluſhing doth not beare it? What is a lie if this be not? Do they not in deed, that they denie in word? yea ſay they not that thing, which they affirme they ſay not.

I doubt not, good Reader, but peruſing theſe few following, thou ſhalt plainely ſee, that the Authours of this Apology ſpake not all, that they might well haue ſpoken. But if thou happen to read Dantes, Petrarcha, Boccaſe, Mantuan, Valla, and others like, the Popes owne Dærelings, thou wilt certainely ſay, that euen now, being thus challenged and called forth, and required to ſpeake, yet we haue rather giuen an inkling thereof, then opened the particular ſecrets of the matter. For thereof S. Bernard ſaith thus: Quæ in occulto fiunt ab Epiſcopis, turpe eſt vel dicere; It is ſhame to vtter the things, that Biſhops doe in their Secrets. And therefore he ſaith further, euen as did the Writer of the Apologie: Melius itaque arbitror ſuper hoc diſſimulare: Touching ſuch matters, I thinke it better to diſſemble. Franciſcus Petrarcha calleth Rome the Whore of Babilon, the Mother of all Idolatry and Fornication: and ſaith, that all ſhame and reuerence is quite departed thence. Baptiſta Mantuanus ſaith:

Heereby, M. Harding, yee may eaſily ſee, that we of purpoſe diſſembled, and couered your ſhame and ſpake much leſſe, and farre otherwiſe of you, then wee might haue ſpoken.

Eraſmus in vita Auguſtini.

Eraſmus, writing of S. Auguſtines dealing againſt the Manichees, ſaith thus: Obſcœna Myſteria Manichæorum protraxit in lucem. Nam hæc prodidiſſe erat vicisſe: He opened and publiſhed the filthy Myſteries of the Manichees. For the very opening thereof was ſufficient to ouerthrow them. But happy are they that liue in ſuch ſort, that no man may well reueale their life without bluſhing.

Here, M. Harding, ye charge vs plentifully with Fables, and Slanders and heapes of Lies, great, foule, leaud and ſhamefull, in one company, all together. Wherein it was no great maſtery for you to be ſo liberall: for that hereof ye want no ſtore.

But if we ſhal be able clearely and plainly to auouch and iuſtifie each thing that we haue ſpoken, then we doubt not, but ye will take all theſe Lies home againe, and beſtow them freely among your ſelues.

Crimes laide to the Popes charge by the Defenders.

They beo the Popes Canoniſts (ſay they) that haue taught the people that ſimple Fornication is no ſinne. A greeuous offence, and worthy to be puniſhed. And verily if any Pope euer knew, that his learned men in the Canon Law haue taught the people ſuch heatheniſh and diuelliſh Doctrine (a) though no man in Earth be his Iudge, yet he may be thought vnworthy the roome of ſo great charge. But if the Pope neuer knew ſuch Doctrine preached by the Canoniſts, and if at no time there haue beene any ſuch, then is he cleere, and yee are prooued ſlanderers, and falſe bakebiters. We denie it vtterly. How prooue ye it? Marry Sir, ſay ye, looke in the margine of our Apologie, and there yee ſhall finde one Iohn de Magiſtris noted for an Offender in that behalfe. Well, if it were ſo, he was but one man; ye ſpeake of Canoniſts, which word ſignifieth a number. And how prooue yee that he the ſaid Iohn de Magiſtris (for now I will ſpare you, and will not ſay, they) taught the people that ſimple Fornication was no ſinne? &c.

(a) Vntruth. For the Canoniſts themſelues confeſſe, that the Councell may iudge, and depoſe the Pope.

(b) This pelting writer is Alphõſus de Caſtro, one of M. Hardings greateſt Doctors.

Now we tell you, that we cannot finde, where euer Iohannes de Magiſtris, wrote ſo impiouſly, as ye report. Is it not Martinus de Magiſtris, that ye meane? It is a great raſhneſſe, if ye haue not read your ſelues, to beleeue ſuch (b) pelting Writers, that be of your ſects, as ye do, by whom ye ſeem to be moſt ſhamefully, and moſt dangerouſly deceiued, &c. What will be thought and ſaid of you, if we ſhew plainly, that yee ye haue forged a foule lie, and a moſt falſe ſlander vpon Martinus de Magiſtris? For ſo will we call him, vntill yee proone it of Iohannes.

This Martinus de Magiſtris, was no Canoniſt, as ye ſay, but a Doctor of Diuinitie, well learned for his time and order of ſtudy, as a Schooleman. In a Treatiſe, that he made, De temperantia & de luxuria, hee diſputeth after ſuch maner, as the Scholaſticall Doctors commonly vſe. Wherefore he that ſaith that he taught the people, ſought by vntruth, how to make the matter moſt deteſtable. (c) For diſputing in Schooles, and teaching the people be far aſunder. Saith this Doctor Martin after the guiſe of Schooles, Quæritur vtrùm ſimplex Fornicatio ſit peccatum mortale, that is to ſay, It is a queſtion, whether ſimple Fornication be mortall ſinne. (d) This Defender knew what he did, when he left out the word mortall. For being diſpoſed to lie, he thought beſt to lie for a vantage. Now this is to be vnderſtanded, how the maner of the Scholaſticall Doctors is, firſt to propound a queſtion: next to argue, obiect, and reaſon againſt the truth of the queſtion: then to auouch and prooue the truth: after that to ſoile the obiections brought againſt the truth: laſtly to bring concluſions for confirmation of the truth. Then in proſecuting of his queſtion, Arguitur quod non, I reaſon againſt it, ſaith he, & argue it is not ſo. And there after the Schoole maner, he maketh an argument againſt the truth. Which argument whoſoeuer taketh for his purpoſe, and alloweth it, admitteth that the Doctor goeth againſt, and diſprooueth. After this he commeth to prooue the truth. And there it followeth. In oppoſitum: Simplex Fornicatio excludit, &c. To the contrarie (ſaith hee) Simple Fornication excludeth from the kingdome of God, Ergo, it is mortall ſinne. Then he ſaith further: It is to be noted, that the (e) opinion of Thomas is, that ſimple Fornication vndoubtedly is mortall ſinne. Whoſoeuer readeth further in Martinus, he ſhall finde, after he hath well diſputed Pro & Con, as they terme it in Schooles, that is to ſay, for and againſt the truth, that he putteth ſix concluſions, of which the fourth beginneth thus: Ideo, &c. Therefore ſimple Fornication is mortall ſinne, becauſe it is forbidden by Gods Law, &c. And in the end of the ſixth, he ſaith: Heerof the falſhood of their opinion is made euident, who ſay, that ſimple Fornication is not mortall ſinne. Which opinion is condemned in the Articles of them of Paris, Errore CL XXXVI. Then he ſaith further. Guido the Carmelite ſaith in a Chapter Contra Errores Græcorum, that the errour of the Greekes, ſaying ſimple Fornication betweene a ſingle man and a ſingle woman not to bee mortall ſinne, openly contayneth Hereſie againſt the Holy Scripture, and that he prooueth by foure reaſons, &c.

By this, and much more there expreſſed, it is ſufficiently prooued, that Martinus de Magiſtris, in his Scholaſticall Diſputations in the ſaid Treatiſe, ſaith not that ſimple Fornication is no ſinne: much leſſe can it be reaſonably, or with any colour of honeſty ſaid, that ſo he taught the people. And therefore it is falſly and ſlanderouſly imputed vnto him.

(c) He that teacheth in Schooles, is Teacher of Teachers.

(d) Note by the way, that by M. Hardings ſecret concluſion, Fornication is not a Mortall, but a Veniall ſinne.

(e) Ergo, by likelihood, the opinion of others was otherwiſe.

that place, and certaine other there by him alleged is meant by a Concubine, ſaying; Concubina hic intelligitur, quæ ceſſantibus legalibus inſtrumentis, vnita eſt, & coniugali affectu aſciſcitur. Hanc Coniugem facit affectus: Concubinam verò lex nominat, &c. yea the Canons alſo doe name ſuch a woman a Concubine ſometimes, and not a Wife, vntill the Marriage be ſolemnized, &c. In this ſentence therfore he expoundeth, how the word Concubine is to bee taken in thoſe Canons, as much to ſay, for a Wife priuately taken, without publike ſolemnization, &c. As ſoone as that writing was made, and publike ſolemnity was performed, the Children borne before, were accounted lawfully borne, and the Concubine to haue beene a Wife from the beginning. And this woman the Law nameth in the meane time a Concubine, and not a Whore, &c.

397 a. This is as much as no wife at all. Then before the Solemnization of Marriage ſhee was no Wife.

Shee may be called a Concubine, which indeed is a true wife before God, and ſo ſhal you find Concubina vſed in the Scripture. The Anſwer. O, what adoe haue you made vs heere, M. Harding, in defenſe of your Concubines? If the matter had beene good, I doubt not, but you would haue maintained it a great deale better. A Concubine (you ſay) the ſolemnization onely excepted, is taken for a very lawfull wife: And for proofe hereof, you haue brought vs Scriptures, Doctours, Gloſſes, and Canons: and all this, as it may be thought, in defenſe of your Prieſts Concubines. A Concubine (you ſay) is a Wife in affection, a Wife before God, and a very Wife indeed. I marueil much at your ſtrange Commentaries, M. Harding. For your text is directly to the contrary. And heere I bid you not ouermuch to trouble your eies, and to eſpie, either what goeth before, or what followeth after. In the very ſelf-ſame words that I haue alleged, you may eaſily find difference betweene a Wife and a Concubine. For thus it is written: Is qui Vxorem non habet, & pro Vxore habet Concubinam, a Communione non repellatur: He that hath not a Wife, but in ſtead of a Wife, hath a Concubine, let him not be put from the Communion. You ſay, a Wife and Concubine are both one thing. But your Booke ſaith: Neither a Concubine is a Wife, nor a Wife is a Concubine. Marke well the words. Thus they ſtand: He, that hath not a Wife, but in ſtead of a Wife, hath a Concubine. It were a very ſtrange kind of ſpeech, to ſay: He, that hath not a Wife, but in ſtead of a Wife, hath a Wife. Yet thus muſt you needs ſay, if a Wife, and a Concubine be both one thing. But all this is eaſily anſwered. For you ſay, That a Woman is a Concubine that is taken priuately, and not Married ſolemnly in the face of the Church. Fie, M. Harding, why ſhould you thus vainely abuſe your friends? Is this your meaning, that a Concubine is married, although not ſolemnly and openly in the Church? Who euer told you of ſuch a Marriage? Or how can you ſo ſuddenly forget your ſelfe? Be not theſe your owne words, in this very ſame place? A Concubine is a Woman kept at bed and at boord, as a Wife with intent of Wedlocke? If ſhee bee Wedded alreadie, how is ſhee kept with intent of Wedlocke? If ſhee be not a Wife indeed, how is ſhee kept in Bed and at Bord, or as in ſtead of a Wife? Verily, M. Harding, a Concubine, while ſhe was a Concubine, was neuer married: neither openlie nor priuately, as it ſhall appeare: but afterwarde, being once married, ſhee was no longer called a Concubine.

398 b. Diſt. 34. Is qui. With intent of Wedlocke.

And that you may the better vnderſtand, how ſubſtantially ye haue dealt in this caſe, it may pleaſe you to know, that the Law ſaith: Concubinatus eſt inter Solutum & Solutam: Concubinatus is (not betweene Man and Wife, but) betweene a Single Man and a Single Woman. And he that keepeth a Concubine, is not in the Law called Maritus, but Amaſius, that is to ſay, Not a Huſband, but a Louer: and the ſame Louer might either refuſe his Concubine, or be refuſed of her, when either of them would, without any Diuorce or other ſolemnity, at their pleaſures. The Children betweene them begotten, vnleſſe Matrimonie follow, are not Legitimate, but liue in Baſtardy. It is written: Concubina æquiparatur Vxori, affectu, non honore, Matrimonij: A Coucubine is compared with a Wife in affection of Loue, but not in honour of Matrimonie. A Concubine may be receiued as a Witneſſe for her Louer, but a Wife may not be receiued as a Witneſſe for her Huſband. The very ſtate wherein they liue, is called in the Law, Crimen Concubinatus, that is, The Sinne of that trade of life. For the Law preſumeth, they cannot liue honeſtly. And if any man defile another mans Concubine, he is not thought in Law to commit Adultery, neither can he that keepeth a Concubine enter an Action againſt him, that hath defiled her, vnleſſe he that keepeth her, be his Patron or his Lord. I dare not to note theſe places ſeuerally in the Margin: for then M. Harding, you would rebuke mée, as your maner is, for ſhewing my great skill in Canon Law.

Single. Amaſius. Forſake. ff. De Concubinis. Baſtardie. Affection. Witneſſe. Sinne. No Adultery. Niſi ſit Concubina Patroni.

But now, I beſeech you, what kinde of Marriage can you imagine to bee, inter Solutum & Solutam, that is to ſay, betweene a Single Man, and a Single Woman? If they bee both Single, how be they Married? If they be Married, how bee they Single? Or, will you ſay, that a woman that neuer was Married: that may lawfully refuſe her Paramour when ſhe will, and be lawfully refuſed of him at his pleaſure: that liueth without the honour of Marriage:

Marriage: that by presumption of Law cannot liue honestly: whose life is infamous: whose children are all in state of Bastardie: that may be defiled by any other wicked man without committing Adulterie. All these things notwithstanding, will you say, that such a woman is a good and a lawfull Wife? Or will you bring vs Scriptures and Doctours to proue the same? If your Mother had bene such a Wife, M. Harding, ye wis you could not haue ben made a Priest, without a speciall Dispensation. Verily, as you say, A Concubine is a Lawfull Wife, so may you likewise say, A Lawfull Wife is a Concubine. To be short, if a Wife and a Concubine be both one thing, why doth the Pope so easily allow a Priest to kepe a Concubine, and so straitely forbid him to haue a Wife?

But you say: I haue foulely corrupted mine Author, and haue purposely left out both that went before, and also that followed after in the same Distinction. Therefore let vs better consider these words, both backward, and forward, and of euery side. First, Gratian in the Chapter going immediately before, as you your selfe haue alleged him, saith thus: Concubina hic intelligitur, quæ, cessantibus legalibus instrumentis, vnita est, & coniugali affectu ascisci-tur. Heere a Concubine is such a woman, as is coupled vnto a man without lawfull instruments, or solemnization of Matrimonie, and is taken with intent and affection of Marriage. Marke well these words, M. Harding: A Woman that is taken with intent and affection of Marriage. These be your owne words, although vntruly and guilefully Englished. Notwithstanding, we will take them as they be. If a Concubine be taken with intent of Marriage, then, I trow, as yet she is not married. For no wise man intendeth to doe that thing that is done alreadie. Now if a Concubine be not married, but only kept with intent to be married, I pray you, M. Harding, what may we call her? Certainely your Doctors say; Secundùm Canones semper præsumitur Adulterium, nisi appareant Legales Solemnitates: Vnlesse the Solemnities of the Law may appeare, by the Canon Law it is euer presumed to be Adulterie, and therefore no Marriage. Thus much for the Chapter that went before. In the Chapter immediately following it is written thus: Christiano non nisi vnam tantùm habere licet, aut Vxorem, aut certè loco Vxoris, Si Coniunx deest, Concubinam: It is lawfull for a Christian man to haue only one woman, either his Wife, or instead of a Wife, his Concubine. Heere a Concubine is not a Wife, but a woman taken in stead of a Wife. That your Glosse here telleth vs of Mutuall Consent, is but a toy. For notwithstanding any maner Consent that may bee betweene them, a Concubine, while she is a Concubine, is not married. and being not married, she is no Wife. Therefore S. Augustine saith, euen as you haue alleged him: Etsi non habetis Vxores, tamen non licet vobis habere Concubinas, quas postea dimittatis: Although you haue no Wiues, yet it is not lawfull for you to haue Concubines, whom ye may afterward put from you. If Concubines be nothing else but Wiues, why is it not lawfull for men to haue them? Is it not lawfull for Christian men to haue Wiues? Yet your Rubricke vpon the same Distinction saith thus: Qui non habet Vxorem, loco illius Concubinam habere licet: Giue hereto the best English ye can deuise. The words be plaine: It is lawfull for him that hath no Wife, instead of her to haue a Concubine.

Augustine answereth thus: Bene, velis, nolis, illa quæ præter Vxorem tecum dormit, est Meretrix: Well, well: whether thou wilt, or wilt not shee that sleepeth with thee besides thy Wife, is thy Harlot. S. Hierome saith: Vnde sine Nuptijs aliud nomen Vxorum? Imò, vnde nouum Concubinarum genus? Plus inferam: Vnde Meretrices vniuiræ? Simple Fornicatiõ

The Answer These words (ye say) pertaine no more to Clerkes, then to the Lay sort. Here, M. Harding, ye much forget your selfe. The very bare title of that constitution will soone conuince you. Thus it is written: De Concubinis Clericorum remouendis: Of removing Priests Concubines, not the Concubines of others of the Lay sort, as you haue imagined. For of Lay men and their Concubines there is not one word spoken in all that whole Constitution. Contrariwise a little before, in the same place you may find these words: Clerici huiusmodi Concubinas tenent Communiter, apparatu honesto, nomine appellationis Sororiæ: Priests Commonly keepe such Concubines in honest Apparell, vnder the name of their Sisters. Of such Concubines M. Harding, and of none other, your booke intreateth. But it may be lawfull for you to make vs large Commentaries beside your Text. Of your Priests Concubines, M. Harding, and of none other your Doctor saith: Si non castè, tamen cautè: If they deale not chastly, yet let them deale charily.

But this (you say) was on'y a Common saying, and not a Rule. And is not this sufficient, thinke you? Can you imagine, that the Common speech of the people is nothing worth, or groweth of nothing? It was no Rule, you say. But the world saw, ye liued so, as if it had beene your only Rule. Verily by the Testimony of all your owne Writers, the whole Life of the Clergy was out of Rule. Howbeit, you tell vs: The circumstance considered, all this may seeme to be well and discreetly spoken. For you say, If a man happen to doe his vncleane lust, hee is thereby admonished to do it charily, though he doe it not chastly. And this (you say) is good counsell.

1. Corinth. 7.

No doubt, M. Harding, good, and discreet and fatherly counsell. But S. Pauls Counsell is much better: Ad euitandum Fornicationem vnusquisque Vxorem suam habeat: Melius est nubere, quàm vri: For auoiding of Fornication, let euery man haue his owne Wife: Better it is to marry, then to burne in desires.

In eadem Gloss. Extra. de Immunit. Eccles. Petr. Rauenn.

Likewise saith Petrus Rauennâs, one of your notable Canonists, vpon the Decretals: Quamuis tactus & oscula sunt præludia incontinentiæ in Laicis, secùs tamen est in Clericis. Nam Clericus præsumitur ista facere pro charitate, & bono zelo: Notwithstanding handling and kissing in Lay Persons be the occasions or beginnings of incontinent behauiour, yet in Priests it is farre otherwise. For a Priest is presumed to doe these things of charity, and of good zeale.

11. qu. 3. Absit. In Glossa. Ibidem in Margine.

Likewise it is noted in your Glosse: Si Clericus amplectitur Mulierem, (Laicus) interpretabitur, quòd causa benedicendi eam hoc faciat: If a Priest embrace a Woman, a Lay man must iudge of it thus, that he doth it to the intent to blesse her. Where also yee shall find this speciall note set out in the Margin for the purpose: Clericus amplectens Mulierem præsumitur bene agere: A Priest embracing a woman, is presumed to doe well.

These be your Canonists: these be your Schoolemasters: these be your Doctours, M. Harding: thus they write, not only in the Singular, but also in the Duall, and Plurall number. They would neuer so lightly haue iudged hereof, if they had thought your Simple Fornication had beene Sinne.

August. in Enchiridio ad Laurent. ca. 80.

S. Augustine saith: Clamor Sodomorum & Gomorrhæorum multiplicatus est: Quia non solùm iam apud eos non puniebantur illa flagitia, verùm etiam publicè, velut Lege, frequentabantur: The crie of Sodom and Gomorrha is multiplied: For that such vices then not only were not punished, but also were openly vsed, as it had beene by the aid and Authoritie of the Law.

Concil. Basil. Session. 20. Erasm. in Enchirid. milit. Christi. ca. 14.

Somewhat it must néeds be that in your late Councell of Basil enforced the Bishops there to Decree, that Fornication should bee Sinne. For vnlesse some had thought the Contrarie, what should néed haue néeded that New Decree? Or, why should they so solemnly determine, that Fornication is Sinne, vnlesse some had said, It is no Sinne? Erasmus a man of singular Learning and Iudgement, saith: * Bona pars eorum, quos vulgus integros & incorruptos appellat, Simplicem Fornicationem, & moderatum voluptatis vsum, vt leue commissum, neutiquam refugiunt: * A great many of them, whom the common sort taketh for good and godly men, not a whit abhorre Simple Fornication, and a sober vse of pleasure, reckoning it to be but a little petit fault. So saith Iacobus De Valentia: Tam Iudæi, quàm Saraceni, & mali Christiani, vt detestabilem vitam suam excusent & defendant, asserunt, Fornicationem Simplicem esse licitam: As well Iewes, as Saracens, as also ill Christian Men, to the intent to excuse and defend their wicked life, say, Simple Fornication may be lawfully vsed.

* He meaneth some of the best of the Roman Clergy.

Iacob de Valentia in Psal. 118.

So

So saith Antoninus the Archbishop of Florence: Confutatur error dicentium, Simplicem Fornicationem non esse Peccatum: Heereby is reproued the error of them that say, Simple Fornication is no Sinne. Alexander of Hales, by way of Disputation, doubteth not to allege the woords of S. Ambrose to this purpose: Etiamsi aliquis lubricum Carnis patiatur, sine dubio vapulabit; sed non peribit: If a man suffer the frailety of the Flesh, without doubt he shall be punished; but perish he shall not. Anton. in Sum. part. 4 titul. 22. ca. 2. §. 3. Alexand. Halensis. part. 3. qu. 35. mem. 5.

Thus haue you, M. Harding, not only what your Canonists, but also what your Schoole Doctours haue taught, and thought of Simple Fornication. Ambrosius, 1. Timoth. 4.

But there is noted in the Margin of the Apologie, Iohannes de Magistris, in stead of Martinus. And heereof haue you made your selfe a pleasant Conquest. Wee read not (you say) these Bookes our selues: wee beleeue such pelting Writers of our Sects: wee are shamefully and dangerously deceiued. Howbeit, M. Harding, I require but your indifferent iudgement: Speake vprightly. Wherefore is it more deadly Sinne for vs to name Iohannes in stead of Martinus, then it was for you in this selfe same Booke to name Captaine Iosue in stead of the Prophet Osee? Or, for one of your Brethren to allege Hosius for Athanasius? Or, for D. Steuen Gardiner in stead of Theophylactus, to allege Theophylus? Cicero alleageth Aiax in stead of Hector: Agamemnon in stead of Vlysses: Eupolis in stead of Aristophanes. Aristotle allegeth Calypso in stead of Circe. Your Gratian allegeth Anicetus for Anicetus: Ambrosius for Augustinus: and by your owne Confession, Calixtus for Anacletus. S. Cyrysostome nameth Abacuk for Sophonias: and Agar in stead of Sara. S. Marke allegeth Abiathar for Abimelech. S. Matthew nameth Hieremias for Zacharias. M. Hard. pag. 46. Read the B. of Winchester. vnto N. Pecknam, Pag. 121. Vnt. Con. Cantur. Lib. 7. De Eucharistia. M. Harding Pag. 93. Chrysostom. ad Romanos, 1. Chrysostom. ad Galat. 4. Hieronym. in Marcum. ca. 2. Matthæ. 27.

It had beene no great preiudice vnto your cause, to haue dissembled so small a matter, specially finding your selfe so often guilty in the same. Your owne Doctours say, Error in nomine non habet vitiare, modò constet de Corpore: Error in name marreth not the matter, so the body or party be knowen.

But this same Martinus (ye say) neuer denied Fornication to be deadly Sinne: but by expresse words affirmeth the contrarie. For triall heereof it may please you to giue some credit to Alphonsus de Castro your owne Doctour. His woords be these: Græci, vt Guido illis impingit, dicunt, Simplicem Fornicationem non esse peccatum. Martinus de Magistris in suo libro, De Temperantia, quæstione secunda de Luxuria, dicit, se fateri Fornicationem Simplicem esse Peccatum Mortale. Tamen dicit insuper, quòd oppositum credere non sit Hæreticum: quia, vt dicit, Testimonia Scripturæ Sacræ non sunt expressa: The Greekes, as Guido chargeth them, say, that Simple Fornication is no Sinne. Martinus de Magistris in his Booke, Of Temperance, and in the second question, disputing of Lechery, granteth indeed, that Simple Fornication is deadly Sinne. And yet he saith, It is no Heresie to beleeue the contrarie: for that, as he saith, the Testimonies of the Scriptures (touching this matter) are not plaine. Heere, M. Harding, ye haue your owne Doctours minde. Martinus saith: It is no Heresie, to beleeue that Simple Fornication is no Sinne. And this he saith euen in the very same Booke that he hath written, De Temperantia. So dangerously, M. Harding, and so shamefully are we deceiued in alleging your pelting Doctors. Alphonsus contra Hæres. Lib. 4 Coit us.

And therefore Alphonsus concludeth thus: Sed cum pace illius dixerim, Ego credo Martinum, alioqui virum doctum, in hac parte errasse: But to speake with his fauour, I beleeue, that Martinus de Magistris in this behalfe was much deceiued.

Simple Fornicatiõ

(a) Vntruth. For this lie wil soone bee found a Truth.

(b) Who bestowed these quotations in the Margin, I cannot tell. But the Lawes are plaine, as it shall appeare.

(c) This was in old times. Now it is quite forgotten.

(d) An Hypocritical follie. For he may redeeme al this whole ten yeeres fast by paying of a pennie: read the answer.

(e) Vntruth manifest, and a Canon of M. Hardings owne making.

(f) Full clearly God wote See the Answer.

M. Harding.

After this foule lie followeth (a) another. Let him remember (say these Defenders) that they be his men that haue decreed, that a Priest for fornication ought not to be remoued from his Cure. To this may wee say, that although he be not depriued of his Cure, yet he may be punished otherwise. But let vs see how they would proue that they say. (b) By their note in the Margent they send vs for proofe to the Canon Law, 3. quæst. 7. Lata. Extra de Bigamis. Quia, circa. As touching the chapter, Lata, in the Decrees we find none such. And in Causa. 3. quæst. 7. there is nothing to this purpose. The Paragraph Quia circa. Extra is vnderstanded of them, who being in the state of Bigamie, are not to be promoted to Holy Orders, and not of one who is already made Priest, that he be not for Fornication remooued. But to vnderstand what was done to a Priest (that had committed Fornication) by order of Law, (c) in case any Bishop, or Priest, or Deacon, after degree of Deaconship taken, had bin conuict of Fornication, or Aduouterie, he was deposed, and cast out of the Church, and enioined to doe penance among the Laitie. Which thing S. Sylluester at length mercifully changed, enioining (d) ten yeeres penance after a prescript forme, which to our new Clergie would seeme very hard and strait.

Yea further, the Law of the Church in this case so little beareth with the sinful life of Clerks, that if (e) any Bishop in his Dioceese had consented, and borne with the Fornication of Priests or Deacon, or with the crime of Incest, for money, or praier, or had not by Authority of his Bishoply Office duly punished such faults cõmitted, the same should be suspẽded from his Office. And this much we haue shewed touching the remouing of a Priest, not only from his Benefice, but also from his Office, for cause of Fornication: wherein these men most falsly haue slandered the Church, as now to any man it may (f) appeare.

Not depoſed for Fornication.

Diſt. 82. Preſbyter.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Yeere M. Harding, ye ſhew your ſelfe to be much vnſkilfull in your owne Canons. The ſimpleſt Proctor in your Courts could ſone haue told you, that ye are ouer farre deceiued. For thus it is written by expreſſe words in your owne Gloſſe vpon the Decrees: Dicunt neminem hodiè propter Fornicationem eſſe deponendum, niſi in ea perduret: They ſay that for Fornication no man ought this day to be depoſed, vnleſſe hee continue in the ſame. And leſt ye ſhould in any wiſe miſtruſt or doubt your Gloſſe, it is alſo thus noted of purpoſe in faire great letters in the Margin: Fornicationis cauſa hodiè nemo eſt deponendus: Now adaies no man may be depoſed for Fornication. Were there nothing elſe to be ſaid, yet this thing only were ſufficient.

Extra. de Conſanguinitate & affinitate. Non debet. Abb.

Diſt. 81. Maximianus. Gloſſ.

But Panormitane alſo your greateſt Canoniſt likewiſe ſaith: Ad varietatem temporum debent mutari ſtatuta humana: Idcò hodiè ex Simplici Fornicatione Clericus non deponitur: The Lawes of Men ought to be altered according to the change of times: And therefore nowadaies for Simple Fornication no Prieſt is depoſed from his Benefice. Likewiſe yée haue it noted vpon your Decrees: Communiter dicitur, quòd pro Simplici Fornicatione Clericus deponi non debet: Quia pauci ſine illo vitio inueniuntur: It is commonly ſaid, that for Simple Fornication no Prieſt ought to be depriued; for that few Prieſts are found without that fault.

Extra. de Cohabit. Clerico. & Mulier. Si autem Abb.

Againe Panormitane ſaith to like effect: Clericus Concubinarius in officijs vitandus non eſt, niſi ſit notorius: A Prieſt that keepeth a Concubine, vnleſſe he be notorius, may not be refuſed in his Seruice.

Sundry other ſuch like Authorities your perfect Proctor could haue brought you.

Howbeit, you ſay, S. Syluester in ſuch caſes enioineth ten yeeres penance. This was true indeed, M. Harding. But it was true in Old forme yéeres, about twelue hundred yeeres agoe. Now Syluester is paſt quite out of minde, and his Law with him. Your owne folke now can ſay, Nunc aliud tempus, alij pro tempore Mores.

Martin. Pœnitentiarius in Dictionario.

Diſt. 82. Preſb. In Gloſſa.

Martinus Pœnitentiarius ſaith: Eccleſia multos huiuſmodi Canones exufflauit, quia onerоſi ſunt: The Church hath blowen away many ſuch Canons, for that they be too burthenous. Looke better on your Bookes, M. Harding. Your owne Law ſaith: Fornicationis cauſa nemo hodie deponendus eſt: Quia Corpora hodie ſunt fragiliora: No man now adaies ought to be depriued for Fornication: and that becauſe our Bodies are frailer then they were wont to be. And therefore touching that cruell ten yeers faſt, appointed by Syluesters Conſtitution, the Gloſſe there ſaith thus: Poteſt ieiunare per alium: vel poteſt dare nummum pro ieiunio: Hee may Faſt by ſome other man: or elſe he may giue a good Penny, and ſo redeeme his whole ten yeers Faſt. But there is graciouſly added a ſpeciall Prouiſo, in the behalfe of him that ſhall receiue this Penny: Sed debet iſte Denarius eſſe talis, quòd non euincatur ab illo cui donatur. Aliàs non contingeret liberatio: But it muſt be ſuch a Penny, that it be neuer euicted againe by Law from him that receiued it. Otherwiſe he ſhould not be diſcharged of his penance.

Diſt. 34. Fraternitatis.

In like maner ſaith Pope Pelagius: Defectus noſtri temporis, quibus Corpora ipſa hominum defecerunt, diſtrictionis illius non patitur manere cenſuram: The weakeneſſe of our time, by meane whereof the very Bodies of men are decaied, doth not ſuffer the rigour of that Law to continue.

De Concubinis Clericor. remouend. Licet ad profugandum.

Otho in his Conſtitution Legantine ſaith: Remoueant ipſas intra menſem: vel ipſas, vel alias de cætero nullatenus detenturi: Let Prieſts put away their Concubines within a Moneths reſpit: afterward to hold neither them, nor any others in any wiſe. Whereupon the Gloſſe with great conſcience, and full diſcréetly ſaith thus: Detenturi, ſcilicet, per Menſem. Alioqui diceremus, quòd propter quamcunque momentaneam poſſeſſionis detentionem ſequentem, hanc grauem pœnam incurreret. Quod nimis eſſet rigoroſum, attenta fragilitate noſtri temporis: They may not afterward hold (neither the ſame Concubines, nor anie other. Which words you muſt thus vnderſtand: That by the ſpace of a whole moneth together he may not hold them. Otherwiſe we ſhould ſay, that a Prieſt ſhould run into this grieuous puniſhment for any ſhort holding of his Concubine in poſſeſſion following afterward. Which thing indeed were maruellous rigorous, ſpecially conſidering the frailty of our time.

In eodem titulo.

Againe the ſame Otho ſaith: Ordinamus, vt ſi contra hoc præſumpſerint venire, ab Officio & Beneficio ſint ſuſpenſi: Wee ordaine, that if any Prieſt doe contrary hereunto, ſliuing incontinently, contrarie to this Conſtitution) that then he be ſuſpended, as well from his Benefice, as from his Office. Hereunto your Gloſſe addeth: Rigoroſa quoque eſſet hæc pœna, niſi eſſet pro Adulterio, vel inceſtu: Etiamſi Epiſcopus eſſet huiuſmodi labens: And this Puniſhment alſo were ouer rigorous, vnleſſe it were for Aduouterie, or Inceſt: (For his he may not so be punished for Fornication) Yea although the party so falling were a Bishop And againe in the same Glosse: Propter solam Simplicem Fornicationem de Benignitate Canonica, non debet Clericus deponi, vel Priuari: Licèt secùs fortè de Canonis rigore: By the Courtesie of the Canons, onely for Simple Fornication a Priest may not be deposed from his Office, or depriued from his Benefice. Albeit perhaps by the rigour or extremity of the Canons it would be otherwise. The very true cause hereof is more plainly expressed in your own Glosse vpon the Decretals: Quia paucis sine vitio Carnis inueniuntur: For without the vice of the Flesh there are but few (Priests) to be found.

Not deposed for Fornication.

Extra de Purgatione Canonica accepimus In Glossa.

All this notwithstanding, ye say: If the Bishop winke, and dissemble, and beare with the wickednesse of the Priest in this behalfe, that then he himselfe ought to be punished by suspension from his Office. This M. Harding, is a Canon of your owne making: for other Authoritie yee alledge none. But how may it seeme likelie that yee so cruelly punish your Bishops for fauourable dealing herein, seeing your High and alonely Bishop, and the Bishop of all Bishops, is so well content, vpon agreement for money, to licence both Bishops and Priests to keepe Concubines?

Extra de iudiciis, ca 4 § De Adulteriis.

If ye mistrust the truth hereof, beside your common practise, as you know, your own Pope Gregory himselfe will soone tell you, De Adulterio, & alijs Minoribus Criminibus, Episcopus potest cum Clericis post pœnitentiam dispensare: Touching Aduoutrie, and other small faults, the Bishop after Penance done may dispence with a Priest. Where also it is to be noted, that Aduoutery in your Diuinity is reckoned among small faults & petit Sinnes. Likewise againe it is to be noted in your Glosse: Cum Presbyteris habentibus plures Concubinas, Episcopus potest dispensare, vt suum Officium exequantur: With Priests shauing sundry Concubines the Bishop may dispense, that they may neuertheless do their Office.

Extra de Bigamis. Quia circa. in Glossa.

Wherein ye seeme somewhat to ouer-reach the Emperours Courtesie touching the same: For thus he writeth: Vnam Concubinam qui habet, non plures, Castè viuit: He that keepeth one Concubine onely, and no mo, liueth Chastely. And in the said former Glosse yee shall finde another speciall note of your owne, well worthy to be written in the Popes priuie Gallery in Letters of Gold: Nota, quòd plures concubinas habens, non incurrit irregularitatem: Marke well, that he that keepeth sundry Concubines, is not thereby made irregular.

Authē de Tripetho en. & Semiss. Colla. 3.

Extra de Bigamis. Quia Circa. In Glossa.

And Againe: Nota, Mirabile: quòd cum eo qui peccat dispensatur: & cum eo qui non peccat, non dispensatur: Marke well, Here is a marueilous strange reckoning: The Bishop dispenseth with him that offendeth (hauing sundry Concubines:) but with him that offendeth not (hauing married two wiues) he dispenseth not And further he saith: Plus habet hic Luxuria, quam Castitas: Here Lechery hath more Priuilege then Chastitie.

In eadem Glossa. In eadem Gloss.

Againe in your Decrees it is written thus: Quæcunque Clericis taliter coniunctæ sunt, auferantur ab Episcopo, & venundentur: What soeuer women haue such company with Priests, let them be remoued by the Bishop, and sold, and made slaues. Vnto this Law, being in it selfe ouer rigorous, the Glosse addeth this fauourable Construction: Venundentur: Verum est, si contrahunt cum illis, tanquam cum Vxoribus. Alias non concedo, posse vendi propter Simplicem Fornicationem: Let them be sold, and made slaues. This is true, if the Priests marry with them, as with their Wiues. Otherwise I grant not, that for Simple Fornication they may be sold.

Dist 81. Quidam Clerics. In Gloss.

Likwise againe it is noted in your Glosse: Nota, Frequentationem tantùm Viduarum & Virginum prohiberi: Marke well, that it is not the comming to Widowes or Maids, but the often haunting vnto them that is forbidden. Otho in his Legantines saith thus: Qui detinet publicè Concubinas, &c. The Priest that Openly keepeth Concubines, let him bee deposed. Hereupon your Glosse saith thus: Tu dic, Publicè, quando Multitudini se patere non expauer. Secùs ergo, si secretè intra domum propriam, vel alienam detineat hanc Concubinam. Nam tunc pœnam huius Constitutionis non incurret. Domus enim rem secretam, non autem publicam denotat. Dic ergo, Publicè, id est, Communiter, & coram multis. Non ergo sufficit, quòd semel vel bis talis Publicè videatur: He that Openly keepeth Concubines, &c. Vnderstand thou by this word, Openly, if he be not afraid, though he appeare vnto the people. It is otherwise if he keepe his Concubine secretly, whether it bee in an other mans house or in his own. For so he commeth not within the danger of this Law. For a house betokeneth not an open matter, but a secret. Thus therefore expound thou this Constitution: If he keepe his Concubine Openly, that is to say, If he keepe her Commonly, and in the sight of many. Therefore if such a Concubine twice or thrice be seene Openly it is not sufficient. In the same Glosse of yours ye haue these words that I haue alleged before: Simon Castè, tamen Cautè.

Dist 23: His igitur in Glossa. Constitut. Othonis. De Concubinis Clericor. remouend. Licet ad profugandum.

And whereas you say, If a Bishop shew fauour herein, he himselfe shall be suspended; your owne Doctour Abbat Panormitane would haue told you the contrarie: Episcopus non tenetur deponere Clericum Concubinarium: The Bishop is not bound to deprine a Priest that keepeth a concubine.

De Cohabitat. Clericorum & Mulier. Si autem. Abb.

To make short, ye haue also of great prouidence deuised a special Premunire to embolden your Priests in Fornication, and to warrant them free from al danger of any your Lawes made in that behalfe. For thus you say: Si Laicus, instigante Diabolo, accuset Clericum incontinentiæ, statim repellitur. Laici in accusatione Episcopi audiendi non sunt: If a Lay man by the instigation of the Diuell, accuse a Priest of incontinent Life, straightway he is thrust backe, and put to silence. The Lay sort may not be heard in the accusation of a Bishop. And aygaine: Laicus non potest Clericum de Fornicatione accusare: A Lay man may not accuse a Priest of Fornication. This is that extremitie, and vnmercifull rigour, M. Harding, that yee shew your Priests in these cases. No Lay man may accuse them: No Bishop may depriue them: No Law may touch them.

2. Quæst. 7. Laici.

Dist. 84. Maximian in Glos.

M. Harding.

The third lie is, that Cardinall Campeius, Albertus Pighius, and certaine others haue taught, that a Priest liueth more Holily, and more Chastely, that keepeth a Concubine, then hee that hath taken a Wife in Matrimony. Why doe yee not tell vs where they haue taught so? Wil yee that wee beleeue your bare word? How can wee, hauing taken you tardy in so many, and so manifest lies? Aristotle once asked, what a common lier gained by his lying, (a) that (quoth hee) when hee telleth truth, no man will beleeue him. Wisdome would, Sirs, that yee tooke good heed, that ye proue not such gainers. Now we require you to bring forth proofe of that ye charge these learned men withall. We are sure yee cannot.

(a) This Answer much toucheth M. Har. himselfe.

The words of Pighius be these: But put case (saith he) they which haue vowed Chastitie, al doe not that they may and ought to do, to attaine the grace of continencie: and therefore they be not onely tempted, but also ouercome with tempation for the more part: What then? shall it be a lesse euill for them to marry? For to say it is better, thou maiest not, which the Apostle imputeth to damnation, if they breake their First Faith. For these (I say) shall it be lesse euill, and lesse damnable to marrie, then to be ouercome with lusts?

Therfore where ye impute vnto him, that he maketh the keeping of a Concubine to be a more holy, and a more chaste life in a Priest, then taking of a wife in Matrimony, it is a foule lie, and a false slander. Neither is their in that Doctrine any filthinesse at al, which Philip Melanchthon, whom here ye follow, chargeth him withall.

(b) Vntruth. For S. August. saith: Qui dicunt talium nuptias non esse nuptias, sed potius Adulteria, mihi non videntur satis acutè ac diligenter considerare quid dicant. De bono Vid. c. 10.

Touching that point of Doctrin it selfe, S. Paul confirmeth it, to whom the Marriage of those that be bound to vow of continency seemed so wicked and hainous a Sinne, that he pronounceth the will to marrie, to be damnable. Now your Coniunctions with your yoke fellowes, we meane only so many of you as haue vowed chastity) (b) are not indeed Wedlocks, but Incestuous Aduouteries. And right so we finde them named by Cyprian, Basil, Chrysostome, Ambrose, Hierome, Photius, and other holie and learned Fathers.

But perhaps ye say, both are Aduouteries, whether a vowed person marrie, or commit Fornication. Let it be so. (c) Yet is not that sinne more grieuous which a man committeth of set and determined purpose, then that which he falleth into by humane frailty? And that euill which continueth, is it not much worse then that which hath intermission, (and no end?)

(c) O sage considerations!

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Fornicatiõ better then Marriage.

Ecclesiast. 40. Ecclesiast. 42. 2. Pet. 2.

The Apology saith, that Campegius, Pighius, and others moe of your side haue told vs, That a Priest keeping a Concubine, liueth more holily and more chastly then a Priest that hath a wife, and liueth in Matrimony. Here ye crie out, as your wont is. Slander, Lies, foule Lies, and I know not what. For thus only they say, (say you) That Fornication in this case is lesse ill then Matrimony. Howbeit, M. Harding, laying all cauils and shifts aside, the lesse ill in vse of speech is commonly called, the greater good. And in this sense it is written: Better is it to die, then to want. And againe: Better is the iniquity of a man, then a woman doing well. So Ionas saith: Death vnto me is better then Life. So S. Peter saith: Better had it been for them not to haue known the way of Righteousnesse, then knowing the same, to be turned backe from the Holy Commandement that is giuen vnto them. These and other like phrases are often vsed in the Holie Scriptures, not for that Death, or Iniquity, or Ignorance of Gods Iustice, be good things indeed, but for that in comparison of other worse things, they seeme to import some lesse ill.

Fornication (ye say) is not better then Marriage: But Marriage is worse then Fornication. Thus it seemeth you good to shadow your matters by shift of words, from worse to better, and from better to worse. And yet in plaine mens iudgements, If Marriage bee worse then Fornication, then is Fornication better then Marriage.

Hulderich. Episco. Augustanus. The same Epistle is found in ancient Record vnder the name of Volusianus Episcopus Carthaginensis.

But to let you vnderstand wee haue dealt simply and plainly heerein, Hulderichus the Bishop of Augusta in Germanie, writing vnto Pope Nicolas against the restraint of Priests Marriage aboue seuen hundred yeeres past, vseth the like maner of speech as we haue vsed. Thus he saith: Huius imperij, ne dicam, consilij, tam fatuam, tamque turpem addunt suggestionem, vt dicant, Honestius est pluribus occultè implicari, quam apertè in hominum vultu, & conscientia cum vna ligari. Quòd profectò non dicerent, si rex illo & in illo essent, qui dicit, Væ vobis Pharisæis, qui omnia facitis propter homines: Vnto this Commandement, I will not say, vnto this Counsell, they set so foolish and so shamefull a suggestion, that they say, It is an ✶ Honester thing for a Priest to be intangled with many Concubines in Secret and Priuily, then openly and in the sight and knowledge of the World to be ioined in Mariage with one Wife. Which thing verily they would not vtter, if they were either of him, or in him, that saith: Woe bee vnto you yee Pharisеis that doe all things to please men.

Fornicatiō better then Marriage.

In like sort the Councell of Wormes wrot sometime against Pope Hildebrand, so that he had deuised great rigour and tyrannie, to sunder Priests from their Wiues: Scorta pudicis Coniugibus: Stupra, Incestus, Adulteria casto Connubio præfert: Hee placeth Strumpets before honest Wiues: and Fornication, Incest, Aduouterie before chaste Mariage. Concil. Wormatien. Ex Anemmo.

Notwithstanding your Doctor Hosius saith: Turpis Philippo videtur hæc oratio: Catholicis autem honestissima: These words vnto Philip Melancthon seeme shamefull: but vnto the Catholikes they seeme most honest. Hosius in Petricouien. Confess. cap. 56.

What neede we many words in so cleare a case? The whole practise of your Church, M. Harding, professeth the same. If a Priest marry a Wife, ye suspend him, ye excommunicate him: yee Depriue him: ye disquiet and trouble the whole Church. But if hee kepe a Concubine, one, two, or moe, ye are then contented, and ready, not onely to dissemble it, but also with fauour to excuse it. For so yee say as it is alleged before: Clericus Concubinarius in officijs vitandus non est, nisi sit notorius: A Priest that keepeth a Concubine, vnlesse he be very notorious, may not be eschewed in his Seruice. Againe yee shall finde this Lesson specially noted in your Rubricke, as it is said before: qui non habet Vxorem, loco illius Concubinam debet habere: He that hath not a Wife, in stead of her ought to haue a Concubine. Ye will say, There is an error in your Print: which thing may easily be granted, specially the whole Booke being otherwise so full of errors. But would God your error in Life and Doctrine were no greater. Notwithstanding, it followeth immediately in the same Decree: Is qui non habet vxorem, & pro Vxore Concubinam habet, à communione non repellatur: Whoso hath no Wife, and in stead of a wife hath a Concubine, let him not be remoued from the Communion. In these words, I trow, ye will say there is no error. Extr. de Cohabit. Cleric. & Mulier. cap. final. Abb. Dist. 34. Is qui.

Upon the Legantine constitutions of Otho, yee may finde these words noted in the Glosse: Nunquid compelli potest Clericus Concubinam abiurare? Videtur quòd non. Resolutio: Si Clericus duxit Vxorem de facto, eo casu iuramentum exigitur: Whether may a Priest be forced to forsweare his Concubine? It seemeth he may not. The Resolution hereof is this: If a Priest haue indeed Maried a Wife, in this case he is forced to forsake her by an oath. Constit. Othonis de Concubinis Cleric. remouendis. Licet ad profugandum.

Therefore wee may say to you, as S. Augustine said sometime to the Manichees: Non Concubitum, sed vt longè antè ab Apostolo dictum est, verè Nuptias prohibetis: Ye forbid not Copulation: but as it was long agoe forspoken by the Apostle, indeed yee forbid very Marriage. Aug. de Moribus Manich. lib. 2. cap 18.

Now forasmuch, as yée say, Ye are no Angels, and your infirmities ought to be considered, and to be borne withall, It shall not be amisse shortly to see, what your owne friends haue thought of these Infirmities. And heere to passe ouer other authorities, your owne Doctor the Bishop of Bitonto, being present at your late Chapter at Trident, of your whole Single life, which ye call Chastity, pronounceth thus: Quibus turpitudinum monstris, qua sordium colluuie, qua peste non sunt corrupti, non fœdati in Ecclesia Sancta Dei, & Populus, & Sacerdos? A Sanctuario Dei incipite, Patres, si vllus iam pudor, si vlla pudicitia &c. Dicunt in Corde impio, & Ore impuro, Non est Deus: With what monsters of filthines, with what villany, with what Pestilence are they not corrupted and defiled in the Church of God, both the people and the Priest? My Lords, begin euen with the Sanctuary of God: if there bee any shame, if there be any honest Life. They say with wicked heart and filthy mouth, There is no God. Concil. Trid. Sess 1.

Another saith: Propter multitudinem luxuriæ, alia vitia quasi non peccata reputantur: For the multitude of lecherie (that is in Priests) other faults are taken for no sinne. Hermannus Riddus, de vita & honest. Cler.

Another saith: Defecit iam omnis Disciplina, & Religio in Cardinalibus: Et tres radices vitiorum, Superbia, Auaritia, Luxuria validissimè dominantur: In the Cardinals now all Discipline and Religion is decaied: And three roots of Sinnes, Pride, Couetousnesse and Lecherie, doe most mightily preuaile. S. Bernard saith: Fingunt, se amore Castitatis ista dicere: cùm ea magis causa turpitudinis fouendæ, & multiplicandæ adinueuerint: They beare vs in hand, that they speake these things for loue of Chastitie: whereas indeed they haue deuised the same, to the end to nourish and to increase their filthinesse. This, M. Harding, is your Infirmity, which, in your iudgement, Courtesie, and Charitie, wee ought to beare withall. Paral. Vrsperg. in Clemen. 5. Bern. in Cant. Serman. 66.

The places of S. Cyprian, S. Basil, S. Chrysostome, S. Ambrose, S. Hierome, and others that may seeme much to make with you in this case, and to condemne this kinde kinde of Mariage, are weighed and answered before in a place more conuenient. Verily, S Augustine saith: Grauiter peccant, qui tales diuidunt: They sinne grieuously that diuide them, that be so married.

Part. 2. chap 8. Diuision, 1. Dist. 27. quadã

M. Harding.

Fornicatiõ better then Marriage.

Where ye say, there be many thousands of common Harlots in Rome, we thinke there be many there in deed. Whether there be many thousands, we doubt. What number soeuer there is, they bee too many. Those courteghians the Church of Rome doth (a) tolerate, not nourish, trusting and looking, that by sermons, exhortations, and other conuenient meanes, they may be called backe to repentance, and to the way of Saluation.

That the Pope gathereth about a thirty thousand Ducates yeerely of these Courteghians by way of an annuall pension, which these Defenders affirme (b) it is vtterly false. Cornelius Agrippa, who fauoured not the See of Rome, and was imbrewed with Heresies that sprang vp in his time, was the first Author of this slander. If they pay the common taxes, which he leuied to the Pope, who only hath ciuil Dominion ouer that City, they (c) pay not for that they may be suffered to continue that sinful trade of life, but so as the whole City paieth by polles for that there they haue their abode, and habitation.

First it is common to all great Cities in those hot Countries, not to banish from among them that filthy generation of Harlots, not by way of suffering, as a thing commendable in it selfe, but for the auoiding of a greater mischiefe. As (d) God suffered the hard necked Iewes to haue their enemies, and pinch them with vsuries. Likewise Moses permited a Libel of diuorce, not that these things were honest but to the intent by that meanes yet they might the rather loue their Brethren, and lend them money freely, and abstaine from murthering their wiues. Euen so men now adaies so little apply their endeauour to restraine the proneneſſe which is in their flesh to all riot and carnal concupiscence, that if some way were not (at the least concerning outward and ciuill punishment) (e) winked at, whereby the fleshly men might obtaine some part of their vntruelie desire: it were more then likely, that in this great decay of vertue in general the furious rage of that vice would leaue neither wedlocke vndefiled, nor Virginity vnassaulted, nor a worse enterprise, which Nature abhorreth, vnattempted. Would God experience had not taught many Countries this to be too true an obseruation.

(a) Not nourish, but tolerate. A proper excuse & a sore punishment of open Whordome.

(b) Vntruth. For it is most true, as it shall appeare.

(c) Vntruth, manifest. For vnlesse they pay, they shal not occupy.

(d) The Pope may dispense as well as God.

(e) This is a iolly Catholik diuine.

S. Augustine hereof saith: (f) Quid sordidius, &c. What can be laid more vncleane, more void of comlineſſe, more full of turpitude, then harlots, bauds, and such other like pestilences? Take Harlots from among men, ye shall disturbe all things with lecherous lusts. Put the same in stead of Matrones, ye shal dishonest all things) with spot and shame. And why is the Bishop of Rome to be blamed for that they be in Rome, more then the French King, the King of Spaine, or any other Prince, for suffering them in their Dominions?

(f) S Aug. wrote these Bookes, De Ordine, before he was Baptised.

It remaineth, we seeke whether they haue also the lowest and vilest place in that Citie, or not. Lest perhaps although they be a (g) necessary euill, yet being promoted aboue their degree, they make an euil shewin the body where they rest. Their place may be considered two wayes, in respect of the Temporall, or of the Eccleſiasticall order or law. For Temporall order thus they stand: Not to haue free liberty of dwelling in the most haunted streets & Palaces wher them list, but (h) only be to in such corners and by-lanes, and smal out-houses, as are most fit shops for the vile marchandize of such occupiers. Againe they cannot without a very great forfet ride in (i) Coches or Chariots as matrons there doe, but are constrained either to keepe their homely homes, or to walke a foot in the streets. And then also by order they must be (k) in such apparell, that as Iewes by their red caps, so they by their short vailes (a note of infamy) be known to all, and be subiect to all shrewdneſſe of the boies of the streets, who vse commonly to mocke and reuile them.

(g) A vile Vntruth. They are not necessarie.

(h) Vntruth. For the Cardinalles themselues say: Habitant infames Aedes.

(i) Vntruth. For the Cardinals say Mula vehuntur.

(k) Vntruth. For the Cardinalles say Incedunt vt Matronae.

And here I cannot but mislike with that malice which appeareth to be in the makers of this Apology. For (l) it is a vertue in the Prince to set great burdens and paiments vpon so filthy a profession, to the end he may feare women from it, and make them the sooner weary of it, &c. In good sooth Masters yee are too yong to controle the Citie of Rome in her doings.

Besides al this, if in that sinful state they continue to their end without repentance, (m) it is not lawful for thẽ to make any testament or last will for bestowing of their goods, but as condemned and infamous persons they must leaue al to be confiscated and disposed at the Princes pleasure. But on the other side if they turne and repent, there are houses called Monasteries of the Conuertites, and special prouision and discipline for them, where they are taught how to bewaile their vnchaste life so sinfully past ouer.

(m) Vntruth See the Answer.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Touching the number of your Courteghians of Rome, whether they bee twenty thousand, or moe, or lesse, wee will not striue. They be leased out in fee farme: The Popes rents are alwaies certaine. For Fornication is sincable in Rome, and a good saleable kinde of sin. But this (you say) is another lie, as false and as slanderous as the rest. For (ye say) they paie no yeerelie pension for their sufferance in that trade of life; but onlie the common taxes, which are likewise raised vpon other Citizens. Whether it be so, or no, M. Harding, it is sufficient for you, so to say. Otherwise the Pope raising such fines vpon Baudrie, might wel be thought to be the Baud.

Consti. Othonis, de Concubinis Clericor. remouendis.

Howbeit your owne Doctors herein will soone condemne you. For thus it is written by them in your owne Glosse: Videtur, quod crimen Meretricij Ecclesia sub dissimulatione transire debeat. Nam & Mareschallus Papæ de facto exigit tributum à Meretricibus: It seemeth that the Church ought to dissemble the fault of Whoredome. For the Popes Marshall indeed receiueth a tribute or pension of Whoores.

Whereas yee say, Cornelius Agrippa was the first Authour of this slander, it is vntrue. For your owne Glosse last before alleged, auoucheth it by the authority of Iohannes Andreas Andreas, a notable Canonist, that liued welnere two hundred yeres before Agrippa was borne. And Nicolas de Clauengijs, that lined in the time of the Emperour Sigismund in his Booke intituled, De Corrupto Ecclesiæ statu, hath one speciall Chapter: De Exactionibus pro Concubinis tolerandis: Of Exactions for the suffering of Concubines.

Iob. Andreas mortuus est Anno, 1348. Nicolaus de Clauengijs in Paralipomen. Visperg. anno 1417.

But all this ye wipe away easily with one word. For ye say, The Courteghians in Rome pay these impositions, not as a portion of their vnthrifty gaines, but only as a punishment for their wicked life. For it is not lawfull there to commit sinne freely, without paiment. And thus is the matter of your part well defended.

So it is noted vpon your Decrees: Quòd dicitur, Sacerdos non potest percipere mercedem prostibuli, potest dici, quòd non debet recipi Oblatio Meretricis: licèt Eleemosyna posset inde fieri: Whereas it is said, The Priest may not receiue the reward or Oblation of the Stewes, we may say, that the Oblation of an Harlot may not be receiued: notwithstanding we may make an Almouse of the same. That is to say, A Harlots money may be taken by the way of Almouse, but not by the way of Oblation. Thus are we taught, and it behoueth vs to beleeue, that the Pope may liue, not by the Oblations of his Courteghians, but by their Almouse.

14. q. 5. Quod vero in Glossa. Et dist. 90 Oblation in Glossa

Stewes in Rome.

Now forasmuch as M. Harding would so faine haue this matter to passe by the name of a punishment of these ill women, I beseech thee, good Reader, to consider, how grieuously, and with what extremity and rigour of Law they haue deuised to haue them punished. In a Prouinciall Councell holden at Oxford it is written thus: Concubinæ Sacerdotum moneantur ab Archidiacono, &c. Let Priests Concubines be warned by the Archdeacon &c. If they will not amend, then let them be forbidden to Kisse the Pax, and to take holy Bread in the Church. With such extremity and cruelty they keepe the people from doing ill.

Constit. prouin. Edmund. Cantuar. Archiepi.

It was neither for your profession, M. Harding, nor for your grauity, to become a Proctour for the Stewes. Although it might well become Leontium, an Heathen Courteghian of leaud conditions, that way to bestow her wit and eloquence against Theophrastus, in the defense of that filthy state, yet may not the same likewise become a Christian man, and a professour of Diuinity. Ye call your Courteghians a Necessary Euill: but by what authority of the Scriptures, I cannot tell. That the whole trade and life of them is ill, we take it, as you grant: but that they be Necessary in any Christian Common wealth, I reckon it very hard for you to proue. Ye allege the heat of the Country: as if that were a sufficient warrant for your Stewes. And yet, I trow the towne of Louaine, and the Country of Brabant, where yee now inhabite, is not so hot. The heats of Iewrie are thought farre to passe all the heats of Italy. Yet God saith vnto the Iewes: Non erit vlla Meretrix de filiabus Israel, nec Scortator de Filijs Israel: There shall be no Whore of the Daughters of Israel: Nor Whorekeeper of the Sonnes of Israel. And euen now, wheresoeuer the Gospell of Christ is openly and freely receiued, notwithstanding the heat of the Country, your Stewes and Bordels, flie away, as the night cloudes before the Sunne. But after that your Priests were once forbidden lawfull Marriage, then was it needfull, that your Necessary ill should come in place. Howbeit S. Paul saith: Let vs not do ill, that good may follow, for iust is the damnation of them that so say.

Rom. 3.

But S. Augustine standeth full of your side: S. Augustine hath written in the behoofe of the Stewes: S Augustine saith: Take Harlots away from among men, and ye fill all the Country with ribaudrie and villanie. Indeed the very name of S. Augustine is great and reuerend. But what if S. Augustine, when he wrote these words, were not S. Augustine? What if he wrote that Booke, De Ordine, being as yet a very yong man, and but a Nouice in the Faith: not yet well instructed: not yet Baptized in the name of Christ: himselfe as yet keeping a Concubine, and liuing in whoredome? Shall such a one, so yong, and so youthfull, goe for a Saint? Or shall his bare name and vnseasoned fantasies stand you in stead to proone your Stewes?

Augustin. De Ordine, lib. 2.

Verily the same S. Augustine, being afterward fully instructed and Christened, saith thus: Iam in vsu scortatorum terrena Ciuitas licitam fecit turpitudinem: The worldly City (not the Church of God) hath made this filthinesse of Harlots to be lawfull. And Ludouicus Viues writing vpon the same, saith: Satis apertè Augustinus testatur, Iure Ciuili veteri Romano multa esse permissa, quæ sint contraria Legibus Diuinis. Hoc isti volunt, qui, dum Gentilitatem coniungere, & coaptare Christianismo laborant, corrupto vtroque, & alterius impatiente, nec Gentilitatem, nec Christianismum retinent: S. Augustine plainly witnesseth, that by the old Ciuill Roman (and Heathen) Law, many things were suffered, which were contrarie to the Lawes of God. This thing will not these men follow, who while they study, (as you M. Harding, do) to ioine Heathennesse and Christianity both together, both being corrupted, and the one not standing with the other, keepe new neither Heathennesse, nor Christianity.

Augustin. de Ciuitate, lib. 14. cap. 18. Ludo. Viues in Librum de Ciuitate, lib. 14. cap. 18.

Therefore

Stewes in Rome.

Therefore we may much better exchang these words of S. Augustine, spoken in his youth, before he had well learned to speake: and may much better say thus: Permitte Lupanaria: & implebis omnia libidinibus: Suffer and allow the Stewes, and ye shall fill all the Countrie with Ribaudry, and Villanie. And in this sense S. Bernard saith: Tolle de Ecclesia honorabile Coniugium, & thorum immaculatum: Nonne reples eam Concubinarijs, incestuosis, seminifluis, mollibus, masculorum Concubitoribus, & omni denique genere immundorum? Take once from the Church honourable Marriage, and the Bed vndefiled: and dost thou not fill the same Church full of brothels keeping Concubines, &c. and with all sorts of filthy persons?

Bern in Cant. Serm. 66.

Further ye say, And wherefore is the Bishop of Rome more to be blamed for maintenance of his Stewes, then the French King, or the King of Spaine? This is but a simple reason for a Doctor of Diuinity. It is an old saying:

Nil iuuat exemplum, quod litem lite resoluit.

Christ bade not his Apostles, to be led by the example of worldly Princes, If it be ill in them, it is much worse in him, that would be called the Vicar of Christ, the Head of the Church, and the holy one of Israell.

Another part of their Punishment is (as you tell vs) that they ride not sumptuously in Coches or Charets, or dwell in the open faire streets, and in the sight of the City: but are forced to go a foot, and to hide themselues in corners, and in outhouses, and by-lanes. And that, by your description, in such simple, and poore, and beggarly sort, as if they were the vilest and vglyest of all the people, and had not a good clowt to couer there bodies. Certainely, M. Harding, your Courteghians, if they vnderstood hereof, would thinke themselues little beholden to such a Proctour.

Doctor Peter Martyr, of whom I cannot speake without great reuerence, hauing good cause to know the state of Rome, as few men better, hereof writeth thus: Nunc, O Deus bone, quomodò Romæ coercentur Meretrices? Habent ornatissimas domos: vehuntur per publicum habitu principum: Sedent in equis gradarijs: habent secum Torquatos, & Laruatos Comites, interdum etiam Cardinales, præsertim noctu: & ancillarum sumptuosissimum gregem: Now adaies, O good God, how are the Courteghians punished in Rome? They dwell in the faireſt houses: They are carried with honour thorow the City, as if they were Ladies: They are mounted on ambling palfraies: They are attended with chaines of gold, and persons disguised, and sometimes Cardinals, and specially in the night season, and haue a sumptuous sort of Maides to wait vpon them.

Petr. Martyr in Lib. Iudicum cap. 16.

If ye shall happen to doubt M. Martyrs report in this behalfe, yet I trust ye will giue some credit to your owne friends the Cardinals of the Church of Rome. Their words hereof be these: In hac etiam Vrbe Meretrices, vt Matronæ, incedunt per Vrbem seu Mula vehuntur: quas assectantur de Media die Nobiles, familiares Cardinalium, Clericique. Nulla in vrbe vidimus hanc corruptionem, præterquam in hac omnium exemplari. Habitant etiam insignes ædes: In this City of Rome, the Courteghians passe thorow the streets, or ride on their Mules, like honest Matrons or Ladies: and in the middest of the day, Noble men, the Cardinals deere friends and Priests attend vpon them. We neuer saw such corruption, but only in this City, which is the example and patterne of all others. Moreouer they dwell in faire and notable houses: This Information was presented vnto Pope Paul the third by certaine of his graueſt Cardinals, appointed thereto by speciall Commission.

Concilium delectorum Cardinalium, Concil tom. 3. pa. 823.

Anno 1538.

Now, good Christian Reader, I beseech thee, consider the conformity of these tales. M. Harding saith, The Courteghians of Rome go only a foot. These Cardinals say, They ride on their Mules. M. Harding, saith: They haue a speciall apparell of dishonesty to bee knowen by. These Cardinals say, They goe or ride as honest Matrones, or great Ladies, or Noble Women. M. Harding saith: They be despised and reuiled of the people. These Cardinals say, They haue Priests, Noble men, and the Cardinals friends to attend vpon them. M. Harding saith: They dwel only in out houses and backe lanes. These Cardinals say, Habitant insignes ædes: They dwell in faire and notable houses. So many Untruths, it is no hard matter for M. Harding to vtter in so short a tale. Now being so fine Dames, and so richly attired, it were great slander to say, They serue only for Varlots or common Rascals. If the report be true, vpon Twelfth day at night in the yere of our Lord, 1564. there were séene seuenténe Coches of Courteghians, arriuing together euen into the Popes owne Palace. If any man shall thinke this report incredible, yet Luitprandus, of the like hereof, saith thus: Lateranense Palatium, Sanctorum quondam hospitium: nunc est Prostibulum Meretricum: The Popes Palace at Laterane, sometime the harbour of Holy Saints, is now become a Stew of whoores.

Luitprandus. lib. 6. cap 6.

Another part of their punishment, ye say, is this, That as condemned and infamous persons, at at their end they can make no Testament, nor take order with that they haue. If this were true, it were a good token that the Pope is couetous, to haue their goods, more then desirous to saue their Soules. Howbeit the best Learned, and most notable Canonists, that ye haue, affirme the contrarie. For proofe whereof read Cynus Pistoriensis in L. Cum te. C. De Condictione ob turpem causam: Read Baldus L. 1. C. in eodem capite: Read Bartholus in L. Idem ff. eodem Ca. Abbas Panormitane after long disputation had touching this matter, thus saith his iudgement in the end: Conclude ergo ex ommibus præmissis, quòd Meretrix turpiter non recipit donaveł promissionem: & quòd potest de illis ad libitum disponere: Of all these premises conclude you thus, That a harlot may receiue rewards or promises, without infamy or shame (of the Law) and that of the same shee may dispose at her pleasure. Therefore, M. Harding, this tale would haue beene better studied. For this punishment, that ye haue here imagined, by the iudgement of the Learned, is no punishment at all.

Stewes in Rome.

Cynus Pistoriē. Baldus. Bartholus. De Immunita. Eccles. cap. 14. Abb.

In good sooth Sirs, ye say further, yee are too yong to controle the City of Rome in her doings. Yet, in the rebuking of open vice, no man ought to be thought too yong. But of what age then are you, M. Harding, that are able thus to defend the City of Rome in open Whordome? Primasius saith: Nemo periculosius peccat, quàm qui peccata defendit: No man sinneth with more danger, then he, that standeth in defense of Sinne. S. Paul saith: Let no man deceiue you with vaine words. For because hereof the anger of God commeth vpon the children of Infidelity. Be not therefore partakers with them.

Primasius ad Rom. cap. 2. Ephes. 5.

And whereas you say, This policie is thought necessary for the eschewing of a greater ill, your Law telleth you: Abijcienda sunt falsa remedia, quæ veris, & manifestis periculis sunt graviora: Wee must abandon vaine remedies, that are more greeuous, then the true and manifest dangers.

Extr. de Celebra. Miss. de homine.

S. Augustine saith: Non vult Deus tale lucrum compensari tali damno: God will not haue such a gaine to be recompensed with such a losse. S. Paul saith as we haue alleged before: They say, Let vs doe ill, that good may follow. But he addeth withall: Therefore iust is their Damnation. Tertullian saith: Lupanaria execrabilia sunt coram Deo: Stewes are accursed before God. And therefore to conclude, the Emperour Iustinian, notwithstanding all your Necessities and Policies, straitly commandeth, that Harlots be banished out of all Townes.

Rom. 3. Tert. de Anim. Authen. de Leonibus.

But heere, good Christian Reader, this one thing I beseech thee vprightly, and indifferently to consider, what thing will not these men defend, that can thus boldly defend confessed filthinesse? Or, when will they reforme the Church of God, that in so long time cannot yet reforme their open Stewes?

These Harlots (ye say) sometimes repent them and amend their liues. God of his mercie grant that you, M. Harding, may once doe the like: lest the woords of the Prophet fall vpon you, Frons Meretricis facta est tibi. God grant, that Harlots and Sinners goe not before you in the Kingdome of God.

Hierem. 3. Matth. 21.

M. Harding.

That ye tel of a Woman named Ioane, bearing the world in hand shee was Pope of Rome, it is a fond and a vain fable. Were ye so wise, as ye be malicious, ye would neuer haue brought your credit in hazard by reporting such vanity. This I account for one of your accustomed lies. By this men may iudge, what little store of true things ye haue to obiect against vs. Who listeth to see a learned discourse written heerof, him may it please to read the annotations of (a) Onuphrius Panuinius vpon Platina, de vitis Pontificum, Printed in Venice. And he shall easily beleeue the whole matter to be fabulous.

(a) Onuphrius is a man yet liuing, hired of purpose to face out this matter.

After Anastasius, they that in their writings recite an exact row and order of Popes, as Ademarius and Antonius of Paris, Regino, Hermannus, Schafnaburgensis, Otho Frisingensis, Abbas Vrspergensis, Leo Bishop of Hostia, Iohannes of Cremona, and Godfridus Viterbiensis, of which some wrote 300. some 400. yeeres past, all these make no mention at all of this Woman Pope Ioane. Againe there be in Bibliotheca Palatina, at Rome, six or seauen tables of the Popes names writen in sundry Bookes, before the time of Innocentius the Fourth. Marrie in the Margin of Pandulphus this fable is put in betweene Leo the Fourth, and Benedict the third, written in a hand farre different from the old characters of that ancient Booke added by some man of latter time. Which maketh the matter to bee the more suspected, and taken for a fable.

(b) Semiramis, being a woman was of long time taken for a man, yet mens eies were not bewitched.

Though men had at that time beene so farre bewitched and distract of their fiue wits, (b) as they could not haue knowen a woman from a man (which no wise man I ween beleeueth) yet (c) it is not to be thought that God himselfe, who appointed and ordained the Seat of Peter, whereof he would the whole Church to be directed, would depart so farre from his mercifull prouidence, toward the Church, as to suffer the same to be polluted by a Woman, which is not of capacitie for holy orders.

(c) God hath suffered others as very monsters to sit in that See, as euer was Pope Ioane.

(d) The first Author of this fable was one Martinus Polonus, a Monke of the order of Cisterce: Who wrote long after the time that Pope Ioane is fained to haue liued in. Whose maner of writing if we consider, we shall find it vaine, and nothing like to be true. It beginneth thus: Iohannes Anglicus natione, Maguntinus, sedit annos duos, menses vnum, dies quatuor, &c. Iohn an English man by Nation, of Maguntia, sate (in the Roman See) two yeeres, one month, and foure daies, alias, fiue months & three daies. What a foolish speech is this? An English man Maguntine or of Maguntia: It followeth, in the fable, as the said Martin telleth.

(d) Vntruth. For there were other before him that wrote the same telleth. This (as it is said) was a Woman, and in the yong age of a girle, shee was brought to Athens by one that was her Louer in a mans apparell, and there profited so much in diuers sciences, as none was found to be compared with her. To Athens was shee brought, saith the fable. And why: for learning. Very well. Whereas at that time * neither any Athens stood, * neither was there any place of learning there any longer: but all the country of Attica became barbarous, and vtterly void of learning, as wee vnderstand by the Writers of that time. The Author reporteth, that from thence shee came to Rome, and there professed learning openly, and had great Doctors to her Scholars, and for opinion of learning and good life, by one consent of all was made Pope. Which is soone confuted as false: (e) for there was no learning at those daies openly professed in Rome, (e) as the Stories declare.

* Vntruths, two together.

(e) Vntruths. Read the answer

It followeth in the fable. Being in the Popedome shee is begotten with child of her seruant. And not knowing the time of her deliuerance, as shee went from S. Peters to Laterane, strained with paines, betweene Colloseo and S. Clements Church, shee brought forth and died, and was (as they say) there buried. Heere is to be marked, how the (f) deuiser of this fable bewraieth himselfe, and thinketh the matter heard to be beleeued. And therefore in the beginning saith, shee was a Woman (vt asseritur) as folkes say: and now he saith, shee was buried, vt dicitur, as it is said. So he doth not affirme it to bee true, but referreth all to heere say. By which testimonie lies commonly be soothed.

(f) This Deuiser dwelt in Rome, and liued aboue 500. yeers agoe.

And as it is false, that euer there was any such Pope, so is it not true, that yee note in the Margent of your Booke touching the image, which yee say it is to be seene yet in Rome, resembling the woman Pope lying in trauell. The image, which ye meane, I haue seene my selfe at Rome, grauen in stone, after the maner of a tombe stone, pitched vpright not far from the Colloseo. It resembleth no such thing ye speake of.

(g) Vntruth. For they liued 500. yeeres before vs: & were the best Writers of that time.

Neither is it of any more truth, which some haue ignorantly written of the Popes refraining to goe that way, when he goeth thereby in solemne processions: nor that which I haue read in some of your (g) Schoolefellowes peeuish bokes of the stoole of easement, that is at Laterane made of faire Porphyry stone, which they haue reported to be kept there for an vnseemly vse at the creatiō of the Popes for proof of their Humanity. Thus, we trust, we haue brought your great matter of Pope Ioane to nought.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Dame Ioane the Pope.

Heere, in your iudgement, is another of our foule shamefull accustomed Lies. And that ye prooue by the Authoritie of one Onuphrius, one of the Popes late Pages, specially hired and procured to helpe out this matter. Of the truth and certainty heereof, wee shall consider further in the end. Now let vs examine this new Coniecturall Doctor with his ghesses.

Not Registred

First, he saith, Dame Ioane is not registred in the Calendar among the Popes: Ergo it is but a vaine Fable, that euer Dame Ioane was Pope in Rome. This coniecture, M. Harding, is very simple. For I doubt not, but ye may well remember, that Bishops names as well in Rome, as otherwheres, haue vpon sundrie occasions beene oftentimes quite striken out of the Calendar.

So was Chrysostomes name vpon displeasure, quite striken out of the Table of the Bishops of Constantinople, as if he had neuer beene Bishop there.

In vita Chrys. Chryso. epist. 3. ad Cyriacum.

And Chrysostome himselfe writing vnto Cyriacus in his owne defense, saith thus: Siquidem hoc feci, expungatur nomen meum ex albo Episcoporum: & non scribatur in Libro Othodoxæ Fidei: If I haue thus done, let my name be rased out of the Bishops Calendar: and let it not be registred in the Booke of the Catholike Faith.

Niceph. lib. 14. cap. 26.

And afterward his name being so defaced, and rased out, was restored againe by Theodorus at the vehement request and instance of the people. So Acacias, the Bishop of Constantinople, rased out the name of Pope Fœlix of Rome. So Innocentius the Bishop of Rome, rased out the name of Arsacius the Bishop of Constantinople. And this is it, that S. Augustine meaneth, writing to the people of Hippo: Quid obest homini, quòd ex illa Tabula non vult eum recitari humana Ignorantia, si de Libro viuorum non eum delet iniqua Conscientia? What hurt is that vnto a man that the Ignorant people will not suffer his name to be read out of that Table, if wicked conscience blot him not out of the Booke of Life?

Gelasius ad Episcopos Dardaniæ.

Niceph. l. b. 13. cap. 24.

Aug. epist. 137.

Ioh. de Parisijs, de potest. Regia & Pap. ca. 24.

So writeth Iohannes de Parisijs of Pope Cyriacus: Cyriacus Papa renunciauit officio vt cum Vrsula, & Virginibus palmam Martyrij susciperet, Sed iste Cyriacus in Catalogo Paparum non annumeratur: quia credebant ipsum non propter deuotionem, sed propter oblectamentum virginum dimisisse Episcopatum: Pope Cyriacus gaue ouer his Bishopricke, that with Vrsula, and other Maides hee might receiue the Crowne of Martyrdome. But this Cyriacus is not reckoned in the Calendar of the Popes: for that it was beleeued, hee had giuen ouer his Bishopricke, not of deuotion, but for some fantasie towardes the Maides.

Mariã. Scotus.

But to come neere the purpose, and to the force of your ghesses, therefore was Pope Ioanes name left out of the Calendar of the Bishops of Rome, not for that there neuer was any such Pope there: but only for shame, lest it should appeare in record, and afterward be reported for euer, that a woman and such a woman, had beene Bishop of Rome: or that the Bishop of Rome had beene with child.

So saith Marianus Scotus: Huius Ioannæ nomen Authores Pontificij non ponunt propter p opter turpitudinem rei, & muliebrem ſexum: The Chroniclers that write of the Popes, leaue out the name of Pope Ioane, both for the ſhame of the matter, and alſo for the Woman kind. So ſaith Martinus: Iohanna non ponitur in Catalogo Sanctorum Pontificum, tam propter muliebrem ſexum, quàm propter deformitatem facti: Pope Ioane is not reckoned in the Calendar of the Holie Popes, as well for that ſhe was a woman, as alſo for the ſhame of the matter. So ſaith Sabellicus: Nullus Defunctæ honor habitus. Fama tener ob tam fœdæ rei memoriam: There was no honour beſtowed at her buriall. The report is, for the remembrance of her filthie act. So ſaith Iohannes de Pariſijs: So ſaith Faſciculus temporum. Therefore this firſt reaſon is but a verie blinde Coniecture, and beareth no force.

Martinus Polonus.

Knowing a Woman to a Man.

Another of your ghelles is this: Men had beene bewitched, and diſtracted of their wits, if they could not haue knowne a Woman from a Man. This reaſon, M. Harding, beareth as great weight and ſubſtance as the former. For your owne Amphilochius that wrote the Life of Thomas Becket could haue told you, that Euphroſyna, that Holy Maid, dwelt fir and thirtie yéeres in Monkes apparell among Monkes, and was neuer otherwiſe taken, but for a Monke.

M. Hardings Amphilochius.

Likewiſe Vincentius, and Petrus de Natalibus, and others your Writers and Recorders of Fables could haue told you, that Tecla ſometime addreſſed her ſelfe in Mans apparell, and had ſhee not beene forbidden by S. Paul, would haue followed him in companie as a Man. Rauiſius Textor writeth the like of one Marina, that diſſembling what ſhe was, liued many yéeres in an Abbie, as a Monke. The like he writeth of Laſthenia, Axiothea, and others, that beeing Women, came into the Schole in Mans apparell to heare Plato. The like writeth your owne Fabular Simeon Metaphraſtes of Eugenia. And if ye lacke other Authorities of truſt and credit, one of your owne Companions of Louaine auoucheth the ſame of Melania and Papula. And yet I thinke he was not bewitched (as you ſay) nor thorowly bereft of his wits.

Vincenſius lib. 9. cap. 47. Petr. de Natal. lib. 8. cap. 110. Rauiſius Textor, in Officina: Mulieres Virilem habitum mentitæ. Simeon Metaphraſt. in Eugenia.

The quarrell that ye picke to the Name and Surname is nothing elſe but a childiſh cauill. For ſhe was not called Ioane Engliſh, by the name of the Countrie, for that ſhe was an Engliſh woman, borne in England, as you full fondlie imagine, but onelie by the Surname of her Father. So are there manie knowne this day by the names of Scot, Iriſh, French, Welſh, Weſtfaling, Norman, Gaſcoingne, Brabant, Holland: and yet not borne in any of all theſe Countries, but onely in England. So Matthias Pariſienſis, as it is ſuppoſed, notwithſtanding his name, was borne in Bohemia.

Copus Dial. 2. Pag. 236. Anglicus.

Dame Ioane the Pope.

Therefore whereas ye would haue the words vainlie and without ſenſe to be read and pointed thus; Iohannes Anglicus natione, Moguntinus, &c. Iohn an Engliſh man by nation, of Moguntia, &c. yee play, and toy, and trifle vnſeemelie, and mocke your Reader. For the words are cleere, and plaine, and lie thus: Iohannes Anglicus, natione Moguntinus, &c. Iohn Engliſh, (ſo Surnamed) borne at Mens.

Further ye ſay: God would neuer haue ſo forſaken Peters Chaire, as to ſuffer it to bee polluted by a Woman, which is not of capacity for Holy Orders. This ghelle, M. Harding, preſumeth ouer farre of Gods Prouidence. And therefore Antoninus the Archbiſhop of Florence, when hee had opened this whole Storie of Pope Ioane, beeing aſtonied with the ſtrangenelle and admiration of the matter, could not refraine himſelfe from crying out, O altitudo Sapientiæ & Scientiæ Dei! Quàm incredibilia ſunt iudicia eius! O the depth of the Wiſdome and knowledge of God! How incredible be his Iudgements! In like manner the Prophet Eſay crieth out, Quomodò facta eſt Meretrix Ciuitas fidelis? How is that Faithfull Citie become an Harlot.

Gods Sufferance.

Antonin. Par. 2. Tit. 16. Ca. 1. §. 7.

Eſai 1.

And why might not Pope Ioane, being a Woman, haue as good right and intereſt vnto the See of Rome, as afterward had Pope Iohn 13. who being Pope, had wicked company with two of his owne Siſters: or others, whom for their horrible vices and wickednelle Platina calleth, Monſtra, & Portenta? Monſters againſt kinde, and ill ſhapen Creatures? Luitprandus ſaith, as it is before reported: Lateranenſe Palatium nunc eſt proſtibulum Meretricum: The Popes Palace of Laterane in Rome is now become a Stew of Whores.

In Epiſt. Othonis Imper. ad Iohan. pp. Platin in Iohan. 13. Luitprand. lib. 6. cap. 6.

All this notwithſtanding, ſaith Antoninus: Nulli ex hoc Saluti præiudicium fuit: Quia nec Eccleſia tunc fuit ſine Capite: quod eſt Chriſtus, vnde percipit influxum Gratiæ: No man had hinderance of Saluation by meane hereof. For (although the Pope were a Woman, yet) the Church was not without a Head. For that Head is Chriſt, from whom ſhee receiueth influence of Grace. Yea although Antichriſt get himſelfe into the See of Rome, yet ſhall the Church of God neuertheleſſe continue ſtill: although in horrible confuſion, and vnder great perſecution.

Antonin. Par. 2. Tit. 16. ca. 1. § 7.

Further ye ſay: To Athens was ſhe brought, ſaith the Fable. And why? For Learning. Very well. Whereas at that time neither any Athens ſtood, nor was there any place of Learning there any longer: but all the Countrie of Attica became barbarous, as we vnderſtand by the Writers of that time.

Athens.

Dame Ioane the Pope.

The Citie of Athens was then ouerthrowne (yee ſay) and Learning their vtterly decaied. And therefore all this is but a Fable. And good reaſon it is that wee beleeue you, for that your Onuphrius hath ſo told you. But for your credits ſake, M. Harding, leſt all men eſpie your Vanitie, tell vs, by whom was that Noble, and ſo Populous and mighty Citie of Athens thus laid waſt? By what King? By what Captaine? By what forren Nation? At what time? How long agoe? Hauing not one proper Authour to allege, no not ſo much as one, how could yee pretend the names of ſo manie without blushing?

M. Hardings Amphilochius.

The Citie of Athens had then continued twelue tweluе hundred yeeres: and for knowledge in Philoſophie, and renowne of Learning, was called the Eie and Vniuerſitie of all Græcia. Origen writeth of himſelfe, that hee was ſometime a Student in Athens. Chryſoſtome being eightéene yeeres old, for Learnings ſake was ſent to Athens. S. Baſil and his brother Gregorie, afterward the Biſhop of Nyſſa, were Students at Athens together thirteene yeeres. Your owne Amphilochius, whoſe Authority ye may not in any wiſe denie, ſaith thus of S. Baſil: Apprehendit Matrem Literarum Athenas: He came to Athens, which is the Mother of Learning. Boetius of Rome planted himſelfe in Athens for Learnings ſake, about the yeere of our Lord 520.

Thedoric. lib. 1. In Epiſt. ad Boethium.

It appeareth in the Subſcriptions of the 2. Nicene Councell, Anno 742.

In the yeere of our Lord 680. the Biſhop of Athens was preſent at the Councell holden at Conſtantinople, called Synodus Sexta. After that, in the yeere of our Lord 742. at the ſecond Councell of Nice, a great number of the Biſhops of Græcia were preſent in their perſons all together. Within few yeeres after which time followed Pope Ioane in the yeere of our Lord 853.

Hitherto the whole Countrie and Church of Græcia continued in ſafetie: and the Emperours of Chriſtendome made their continuall abode in thoſe parts. And haue you, M. Harding, ſo ſuddenly thrown downe all together, both Church, Countrie, Towne, and Caſtle, onely to keepe Pope Ioane from her Study?

Paulus Æmilius, Lib. 6. An. Dom. 1220

Ye ſay: The whole Country of Attica was then become barbarous. This tale is your owne, and hangeth onely vpon your owne credit. Yet Platina, Sabellicus, and others moe that wrote this Storie, and knew what they wrote, were not ſo Barbarous. But Barbarous is he, M. Harding, that will beleeue your ſimple word without warrant.

Paulus Æmilius, Lib. 8. An. Dom. 1288

At that time (ye ſay) the Citie of Athens was not ſtanding. But Paulus Æmilius ſaith, that long after that time, in the Reigne of Philip the French King, Gottofredus one of the Houſe of Tricaſſes, was appointed and made Dux Athenarum, & Princeps Achaiæ: The Duke of Athens, and the Prince of Achaia. If there had beene then no Athens ſtanding at that time, as you tell vs, how then could Gottofredus haue beene made Duke of Athens? If ye ſay, as ye may doe much by your Coniectures, that notwithſtanding the Citie of Athens were raſed, and made waſte, yet the dignity or name of honour remained ſtill, yet will the ſame Æmilius once againe reproue your Errour. For writing afterward of certaine Pirates that had inuaded the Countrey of Græcia, he ſaith thus: Interram Atticam delati, Athenarum Ducem Brennæ Nobilitatis virum occiderunt, Vrbemque ceperunt: Inuading the Countrey of Attica, they tooke and ſlew the Duke of Athens, one of the houſe of Brennus, and tooke the Citie.

Nicetas pa. 74. Nicephor. Gregor. lib. 4. & 6. Chalcocon. li. 4. Chalcocon. li. 7. Chalcocon. li. 9.

In the yeere of our Lord 1206. Michaell Choniates, Brother vnto Niceras Choniates, was the Biſhop of Athens: Nicephorus Gregoras about the yeere of our Lord 1300. maketh mention of ſundrie Dukes of Athens: Leonicus Chalcocondyla ſaith, that one Izaulus, a yong Gentleman of Italie, married the Ducheſſe of Athens, and got the City: and that the reſt of the Græcians leuied their powers againſt the Athenians: and that afterward about the yeere of our Lord 1440. Mahomet the Emperour of Turkie tooke the Citie of Athens, and ſubdued it vnto himſelfe, and hauing it in poſſeſſion, marueiled at the beauty of the Caſtle, and at the ſtrength of the Walls.

These things happened, as it is eaſie to reckon, many hundred yeeres after the time of Pope Ioane. Now therefore, I beſeech you, M. Harding, conſider indifferently with your ſelfe: If there had beene no Citie of Athens then ſtanding, how could theſe Pirates then, how could Izaulus, how could Mahomet inuade and take the Citie of Athens? Shall wee ſay, they leuied an armie, and diſquieted the Countrey, and troubled themſelues, and came ſo farre to catch a ſhadow?

Thus hitherto it appeareth not, but if Dame Ioane would haue gone to Athens, there was rowme ſufficient to receiue her.

After that ſhe came to Rome, and there profeſſed Learning openlie. This (you ſay) is ſoone confuted as falſe. For there was no Learning at thoſe daies profeſſed at Rome, as the Stories do declare. This is verie ſoone confuted, M. Harding, and ſpecially by him that reckoneth ſo little what he ſay. The Stories (you ſay) doe declare it. Leaue, leaue this Hypocriſie: diſſemble no more: it is not manly. Tell vs in good faith, what Writers, what Stories declare these things? Your credit faileth ouer much. Your word is no sufficient warrant.

No Vniuersity in Rome.

Dame Ioane Pope.

Yee say: There was no Learning in those daies professed in Rome. And why so? Will ye now say of Rome, as yee earst said of Athens? Will yee say, there was no Citie of Rome then standing? Will yee say, Learning there was then vtterly decaied, and the whole Country become Barbarous? If there were no Study nor place of Learning then in Rome where then was there any Study in all Christendome? For the Vniuersities of Paris, Orleance, Tolouse, Salerne, Padua, Bononia, Praga, Salamanca, were erected long afterward. And therefore yee seeme to say, that all the whole world then was Barbarous.

But that yee may the better see your ouerlight, S. Hierome writing of Victorinus and Donatus, saith thus: Victorinus the Rhetorician, and Donatus the Grammarian, my Schoolmasters, are accounted notable in Rome. And againe hee saith: Victorinus natione Apher, Romæ sub Constantio Principe Rhetoricam docuit: Victorinus borne in Aphrica, taught Rhetoricke in Rome in the time of the Emperour Constantius.

Hieron. in Appendice Annalium Eusebij.

Erasmus writing the life of S. Hierome, saith thus: Romam missus est, vehitur ad primariam eo sæculo tum Religionis, tum Eruditionis Magistram, Liberalibus studijs erudiendus: quod ipse declarat enarrans 11. Caput Ezechielis: Hierom was sent to Rome, as to the principall Schoolemistresse in those daies, both of Religion, and also of Learning, as he himselfe declareth, expounding the eleuenth Chapter of Ezechiel. S. Augustine saith: Egisti mecum, O Deus, vt mihi persuaderetur Romam pergere, & potius ibi docere quod docebam Carthagine: O God, thou mouedst my mind to goe to Rome, and there rather to professe openlie the same Learning that I had professed at Carthage. And further hee saith: Audiebam quietius studere ibi adolescentes, & ordinatiore Disciplinæ correctione sedari: I heard say, that yongue men there went more quietlie to their bookes, and were kept in orderly obedience to their studies.

Aug. Confess. Lib. 5. Cap. 8.

And in the Tripartite Worke ioined vnto the Councell of Laterane, yee may find the Storie heereof recorded thus: Primo Athenis Romam translatum est studium Philosophicum: deinde Roma Parisios tempore Caroli, vt dicunt Historiæ: First the studie of Philosophie was translated from Athens to Rome: and afterward, as the Stories say, in the time of the Emperor Charles, it was translated from Rome to Paris.

In Opere Trip. Lib. 2. Cap. 10.

What shall I more say? The Pope himselfe in his owne Decretals saith: Rome is an Vniuersity. These bee his words: Curia Romana habet Studium Generale, & eius Priuilegia: The Court of Rome hath an Vniuersall Studie, and the Priuileges of the same. And againe, Pope Clemens saith: In Studijs Romanæ Curiæ, Parisijs, Oxonij, Bononię, Salamancæ debent esse Professores Linguarum, Hebraicæ, Chaldaicæ, Arabicæ: In the Vniuersities of Rome, of Paris, of Oxford, of Bononie, and of Salamanca, there must be professors of the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabique tongues.

Extra. de Priuilegijs, Lib 4. Cum de diuersis. In Sexto. Clemens lib. 5. De Magistris.

To be short, Theodoricus Niemus, sometime the Popes Secretarie, and therefore hauing good cause to know the truth heereof, and, for ought that I know, hauing no cause to dissemble, of this whole matter writeth thus: Et nunc est Titulus Cardinalis prædictæ Scholæ. Et olim in ea legebantur Septem Artes Liberales, & præcipuè Rhetorica: & etiam in ea legit quandoque Beatus Augustinus, & Iohannes vocatus de Anglia. Et fuit Mulier de Maguntia nata, quæ studuit Athenis sub virili habitu: & in tantum profecit in Artibus, vt tandem veniens Romam, per biennium in eadem Schola Artes liberales legerit: & adeò sufficiens fuit, vt etiam Maiores & Nobiliores Vrbis eius Lectiones frequenter audiuerint. Et postea in Papam eligitur, &c. Euen now a Cardinall beareth the Title of the said Schoole, or Vniuersitie of Rome, And in old times the Seuen Liberall Sciences, and speciallie Rhetoricke, were read in the same. There also sometime read S. Augustine, and one that was called Iohn of England. This Iohn was a woman, borne at Mens (in Germanie) and had studied at Athens in the apparell of a Man: and had so profited in the Arts, that at last comming to Rome, two yeeres together shee professed the Liberall Sciences in the same Schoole. And her gift in teaching was such, that the Elders and Nobles of the Citie resorted often to heare her read. Afterward shee was chosen Pope, &c.

Theodoric. Niemus. Citatur ab Illyr. in Testibus veritatis

Thus many waies, M. Harding, haue wee found an Vniuersity or Schoole in Rome: and no cause to the contrarie, but Dame Ioane, beeing so well learned as it is said, might well be a Reader there.

The Popes time of trauell.

But ye say: Why kept she not her selfe in? Her midwife might better answer this question. But what if she were suddenlie preuented before her time, as many be? Or, what if God would haue such a matter so openlie knowne, to the euerlasting detestation either of the Person, or of the Place? Certainelie Antoninus the Archbishop of Florence, beeing astonied with the horror heereof, as it is said before, crieth out, O the depth of the wisdome and knowledge of God! O how vnsearchable be his Iudgements!

Antonin. Par. 2. Titulo 16. Cap. 1. §. 7.

The Authour heereof (ſay you) durſt not to auouch the matter for an vndoubted Truth : but only ſaith, Vt aſſeritur, as it is ſaid : and ſo referreth all the whole to heareſay. Notwithſtanding M. Harding, many there be that write this Story as a certaine Truth, without doubting, or credit of heareſay. And Platina, albeit he would not ſeeme to auouch ouer much, for the honour of the See of Rome, yet thus he ſaith: Quod ferè omnes affirmant : Which thing in a maner all men do affirme. And Rauiſius Textor ſaith: Scitum eſt ex Chronicis, & à Maioribus ſcriptum : It is knowne by the Chronicles, and written by our Elders. It is knowne, ſaith one: It is affirmed in a maner by all men, ſaith another. But for the ſpace of eight hundred yeeres, and more, there was no Writer, I trow, ſo impudent, that would condemne it for a Fable, as you doe, and vtterly denie it to be true.

Vt aſſeritur.

Touching the Marble Image, repreſenting a woman in childe bearing, and the Popes ſudden breaking off his way in his ſolemne Proceſſion, let each man weigh theſe things as him liſteth. But where ye compare that Image to one of the great ragge ſtones at Stonage, or Long Compton, as if it were vtterly vnwrought, and without ſhape, yee ſeeme wilfully to auouch, as your maner is, a great Untruth. Verily Theodoricus Niemus the Pops Secretarie ſaith: Et adhuc vetus Statua Marmorea illic poſita, figuratiuè monſtrat (hoc factum.) Vnde Summi Pontifices, dum ad Lateranum de Baſilica Principis Apoſtolorum, & contra vadunt, illud iter rectum non faciunt. This therfore is not an old Wiues dreame, as you ſay, but the Iudgement of ſundry the wiſeſt and beſt learned in Rome, who might beſt know the matter.

The Marble Image.

Theodoricus Niemus.

As for the Chaire of Porphyrie ſtone, which otherwheres ye call the Chaire of eaſe, it is to vile to be anſwered. But let Truth be Falſhood: and let Stories be Fables. Yet, M. Harding, it may pleaſe you to remember that the ſame Fable was raiſed firſt in Rome, and from thence onely, and from no place elſe, was publiſhed abroad into the World. But let the Popes owne Secretaries and all the people there be deceiued: and to ſhadow the ſhame of that See, let Rome it ſelfe bee the Mother of Lies. Let no man know the certaine Truth of matters, but onely Onuphrius the Popes Paraſite, and M. Harding. Yet neither would ſo many Chronicles haue recorded, nor would the whole World ſo vniuerſally haue beleeued theſe things of the Pope, more then of any other Biſhop, had there not beene wonderfull corruption of maners, and diſſolution of life, and open horrour, and filthineſſe in that only See aboue all others.

Howbeit, good Chriſtian Reader, that thou maieſt well and clerely vnderſtand that our dealing herein is plaine and ſimple, and that we haue not imagined theſe matters, or any parcell thereof our ſelues, may it pleaſe thee to read Platina in Iohanne 8 Sabellicus, Enneadis 9. Lib. 1. Leonicus Chalcocondyla, a Greeke Writer, Lib. 6. Marianus Scotus, that liued about the yeere of our Lord 1028. Sigebertus Gemblacenſis, that liued about the yeere of our Lord 1100. Martinus Polonus the Popes Penitentiarie, whom M. Harding ſo much defaceth, that liued about the yeere of our Lord 1320. Rauiſius Textor in Officina, Ca. Fœminæ habitum virilem mentitæ : Antoninus the Archbiſhop of Florence, part. 2. tit. 16. Volaterranus : Nauclerus : Carion : Conſtantinus Phrygio : Chriſtianus Maſſæus : Matthæus Palmerius Florentinus : Anſelmus Rid : Iohannes Pariſienſis, cap. 20. Supplementa Chronicorum : Chronica Chronicorum : Faſciculus temporum, and others moe. Of theſe ſome liued foure hundred, ſome fiue hundred yeeres agoe: and haue euer beene counted worthy of ſome Authoritie: Notwithſtanding, for your Dame Ioans ſake, you, M. Harding, beginne now to clip their credit. Howbeit, whatſoeuer they were, certaine it is, they were no Lutherans. All theſe with one conſent agree together, that Dame Ioan was Pope of Rome.

Teſtimonies for the proofe of Pope Ioan.

Notwithſtanding, ſome of your owne fellowes of Louaine could haue taught you to haue dealt herein more diſcretly : and not ſo preciſely and peremptorily to haue denied the whole Storie : ſpecially being ſent to you from your friends in Rome and confirmed by ſo many. And therefore one of your Louaniens would ſeeme handſomely to excuſe and ſhift the matter by poſſibility of Nature. For thus he ſaith in effect : What if the Pope were Hermaphroditus, an Herkinalſon, that is to ſay, a Man and a Woman both in one? Or, if this helpe will not ſerue, he ſeemeth further to ſay ; What if the Pope being firſt a Man, Hermrphroditus.

Man, were afterward changed into a Woman? And thus for want of better diuinitie, he forceth Ouids Metamorphosis to serue the turne. If ye would haue take this mans aduice, out of doubt with such a pretty, What if, ye might soone haue put vs out of countenance. His words be these: Neque ego hîc quicquam dico de Hermaphroditis, & ἀνδρογύνοις, de quibus veterum libri pleni sunt. Et ne à nostri temporis memoria longiùs abeam, non ignoro, monumentis literarum esse traditum, Mulierem quandam nomine Æmiliam, Antonio Spensæ Ciui Ebulano nuptam, post duodecimum à nuptijs annum in virum transisse. Legi etiam alteram Mulierem, vbi puerum peperisset, in marem fuisse mutatam: I will here say nothing of such persons as be called Hermaphroditi, and are both Man, and Woman, all in one: whereof in old Writers we finde much mention. But not to goe further then to the remembrance of our owne time, I know it is written, that a certaine woman named Æmylia, married vnto one Antonius Spensa a Citizen of Ebulum, twelue yeeres after she had been married, was turned into a man. I haue likewise read of another woman, that when shee had beene brought abed, afterward became a Man. These notable Stories he alleageth to answer the matter of Pope Ioan. Thus he thinketh it a great deale the safer way to make the Pope an Herkinalson, or by miracle to turne him from a Man, into a Woman, then simply and plainly to confesse that euer Dame Ioan was Pope in Rome.

Dame Ioane Pope.

Cœpus Dialog. 1. Pag. 47.

If you had taken this same way, then all this Story had beene a Fable, and a Woman had beene a Man: and we had vtterly beene confounded.

The Apology, Chap. 2. Diuision 1.

But what need we rehearse Concubines and Bawdes? For that is now an ordinary and a gainefull Sin in Rome. For Harlots sit there now adaies, not as they did in times past, without the City wals, and with their faces hid & couered: but they dwell in Palaces, and faire Houses: they stray about in Court & Market, and that with bare and open face: as who would say, they may not only lawfully do it, but ought also to be praised for so doing. What should we say any more of this? Their vicious and abominable life is now throughly known to the whole World. Bernard writeth roundly and truly of the Bishop of Romes House, yea, and of the Bishop of Rome himselfe. Thy Palace, saith he, taketh in good men, but it maketh none: naughty persons thriue there, and the good decay. And whosoeuer hee were which wrot the Tripartite Worke, annexed to the Councell of Laterane, he saith thus: So excessiue at this day is the riot, as well in the Prelates and Bishops, as also in the Clerkes and Priests, that it is horrible to be told. But these things be not only grown in vse, and so by custome & continuance of time wel allowed, as al the rest of their doings in maner be, but they are now waxen old, and rotten ripe. For who hath not heard what a famous act Peter Aloisius, Pope Paul the thirds Son committed against Cosmus Cherius the Bishop of Fanum: what Iohn Casa Archbishop of Beneuentum, the Popes Legate at Venice, wrote in the commendation of a most abominable filthinesse: and how hee set foorth with most lothsome words and wicked eloquence, the matter which ought not once to proceed out of any bodies mouth? To whose eares hath it not come, that Alphonsus Diazius a Spaniard, being purposely sent from Rome into Germany, so shamefully and diuellishly murthered his owne Brother Iohn Diazius, a most innocent, and a most Godly man, only because he had embraced the Gospell of Jesus Christ, and would not returne againe to Rome?

Genes. 38.

But it may chance to this they will say; These things may sometime happen in the best gouerned Commonwealths, yea & against the Magistrates wils: and besides, there be good Lawes made to punish such. I grant, it be so: But by what good lawes (I would know) haue these great mischiefes been punished amongst them? Petrus Aloisius, after hee had done that notorious Act that I spake of, was alwaies cherished in his fathers bosome, Pope Paul the third, and made his very darling, Diazius, after he had murdered his owne Brother, was deliuered by the Popes meanes, to the end he might not bee punished by good Lawes. Iohn Caſa the Archbiſhop of Beneuentum is yet aliue, yea liueth at Rome, euen in the eie and ſight of the moſt Holy Father.

*Vntruths, great and notorious.

Courteghians went abroade as the Matrons do ſome rod one Mules, ſome dwelled in goodly houſes, Which particular diſorders * as there they continued not many yeeres, * ſo in theſe daies they haue beene reformed. Wherein ye follow the Father of your Hereſies, and Schoolemaſter of your malice the Diuell, who in Scripture is called, Accuſator Fratrum noſtrorum: The accuſer of our Brethren. Apoc. 12.

But Sirs, how leape ye from Rome to Placentia, from the Clergy to a temporall Duke, whom ye call the Popes Sonne, though he was not his ſonne being Pope, but by lawfull Matrimonie before holy Orders taken? For ſuch a one was Peter Aloiſius of whom ye ſpeake. Be it that he was an euill man, what maketh that againſt the Church? What for defenſe of your new Goſpel? If Iohannes Caſa, being yet a yong ſpringall, before he came to be a Clerke, and long before he was either Biſhop, or Legate, made certaine amorous Sonets in Italian rime, following the Italian Poet Petrarcha, to which kinde of exerciſe the good wits of Italie in youth are much giuen, and without naming any perſon, flatteringlie ſmoothed that hainous fact, rather then praiſed; wherein neuertheleſſe he did euil, we confeſſe, & for the ſame ouerſight of his youth, was (notwithſtanding his other excellent qualities) kept backe from the dignity of Cardinalſhip during his life. All this being granted and conſidered, what hindereth it the eſtimation of Chriſts Church? And what furthereth it your falſe doctrine, your Schiſmes, and your Hereſies? Touching the death of Iohn Diazius the Spaniard, ye tell * many lies at once.

O, a faire boongrace, to beautifie open and knowne wickedneſſe.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

We leapt not ſo lightly to Placentia, M. Harding, but rather reſt at Verona, and ſay the Truth. For Pope Paulus that ſhould haue puniſhed his wicked Sonne, and haue burnt him to death for his abominable outrage, remoued not to Placentia, but remained ſtill in Rome. Iohannes Sleidanus ſaith, that the yong Gentleman, the Biſhop of Fanum, vpon whom Petrus Aloiſius the Popes Sonne had ſhewed that horrible villanie, ſhortly after died for ſhame and heauineſſe. Yet (he ſaith) it is thought of ſome that Petrus Aloiſius, after his wicked act committed, gaue him poiſon, and ſo killed him, leſt he ſhould make complaint thereof vnto the Emperour. He addeth further: Paulus nihilò ſecius impensè amabat Filium: & ad ipſius amplificationem omne ſtudium conuertit. Et cùm de eius flagitijs nonnunquam audiret, fertur non admodùm ægrè tuliſſe: & hoc ſolùm conſueuiſſe dicere, Hæc illum vitia non ſe commonſtratore didiciſſe: Pope Paul neuertheleſſe fauoured his Sonne aboue meaſure; and beſtowed all his care to increaſe him in honour. And whereas he heard ſometime of his ſhameful acts, the report is, that he was not much offended therewith; but vſed onely thus to ſay, Well, yewis hee neuer learned theſe vices by my example. So cruell and terrible is the Pope in repreſſing of Sinne.

Iohan. Sleidan. Lib. 19.

Petrus Aloiſius the Popes Sonne.

But God of his iuſtice would not ſuffer ſuch abomination to eſcape vnpuniſhed. Certaine of the Nobles of his owne Citie, not long after, aroſe againſt him, and ſlew him in his owne Palace, and hung out his vile Carcaſe in ſhamefull ſort by a chaine ouer the wals; and afterward threw it ouer into the mote. The people of al ſorts ran gladly to the ſight: and ſtabd him in on euery ſide with their Daggers: and trod him filthily vnder their feet.

Iohan. Sleidan. Lib. 19.

Ye ſay: The particular diſorders of your Courteghians in theſe daies at the laſt haue bin reformed. And yet by very credible report, euen within theſe two yeres, which was in the yere of our Lord 1565. by a perfect view taken, there were found in Rome to the number of eight and twenty thouſand women of that ſort. If this be the Reformation of the Church of Rome, what was it then before it was thus Reformed?

As for that moſt horrible Booke of Iohannes Caſa, ſo vile and ſo loathſome, that no Heathen eares could abide to heare it; O how fauourably, and how friendly it is excuſed! He was then (ſay ye) but a yong man: but a ſpringall: No biſhop: no Clerke: He named no perſon: It was but a kinde of exerciſe: an ouerſight: an amorous Sonet. The good wits of Italie bee much giuen to it: He praiſed not that fault, but only ſmoothed it. O, M. Harding, what abomination is there vnder Heauen, but ye can deuiſe waies how to ſmoth it!

But he was puniſhed (ye ſay) full ſore for his ouerſight. For he could neuer be made Cardinall during his life. Yea, good M. Harding: And all this muſt wee beleeue, becauſe you ſpeake it. The Pope made him the Archbiſhop of Beneuentum, and Legate a Latere, and thereby one of his Secret Counſell, in part of this cruell puniſhment. But though he vpon that or ſome other occaſion were kept backe from being Cardinall, yet were there others made Cardinals, in all reſpects as bad as he. were made Cardinals, and for what causes. As for your owne Onuphrius he speaketh Parables, and casteth colours, and would seeme to meane more hereof, then hee durst to vtter. Onuphrius in Iulio 3.

The Emperour Tyberius sometime placed Nouellius Tricongius in most high and honourable rome, and made him Proconsul, in part of recompence of his good seruice, for that he was able to drinke three pottles of Wine together with one breath. This was not the worthiest cause of promoting such Magistrates to such a rome: yet was there more honour and honesty in this cause of preferment, then hath beene thought to be in the preferring of sundrie Cardinals. Sueton. Tranquil. in Tyberio. Tricongium vno Spiritu.

Touching the murdering of Iohannes Diazius, by his own Brother Alphonsus, wherein ye say, we haue told you so many lies at once, wee referre our selues to the Story thereof truly written by Iohannes Sleidanus, the effect whereof in short is this: One Iohannes Diazius a Spaniard, and a Doctor of Sorbona in Paris, after that God had giuen him grace to vnderstand the truth of the Gospell, departed from thence, and came into Germany, and rested at Nuburge, in the Dominion of Otho Henricus County Palatine. His Brother Alphonsus Diazius, being then in Rome, and vnderstanding hereof, immediatly toke Horses, and with all speed came into Germany, minding to withdraw his Brother from his purpose. And finding him constant and stedfast, and not likely any waies to bee remoued, in the end he fained himselfe, by the waight of his reasons, to be perswaded to the same Religion: and desired him to returne with him into Italy, for that he should do more good there, then he could in Germany. But seeing him for sundry causes firmely bent to stay there, he tooke his leaue, and departed thence, and exhorted him to continue constant in the truth, and came to Augusta, fiue Dutch miles from Nuburge. The next day as hauing forgotten some speciall matter, he had to say to his Brother, he returned backe againe from thence to Nuburge, and by the way bought a Carpenters axe, and entering into the Town, vpon the 27. of March, he came to his Brothers lodging at the breake of the day, and himselfe watching beneath, sent vp his seruant with the Axe to doe the deed. The seruant after he had called forth Iohannes Diazius, and had deliuered him a letter from his Brother Alphonsus, and saw him turned towards the light to read the same, came suddenly behinde him, and stroke him in the head with his Axe, and leauing it sticking in the wound, came away together with Alphonsus his Master. This is the verie true story hereof, M. Harding, and in all these words there is no lie. Touching your Courteghians (ye say) the Pope of late hath made a general Reformation. For now they are both remoued from their faire Palaces wherein they dwelt, and also put from their Mules. As if the fault had been only in their Mules or Horses, and not rather in their whole trade of life. Certainly, the same women continue still, euen in the Citie of Rome, and that vnto the number of eight and twenty thousand, as it is said before. Such is the Reformation of the Church of Rome.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision 1. and 2.

They haue killed infinite numbers of our Brethren, only because they beleeued truly and sincerely in Iesus Christ. But of that great and foule number of Harlots, Fornicators, Adulterers, what one haue they at any time (I say not, put to death) but either Excommunicate, or once attached? Why? Voluptuousnes, Adultery, Ribaudry, Whooredome, Murdering of kin, Incest, and others more abominable parts, are not they counted Sin at Rome? Or, if they be Sin, ought Christs Vicar, Peters Successour, the most holy Father, so lightly and slilie to beare them, as though they were no Sin, and that in the City of Rome, & in the Principal Tower of Holinesse? O Holy Scribes and Pharisеis, which neuer knew this kinde of Holinesse! O what a Holines, what a Catholike Faith is this! Peter did not thus teach at Rome: Paul did not so liue at Rome: they did not practise Brotherly as these doe openly: they made not a yeerely reuenue & profit of Harlots: They suffered no common Adulterers & wicked Murtherers, to goe vnpunished. They did not receiue them into their Familiarity, into their Councell, into their Housholde, nor yet into the company of Christian men. These men ought not therefore so vnreasonably to triumph against our liuing. It had bin more woldome for them, either either first to haue proued good their own life before the world, or at the least, to haue cloaked it a little more cunningly. For we doe vse still the Old & Ancient Lawes, and (as much as men may do, in the maners vsed at these daies, al things being so wholly corrupt) we diligently and earnestly put in execution the Ecclesiasticall Discipline: we haue not common Brothel houses of Strumpets, nor yet flockes of concubines, nor heards of Harlot haunters: neither do we prefer Aduitery before Matrimonie: neither doe we exercise beastly sensuality: neither do we gather ordinary rents and stipends of Stewes: nor do we sucker Incest and abominable naughtinesse, nor yet such Aloisians, Casians, & Diazians to escape vnpunished. For if these things would haue pleased vs, wee needed not to haue departed from these mens fellowship, amongst who such enormities be in their chiefe pride & price. Neither needed wee for leauing them, to run into the hatred of men, & into most wilful dangers.

Paul the Fourth, not many Monthes sithence, had at Rome in prison certaine Augustine Friars, many Bishops, and a great number of other deuout men, for Religions sake. He racked them, and tormented them: to make them confesse he left no meanes vnassaied. But in the end how many Brothels, how many Whoremongers, how many Aduiterers, how many incestuous persons could he finde of all those?

M. Harding.

This ye denie as impudently, as ye affirmed the other matter of Diazius falsly. Wherefore what punishment is due to slanderers, that ought this Defender to haue for his false slander, then commeth me your Secretarie and prisethhimselfe, and all you his holy Companions, besides all wit and modesty. And saith much in commendation of your Ministerships goodnesse, for that ye keep and vse still the Old and Ancient Lawes forsooth, and Discipline of the Church.

A braue and a lusty kinde of eloquence.

For shame, for conscience, for regard of the world, for feare of Gods wrath, for auoiding euerlasting fire, returne to the Catholike Church from whence ye are broken out like the fat Buls of Basan, put away your most vnlawfull yokefellowes. Leaue your selues to be abominable, before with such spightful raising ye reprehend our * Infirmitie.

* Fornication, Open Stewes, & Incest, are M. Hardings Infirmities.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuision 3.

Our God be thanked, although we bee not the men wee ought, and professe to be, yet whosoeuer, and whatsoeuer we be, compare vs with these men, and euen our own life and innocencie will soone proue vntrue and condemne their malicious surmises. For we exhort the people to al vertue and well doing, not only by Bookes and Preachings, but also by our examples & behauiour. We also teach that the Gospell is not a boasting or bragging of knowledge, but that it is the Law of life, and that a Christian man (as Tertullian saith) ought not to speake honourablie, but ought to liue honourablie: nor that they be the hearers of the Law, but the doers of the Law, which are iustified before God.

M. Harding.

Nay, nay, Sirs, for that thing ye crake so much of, be not too hasty to thanke your God. What peculiar God ye meane we know not. That phrase your Secretarie much vseth, as though yee had another God beside him that is God of all. Compare your selues with whom yee list, your owne life and innocencie is so well knowne, as by reprouing your vices and horrible sinnes, no man lightly shall seeme a slanderer. Indeed if your continuall aduouterie and Incest were lawfull Matrimony, if your filthy yokefellowes were your true wedded Wiues, if your robbing & throwing down of Churches were almose, and building of places for praier to the increase of Gods Honour, if ignorant rashnesse were godly discretion, if your word of the Lord were Gods word, if your pretensed Gospell were Christs true Gospell, if your biblebable and railing were holesome preaching, if the Spirit of Satan, that is in you the same also being a lying spirit in your mouthes, could be meeke, humble, obedient, and would tell truth, finally if euill were good, if darkenesse were light, if sowre were sweet, if the fruits of your so naughty a tree were good, wee would also sooth you, and vphold your immoderate crakes. Wee say plainely of you at one word, which wee will to bee a watch-word for all Christian people to beware of you, your Doctrine is Heresie, your Life is Iniquity, your endeauour tendeth to the subuersion of soules.

Is this the modestie of the Spirit of God,

The

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

It is no great Crake, M. Harding, to giue God thanks. But what vncourteous dealing is this of your part? Sir Defender and his Fellowes must come to you, and learne to speake. Notwithstanding for ought that may appeare, ye are not yet very well aduised how to speak your selfe. Now because we say, we thanke our God, our Secretaries hath made himselfe a Seuerall God. Howbeit, you may say, Our Lord, and thinke him not Catholike, that will say otherwise: and yet make ye not your selues thereby any Seuerall Lord. God giue you grace, ye be not seuered from the Lord. But wherefore it should bee more lawfull for you, to saie, Our Lord, then for vs to saie, Our God, I thinke it a high point of cunning for you to open.

Our Lord. Our God.

Thus ye would haue vs sometimes to saie Our Lord, sometimes The Lord, sometimes neither. It were a skilfull Cooke, that knew your diet. Howbeit the Prophet Dauid saith: Deus noster Refugium & Virtus: Our God, Our Refuge, and our Strength. Sing Psalmes vnto Our God: Our God is the God of Saluation: Our God is in Heauen: My God, ô my God, I wake earely vnto thee: Thou art My God: I trust in thee: My lots are in thy hands. S. Paul saith: I thanke My God alwaies: I giue thankes vnto My God. Thus was it lawfull then for the Apostles and Prophets to speake without rebuke: Neither was there any, M. Harding, then so vncourteous, to say, They made themselues a peculiar God.

You your selfe, M. Harding, in this selfe same Booke, either of purpose vpon some better aduice, or vnawares, haue written the same. Consider well your owne words: Thus ye say, There is no iniquity in our Lord God Yet, I trow, by these words, ye make not to your selfe a peculiar God.

Profectò, inquit: Nam licèt pro omni hominum genere Sacrificium oblatum sit, tamen propter amorem in eum, id quod factum est omnibus, proprium mihi facio. Ita & Prophetis mos est, & facere, & dicere, Deus, Deus Meus: quamuis totius Orbis sit Deus. Sed peculiare hoc est amori, vt ex communibus propria faciat. Qui dilexit me: Quid dicis? An te dilexit solum? Omnẽ, inquit hominum Naturam dilexit. Sed ego illi Gratias debeo, quasi me solum dilexisset, & tradidisset semetipsum pro me Solo. S. Paul saith: Christ hath loued me. O Paul, The benefit, that is Common to all, thou vsest as peculiar to thy selfe. Yea verily, saith S. Paul: For albeit that Sacrifice were offered for all Mankind, yet for the loue that I beare towards him, the thing that was done to all, I account as proper and seuerall to my selfe Alone. Thus the manner of the Prophets is to doe and to say, O God, my God: notwithstanding hee is the God of all the world. But this is the speciall and alonely office of Loue, of things common to make things peculiar. Thou saist Christ hath loued me. What saist thou? Hath Christ loued thee Only, and no man else? No, saith Paul, He hath loued all Mankinde. But I owe him thanks, as if he had loued me Alone, and had giuen himselfe Onely for me.

Henceforth M. Harding, it may please you to giue vs leaue to speake as the Prophets, the Apostles, the holy Fathers and Doctors haue spoken before vs.

The Apologie, Chap. 4. Diuision 1.

BEsides all these matters, wherewith they charge vs, they are woont also to adde this one thing, which they inlarge with al kind of spight: that that is, that we be men of trouble, that we plucke the Sword and Scepter out of Kings hands: that we arme the people: that we ouerthrow iudgemẽt places, destroy the Lawes, make hauocke of possessions, seek to make the people Princes, turne al things vpside down: and to bee short, that we would haue nothing in good frame in a Commõ wealth. Good Lord, how often haue they set on fire Princes hearts, with these words, to the end they might quench the light of the Gospel in the very first appearing of it, and that men might begin to hate the same, ere euer they were able to know it, and to the end that euery Magistrate might thinke, he saw his deadly enemy as oft as he saw any of vs! Surely it should exceedingly grieue vs, to bee so maliciously accused of most hainous Treason, vnlesse we knew, that Christ himselfe, the Apostles, and a number of good Christian men were in times past blamed & reuiled in like sort. For although Christ taught, they should giue vnto Cæsar, that which was Cæsars; yet was he charged with sedition, and was accused to deuise some Conspiracie, and to seek waies to get the kingdome. And thereupon they cried out with open mouth against him in the place of Iudgement: If thou let this man escape, then thou art not Cæsars friend.

And though the Apostles did likewise euermore & stedfastly teach, that Magistrates ought to be obeied, that euery Soule ought to be subiect to the higher powers, not only for feare of wrath and punishment, but euen for conscience sake, yet bare they the name to disquiet the people, and to stirre vp the multitude to rebel. After this sort did Haman specially bring the Nation of the Iewes into the hatred of king Assuerus, because, said he, they were a rebellious and stubborne people, and despised the Ordinances & Commandements of Princes. Wicked king Achab said to Elie the Prophet of God, It is thou that troublest Israel. Amasias the Priest at Bethel, laid a conspiracie to the Prophet Amos charge, before king Ieroboam, saying, See Amos hath made a conspiracy against thee, in the middest of the house of Israel: To be briefe, Tertullian saith, This was the generall accusation of all Christians whiles hee liued, that they were Traitors, that they were Rebels & the enemies of Mankind. Wherfore, if now adaies the Truth be likewise euill spoken of, and being the same Truth it was then, if it be now like despightfully vsed, as it was in times past, though it bee a greeuous and vnkinde dealing, yet can it not seeme vnto vs a new, or an vnwonted matter.

M. Harding.

How farre yee haue attempted (I meane the sects of your Brotherhood) in sundry Countries, to wrest the sword out of Princes hands, to transpose their Scepters at your pleasure, and to alter states and signories, though we holde our peace, (a) the world iudgeth, the Blood of so many thousands slaine speaketh, England repenteth, Scotland mourneth, Germany roareth, France bewaileth, Sauoy weepeth, all Christendome lamenteth. (b) Were the hundred thousand Bours of Germany consumed by the Sword of the Nobility there for their obedience? The Duke of Saxony, and Lantgraue of Hesse, were they ouerthrown in the field and taken captiue for standing in defense of their Soueraigne? Were so great multitudes of people destroied at Munster for their loialty? Your Sacramentarie Suitzers of Berna, who robbed the quiet old Duke of Sauoy of his Townes & Countreis, from the farther side of the lake of Geneua vnto the Alpes, did they this for maintenance of his right, and to set him at rest with little? What meant ye, when ye laid your heads together being at Geneua in Queene Maries daies, the faithfull (c) Brothers of England and Scotland, and deuised a most seditious and traiterous Booke against the monstrous Regiment of Women?

(a) Vntruth, notorious and manifest to all the World.

(b) These Bours for the greatest part were enemies vnto Luther.

(c) All this great mutitude of England and Scotland, stood onely in 2. persons. Wee know no moe.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here, M. Harding, for want of matter, ye thought it good policie, to furnish your tale with store of words: The world iudgeth; blood speaketh: England repenteth: Scotland mourneth: Germany roareth: France bewaileth: Sauoy weepeth: Christendome lamenteth. If ye had not wel studied your Copia Verborum, yee could neuer haue bene halfe so copious, nor haue beene able so many waies to vtter nothing. Yee might happily haue said, Your Cardinals nals crie, and your Pope roareth, and your friends ſtand aloofe and teare their haire, and ſay, as it is written in the Apocalyps: Væ, væ Babylon, Ciuitas illa Magna: Alas, alas Babylon, that great City. Apoc. 18.

God bee thanked, the Kingdomes and Princehods of the world ſtand now in as ſafe and in as quiet and flouriſhing ſtate, as euer before. Therefore this Tragicall Rhetoricke might better haue ſerued you ſome other where.

The Boures of Germany, of whom yee ſpeake, for the greateſt part, were Aduerſaries vnto Doctour Luther, and vnderſtood no part of the Goſpell: but conſpired together, as they ſaid, only againſt the cruelty and tyrannie of their Lords: as they had done two and twentie yeares before in the ſame Countrie in the Conſpiracie called Liga Sotularia, fifteen yeares before Doctour Luther began to preach: the partners of which Conſpiracie had for their watchword the name of Our Lady: and in the honour of her, were bound to ſay fiue Aue Maries euerie day. Certainelie, touching theſe Later Rebels, it is knowne, that Luther ſharplie and vehementlie wrote againſt them. And they themſelues being demanded thereof, vtterly denied both the partaking, and alſo the knowledge of the Goſpell.

Liga Sotularia Anno 1503.

D. Luther began to Preach, Anno 1518.

The Princes of Germany raiſed not their Powers (as ye ſay) againſt the Emperor Charles the fifth, but beeing wrongfully and contrary to the Law of Armes inuaded by him, they were forced, beeing free Princes, by the Law of Nature, to draw their Sword in their owne Defenſe. Iohan. Sleidan. lib. 4. & 5. Paral. Vrſperg. Anno 1525. Nicol. Gerbelius Phorizenſis.

The Rebels at Munſter were not Goſpellers, as yée ſéeme to meane, but frantike Anabapriſts and Heretikes, as ye bee: and therefore enemies vnto the Goſpell.

The Lords of Berna neuer were Subiects to the Duke of Sauoy. That they toke certaine of his Caſtles in their confines, they did it rightlie, and by the Law of Armes, beeing forced thereto by daily inuaſions, and robberies, and not able otherwiſe to liue in reſt. But indéed the ſaid poore Duke was therewhile ſpoiled of his whole Dominion: of the one halfe, by his Brother in law the Emperour Charles 5. Of the other halfe, by his Nephew Francis the French King, by the counſell of Pope Clement 7. after their great enterview at Marſiles. And thereof was deuiſed a prettie paſquill, declaring the miſerable caſe of the poore Duke, Diuiſerunt ſibi veſtimenta mea: & ſuper veſtem meam miſerunt ſortem: They haue diuided my apparell among ſt themſelues: and they haue caſt lots for my coat.

The heads of England and Scotland, that (as ye ſay) were laid together at Geneua, touching the gouernment of Women, beeing well accounted, were nothing ſo manie, as yee would ſeeme to imagine. For if there had beene but one leſſe, for ought that I haue heard, there had beene but one at all. Such hot amplifications it liketh you to make of ſo ſmall a number. Wee will defend no man in his erroꝛ. Let euerie man beare his owne guilt. M. Caluin, M. Martyr, M. Muſculus, M. Bullinger and others, whom yee call the faithfull Brothers of England, miſliked that enterpriſe, and wrote againſt it.

Wee know, that God hath determined this matter long ſithence: For thus he ſaith: Si Homo moriatur abſque Filio, ad Filiam eius tranſibit Hæreditas: If a Man die without a Sonne, his inheritance ſhall paſſe vnto his Daughter. And S. Auguſtine ſaith: Lata eſt Romæ Lex illa Voconia, Ne quis Hæredem Fœminam faceret, nec Vnicam Filiam. Qua Lege quid iniquius dici, aut cogitari poſſit, ignoro: There was a Law made in Rome, called Lex Voconia, That no man ſhould conuey his inheritance vnto a Woman, no not vnto his onely Daughter. Then which Law I know not, what may be more wickedlie thought or ſpoken. Numer. 27. Aug. de Ciuit. lib. 3. cap. 21.

But, God bee thanked, that of his Mercie, hath now raiſed vp vnto vs a Woman of ſuch Wiſdome, Learning, Clemencie, Grauitie, Iudgement, Gouernment, and other moſt Noble and Princelie Vertues, as haue not beene ſeene in manie Men. God increaſe her dailie with his Holie Spirit, and make her an old Mother in Iſrael. Amen.

Regiment of Wome.

Of your ſturdie blaſts and ſecret breathings, M. Harding, I will ſay nothing. Yee may yet remember, which of your Louanian companie it was, that in the time of that Noble Prince of Bleſſed Memorie, King Edward the Sixth, ſaide in open Parliament, Woe bee to that Kingdome, the Prince whereof is a Child. And afterward, ſeeing the Queenes Maieſtie that now is, placed in her eſtate, boldlie and openly confeſſed a great ouerſight, and much follie in your former doings, for that in the late time of your vnruly gouernment, ye had hewen downe the boughes, and left the Stocke ſtanding ſtill. Gods ſecret Prouidence, M. Harding, breathed againſt you, and confounded your doings. Power onely ye lacked: but good will ye lacked none.

M. Harding.

M. Harding.

For anſwer to all this, yee ioine your ſelues with Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as though yee were guiltie heerein no more then they. Preſumptuouſlie ſaid. But the matter is not ſo anſwered. And yet ye run on at large in that common place, & verie vainly or rather Luciferlike, compare your ſelues with the Apoſtles. But Sirs, ſtay heere, run no further: ye are ſoone ſtopped. The caſe is not like pardie. Theſe be but your words. In the Apoſtles was the truth indeed, ſo was it in the Holy Prophets, and thoſe firſt Bleſſed men of the Church. The truth ye boaſt & crake ſo much of, is not that truth. Talke leſſe like Rhetoricians, & prooue vs that ye haue truth, like honeſt men. And then talke on: but that can ye neuer doe, ſo long as ye remaine out of the Church, and enemies to the Church. * But what ſpend I words in vaine? your hearts be hardened, your eies be blinded, your eares be ſtopped.

* O Vaine brauerie!

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Heere is profound ſtuffe, M. Harding, for a Doctor of Diuinity. To anſwer you with your owne vaine words, indeede yee ſpend your words in vaine.

The Apologie, Chap. 4. Diuiſion 2.

Fortie yeeres agoe, and vpward, it was an eaſie thing for them to deuiſe againſt vs theſe accurſed ſpeeches & other too, lower then theſe: when in the middeſt of the darkneſſe of that age, firſt began to ſpring, & to giue ſhine ſome one glimmering beame of Truth, vnknowen at that time, & vnheard of: when alſo Martin Luther, and Hulderike Zuinglius, beeing moſt excellent men, euen ſent of God, to giue light to the whole World, Firſt came vnto the knowledge and preaching of the Goſpell: when as yet the thing was but new, & the ſucceſſe thereof vncertaine: and when mens mindes ſtood doubtfull and amazed, and their eares open to all ſlanderous tales: and when their could bee imagined againſt vs no fact ſo deteſtable, but the people then would ſoone beleeue it, for the nouelty & ſtrangeneſſe of the matter. For ſo did Symmachus, ſo did Celſus, ſo did Iulianus, ſo did Porphyrius the old foes to the Goſpell, attempt in times paſt to accuſe all Chriſtians of Sedition and Treaſon, before that either Prince or people were able to know, who thoſe Chriſtians were, what they profeſſed, what they beleeued, or what was their meaning.

(a) Vntruth, malicious and ſlanderous for Zuinglius was a goodly Preacher, and no Rutter.

(b) This blaſphemie toucheth Gods prouidēce. For why not as well from Wittenberg, as from Rome:

(c) Vntiuth, fond & childiſh. This is M. Hardings ſobrietie.

M. Harding.

As ye runne foorth your race, and with lying amplification boaſt and brag of the Truth of your Doctrine, and of the Innocencie of your demeanour yee fall into a great inconuenience and ouerſight. Was the light extinguiſhed in all Iſrael, till that leaud Friar came, and Zuinglius (a) the ſwart Rutter? Shall wee now change the old ſong of Micheas the Prophet, Out of Sion ſhall come the Law, and the word of our Lord from Ieruſalem, and ſing a new Song: Out of (b) Wittenberg is come the Goſpell, and the word of the Lord from Zurich and Geneua? If Luther and Zuinglius firſt came to the knowledge and preaching of the Goſpell, what meant Chriſt to breake his promiſe, who ſaid, I will be with you all daies till the end of the world?

Againe how forgot ye the old Prouerbe, a liar it behoueth to be mindfull? Remember ye not how this is (c) contrarie to all your owne Doctrine? For ſay ye not otherwheres, that God had alwaies his number of the elect and his inuiſible Church? Therefore this muſt ye recant and call backe againe, or elſe ſhall ye pull all the rabble of ſundrie your owne ſects vpon your ſhoulders, whoſe filthie railings and vile vpbraidings poore ſoules ye ſhall neuer be able to abide.

Wittenberg.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

It is not worth the while, to anſwer him that ſaith nothing. Sion, from whence ye ſay, the Law of God iſſued firſt, was in thoſe daies, as much diſdained of your Fathers, as is this day of you Geneua or Wittenberg. Origen ſaith of Celſus the Heathen: Chriſtianum Dogma affirmat à Barbaris cepiſſe ortum, hoc eſt, à Iudæis: Hee ſaith, that the Chriſtian Faith tooke her firſt beginning from Barbarous people, that is to ſay, from the Iewes. Cicero ſaith: Iudæi, & Syri, Gentes natæ ſeruituti? The Iewes and Syrians, Nations borne to bondage.

Orig. contra Celſum, lib. 1. Cicero de Prouin. Conſul. Chryſoſt. contra Gentes. Nazianzen. de Natali Chriſti.

And Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of Iulianus the Renegate, ſaith thus: Galilæos nos pro Chriſtianis, in edictis ſuis appellauit: In his proclamations, in the ſtead of Chriſtians, he called vs ſcornefully Galileans: noting thereby the vileneſſe of the place, from whence the Goſpell of Chriſt firſt proceeded. But Nazianzene ſaith: Honora paruam Bethleem, quæ te induxit in Paradisum: (Despise not, but rather) Honour that little Bethleem, that hath led thee into Paradise.

in

The sound of this simple Barbarous despised people was heard throwout the whole World. God causeth his Light to shine out of the Darke: His Holy Spirit breatheth where he thinketh good: Hee hath no regard of Persons, or choice of Places, but, as S. Peter said vnto Cornelius, In every Nation, whosoeuer feareth him, and worketh righteousnesse, is accepted before him. God chooseth the weake things of the World, to confound the strong. Gods Holy Name be blessed, that of so little, and so simple a despised Mustard seed hath now raised vp so great a Tree: and triumpheth the Gospell of Christ his Sonne in euery place throwout the World. Pſal. 19. Iohan. 2. Actor. 10. Matth. 13. 1. Corint. 1.

What meant Christ (say you) to breake his promise? Nay, what meant you, M. Harding, so shamefully to breake Christs Commandement, and yet to charge him with his Promise? God is true in all his Promises, and shall preuaile when he is soe lewdly iudged. There is no fault in God, or his Christ: The fault is in you, that haue made of the House of God, a Caue of Theeues. Christ neuer made any such special Promise vnto the Pope, that whatsoeuer it should please him to say, or doe, he should neuer erre, nor doe amisse. Yee presume ouer much of Gods Promises. Nay though Antichrist should be Pope, yet should Christs Promises be true still. Wittenberg. Church Inuisible.

It is true, that God hath alwaies a Church Inuisible, and a number of Elect, knowen only to himselfe alone. Neither is this our only saying. S. Paul also saith the same: Firmum stat Fundamentum Dei, habens hoc sigillum, Nouit Dominus qui sint sui: This Foundation standeth sound and firme, hauing this Seale, The Lord knoweth who be his own. Elias thought all the Godly in Israel had beene slaine: and not one left aliue. But God said vnto him: I haue saued vnto my selfe seuen thousand men, that neuer bowed their knee before Baal. God knew them: but Elias knew them not. To the iudgement of man they were inuisible. Therefore S. Augustine saith: Secundùm occultam Dei Prædestinationem, plurimæ sunt foris Oues: plurimi Lupi intus. Nouit enim, ac signatos habet, qui nec eum, nec se norunt: According to Gods Secret Predestination there be many Sheepe without the Church: and many Wolues within the Church. For hee knoweth them, and hath them marked, that know neither themselues, nor God neither. 2. Timoth. 2. 1. Reg. 19. Roman. 11. Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 45.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☜ As for the whole Body and Companie of all them that be called Christians, reckoned vniuersally together, which you call the Church Catholike, Cardinall Cusanus calleth it, Ecclesia Coniecturalis: A Church Coniecturall: for that we know it, not by certaintie, but by Coniecture. For in this Church, thus largely taken, they that seeme Predestinate before Men, are often times wicked, and Reprobate before God: And they that before men seeme the Members of Christ, are often times before God the Members of Antichrist. Cusanus words be these: Oportet in Sensibili Mundo Sensibilibus Signis de ipsa Christi Ecclesia Coniecturam sumere, cùm aliter attingi nequeat rationis veritas, &c. In this Sensible World that is heere beneath, wee must learne by Sensible Tokens to know the very Church of Christ: For otherwise we are not able to reach the Truth. Therefore this Coniecturall Church in this Sensible World, according to such a short knowledge as this World may yeeld, is indeed the true Church: Notwithstanding, according to the Coniecture that we gather by Tokens, it receiueth as well the Godly that be ioined to Christ as also the Vngodly, that be diuided from Christ. This Church standeth of them that declare by Sensible and Outward Tokens, that they be partakers of Christ, as they bee that Confesse Christ to be the Sonne of God. And therefore this Church hath certaine Holie Tokens, or Sacraments, (as the Sacrament of Baptisme, and the Sacrament of our Lords Supper) ordeined to that end, that thereby wee may know them that bee of Christ, so farre forth, as by such Tokens Coniecturall knowledge may be gathered, Therefore I say, That this Church of Christ (in this generall taking) by this Coniecturall Iudgement is counted holie, notwithstanding wicked Men and Hypocrites couer themselues vnder the same Outward Tokens, and receiue Baptisme, and the Lords Supper, as well as the Godly. Thus the generall or outward Church of God is Visible, and may be seene: but the very true Church of Gods Elect is Inuisible, and cannot be seene or discerned by man: but is only knowen to God alone. ☜ ☞ Nicol. Cusan. De potest. Ecclesia Romana epist. 3.

Thus the number of Gods Elect, yea before the comming of Christ, in the time of darknesse, was euermore certaine: yet afterward the knowledge of the Gospell, by the Mouths of the Apostles, was abundantly carried abroad into the ends of all the World.

Both these parts, M. Harding, may stand well together, and are nothing contrarie to our Doctrine. Be the number of the Faithfull more, or lesse, yet the Truth of God is one for euer.

The Apologie, Chap. 5. Diuision 1.

Ciuill Magistrate.

But now, sithence our very enemies do see, and cannot denie, but wee euer in all our words and writings haue diligently put the people in mynde of their duty, to obey their Princes and Magistrates, yea though they be wicked, (for this doth very triall & experience sufficientiy teach, and all mens eies, whosoeuer, & whersoeuer they be, do wel see and witnesse for vs) it was a foule part of them to charge vs with these things: and, seeing they could find no new & late faults, therefore to seek to procure vs enuie only with stale and outworne Lies. Wee giue our Lord God thankes, whose only cause this is, there hath yet at no time been any such example in all the Realmes, Dominions, and Common Weales, which haue receiued the Gospell. For wee haue ouerthrowen no Kingdome: We haue decaied no mans Power or right: We haue disordered no Common Wealth. There continue in their owne accustomed state, and Ancient Dignity, the Kings of our Countrey of England, the Kings of Denmarke, the Kings of Suecia, the Dukes of Saxonie, the Counties Palentine, the Marquesses of Brandeburgh, the Lantsgraues of Hessia, the Common Wealth of the Heluetians and Rhetians, and the Free Cities, as Argentine, Basile, Frankford, Vlme, Augusta, and Norenberg; doe all, I say, abide in the same Authority and estate, wherein they haue been heertofore; or rather in a much better, for that by meanes of the Gospell, they haue their people more obedient vnto them then euer they had before. Let them goe, I pray you, into those places, where at this present, through Gods goodnesse and mercie, the Gospell is taught. Where is there more Maiesty? Where is there lesse Arrogancy and Tyranny? Where is the Prince more honoured? Where is the people lesse vnruly? Where hath there at any time, either the Common Wealth, or the Church been in more quiet: Perhaps ye will say, from the first beginning of this Doctrine the common sort euery where began to rage and to rile thorow Germanie. Allow it were so: yet Martin Luther, the publisher and setter forward of this Doctrine, did write maruellous vehemently and sharply against them, and reclaimed them home to peace and obedience.

M. Harding.

Your impudencie of lying hath no measure, nor end. But we will say little heere, hauing said enough already in reproofe of your falshood. Wee leaue you to the wide world, who seeth, and almost feeleth your lies.

But I maruell not a little, that in this place specially, where ye speake of the good order that your Gospell breedeth, ye be not ashamed to make mention of Martin Luther. Good God how much could we, if we were so disposed, allege out of his seditious and Heretical bookes, by him* written against the Power of lawfull Magistrates! At this time let one place suffice for all. Luthers words be these: Inter Christianos nullus neque potest, neque debet esse Magistratus, sed &c. Among Christian men non can nor ought to be a Magistrate, but each one is to other equally subiect: After the Apostles saying, Thinking all others better then your selues, &c. Againe, Be ye humble all one to another. Whereto Christ accordeth when he saith, When thou art called to the marriage feast, goe, and sit downe lowest of all. Among Christian men none is superiour saue one, and only Christ. And what superiority or Magistrate can bee there, where all be equall, and haue right, power, riches, and honour all alike? Furthermore, none coueteth to be ouer other, but all will be vnder one another. Where such men be, though one would, yet can he not make a Magistrate to beare rule ouer others, sith that nature suffereth not to haue superiours, where no man will, nor may be a superiour. And where such kind of men is, there be they not Christian men, after the true sort of Christian men. Thus farre Martin Luther.

In libro de Seculari potest. Luther admitteth no Ciuill Magistrate.

He perswaded them to peace, when there was scarcely any left that could beare a club. First he stirred vp his Disciple Thomas Munzer in Thuringia, who was the Rebels Preacher. After that he excused him of seditious preaching to the Duke of Saxonie Prince Electour, trusting if Munzer were let alone, the matter should well goe forward.

* Vntruth, malicious and slanderous. Read the Answer.

* Nothing else but meere Vntruth. For Luther called him the Preacher of Satan.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

To dissemble the rest of your Untruths, and your immoderate and vnciuill bitternesse M. Harding, proceeding from the vnquiet and vnsauoury humours of your heart; where ye say, Doctor Luther admitteth no Ciuill Magistrate, and note the same so specially in your margin, I maruell much that your paper blushed not in your behalfe. Read his Bookes thorowout thorowout, and consider the quiet gouernment both of the Common Wealths and also of the Churches of Germanie: and yee shall finde that no man euer, neither by word, nor by example, more aduanced the Authority of the Ciuill Magistrate. To leaue all other his notable Sentences to this purpose, against the Rebels of whom yee speake, being then in the field against their Lords, he wrote thus: God commandeth all men vniuersally to obey the Magistrate with feare and reuerence, &c. Againe: Yee take the Sword and withstand the Magistrate, whom God hath appointed. Is not this rashly to abuse the name of God? Ciuill Magistrate. Iohan Sleidan. Lib. 5.

But he saith: Among Christians neither may be, nor ought to be any Magistrate. O, M. Harding, nothing could haue found fault heerewith, but only intemperate and mœre malice. For Luther speaketh not these words of the outward Ciuill Gouernment, whereof onely we speake now, but onely of our Inward Band, and Obedience towards God. And in this respect there is no King, nor Prince indeed, nor may be any. In this sense S. Paul saith: There is no Iew, There is no Gentile: There is no Lord, there is no Seruant: There is no Man, there is no Woman: For all you are one in Christ Iesus. S. Paul denieth not, but Iew, Gentile, Lord, Seruant, Man, and Woman, remaine still in their seuerall states and kinds as they were before. But in Christ Iesus, he saith, there is no regard of any such difference. In Ciuill Gouernment a King is a King, and so hath God commanded him to be known. But after that wee bee once come to the reuerence and obedience of Gods will, there God onely is the King: and the King, be he neuer so mighty, is but a Subiect. So saith S. Ambrose to the Emperour Valentinian: Noli te extollere, Imperator: Sed si vis diutiùs Imperare, esto Deo subditus. Scriptum est: Quæ Dei, Deo: quæ Cæsaris, Cæsari: O my Lord, aduance not your selfe: But if ye will remaine long in Empire, be subiect vnto God. It is written, Giue to God that belongeth to God: Giue to Cæsar that belongeth to Cæsar. Galat. 3. Coloss. 3. Ambros. Lib. 5 Epist. 33.

So saith the Emperour Valentinian the elder of himselfe: Ego sum in sorte plebis: I am (in this respect) as one of the people. To like purpose Iulius Cæsar, being an Heathen Prince, said sometime of himselfe at Rome in the Councell house: Equidem ad alia omnia quæ pro vobis gerenda sunt & Consul sum, & Dictator: quod autem ad iniuriam cuiquam faciendum attinet, sum priuatus: Touching all other affaires that ought to be taken in hand for your sake, I am both your Consull, and your Dictator: But as touching any wrong to be done to any man, I am as a priuate man, without Office. So said the Heathen Renegate Iulianus the Emperour: Principes vbi ad limen Deiubri venerint, perinde sunt atque priuati: When the Princes and Magistrates once come within the entrie of the Temple, they are none other but as Priuate Men. And this is all that traiterous and horrible Iudgement that, as it pleaseth you to say, Luther had of the Ciuill Magistrate. Sozo. lib. 6. c. 7. Dion. lib 43. ὡς δὲ τὰ κοινὰ πάντα μοι ἰδιώτης εἰμί. Sozom. lib. 5. cap. 15.

Where yee say, hee stirred vp his Disciple Thomas Munzer in Thuringia, to bee the Preacher to the Rebels, it is no strange matter to see your tongue run riot. Luther himselfe writing thereof vnto the Rebels, saith thus: Satanas sub Euangelij pretextu, multos hoc tempore seditiosos, & planè sanguinarios Doctores excitauit: Satan vnder the pretence of the Gospell, hath stirred vp in these daies many seditious and Bloody Doctours: Meaning thereby Munzer, and other like his companions. So farre was Luther from the encouraging of Munzer to that wicked purpose that he said, Hee was set a worke by the Diuell. Iohan. Sleidan. Lib. 5.

The Apology, Chap. 5. Diuision 2.

But whereas it is wont sometime to be obiected by persons wanting skil touching the Heluetians change of state, and killing of Leopoldus the Duke of Austria, and restoring by force their Country to liberty, all that was done, as appeareth plainely by all Stories, for two hundred and threescore yeeres past, or aboue, in the time of Pope Boniface the Eight, when the Authority of the Bishop of Rome was in greatest follity, about two hundred yeeres before Huldericus Zuinglius either began to teach the Gospell, or yet was borne. And euer sithence that time they haue had all things still and quiet, not only from forraine Enemies, but also from all ciuill dissention. And if it were a sinne in the Heluetians, to deliuer their own Countrey from forraine gouernment, specially when they were so proudly and tyrannously oppressed, yet to burden vs with other mens faults, or them with the faults of their Forefathers, it is against all right and reason.

M. Harding.

Now your spirit is not content with that ye haue railed already against the Pope & Holy Church, but it moueth you againe to raue and crie out. But whether with more malice, or reason, let vs indifferently consider.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision. 1.

BUt O immortall God: And wil the B. of Rome accuse vs of Treason? Will he teach the People to obey and follow their Magistrats? Or hath he any regard at all of the Maiesty of a Prince? Why doth hee then, as none of the old Bishops of Rome euer did, suffer himselfe to bee called of his flatterers, Lord of Lords, as though he would haue al Kings and Princes, who and whatsoeuer they be, to be his vnderlings? Why doth he vaunt himselfe to be King of Kings, and to haue Kingly Royalty ouer his Subiects? Why compelleth he al Emperours & Princes to sweare to him fealty, and true obedience? Why doth he boast, that the Emperors Maiesty is a thousand fold inferior to him: and that for this reason specially, because God hath made two lights in Heauen: and because Heauen and Earth were created, not in two Beginnings, but in one? Why hath he & his fellowes (like Anabaptists & Libertines, to the end they might run on more licentiously and carelesly) shaken off the yoke, and exempted themselues from being vnder a Ciuil Power? Why hath he his Legates (as much to say, as most suttle spies) lying in wait in all Kings Courts, Councels, and Priuie Chambers? Why doth he, when hee list, set the Christian Princes one against another, and at his own pleasure trouble the whole World with debate & discord? Why doth he Excommunicate, and command to be taken, as a Heathen & a Pagan, any Christian Prince that renounceth his Authority? And why promiseth he his Indulgences and his Pardons largely to any that will (what way soeuer it be) kil any of his enemies? Doth he maintaine Empires and Kingdomes? Or doth he once desire that common quiet should be prouided for? You must pardon vs, good Reader, though we seem to vtter these things more vtterly and bitingly then it becommeth Diuines to doe. For both the shamefulnesse of the matter, and also the desire of rule in the Bishop of Rome is so exceeding and outragious, that it could not well be vttered with other words, or more mildely. For he is not ashamed to say in open assembly, that all Iurisdiction of al the Kings and Princes of the world dependeth of himselfe. And to feed his ambition and greedinesse of rule, hee hath pulled in peeces the Empire of Rome, and vexed and rent whole Christendome asunder. Faithly & traiterously also did he release the Romans, the Italians, and himselfe too, of the oath whereby they and he were straitly bound to be true to the Emperour of Grecia, and stirred vp the same Emperours Subiects to forsake him: and calling Carolus Magnus out of France into Italy, made him Emperour: such a thing as neuer was seen before. He put Childericus the French King, being no euill Prince, beside his Realm only because he fancied him not, & wrongfully placed Pipin in his roome. Againe, after he had cast out King Phillip, if he could haue brought it to passe, he had determined and appointed the Kingdome of France to Albertus the King of Romans. He vtterly destroied the state of the most flourishing City and Common-weale of Florence his owne native Countrey, and brought it out of a free and peaceable state, to bee gouerned at the pleasure of one man: He brought to passe by his procurement, that whole Sauoy on the one side was miserably spoiled by the Emperour Charles the fifth: and on the other side by the French King, so that the poore vnfortunate Duke had scant one City left him to hide his head in.

M. Harding

It is a great eie sore to the Ministers of Antichrist, to see the Vicar of Christ aboue the Lords and Kings of this world: to see Princes and Emperours promise and sweare obedience vnto him. But they that are the faithfull subiects of the Church of God, think it no absurditty, that the Shepheard be set, not only aboue the Lambs & Ewes of the Church, but also aboue the Wethers & Rams themselues. It is a very great folly for thē to find fault with the superioritie of the B. of Rome, who can neuer proue that he is not the Vicar of Christ. If he were not his Vicar, yet being a Bishop, he is aboue any temporal Prince (a) concerning his Priestly office. But sith Christ said to Peter, Vpon this Rocke I will build my Church, and Hell gates shall not preuaile against it, (b) Barke vntill your bellies breake, ye that be the bellhounds of Luther & Zuinglius litour, or rather of Satans, your & their chiefe Master, shal not preuaile against the Apostolike See of Peter. It hath withstanded al Diuels & Heretiks a thousand fiue hundred yeeres; and thinke ye that your selues be stronger then Arius? It grieueth you that the Pope is higher then the Emperour, not for any loue ye beare to the Emperour, nor for hatred that yee haue to the Popes person, whom yee know not, but your quarrel is against Christ, whose person the Pope beareth. Or tel vs, I pray you, doth he cal himselfe any Princes or Emperours vicegerent, and not rather the (c) Vicar of Christ alone: Whom impugne ye then but Christ in his Vicar? Haue ye not read, Qui vos spernit, me spernit: He that despiseth you, despiseth me? Ye thought the Pope had no better text for his primacie and supreme authoritie then two lights which God made in Heauen. But if malice had not blinded you, in the verie same chapter of Innocentius the third (frō whence like a spider ye sucked that ye thought was worst) ye might haue seen another reason going before, where he said, Pontifex in spiritualibus antecellit, quæ tantò sunt temporalibus digniora, quantò anima præfertur corpori. The Bishop (said Innocentius) in spirituall matters passeth the (Emperour) which spiritual things are so much aboue the temporal, by how much the soule is preferred aboue the Bodie. How like ye that reason? Within a little after Innocentius bringeth forth another proofe: Where it was said to Ieremy the Prophet, who came (d) of the Priests race, and was a Priest himselfe, (e) Behold I haue set thee ouer Nations and Kingdomes, to the intent thou maist pul vp, and scatter, and build, & plant.

Then after that Innocentius had (f) by naturall reason and holy Scripture proued the highest Bishops superiority aboue Princes, he cōmeth in the third place not now to proue, but to make his former saying, already proued, more plaine, by alluding to that is written in the beginning of Genesis: Where Moses declareth how God made two lights in the Firmament of Heauen, A greater and a lesser. But this cannot sound in the eares of our new Preachers. They would not haue the guide of Heauenly things aboue the guide of earthly cares. They loue the earth, the flesh, the world, too wel to be of that mind, & therfore do aske why the Popes of Rome, like Anabaptists and Libertines, haue shaken off the yoke, and exempted themselues from al ciuill Powei. What yoke meane ye? The yoke of Infidels and Painyms?

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

We are not the Ministers of Antichrist, M. Harding, but the witnesses of the Truth of Christ. He is Antichrist, as S. Paul sheweth you, that sitteth in the Temple of God, and aduanceth himselfe aboue all that is called God. And to speake more particularly of the matter, by S. Gregories Iudgement, he is Antichrist, or the Forerunner of Antichrist, that calleth himselfe, The Vniuersall Bishop: and vaunteth himselfe as the King of Pride: And hath an Army of Priests prepared for him: And setteth himselfe, as Lucifer, aboue al his Brethren. These be the words of S. Gregory: By such colours hee blased out the Kingdome of Antichrist. Of him Cardinall Franciscus Zabarella saith thus: Papa facit quicquid libet, etiam illicita: & est plus quàm Deus: The Pope doth what him listeth, yea though it be vnlawfull: and is more then God. This is Antichrist, M. Harding, by the Iudgement of the wise and godly: and the supporters of him, whosoeuer and wheresoeuer they be, are the Ministers of Antichrist. It is great Arrogancie to aduaunce a Bishop aboue a King: notwithstanding, in some good meaning it may be true. So a Iudge, in knowledge of the Law: so a Doctor of Physicke, in his profession: So a Pilot, in knowledge of the Sea, and guiding of a Ship: so a Captaine, in Martiall affaires is aboue any King: And it behoueth a King bee hee neuer so wise or mightie, in euery of these seuerall faculties to be guided by them. And thus is the King inferiour, not only to a Bishop, as you say, but also to euery Inferiour Priest.

Pope aboue Kings and Emperors.

So S. Chrysostome saith of Christs Apostles: Omnem Terrarum Orbem peruaserunt, & omnibus Principibus fuerunt magis proprié Principes Regibus potentiores: The Apostles roued ouer the whole world, and were more Princelike indeed then the Princes themselues, and more puissant and mighty then the Kings.

Chrys. in Ps 44

So said the Emperour Valentinian vnto the people of Millaine: Eum collocate in pontificali Solio cui nos quoque moderatores Imperij nostra Capita submittamus: Place yee such a man in the Bishops Chaire, vnto whom we our selues that gouerne the Empire may stoop our Head.

Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 5. ὑμεῖς τὸν τοιοῦτον ἐπὶ θρόνου καθίσατε, ᾧ καὶ ἡμεῖς αὐτοκράτορες ὑποκλινοῦμεν τὰς κεφαλάς

For the Prince is bound to the obedience of Gods Word no lesse then if hee were a priuate Subiect. And if hee refuse to heare and reuerence the same, as the declaration of Gods Holy Will, he is accursed. But what is this, M. Harding to your purpose? Would you therefore, that the King should sweare his Obedience and allegeance vnto the Bishop?

In this respect, by your owne learning, any Simple Priest may wel be aboue the Pope. So saith your owne Doctor Panormitane: Papa tenetur Confiteri: & in eo actu Sacerdos est maior illo: The Pope is bound to Confesse himselfe: and in that act of Confession the Priest is aboue him. And againe: Papa non potest cogere Sacerdotem, vt reuelet confessionem: quia in illo actu Sacerdos est Maior quàm Papa: The Pope cannot compell a Priest to open that hath beene said vnto him in Confession. For in that act the Priest is greater then the Pope. Yet, I trow, ye would not therefore the Pope should sweare Obedience to a Priest.

Pope aboue Kings and Emperors.

This therefore, M. Harding, it is that grieueth vs, to see the poore stoole of Humility, whereon S. Peter sate, blowne vp now into a Mount of Pride: and the Pope to require Homage and Fealtie of Kings and Emperours, as of his Subiects. It grieueth vs to see you, and others your fellowes, in respect of the Pope, so much not onely to abase, but also vilely to abuse the Maiesty of them vnto whom Christ and his Apostles were alwaies obedient. Remember what one of yours hath written and published to the world in this behalfe. Stanislaus Orichouius saith thus: Tantum Sacerdos præstat Regi, quantum homo præstat bestiæ: Quantum Deus præstat Sacerdoti, tantum Sacerdos præstat Regi: Qui Regem anteponit Sacerdoti, is anteponit Creaturam Creatori: A Priest is so much aboue a King, as a Man is aboue a Beast: As much as God is better then the Priest, so much is the Priest better then the King. He that setteth the King before a Priest, setteth the Creature before the Creator.

Stanislaus Orichouius in Chimera, Fol. 97.

It grieueth vs to see S. Gregories words by S. Gregories Successors so proudly broken. For thus he wrote welneere a thousand yeres sithence, vnto the Emperour Mauritius, against Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, claiming then the same Vniuersall Authority that is now vsurped by the Pope: Ille coercendus est, qui Sanctæ Vniuersali Ecclesiæ iniuriam facit: qui corde tumet: qui gaudere de nomine Singularitatis appetit: qui honori quoque Imperij vestri se per priuatum vocabulum superponit: Your Maiesty must represse him that doth this wrong vnto the Holie Vniuersall Church: that swelleth in heart: that desireth to enioy a name of Singularity: that also by a Priuate Title (calling himselfe the Vniuersall Bishop) placeth himselfe ouer and aboue the Honour of your Empire.

Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 32.

Touching the knowledge of Gods Word, and cases of Religion, certaine it is, the King is inferiour to a Bishop. But if the Bishop be negligent, and doe not his office: or if he be wilfull, and doe it not rightly: or if he be ignorant, and cannot doe it; then is the Bishop vnder the Prince, subiect to his checke, and by him may be punished. So writeth the Emperour Constantinus vnto the people of Nicomedia: Si quis Episcoporum inconsultè tumultuatus sit, Ministri Dei, hoc est, mea executione, illius audacia coercebitur: If any Bishop vnaduisedly worke trouble, his boldnesse shall be represſed by the Order of Gods Minister, that is to say, by my execution. Therefore S. Paul saith: Let euery Soule be subiect to the Higher Powers. Whereunto S. Chrysostome addeth these words: Etiamsi Apostolus sit, etiamsi Euangelista, Etiamsi Propheta, siue quisquis tandem fueris. Neque enim Pietatem subuertit ista subiectio: Although thou be an Apostle, although thou be an Euangelist, although thou be a Prophet, or what one soeuer thou be, (yet be thou subiect to the higher Powers.) For Godlinesse is not hindered by such subiection.

Theodoret. lib. 1. cap. 19.

Chrys. ad Rom. Homil. 32.

Your quarrel (ye say) is against Christ: For his person the Pope beareth. Haue yee not read, He that despiseth you, despiseth me? Tell vs, I pray you, (say you) doth the Pope call himselfe any Princes or Emperours Vicegerent, and not rather the Vicar of Christ alone?

It forceth not greatly by what title the Pope list to claime. Hee cannot lightly want Authoritie, while he may pen his owne Commission. I trow, we may say of him, as Cicero said sometime of one in Rome: Asinius Senator Voluntarius: Lectus ipse à se: Asinius is a very willing Senatour, himselfe appointed and chosen by himselfe. Verily Antichrist shall sit in the Temple of God, euen in the place of Christ, and shall beare himselfe as Christs Vicar.

2. Thess. 2.

Howbeit, let the Pope doe the dutie of a Bishop: let him Exhort: let him Preach: let him Dispense Gods Mysteries: let him fulfill his Office: let him doe the part of an Euangelist: and we will loue him, and reuerence him, although not as Christs Vicar Generall, yet at least as a Bishop. Otherwise wee must say vnto him as S. Gregorie said sometime to Cyriacus the Bishop of Constantinople: Omnes Magnos esse & Honorabiles cupio, quorum tamen Honor Honori Omnipotentis Dei non detrahat. Nam quisquis se contra Deum Honorari appetit, mihi Honorabilis non est: I wish that all men should bee Great and Honourable so that their Honour be not preiudiciall to the Honour of Almighty God. For whosoeuer shall desire himselfe to be Honoured against God, shall not be Honourable vnto me.

Gregor Lib. 6. Epist. 28.

One high and worthy reason we alleged out of your Pope Innocentius the Third: The Sunne is higher and greater then the Moone: Ergo, The Pope is higher and greater then the Emperour. This Pope Innocentius is he, that ſaid, Either he would loſe his Miter, or elſe he would pull the Emperour Philips Imperiall Crowne from his head. Carion. in Innocen 3.

Malice (ye ſay) blinded vs: otherwiſe we might haue ſeene other his more ſubſtantiall, and better reaſons. So were it needfull, M. Harding: for certainly this reaſon is very ſimple. But the beſt of his Reaſons ye can finde, is this:

Pope aboue Kings and Emperors.

The Soule is aboue the Body.

Ergo, The Pope is aboue the Emperour.

And how like you this Reaſon? ſay you. Verily, as a reaſon without ſenſe, or Reaſon: ſuch as be many of your making. By the like Reaſon you may ſay:

The Cooke is alwaies about the Fire:

The Fire is the higheſt of all Elements:

Ergo, Of all Sciences the Cookes occupation is the higheſt.

By the ſame reaſon ye may proue, that the higheſt Emperour, is ſubiect not onely to the Pope, but alſo to euery Simple Prieſt. Yea further, of the ſame Reaſon there muſt néeds follow a great inconuenience: that the Pope himſelfe, foraſmuch as hee Miniſtreth Sacraments, teacheth, exhorteth and occupieth himſelfe in Spirituall affaires leſt of all others, is therefore the loweſt, and baſeſt of all his Clergy.

Now M. Harding, I beſeech you, conſider the weight, and drift of your owne Reaſon.

The Popes charge is Spirituall, ſay you.

Ergo, The Emperour is bound to ſweare obedience to the Pope. By what Reaſon may this Reaſon be proued? Verily by the ſame good Reaſon ye may ſay:

Euery Prieſts charge is Spirituall.

Ergo, The King is bound to ſweare obedience to euery Prieſt. Yet by ſuch proper Reaſons the Pope hath aduanced himſelfe aboue all the States and Princes of the World.

But your holy Father Innocentius, leſt he ſhould ſéeme to want Scriptures, for proofe heereof, alleageth alſo the words of God ſpoken vnto the Prophet Hieremy: Behold I haue ſet thee ouer Nations and Kingdomes, to the intent, that thou maiſt pull downe, and ſcatter, and build, and plant. Ergo, he ſaith, the Emperour is ſubiect vnto the Pope. Theſe proofes (ye ſay) our Defenders could not finde. Further ye ſay, in your ſober maner: When will you forſake the Schoole of lying: Truly, if there bee any ſuch Schoole, M. Harding, you may claime of good right to be the Maſter. We are as farre from lying as you are from ſaying the truth. But what make theſe words of Hieremie, for the Biſhop of Rome? Will ye ſay, that the Prophet Hieremie was the Pope? Or that the King then was ſworne to be ſubiect and loiall vnto him? What King or Prince did Hieremy ſubdue? What People or Countrey did he euer ouerthrow? One of your owne Doctours ſaith: Hieremias nullum Regem depoſuit. Sed intelligitur poſitus ſupra Gentes & Regna, quaſi habens authoritatem ſuper ea in annunciando & predicando Vera. Non de deſtructione Regum mundi, ſed de deſtructione Vitiorum, & plantatione Fidei & morum. Vt illud Pauli, Dei ædificatio eſtis: Dei Agricultura eſtis: Hieremy depoſed no King. But we vnderſtand, that he was placed ouer Nations and Kingdomes, as hauing authority ouer the ſame in opening and preaching of the Truth. He ſpeaketh not of the ouerthrowing of the kingdomes of the World, but of the ouerthrowing of Vices, and of the planting of Faith and maners. In this ſenſe S. Paul ſaith to the Corinthians. Ye are Gods building: ye are Gods tillage. Hierom. 1. Ioh. de Pariſijs, cap. 15. 1. Cor. 3.

The very Gloſſe it ſelfe ſaith: Vt euellas Regnum Satanæ: vt plantes bona: vt ædifices Eccleſiam: I haue placed thee to roote vp (not the Kingdomes of the World, nor the ſtates of Common Weales but) the Kingdome of Satan: to plant good things: to build vp the Church. His whole Commiſſion was limited with theſe words: Poſui Verbum meum in Ore tuo: I haue put my word in thy Mouth, ſaith the Lord. Hierem. 1.

Such authority had Elias ouer King Achab: And therefore he ſaid vnto him: It is not I that trouble Iſraell, but thou, and thy Fathers houſe. Such authority had Iohn Baptiſt ouer King Herod: and therefore he ſaid vnto him: It is not lawfull for thee, to haue thy Brothers Wife. 3. Reg. 18.

If it be true, that ye would ſéeme to ſay, that the Popes Superiority ſtandeth onely in things Spirituall, wherefore then doth Pope Nicolas ſay, Chriſtus Beato Petro Terreni ſimul & Cœleſtis imperij Iura commiſit: Chriſt hath giuen to bleſſed Peter, the right as wel of the worldly, as alſo of the Heauenly Empire? Wherefore then did Pope Adrian thus write vnto the Emperor Fredericus: Romę noſtra Sedes eſt: Imperatoris eſt Aquis in Arduenna, quæ eſt Sylua Galliæ. Imperator, quod habet, totum habet a nobis, Sicut Zacharias tranſtulit Imperium a Græcis ad Teutonicos: ita nos poſſumus illud transferre ab Alemannis ad Græcos. Ecce in poteſtate noſtra eſt, vt demus illud cui volumus. Propterea conſtituti ſumus Diſt. 22. Mediolanenſis. Auentinus in Adrian. 4. Anno 1154.

sumus à Deo super Gentes & Regna, vt destruamus, & euellamus, & ædificemus, & plantemus: My Seat is in the City of Rome. The Emperours Seat is at Acon in Ardenne, which is a Forrest in France. Whatsoeuer the Emperour hath, he hath it of vs. As Pope Zacharias translated the Empire from Græcia into Germany, so may we againe translate the same frō the Germans to the Greekes. Behold, it is in our power to bestow the Empire vpon whom wee list. Therefore are we appointed by God ouer Nations and Kingdomes, to pull down, to root vp, to build and to plant againe. This authority, I trow, reacheth somewhat further then only to causes Spirituall. One of your owne Doctors saith: Magis esset acceptum Deo, quòd per Solum Pontificem Mundus in omnibus regeretur: It were more acceptable vnto God, that the world in all matters (both Spirituall and Temporall) were gouerned only by the Pope.

Ioh. de Parisijs, cap. 12. That Innocentius addeth of the Sun and the Moone (ye say) is not a Reason, but a Similitude. This thing may easily be granted. For indeed it is a Similitude vtterly voide of either Wit, or Reason. But who taught the Pope so childishly to play with Similitudes, thereby to aduance himselfe, and to abase the Empire of the World? Who told him, that the Pope is the Sunne, and the Emperour the Moone? Or, that the Emperour is so farre inferiour to the Pope, as the Moone is inferiour to the Sunne? Isidorus liued fiue hundred yeeres before Pope Innocentius, saith quite contrary: Per Solem intelligitur Regnum, & per Lunam intelligitur Sacerdotium: By the Sunne we vnderstand the Kingdome: and by the Moone we vnderstand the Priesthood. Whereby he giueth vs to consider, contrary to the iudgement of your good Father Pope Innocentius, that, as the Moone is inferiour to the Sunne, so is the Pope inferiour to the Emperour.

M. Harding.

* Vntruth, fond and peeuish. For Sylvester was dead long before Constantinus was Christened.

* Vntruth, too vaine for a child Why should M. Har. be so vain? There is not one true word in all this tale.

But when Constantine was Baptized he gaue place to * S. Sylvester then Bishop of Rome, and to all other Successors of S. Peter. O how that irketh your hearts, that so great an Emperor, and the first that openly professed Christianity, should by the same holy Ghost, who called him to the Faith of Christ, be made to * depart from that Citie, which ruled the world, and to yeeld his owne Palace partly a Church to our Sauiour Christ, partly a dwelling house for the Bishops of Rome? Aske of Constantine, why he submitted his necke to S. Sylvester. We haue cause to thinke that Constantius the Heretike, sonne of Constantine, was not very glad of his Fathers doing. And yet God suffered him not to returne & dwell at Rome, but to leaue that Citie free to the Rulers of the Church.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Constantine (ye say) gaue ouer the Citie of Rome, and all the West part of the Empire to the Pope, and to his Successors for euer. And this thing (ye say) irketh our hearts full sore. Yea verily, M. Harding, it irketh vs much in your behalfe, to see you, a man of Wisdome and Learning, to warrant such follies without blushing. This whole Donation of Constantine, whereupon ye build the Popes whole kingdome, hath not shew sufficient to mocke a child. The effect and sense thereof is this, that Constantinus the Emperour, the third day after he was Christened in the honour of S. Peter willingly left all the West part of the Empire, and departed to Bizantium, which is now called Constantinople, to dwell in the East: and that he gaue the whole Emperiall and Ciuill Dominion, not only of the City of Rome, but also of Italie, France, Spaine, Arragone, Portugall, England, Germany, Scotland, Ireland, Poole, Denmarke, Sueden, and Hungarie to the Pope. This doubtlesse being true, had beene a lolly, liberall, and a Princely gift. And one of your friends saith: Volunt aliqui, quòd ratione huius Doni, Summus Pontifex Imperator est: & quòd potest instituere & destituere Reges, sicut Imperator: Some say, that by meane of this gift the Pope is an Emperour, and may set vp, and pull downe Kings, as an Emperour.

The Donation of Constantine.

Ioh. de Parisijs, cap. 22.

But Pius Secundus being himselfe afterward Bishop of Rome, saith: Dicta Pallea, Constantinus, falsa est: The said Decree (named Constantinus, containing Constantine the Emperours Donation, or Charter) is vtterly false. So saith Antoninus the Archbishop of Florence, Valla, Volaterane, Hieronymus, Cathalanus, Otho Frisingensis, and others moe. Of this Fable we shall haue occasion to speake hereafter. Here, M. Harding, the Pope himselfe telleth you, that you maintaine his Vanity by a False Decree.

Pius in Dialog. fol. 21.

Constantius the Heretike, son vnto Constantinus, as you say, much misliked his Fathers doing. Nay, M. Harding, if Constantius were aliue, he would rather finde fault in your discretion, that report such Follies of his Fathers doings. Where ye say, God suffered him not to returne, and to dwell in Rome, it passeth the depth of your Diuinity to search vp the causes and secrets of Gods sufferance. Although Constantius being encumbred with dangerous warres, and great affaires, were forced to stay in other Countries, and could not haue leasure to returne to Rome, yet he still continued the Lord of Rome, as also did a great number of other Emperours that followed after him. Therefore Pope Bonifacius thus wrote vnto the Emperour Honorius: Roma est Vrbs vestræ manſuetudinis: Rome is your Maiesties City. Likewise Pope Agatho writeth vnto the the Emperour Conſtantinus: Hæc eſt Vrbs Seruilis Maieſtatis veſtræ: This is your Maieſties bond Citie. And Conſtantinus the Emperour himſelfe ſaith: Dono Archiepiſcopo Antiquæ noſtræ Romæ: To Donus the Archbiſhop of our City of old Rome. But what need moe words? The caſe is ſo cleere, that no man of learning can call it in queſtion. In ſexta. Synod Conſtan. Act. 4. In eadem Synodo, Actione, 1.

Briefly touching this fond fable of Conſtantines Donation, Cardinall Cuſanus ſaith thus: Donationem diligenter expendens, reperi in ipſamet Scriptura manifeſta argumenta Confictionis & Falſitatis: Diligently weighing the Donation of Conſtantine, I haue found in the very penning thereof manifeſt arguments of forging and falſhood. Theſe, M. Harding, be the Records and Preſidents of moſt certaine and moſt ancient memorie, that ye would haue publiſhed vnto the world. By ſuch monuments your Pope claimeth the right and poſſeſſion of the Empire. And your friends maruel, that ye can defend ſuch falſhood and forgery, ſo well knowne and ſo manifeſt, for very ſhame. Nicol. Cuſan. De Donatione Conſtantini.

Legates.

The being of the Popes Legates and Ambaſſadours in Princes Courts, is a thing no leſſe conuenient, then it is meet for him, that hath cure of many flockes of ſheepe, to ſet his ſeruants as watch-men in euery part, where ſuch flockes doe feed.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

In what ſtead theſe Legates ſtand the Church of God, it may appeare by theſe few vttered therof by Camotenſis: Legati Papæ ita debacchantur in Prouincijs, ac ſi ad flagellandum Eccleſiam Satan egreſſus eſſet à facie Domini: The Popes Legates doe ſo rage in all Countries, as if Satan were gone out before the face of God, to ſcourge the Church. And Machiauel ſaith: There haue béene few warres or commotions enflamed theſe many late yeers but by the meane and whiſpering of theſe Legates. What other Doctrine they teach, or what other good they doe, it were hard to ſay. And therefore the Fathers in the Councel of Aphrica refuſed vtterly, to haue any ſuch Legates ſent amongſt them: For thus they write vnto the Pope: Vt aliqui, tanquam à tuæ Sanctitatis latere, mittantur: nulla inuenimus Patrum Synodo conſtitutum: That any Legates ſhould be ſent vntous, as from your Holineſſe ſide, we finde it not appointed by any Councel of our Fathers. Againe they ſay: Executores Clericos veſtros quibuſq; Petentibus nolite mittere: ne fumoſum ſæculi typhum in Eccleſiam Chriſti videamur inducere: Send not your Clerkes (or Cardinals) to put matters in execution at any mans requeſt: leſt we ſeeme to bring the ſmokie pride of the world into the Church of Chriſt. Citatur ab Agrippa. de vanit. Scientiar. Nicol. Machiuel in hiſtoria Concil. Aphrica. cap. 105.

Pardons.

Math. 16. * His indulgences and pardons depend vpon the power of Binding and Looſing, which Chriſt gaue to Peter and his Succeſſours. Yee muſt demand of Chriſt, * why hee gaue that power, and not be angrie with his Vicar for vſing the ſame.

* Vntruth. For they depend of the deceitfulnes of man, and not of the power of God.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

O, M. Harding, what ſhould you meane with all theſe Vanities? Are ye ſo fully bent, to grant no kinde of errour, neither in your Purgatories, nor in your Pardons, nor in your Stewes? God giue you Humility of heart: leſt yée bée an vnfit veſſell to receiue Gods Pardon.

* Vntruth. For Chriſt neuer gaue the Pope power to deale Pardons.

M. Harding.

Yee finde fault with Leo the third for making an Emperour in the weſt: I dare ſay, it grieueth you. * For if there had beene none in the Weſt, the Turke might haue beene our Emperour ere this, and to his Barbarous and wicked tyranny might haue ſubdued this part of the world, ſpecially Germany, as he hath ſubdued Greece, Aſia, Egypt, Syria, and all the Eaſt Church. Againſt which michiefe the Vicar of Chriſt by his Maſters mercifull warning with the Princes of the Weſt made prouiſion, and at the length planted the Empire in this Order we ſee it now in.

*Vntruth, ioined with open folly. For this was the onely way to ſtrengthen the Saracens.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This policie practiſed by the Pope loſed the whole power of Chriſtendome. For as the Empire before being vnited and ioined in one, was ſtrong and mighty, ſo being afterward diuided into two, and the Eaſt part being ſundred from the Weſt, it became lame, and weake, and not able to helpe it ſelfe. By meane whereof a gate was opened to receiue the Turke into all theſe Chriſtian Dominions, which now he holdeth, without reſiſtance: who otherwiſe, the Empire being one, and whole in it ſelfe, as it was before, could neuer haue haue growne to such power. Al this was wrought by the practise and policie of the Pope. Notwithstanding, the Pope himselfe by this bargaine lost nothing. Thereof Marsilius Patauinus writeth thus: Pipinus, Sonne vnto Charles the French King, after he had conquered Aristulphus the King of Lumbardy, tooke Rauenna, and all the fiue Cities of Romondiola, together with the Emperours Lieutenants Territorie, called Exarchatus, and gaue all the same to the Pope. Pope Stenen finding himselfe well contented with these benefits, and seeing the weakenesse of the Greeke Emperour, procured that the Empire should be translated from the Greekes vnto the French, hauing vtterly forgotten the benefits that he had receiued of the Emperour: to the intent, that the Greekes, being vtterly oppressed, and the French little caring for these things, he alone might rule in Italy at his pleasure.

Marsilius. tauinus.

The very true cause of the diuision of the Empire.

Touching Pope Leo the Third, whose prouidence and policy ye so much commend, the true report of the Story is this: The said Leo, being by violence depriued of his Bishopricke in Rome, fled for aide to Charles the French King, and by him was restored. In consideration of which benefit, he proclaimed Charles the Emperor of the West. Sithence which time, the Empire of Christendome hath been diuided and weakened: the Pope enriched: and the Saracens and Turkes aboue all measure increased.

Plat. in Leo. 3.

M. Harding.

If the Pope Zacharias deposed Childerike (for so I finde him more commonly named) the King of France, only vpon his owne pleasure or displeasure, as ye say, and placed Pipine for him, can ye tel that storie and not see what a strength of authority is in that See, which is able with a word to place and displace the mightiest King in Europe? With a word, I say, for I am sure ye can shew vs of no Army, that he sent to execute that his will. Is that the power of a man, trow ye, to appoint Kingdomes? Can the Diuell himselfe at his pleasure set vp and depose Kings? No surely. (a) And much lesse can any member of his doe the same. Remember ye what Christ said when the Iewes obiected, that he cast out Diuels in the name of the Prince of Diuels? (b) Beware ye sinne not against the holy Ghost, who confesse that the Pope hath pulled downe and set vp Kings. Which thing vndoubtedly he could not doe profitably and peaceably, but by the great power of God. And yet did that line of Pipine & Charles the Great, which the Pope did set vp, (c) flourish aboue any other stocke, that ye can name since the inclination of the Roman Empire. Which in that transposed state of so great a kingdome, maketh no obscure argument of Heauenly approbation and Diuine prouidence.

(a) Vntruth. For S. Gregory saith, Antichristus ipsas summas huius Seculi Potestates obtinebit.

(b) A new Sinne against the holy Ghost.

(c) Vntruth, easy to be seen. Read the Answer.

Neither did the Pope Zacharias depose Childerick, because he fansied him not, as ye slander, but only consented to loose his Subiects from bond of Oath made to him, at the generall and most earnest request and sute of the Nobility and Communalty of the whole Realme of France, finding him very vnprofitable & vnmeete for the Kingdome, as one, who being of no wit, and therefore commonly named Stupidus, as much to say, a dolt, was altogether besides like a Sardanapalus, giuen wholly to belly cheere, and to filthy loue of women. Therefore in your owne words ye confesse a (d) Diuine power in the Pope, as by whom God directeth the wils of faithful Princes on the earth. The more such examples ye bring, the worse ye make your cause. I would hire you to ease me of the labour of prouing such a notable fact.

(d) A Diuine Power in the Pope.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Pope Zacharias deposed Childericus, as you call him, or as some others call him Chilpericus, the French King. Therefore ye say, we must needs acknowledge a Diuine power in the Pope. seeing him able, by his word to place and displace the mightiest King in Europe. For can the Diuell (say you) at his pleasure set vp, and depose Kings?

Ioh. 12. 14. 16

Verily, M. Harding, Christ himselfe calleth the Diuell the Prince of this World: and therefore we may imagine, he may doe somewhat in the World. And the Diuell if ye will beleeue his word, when he had set Christ on high vpon a mount, and shewed him all the kingdomes of the world, he said vnto him, All these things will I giue thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worship me. This is that power, that S. Iohn saith, should be giuen to Antichrist:

Matth. 4.

Apoc. 17.

Reges terræ vires & potestatem suam tradent Bestiæ: &c. vt consentiant, denique Regnum suum Bestiæ, donec compleantur verba Dei: The Kings of the earth shall giue their strength and power vnto the Beast, &c. that they may agree together, and giue their kingdome vnto the Beast vntil the words of God be fulfilled. Againe he saith:

In eodem cap.

Mulier ea, quam vidisti, est Vrbs illa magna, quæ habet Regnum super Reges terræ: The woman that thou sawest, is that great Citie, that hath a kingdome ouer the Kings of the World. And againe he saith:

Apoc. 13.

Data est illi potestas in omnem Tribum & Gentem, & adorabunt eam (Bestiam) omnes incolæ terræ, quorum nomina non sunt scripta in Libro Vitæ Agni: Power is giuen vnto that Beast ouer euery Tribe and Language, and Nation: and all the dwellers of the Earth shall worship the same Beast, (which is Antichrist) whose names bee not written in the Lambis Booke of Life.

Aug. in Psal. 9.

S. Augustine saith: Quia Antichristus ad tantũ culmen inanis gloriæ venturus creditur, tanta ei licebit facere, & in omnes homines, & in Sanctos Dei, vt nonnulli infirmi arbitrentur, tur, Deum res humanas negligere: For that wee beleeue that Antichrist shall come vnto such a height of vaine glory, it shall be lawfull for him to doe such things, both towards all men, (Princes and others) and also towards the Saints of God, that many weake men shall thinke, God hath forsaken the care of the World. Againe he saith: Ira traditur de Antichristo, quòd omnes Reges superaturus sit, & solus Regnum obtenturus: Thus it is written of Antichrist, that hee shall conquer all Kings, and obtaine the Kingdome himselfe alone.

Deposing of Kings.

Aug. in eundem Psalm

So saith S. Gregory: Antichristus veniens ipsas etiam summas huius sæculi Potestates obtinebit: Antichrist, when he shall come, shall conquer the highest Estates and Powers of this World.

Greg. in Iob ca. 41. li. 33. ca. 22

And all this shall come to passe, as Chrysostome saith, by the dissolution of the Empire, whereof we haue spoken before. These be his words: Donec Imperij illius timor fuerit, nemo Antichristo statim subdetur. Quando verò istud imperium destructum fuerit, vacantem Imperij Principatum inuadet, & tentabit ad se rapere & Hominum, & Dei Imperium: As long as the Empire shall be had in awe, no man shall straightway submit himselfe to Antichrist: But after that the Empire shall be dissolued, Antichrist shall inuade the state of the Empire standing void: and shall labour to pull vnto himselfe the Empire both of Man and God.

Chrysost. in 2. Thess. 2 hom. 4.

This, I trow it is, that the Pope proclaimeth himselfe the Heire Apparent of all Kingdomes: This it is, that Pope Nicolas saith: Christus Beato Petro, Æternæ Vitæ Clauigero Terrarum simul, & Cœlestis Imperij iura commisit: Christ hath committed vnto blessed Peter, the Key-bearer of euerlasting life, the right both of the Worldly, and also of the Heauenly Empire: This is it, that some are so bold to say, Papa totius Mundi obtinet Principatum: The Pope hath the Princehood of all the whole World. And that some others haue said: Papa est Rex Regum, & Dominus Dominantium: The Pope is the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. And, that Pope Adrian saith of himselfe, as it is alleged before: Imperator quod habet, totum habet à nobis. Ecce in potestate nostra est, vt demus Imperium, cui volumus: Whatsoeuer the Emperour hath, he hath it of vs. It is in our power to bestow the Empire vpon whom we list. This, M. Harding, is that Diuine Power, that, as you say, is giuen to the Pope. But as S. Iohn, S. Augustine, S. Chrysostome, and S. Gregory say, the selfe same Diuine Power is giuen also to Antichrist. And therefore it is well noted in your owne Glosse: Papa stupor Mundi: The Pope is the wonderment of the World: that is to say, the Pope maketh all the world fooles.

Clem. in procemio. In Glossa.

But if it seeme so great a matter, for a Pope to depose a King, I doubt not, but ye may well remember, that Emperours sometimes haue deposed Popes. The Emperour Constantius (an Arian, I grant, but yet an Emperour) deposed Pope Liberius: and afterward restoring Liberius deposed Pope Fœlix. The Emperour Otho the First deposed Pope Iohn the Thirteenth. The Emperour Iustinian deposed two Popes in order: first, Pope Syluerius, and afterward Pope Vigilius. And all this did they without leuying of armie, without raising of power, without disquiet or trouble of the people. And a Doctour of your owne seeming fully to determine the matter by a like case, saith thus: Imperator requisitus a Cardinalibus, debet procedere contra Papam: The Emperour being required by the Cardinals, is bound to proceed (to Depriuation) against the Pope. Another saith thus: Si quando Imperialis Legatus mitteretur a Principe vt Romanus Pontifex proficisceretur Constantinopolim ad Imperatorem, omni neglecta occasione, ibat etiamsi pro certo sciret, se iturum in exilium: If at any time the Emperours Embassadour had beene sent from his Prince to will the Pope to come to Constantinople, to the Emperour, all occasions set apart hee went straight way, notwithstanding he certainely knew, he should bee banished. Vrspergensis saith: Henricus Rex Italiam ingressus, tres Papas indignè constitutos Synodaliter deposuit: Henry the Emperour comming into Italy, deposed three Popes vnlawfully made, by order of Synod.

Platina in Liberio. 2. Tomo. Concil. in Vita Syluerij & Vigilij. Ioh. de Parisijs. cap. 14. Appendix Entropij, in Syluerio.

Vrsperg. Anno 1045.

Now, M. Harding, if you, with your Rhetoricall furniture, may cry out, O what a Diuine Power had the Pope, that thus could depose a King! why may not we likewise say, O what a Diuine Power had the Emperour, that thus could depose so many Popes.

But that ye may the better set this wonderfull Diuinity and Heauenly Power, wherewith ye would so faine enseafe the Pope, a Witnesse of your owne saith thus: Quòd dicitur, Papam deposuisse Regem Francorum, & loco eius instituisse Pipinum, Glossa ordinaria exponit, Deposuit, id est, deponentibus consensit. Non enim legitur, quòd Papa Zacharias Regem Franciæ deposuerit: Whereas it is said, that the Pope deposed the French King, and placed Pipinus in his roome, The Ordinary Glosse expounded it thus: He deposed him, that is to say, He consented to them, that did depose him. For we read not that Pope Zacharias indeed euer deposed the French King.

Ioh. de Parisijs, cap. 15.

The truth of the Story is this: Forasmuch as Chilpericus the King seemed void of Princely Deposing of Kings.

Princely grauity, and had giuen himſelfe ouer to pleaſure and wantonneſſe, and Pipinus his Lord Marſhall, a man full of wiſdome and actiuity, had the gouernment and burthen of al the Realm, the Nobles of France hauing agreed among themſelues, to depoſe the one and to ſet vp the other, ſent vnto Pope Zachary as vnto a wiſe man, to haue his anſwer to this queſtion: Whether were meeter to be King, Hee that carried only the name, and did nothing: Or, he that bare the burthen of the whole? The Pope was ſone perſwaded to giue Sentence with Pipinus the Lord Marſhall, againſt the King. Whereupon the King was ſhorne into an Abbie, and made a Monke: Pipinus aduanced vnto the ſtate, gaue the Pope the Exarchate or Princehood of Rauenna, in part of recompenſe for his good will.

Paulus Aemilius lib. 2. Gaguinus.

Whether the King hauing nine yéeres ruled his Realme, were afterward depriued by right or by wrong, I will not reaſon. Faſciculus Temporum ſaith, The Kingdome was remooued from the right Heires.

The line of King Pipine endured and flouriſhed a long while: And that (ye ſay) was no obſcure argument of Heauenly Approbation, and Diuine Prouidence. By ſuch Approbation and Prouidence, the Turke may claime. For he hath both longer continued, and much more flouriſhed and encreaſed his eſtate, then euer did the houſe of Pipine. But Cato was wont to ſay, Multum eſt Caliginis in rebus Diuinis: There is great Darkeneſſe in Godmatters.

Plutarch in Catone Vticen.

Yet leſt any man of ignorance happen héerein to be deceiued, this was the very true deſcent and flouriſhing Fortune of king Pipins race.

Benuenutus Imolenſis in Auguſtali.

The firſt thereof was Charles the great: In his time, ſaith Benuenutus Imolenſis, Laceratum eſt Imperium: The ſtate of the Empire was torne in ſunder.

Paulus Aemilius lib. 3.

The ſecond was Ludouicus pius: Againſt him his owne Sonne Lotharius aroſe, and cauſed him to be ſhorne as a Monke, and to be thruſt into an Abbie, and his owne Mother the Empreſſe to be made a Nunne.

The Third was Lotharius: Hée oppreſſed his owne Brethren by violence, and afterward was depoſed and made a Monke.

The Fourth was Ludouicus 2. Hée was vnfortunate in al his doings: and was ſhamefully conquered by his Brother.

The Fifth was Ludouicus 3. Whom for his doughty deeds they commonly call Ludouicus nihili: which is as much to ſay, as Lewis Nobody.

Paulus Aemil. in Chronic.

The Sixth was Carolus Secundus, named Caluus, as Benuenutus ſaith: Vir lepore timidior: A man more fearefull, and more cowardly, then a Hare. Hee was ſhortly ſlaine with poiſon.

The Seauenth was Carolus 3. as Benuenutus ſaith: Vir deficiens & Animo, & Corpore: Amas wanting both ſtrength of Body and wiſdome of Minde: that is to ſay, both a Coward and a Foole.

The Eight was Arnulphus: Hee was eaten vp with Lice.

Benuenutus Imolen. in Auguſtali. Nihilo fœlicior. Patre in eo defecit Imperium in gente Carolorum.

The Ninth was Ludouicus 4. by the report of Benuenutus, a man of no better Fortune, then his Father. In him that houſe had an end. This is that Noble Pipines Race, M. Harding, that could not ſo ſtand and flouriſh, as you ſay, without ſpeciall Heauenly Approbation and Diuine Prouidence.

M. Harding.

Concerning that ye ſay of King Philip ſurnamed le Bel, if we may beleeue Paulus Æmilius the beſt Writer of the French Chronicles, the cauſe was ſuch between Pope Bonifacius, and that King, that if he did not only excommunicate him, but alſo offered gift of his Kingdome to Albert the Emperour, as Platina your Authour heerin writeth: he may ſeeme therein to haue done (a) not altogether ſo euil as ye pretend. For, as both Æmilius and Platina doe witneſſe, the cauſe of their falling out was, that whereas the Pope being firſt ſued vnto by Caſſanus a Chriſtian Prince, and a great Conquerour in the Eaſt, to ioine with him for the recouery of the holy land, ſent the Biſhop of Apamea to the French King for his neceſſary aid in that ſo common a quarrell of all Chriſtendome, he being offended, either that the ſute was not firſt made to him, either for that the ſaid Biſhop had done his Embaſſage with ſhew of more authority, then the King thought it became him, or vpon ſome priuate grudge, did not only vtterly refuſe to ſend any helpe toward the voiage, but alſo contemptuouſly beſide common order, and cruelly committed the Popes Legare to Priſon, and there kept him, vntil ſuch time, as through the Popes interdict, the king was compelled to ſet him at liberty. Now of giuing away his kingdome, this chief French Hiſtoriographer maketh no mention. And if the Pope ſo did, why may he not ſeeme to haue done it, (b) rather to feare him, and to reclaime his minde from diſobedience? Verily Platina writing it, declareth, how before the Pope proceeded to that extremitie, the French king did what in him lay, (c) to withdraw the people of France from the obedience of the Church and See Apoſtolike.

(a) Not altogether ſo euill. A proper qualification

(b) A iollie way to flay a King.

(c) By this Diuinity, if any kingdome refuſe to be ſubiect and thrall to the See of Rome, the Pope may giue the ſame away at his pleaſure.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Yeere M. Harding, ye ſtammer in your tale, and know not well what to ſay: If the Pope gaue gaue away the Kingdome of France from the Prince, he did it (yee say) to the intent to feare him. A pretty deuice to fray a King, to pull the Crowne Emperiall from his head.

Philippus. Bonifacius 8.

First, this Pope Bonifacius is he of whom it was said, Intrauit vt Vulpes: Regnauit vt Lupus: Mortuus est vt Canis: He entred into the Popedome as a Fox: He reigned as a Wolfe: He died (in prison) as a Dogge. In Solemne Procession he went attired with the Crowne Emperiall, and Robe of Maiestie, as an Emperour, and commanded the Naked Sword to be borne before him. In the Storie of his Life ioined with his owne Booke, named, Sextus Bonifacij 8. it is written thus: Moritur hoc modo Bonifacius, qui Imperatoribus, Regibus, Principibus, Nationibus, Populis, terrorem potius quàm Religionem injicere conabatur: Thus died Pope Bonifacius, a man that sought more to strike terrour into Emperors, Kings, Princes, People, and Nations, then true religion. Paralip. Vrsp. In vita Bonifacij 8. In Sexto. Idem in Platin. Sabell. Ennead. 9. Lib. 7.

This Bonifacius, saith Sabellicus, sent to the French King for money, as hee pretended towards the reconerie of Ierusalem. The Bishop of Apamea, beeing his Legate in that behalfe, vttered certaine great words in the presence of the King, and threatned him, vnlesse he would grant it.

The King, not quietly beating such presumptuous boldnesse, commanded the Apostolike Legate vnto ward. This iniurie so enflamed the Popes choler, that immediatelie he sent the Archbishop of Narbon to the King, to require him to set his Legate at libertie; otherwise to tell him, that for his wickednesse The right of his Kingdome was fallen to the Church of Rome. Thus Sabellicus, in fauour of the Pope, thought it good somewhat to shadow the matter.

But others thereof haue written thus: Bonifacius 8. mandat Regi, se esse Dominum in Spiritualibus & Temporalibus in Vniuerso Mundo: Vtque Rex recognoscat Regnum Franciæ à se. Contrarium enim sentire & tenere, Hæreticum esse. Pope Bonifacius 8. sent vnto the French King, and told him, that he was Lord, both in Spirituall, and also in Temporall matters, throughout the world: and therefore that the King should hold his Kingdome at his hand. For otherwise to thinke and hold, for saide is not Heresie. Martinus Polonus.

This is it that in the name of the Pope is noted in your Glosse: Quicunque Præceptis nostris non obedierit, peccatum Idololatriæ & Paganitatis incurrit: Whosoeuer obeyeth not our Commandements, falleth into the Sinne of Idolatrie and Infidelitie. Whereof Vrspergensis writeth thus: Habes, Roma, quod sitisti; decanta Canticum: quia per malitiam, non per Religionem orbem vicisti: O Rome thou hast now that thou hast so long thirsted after. Nowsing merrilie. For by thy malice, not by Religion, thou hast conquered the world. Dist. 81. Si quis. in Glossa: Abbas Vrsper.

The King being mooued herewith, commanded that none of his Clergie should come to the Popes Councell: Yee openlie burnt the Popes Writ. He commanded the Popes Legate to depart out of his Realme: He so had that any money should be made thence to the Pope: Yee gaue out Proclamations, that none of his Subiects should goe to Rome: And in the Synod at Paris he charged the Pope with Pride, Ambition, Murder, Simonie, and Heresie. Paul. Æmil. Platina. Sabellicus. Nauclerus.

Thus much of the dealing of the Crowne of France vnto a Stranger: that is to say, of the Faith and Reuerence that the Pope beareth to Kings and Princes. Yeeue followed somewhat of the spoiling of the Duke of Sauoy, and of the altering of the state of Florence: which things I thought it best to passe ouer, as not worthy of any Answer.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision 4.

We are accloied with Examples in this behalfe, it should be very tedious to reckon vp all the notorious practises of the Bishops of Rome. But of which side were they, I beseech you, that poisoned Henry the Emperor, euen in the receiuing of the Sacrament? Which poisoned Victor the Pope, euen in the receiuing of the Chalice? Which poisoned our king Iohn, king of England, in a drinking Cup? Whosoeuer at least they were, and of what Sect soeuer, I am sure they were neither Lutherans, nor Zuinglias.

M. Harding.

The Fiends of Hell were not yet let loose, that begat Lutherans, Zuinglians, and Caluinists. And heereof we vnderstand the youth of your Church, which hauing diuided it selfe from the old and Catholike Church, is no other but the malignant Church, and Synagogue of Satan.

To answer your demands, Whosoeuer they were that poisoned these great personages (if they were poisoned at all) good men were they not neither the doers, nor the counsellers. Henrie of Luxenburg it was who was poisoned, by report: whom your Latine Booke, printed among the Huguenotes, calleth Henrie the Seuenth: M. Doctor Haddon, in his answer to Osorius, accounteth him the Fourth: In both your English translations (that I haue seene) he is called only Henrie. As he laid siege to the Citie of Florence, and had now brought the Citizens to despaire of their safetie, when manly courage might not serue, they betooke them to cowardly malice. First they poisoned (as it is said) the mind of a Frier Dominican with Gold, that afterward he should aduenture to poison the Emperors body with venome. Paulus Æmilius saith, that he died of a sickneſſe, which hee fell into at Bonconuento, as hee iourneied from Pisa thither. Onuphrius writing of his death, saith that he died at Bonconuento, a towne in the territorie of Siena, and maketh no mention of his poisoning. Cornelius Cornepolita writing this storie, seemeth to giue little credit vnto it. For he addeth an hearsay, Vt aiunt, as they say, as though it were a matter auouched by no certainty, but by hearsay. Nauclerus reporteth that the order of those religious men is said to haue a testimonial in writing, witnessing the foresaid Frier to haue beene innocent, and that the whole was but a fained tale. Lib. 1. Ja Schis. Platina. Ja Chron.

Victor the third Pope is mentioned by Martinus Polonus to haue beene poisoned by the malicious procurement of the Emperour Henrie the third, because he stood in defense of Gregorie the seuenth, whom the Emperour so much hated, and persecuted. Vincentius holdeth contrarie opinion, that hee died of a dysenterie, as Platina reciteth.

Touching King Iohn of England, they that write that he was poisoned in a drinking Cup by Monks, themselues make no better then a fable of it: and whosoeuer write it, refer themselues to hearsay, and to the popular fame. The Author of your Acts & Monuments reporteth, that many opinions are among the Chronicle Writers of his death. As ye proceed in your malicious railing against the Pope, ye spue out your poison, demãding certaine questions, short in words, but full stuffed with false & cankered slanders.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

The Poisoning of that Noble Emperour, Henrie of Lucenburg in the Sacrament, whereby it appeareth howsoeuer forth the States of the World ought to trust you, ye would haue vs to passe lightlie ouer as a Fable. Of your Onuphrius and Cornelius, and other like Parasites, we make no reckoning. The truth of the storie is reported by many. Vrspergensis saith: Quidam Religiosus porrexit Imperatori intoxicatam Eucharistiam, &c. A certaine Religious man ministred vnto the Emperour The Sacrament poisoned. The Emperour hauing receiued it, and returning againe vnto his place, thought that a peece of cold Ice was past along thorow his body.

Paralip. Vrsp. Anno 1313.

Baptista Egnatius saith, it was wrought by the policie of Robertus, King of Sicilia, moued thereto, as Auentinus saith, by Pope Clement 5. The same ye shall finde recorded in Cation, in Supplemento Chronicorum, in Rauisius Textor, and sundrie others.

Baptist. Egnat. Auentinus. Carion. Supplementum Chronicorum. Textor in Officina: Veneno extincti.

The like record there is found of poisoning of Victor 3. in the Chalice. For the more credit whereof it may please you to read Martinus Polonus the Popes Penitentiary, Volaterranus, Matthæus Palmerius, The Supplie of Chronicles, Fasciculus Temporum, Textor, and others.

Touching the death of King Iohn, whether hee were poisoned by a Monke, or no, I will not striue; referring my selfe therein to the credit of our Chronicles: the common report whereof, together with the generall opinion of the people, is this, that hee was destroied with Poison. But whatsoeuer were the cause of his death, Matthias Parisiensis saith thus: Papa Innocentius sententionaliter definiuit, &c. Pope Innocentius determined by sentence, that King Iohn should be deposed from his estate. And he enioined the execution thereof to the French King, for Remission of his Sinnes, promising him also faithfullie, that if he so did, he and his Successours should enioy the Kingdome of England for euer. So much is England bound to reuerence and obey the Pope.

Matth. Paris. Anno 1211.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision 2.

Kisse the Popes foot

VVHat is hee at this day, which alloweth the mightiest Kings and Monarchs of the world to kisse his blessed feet?

M. Harding.

It is he (say we) that humbly for his owne person refuseth such honor, that calleth and chalketh himselfe, Seruum Seruorum Dei, the seruant of the seruants of God. But when hee seeth the great Powers and Princes of the world humble themselues to Christ, Lord of all Lords, & King of all Kings, in the person of him, whose Vicar on Earth he is, and chiefe Deputie in those things that bee to Godward; not vnmindfull what he is of himselfe, for the roomes sake that he beareth, and for his honour whose Vicegerent he is, the rather also for (a) example of Humilitie and Obedience, so to bee taken and learned of others of inferiour degree, he suffereth that honour to be done, which is more then a meere man can require. Neither is this the Pride of Popes at these daies onely, as yee obiect, but the example of such humilitie in Princes we can proone to be ancient.

(a) A proper Scoole of Humilitie.

(b) Fy for shame. Cãnot the Pope learne humility, but by a stoole of easement?

(c) Vntruth. For it is not surmised by vs, but recorded by your own Writers. Sabellicus saith. Vtsedentis genitalia ab vltimo Diacono attrectentur.

The great King Charlmaigne, who afterward was created Emperor, could not be withholden by the Pope Adrian the First, but at the first meeting he would kisse his feet. Many other Emperors and Kings haue of old times done likewise. And lest the Soueraignty of such honor exhibited vnto him should lift his owne conceit lift him higher then for the degree of humane condition, (b) to that purpose serueth the stoole of naturall easment at his creation, whereof your surmise is (c) verie vile, to temper the highnesse of that vocation with the base consideration of humane infirmitie, and necessities. Platina in Adrian.

The

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

What thing is there, either so vile, or so horrible, but by such proper excuses may some be smoothed? Chrysostome saith: Hæc etsi minima esse videantur, tamen magnorum sunt causæ malorum. Nam & Ciuitates, & Ecclesias sæpenumerò euerterunt. Propterea nec à lachrymis abstinere possum, cùm primos istos Consessus & Salutationes audiam, ac in medium veniat, quot quantáque hinc mala in Ecclesia Dei orta sint: These things, notwithstanding they seeme small, yet are they the causes of great euils. For often times haue they ouerthrowen both Cities and Churches. Therefore I cannot abstaine from weeping, when I heare these Superiorities, and Salutations, and consider how many, and how great euils haue growen thereof in the Church of God. S. Hierome much misliking the state of his time, saith thus: Episcopi, velut in aliqua sublimi specula constituti, vix dignantur videre mortales, & alloqui conseruos suos: The Bishops, as if they were placed in some high Castle, scarcely vouchsafe to looke vpon poore mortall men, and to speake vnto their fellow seruants.

Chrys. in Mat. Homil. 73.

Kisse the Popes Foot

Hieron in epist. ad. Galat. ca. 4.

Touching the Bishop of Rome, it is not for nought that S. Gregory saith: Rex Superbiæ in foribus est: The King of Pride is euen at hand. In the Popes owne Booke of the Ceremonies of Rome it is written thus: Electus Imperator cum suis omnibus seruato ordine per gradus ascendit suggestum. Et vt primùm videt Pontificem, detecto capite, illum, genu terram contingens, veneratur: & iterum, cùm appropinquat ad gradus Sedis, genu flectit: demum vbi ad Pontificis pedes peruenit, illos in reuerentiam Suluatoris Deuotè osculatur: The Emperour Elect going in array with all his traine, passeth vp the staires into the Scaffold. And as soone as he seeth the Pope, he worshippeth him with bare head, touching the ground with his knee. Againe, when he commeth to the foot of the Popes Throne, hee kneeleth downe. Last of all, when he commeth vnto the Popes feet, he kisseth them Deuoutly in the reuerence of our Sauiour. This is ordered as a speciall Ceremony, and appointed vnto the Emperour as part of his duty.

Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 38

Ceremoniar. li. 1 Sect. 5 ca. 3.

Deuotè Osculatur.

Likewise it is written of the Empresse, as concerning her duty: Imperatrix Coronata, mox osculatur pedem Pontificis: The Empresse being Crowned, immediately kisseth the Popes foot.

Ceremoniar. li. 1. Sect. 5. ca. 6.

Againe of the Pope himselfe it is written thus: Papa nemini omninò mortalium reuerentiam facit, assurgendo manifestè, aut caput inclinando, seu detegendo. The Pope himselfe gineth no maner of reuerence to any man aliue, either openly by standing vp, or by bowing downe, or by vncouering his head.

Ceremoniarum Lib. 3. Cap. 2.

But the Pope (say you) humbly for his owne person refuseth such honour, and heereby teacheth Kings, and Emperours, and all their Subiects to be humble. A strange case, to teach Humility in the Schoole of Pride. Such Humility taught Iulius Cæsar, Diocletian, and Maximinus. Iulius Cæsar taught out his foot for Pompeius Pœnus to kisse, that folkes might see his Golden Slipper set with stones. Pomponius Lætus saith: Diocletianus edicto sanxit, &c. Diocletian commanded by Proclamation, that all men should fall downe, and kisse his feet, whereunto also hee addeth a certaine reuerence, adorning his Shooes with Gold and Diamonds. Maximinus also afterward did the like.

Seneca. Pomponius Lætus in Diocletiano. Alexander ab Alexandro.

Such Humility shall Antichrist teach, auaunсing himselfe aboue all that is worshipped, or called God.

2. Thess. 2.

Such Humility the Diuell toke vpon him to teach, when he said to Christ: I will giue thee all these things, if thou wilt fall downe, and worship me.

Matth. 4.

Thus may the Pope call himselfe Lord of Lords, King of Kings, and set his foot on Emperours necks: and yet neuertheless, if he can frame a new tittle, and say, he is Seruus Seruorum Dei: The Seruant of Gods Seruants, it is no Pride: it is but Humility.

Antoninus saith: Non minor honor debetur Papæ, quàm Angelis. Vnde papa recipit à Fidelibus Adorationes, Prostrationes, & Oscula pedum: quod non permisit Angelus à Iohanne Euangelista sibi fieri: There is no lesse honour due vnto the Pope, than vnto the Angels of God. Therefore the Pope suffereth the Faithfull to worship him, and to fall downe before him, and to kisse his Feet: which things the Angel of God would not suffer S. Iohn the Euangelist to doe vnto him.

Anton. in Summa. Par. 3. tit. 22. cap. 5. §. 4

This, M. Harding, is no malicious Railing, as ye call it, nor Spight, nor Poison, nor Vntruth stuffed with false and cankered Slanders. By the report of your owne Doctors, and by your owne Confession, it is the Truth.

The Porphyrie Stoole of easement serueth (ye say) to put the Pope in minde of his Humanitie, that is to say, that he may remember himselfe in the midst of all his glory to bee a man. No, no, M. Harding, your owne Authors and Stories can tell you, that Stoole serueth to put the Pope in remembrance of his Virilitie, that the world may know he is no woman. But let your imagination stand for true. Yet may we thinke your Popes are so forgetfull, getfull, or so dull headed, or so blockish, that they haue need to be taught by so vile examples to know themselues? Certainely this is a Mysticall kinde of Stoole of easement.

We cannot lightly lacke Mysteries at his hands, if so homely a place bee so full of Mysteries. King Alexander the Great vnderstood himselfe to be a Man Mortall, as others were, and not a God, as he was borne in hand; for that he was sometimes of naturall necessity forced to slepe. But Christs Vicar, Peters Successour, The Doctor of all Doctors, The Father of all Fathers, the Master and Teacher of all the world, were it not for a Stoole of easement, would quite forget his owne Humanity, and could neuer remember himselfe to be a Man.

Plutarch. in Alexandro.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision 3.

The Popes Bridle. The Popes Stirrop.

What is he that commandeth the Emperour to goe by him at his horse bridle, and the French King to hold his Stirrup?

M. Harding.

What is he, (a) we know not, (a) nor you neither, Sir Defender. This we know, that in these words most impudently you belie the Pope. For neuer was there Pope that commanded either French King, or Emperour to doe the Seruice you speake of. Part of that I haue read perteining hereunto I will here recite:

The worthiest and greatest Prince that euer was in Earth, Constantine the Great, to witnesse openly the reuerence which he bare in his heart to Christ our Sauiour, and to S. Peter, whose Successour the Pope is, as likewise Christs Vicar in Earth, disdained not to honor S. Syluester Pope in his time, with doing (b) the office of a footman to him, and with leading his horse by the bridle. Wherein he seemeth as first of all Emperors he professed the Faith of Christ openly, so first of all Princes to haue giuen to the posterity an example of Humility. That no man doubt of it, this much I find recorded by an old Father of the Greeke Church, Matthæus Hieromonachus, as vttered by Constantine himselfe: Ἐμοῦ ἡ τοιαύτης ὑπηρέτης, καὶ τὸ χαλινὸ τοῦ ἵππου αὐτοῦ κατέχοντος, τῶν ἀνακτόρων αὐτοῦ ἔξωθεν ἀπαγόντων, ἄλλη ἡ βέλτιον τῷ μεγάλῳ τῶν ἁγίων συνχώρησε Πέτρῳ: Which in English is thus much: Submitting our selfe to the office of a footman, and holding his horse by the bridle, we lead him forth out of his Sacred Palace in the worship and reuerence of S. Peter.

(a) Vntruths: two together: Read the Answer.

(b) All this is a great vntruth, & a peruish Fable. ὑποπόδιον ὑφίκειν. This is Greeke euen for a Pope.

That sithence both Emperors and French Kings, of humility and deuotion, and to witnes their humble obedience to Christ in his Vicar, haue done the like Seruice, yea though the Pope shewed himselfe neuer so vnwilling thereto: we finde it reported by sundry good records. (c) But that he euer commanded any such seruice to be done vnto him, ye can neuer shew it by any indifferent and credible witnesse. Paulus Æmilius an Italian of Verona, in the second booke of his Chronicles, which both diligently and eloquently he wrote of France, describeth how honourably Pipine that worthy King of France receiued Steuen the Pope, that succeeded Zacharias, when he came into his Realme. Hee both kissed his feet, and went by him at his horse bridle.

(c) Vntruth; most manifest: For it is thus ordered in the Popes owne Pontificall, and in his own Booke of Ceremonies. Ceremoniar. Lib. Cap. 8. Etiamsi Imperator, aut quiuis maximus Princeps adesset. Sellam ipsam cum Pontifice in humeris aliquantulum portare debet. Ceremoniarum Lib. 1. Sectio. 5. Cap. 4. Dum Imperator hæc vtilitatis Officia vult exhibere, &c. Tandem eum aliquibus bonis verbis recipiendo permittit. &c. Ceremoniarum Lib. 1 Cap. 8. Ceremoniar. Li. 1. Sectio. 3.

The like honour of holding the Stirrup would Charles the first, the late great Emperor haue done at Bononia to Pope Clement the seuenth, had not the Pope with much adoe put him from it.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This thing Sir Defender knoweth: notwithstanding you, M. Harding, dissemble it cunningly, and will not be knowen, that ye know it. Neither doth Sir Defender, as you say, by these words impudently belie the Pope. For triall hereof, he referreth you to the Popes owne Booke of Holy Ceremonies: wherein it is particularly appointed, and laid out in order, to auoid confusion, what each estate ought and is bound to do.

Thus therefore it is appointed: Cùm Papa per Scalam ascendit, &c. When the Pope taketh his staires to mount on Horseback, the greatest Prince that is present, whether hee bee King, or Emperour, holdeth his Stirrup: and afterward leadeth his Horse a little way forward by the Bridle. But if there were two Kings in presence, the more honourable of them should holde the Bridle of the Right side, and the other of the Left. If there happen no King to be present, then let the worthiest persons lead his Horse. But if the Pope would not ride, but be borne on mens shoulders in a Chaire, then must foure of the worthiest Princes, yea the Emperour himselfe, or any other mighty Monarch, if he be present, beare the Chaire, Pope and all, a little way forward vpon their shoulders.

Againe: Imperator, traditis Pomo & Sceptro, &c. The Emperour delinering ouer his Golden Apple and his Scepter to one of his men, commeth vnto the Popes Horse, and in honour of our Lord Iesus Christ, whose person in Earth the Pope beareth, he holdeth the Stirrup vntill the Pope be mounted: and afterward he taketh the Bridle, and leadeth forth his Horse. While the Emperour doth these profitable offices, the Pope ought modestly a little to refuse the same: and yet afterward, with certaine good and gentle words, taking that honour as done to Christ, and not vnto himselfe, he holdeth himselfe contented.

Further it is appointed thus: Caudam pluuialis portabit Nobilior Laicus, qui erit in Curia, etiamsi esset Imperator, aut Rex: The most Noble Lay man that shall be in the Court, shall beare vp the traine of the Popes Cope, yea though it bee an Emperour, or, a King. Againe: * Let the most Noble Lay man, whether hee bee King, or Emperour bring

bring water to waſh the Popes hands. And while the Pope waſheth, let al the Biſhops and Lay men kneele downe.

Againe: Pontifice ſedente, &c. † While the Pope is yet ſitting at the Table, the nobleſt man within the Court, be he Emperour, be he King, ſhall be brought to the Popes Credence, to giue him Water. † Ceremoniar. lib. 2. cap. 10. Etiamſi Rex aut Imperator ſit.

Againe: ⋆ Primum ferculum portabit Nobilior Princeps, ſiue Imperator ſit, ſiue Rex: The firſt diſh the Nobleſt Prince ſhall carrie, whether hee be Emperour, or King. Againe: †Rex in collatione portabit primum potum: When the Pope is at Breakefaſt, The King ſhal beare his firſt Cup. And againe: Pocula portentur, &c. Let the Popes Cups be borne by the Noble men or Oratours, being preſent: and let the Clerke of the Ceremonies beginne with the worthieſt eſtate: yea though he be King or Emperour. ⋆ Ceremoniar. Lib. 1. Sectio 3. † Ceremoniar. Lib. 1. Sectio. 13. Cap. 2.

Now I truſt, M. Harding, of your courteſie ye will confeſſe, that Sir Defender in theſe words hath not ſo impudently belied the Pope. The Popes owne Booke of Ordinances and Ceremonies, that directeth all orders, ſaith thus:

The Emperour ſhall hold the Popes Stirrop:
Let the Emperour lead the Popes Horſe:
The Emperour muſt beare the Popes Chaire on his ſhoulder:
The Emperour ſhal beare vp the Popes Traine:
Let the Emperour bring the Baſon and Ewer to the Pope:
The Emperour ſhall giue the Pope Water:
The Emperour ſhall carrie the Popes firſt diſh:
The Emperour ſhall carrie the Popes firſt Cup.

The Popes Bridle.

The Popes Stirrop.

Thus may we goe to the Pope to Schools to learne Humility. For excuſe hereof perhaps ye will ſay, Theſe were the Abuſes of Old times: But now all ſuch diſorders are well reformed. Therefore it may pleaſe you to remember, that the ſelfe ſame Ceremonies, touching Kings and Emperours duties, haue beene lately renewed and confirmed, and publiſhed abroad into the World, word by word, as they were before without any maner alteration, euen in the Popes owne Pontifical, and that euen now newly printed at Venice, in the yere of Our Lord, A thouſand fiue hundred threeſcore and one, whereby it may appeare ye are aſhamed of nothing, be it neuer ſo ſhamefull. What truth therefore, M. Harding, is in your word? Or, with what countenance could ye ſo boldly ſay, That the Pope euer commanded any ſuch ſeruice to be done vnto him by the Emperour, ye can neuer ſhew it by any indifferent and credible witneſſe? I doubt not but the Popes owne Witneſſe is vnto you of ſufficient credit: and in his owne caſe it muſt needs to himſelfe ſeeme indifferent. Verily Gregorius Haimburgenſis ſaith, that Pope Adrian 2. was highly diſpleaſed with the Emperour Fredericus, for that hee ſo vnskilfully and ſo vnmanerly held his Left Stirrop, whereas his dutie had beene to hold the Right: And therefore vtterly refuſed to giue him his Bleſſing, notwithſtanding he deſired it humbly vpon his knee. Hereby it plainely appeareth, that in all Offices and Seruices the Pope vſeth the Emperour as his man. Therefore Auentinus reporteth theſe two verſes, written ſometime of the Emperour Lotharius the ſecond: Gregor. Haimburg, in Appellation. Sigiſm.

Rex venit ad fores, iurans per Vrbis honores:

The King, or Emperour, commeth to the gates, and ſweareth by the honour of the Citie: And afterward becommeth the Popes Man, at whoſe handes he receiueth the Crowne.

That Pipinus ſo much abaſed himſelfe to Pope Steuen, it is no maruel. The Prouerbe is common; One hand claweth another. The Pope was aduanced by Pipine; and Pipine was likewiſe aduanced by the Pope. But hereof we haue ſpoken before.

Where ye ſay, The Emperour Conſtantine the Great was footman to the Pope, I am much aſhamed of your vanitie, that, being a man of wiſdome and learning, ye ſhould thus ſeeke to mocke the world with Childiſh Fables.

Ye allege Matthæus Hieromonachus to proue a Fable by a Fable. If ye would daſle your Readers eies, for that ye allege his words in Greeke, vnderſtand you that his peeuiſh Greeke was taken out of your peeuiſh Latine. And yet is the ſame Greeke ſo fond, and ſo full of folly, that ye were aſhamed truly to turne it into Engliſh. For thus it ſtandeth: Διὰτὸ ἐχειν φόβον τοῦ κυρίου μου τοῦ ἁγίου σωτῆρος Πέτρου: That is, In the worſhip and feare of my Lord Bleſſed Peter. Ye durſt not to make the Emperour Conſtantine ſo rude, to ſay plainly, that Peter was his Lord: and therefore ye thought it better to corrupt and alter your Authors words. Yet ſuch vaine Fables and Trifles muſt ye bring in, to put vs, as yee ſay, quite out of doubt. But hereof we ſhall ſay more hereafter.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision 4.

Franciscus Dandalus.

who hurled vnder his Table Francis Dandalus, the Duke of Venice, King of Creta and Cypres, fast bound with Chaines, to feed of bones among his Dogs.

M. Harding.

Were not this Defender past al shame, he would not make so many and so shameleſſe lies. Malice hath so farre blinded him, that he seemeth not to see what becometh a man. Though he feare not to be accounted a Lier, yet he should be loth to be accounted an vnhoneſt man, yea and specially a foole. Let truth and honesty goe, for indeed there is little in these fellowes. What foolishneſſe is it, a man to bring all his Doctrine, & all his sayings, touching things that he would so faine be beleeued into so great and certaine discredit, by such open and manifeſt lies? The truth hereof is this, as I finde it witneſſed in Sabellicus, and in the chiefeſt Chronicles the Venetians haue, written by a Noble man of Venice, named Petrus Iustinianus. The City of Venice being interdicted of the Pope, Francis Dandalus was sent by the Duke & Lords of the Councel there, to sue for Absolution. At that time was he neither King of Creta nor of Cypres, nor Duke of Venice, as it pleaseth this lying Defender to write of him, & that in the Defence of their English Church, written to all the world. Iohannes Superantius then was Duke, & this Francis Dandalus was (a) but a priuate man for that time, as others there were. This Ambaſſador Francis Dandalus finding the Pope at his firſt comming not wel inclined to grant his petition as he wished, the (b) quality of his offence deſeruing the same, to moue him to clemency and pity, aduiſed with himſelfe to play this Pagent. He caused an iron chaine to be tied about his neck. Therwith he came to the Pope as he sate at dinner, put himself to creepe on all foure, and like a Dog laid him down vnder the Table, so long vntil the Popes displeasure being asswaged he obtained pardon for his Countrey. Wherof they say, he had afterward the surname of Dog giuen him, as Iustinianus writeth. Who desireth to see the whole Story, he shall finde it well written by the said Petrus Iustinianus, Historiæ rerum Venetarum Libro quarto. Now let vs see, Sir Defender, how many lies ye make in one sentence. That Francis Dandalus was by the Pope hurled vnder his Table, this is one lie. That he was the Duke of Venice, King of Creta & Cypres, there be two lies, beside the notable lie, you seem to be very ignorant of the state of Venice, in that you make the Duke an Ambaſſador, who being once created Duke, goeth not out of the City, (c) Neither is euer any of their State King of Candy and Cypres. For their State admitteth none to be a King among them: Howbeit at the time of Francis Dandalus, Candy rebelled, and Cypres was not yet come to be vnder the gouernment of the Venetians, as you might haue learned in the eloquent Hiſtorie that Petrus Bembus wrote of Venice his Countrey. That he was fast bound with Chaines, there bee three lies. For he was not fast bound (d) only he had cast a chaine about his own neck, which he might haue take off at his pleasure. That he was so thrown vnder the Table to gnaw bones among the Popes dogs, (e) there be foure lies. And that the Pope had dogs feeding vnder his Table (ſ) I doubt not but it is an other lie. Whether these fiue lies be not enough for one little sentence of three lines, I report me to whosoeuer of your owne fellowes lieth for the best game. I thinke verily this Defender, if he be not very shameleſſe, wisheth he had a thicker beard to hide his silke cheekes from blushing. Such false causes must be defended by lying Proctors. If they belied Stories onely, and taught not also false Doctrine in the chiefe points of our Faith, their lying were leſſe hurtfull.

(a) Vntruth. For hee was then a Senator of very great Honour: And at the next Election was chosen Duke.

(b) The offence stood onely in helping their Neighbor being a banished man into his country.

(c) Yet the right and state of both these Kingdoms is in his hand.

(d) Al these matters bee full solemnly proued, and are worthie to be published by proclamatiõ.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

So many lies, M. Harding, and, as you say, so farre past shame, and such hot Tragedies and the cause no greater? What stirre would ye haue kept, if it had bẽn matter worthy the hearing? What if the Authour of the Apology, had bœne ouerſœne in the report of one yeere, or two, or in some other like Circumstance, the Substance of the Story neuertheleſſe still reserued? If ye had remembred some of your owne often ouersights, ye would not for shame haue been so terrible against others. For it appeareth well by all that ye haue hitherto sent vs ouer, your insight in matters is not so deepe, but yee may often and foulelie be deceiued.

Hieron aduersus error. Iohan Hieroſolimit.

These words of yours, M. Harding, are neither manerly, nor manly: notwithstanding they seeme well to content your pleasant humour. S. Hierome saith: Non refert quid inimici audiunt, & amici. Qui inimicus est etiam in scirpo nodum quærit: An Enemy and a friend heare not both of one sort. An Enemy will (cauill, and quarrell, and) seeke a knot in a ruſh. The Substance of Gods Religion standeth not in the reporting of a Storie.

Hierony. de optimo genere interpretandi.

S. Hierome saith of such Captious quarrellers: Audiant à me, non periclitari Eccleſiarum ſtatum, ſi ego celeritate dictandi verba aliqua dimiſerim; Let them vnderstand, that albeit I in haſte of penning haue let eſcape a word, or two, yet that ſhall not hazard the state of the Church of God.

Not Duke.

But Francis Dandalus (ye say) was not at that time Duke of Venice: he himselfe tied the chaine about his owne necke: He came of his owne accord vpon all foure as if he had been a Dogge, and lay downe willingly vnder the Popes Table: He lay not there to gnaw bones: He found no dog there to lie with him Therefore ye say, This Defender is an vnhoneſt man, past all shame, a Lyer, and a Foole. Such Cholericke conclusions, M. Harding, may well beseeme a Doctor of your Diuinity.

Howbeit, the faireſt couloure ye can lay vpon the matter is this, that the Ambaſſador of that Noble Common Weale of Venice lay as a Dog in a chaine, vnderneath the Popes Table, as you say, and that willingly, and with all his heart, by such Submission to appease the Popes high indignation, and to recouer his fauour towards his Countrey. It seemeth he was either a verie Arrogant man, or a marueilous angry Pope, that would by none other submission be reconciled. Franciscus Dandalus.

But Dandalus at that time was not Duke of Venice. Neither was it so hard a matter, to know that, M. Harding: nor was it so great an Heresie, to call him Duke, for that shortly after he was made Duke. S. Augustin saith, Dicimus Apostolum Paulum in Thar- so Ciliciæ natum. At ille tunc iam non erat Apostolus. Ita cum audimus, Discipulos Christi inuitatos ad nuptias, non iam Discipulos, sed qui futuri erant Discipuli intelligere debe- mus: We say, that Paul the Apostle was borne at Tharsus in Cilicia. And yet Paul at that time, when he was borne, was no Apostle. Euen so when we heare that Christs Disciples were bidden to the Marriage Feast at Cana in Galilee, we must vnderstand, that they were not then his Disciples, but became afterward his Disciples. Aug. de consen. Euangelist. lib. 2. cap. 17. Ioh. 2.

So S. Hierome calleth Pamphilus a Martyr: and yet at that time whereof he meant, Pamphilus in deed was no Martyr. Therefore he saith, Concedamus, vt Pamphili sit, sed nondum Martyris. Antè enim scripsit, quàm Martyrium perpeteretur: Let vs grant, it was Pamphilus Booke: But that Pamphilus as yet was no Martyr. For he wrote his Booke first, and was Martyr afterward. Likewise againe he saith: Nos pro No, Alexandriam posuimus per Anticipationem, quæ Græcè προλῆψις appellatur: We in stead of the City No, haue translated it, the Citie Alexandria, by a Figure called Anticipation. For that the City, which before was called No, was afterward called Alexandria. Hieron. de Erroib. Origenis. Hieron. in Ezechiel. l. 9. c. 30.

So S. Augustine saith: it is written in the Booke of Genesis: Hi sunt Filij Israel, qui nati sunt ei in Mesopotamia: cùm Beniamin longè postea natus sit, cùm iam transiissent Bethel, & appropinquarent Bethleem: These be the Children of Israel, that were borne to him in Mesopotamia: And yet Beniamin (that there is reckoned for one of his Children) was borne (not in Mesopotamia, but) long afterward when they were now past Bethel, and drew towards Bethleem, that is in Iewrie. Yet hath there been no man hitherto so vncourteous, that euer would vse your eloquence, M. Harding, and call either Moses, or S. Augustine, or S. Hierome, Fooles or Liars. Genes. 35. Aug. in quæst. super. Genesim Quæst. 117.

If ye would but indifferently haue weighed the matter, ye might well haue thought, we called Dandalus Duke of Venice, for that hee was sone afterward chosen Duke of Venice.

So we may say, Doctor Harding in the time of King Edward frely and fully professed the Gospell, and preached vehemently against the Pope. Nevertheless, when hee thus preached, he was not yet knowen by the name of a Doctour. For hee was Doctoured afterward in the time of Queene Marie.

Let vs grant, there was some errour in the report of this Storie. Yet must euery man be condemned for a Foole and a Liar, that may bee taken in like Errour? If so, then will M. Harding trouble his Godfathers, and cause them, to giue him a new name.

S. Chrysostome saith: There were twelue Magi or Wisemen, that came to Christ: and yet ye hold commonly, they were but three. Clemens Alexandrinus saith, Christ preached but one yeere: yet others say, he preached three yeeres: others say, he preached foure. Some say Christ was three and thirty yeeres old, some say, he was foure and thirtie when he suffered. Yet Tertullian saith, he was Only thirty yeeres old: Irenæus saith, hee was more then forty. Christ saith: My Father is able to giue me twelue Legions of Angels. S. Hilary, in the report therof, a great deale aduanceth the number and reckoneth Duodecim Millia Legionum, twelue thousand Legions of Angels. Your owne Blessed Donation of Constantine, which (ye say) so much irketh vs, commandeth the Patriarch of Constantinople to be subiect and obedient to the Bishop of Rome. And yet at that time, when by your imagination, this Fable was deuised, there was neither Patriarch, nor Church, in Constantinople, nor any City as yet built and knowne by that name. Your Fellow Dorman allegeth ful solemnly the seuenth Booke of Theodoretus: And yet Theodoretus himselfe neuer wrote but onely fiue. And so he lept two whole Bookes beyond his Author. And againe he telleth vs a proper tale of the terrible Examples of two Kings, Ozias and Oza: and yet both he and his Fellowes might soone haue learned, that Oza was onely a poore Leuite, and no King. Matth. 3. Chrisost. in Matth. homil. 2. in opere imperfect Clem. Strom. 1. Tertul. contra Iudæos. Irenæus lib. 2. cap. 34. & 40. Matth. 26. Hila. in Psa. 54 Donatio Constantini. Dorman. fo. 22 Dorman. fo. 24 M. Harding, fol. 308. b.

You your selfe, M. Harding, in this selfe same Booke say, That the Councell of Nice was kept in the time of Pope Sylvester: And yet Athanasius, that then was present at the same Councell saith: Sylvester at that time was not aliue: but that the Councell was summoned by the Emperour, and holden in the time of Pope Iulius. Againe you say: That at Athanas. in Apolog. 2. M. Harding, fol. 309. a.

Franciſcus Dandalus.

the Very ſame time while the Councell was holden at Nice, Pope Sylueſter held likewiſe a Councel in Rome: And ſo by the Iudgement of Athanaſius, ye ſay, that Pope Sylueſter held a Councell after he was dead.

And muſt all theſe, and other your like tales, M. Harding, paſſe vnder the name of Lies and Follies.

This Gentleman (yée ſay) was not ſo faſt bound as we Imagine, but fel down meekely and willingly of himſelfe. No doubt, M. Harding, who ſo knoweth an Italian courage, will ſoone beleeue that Francis Dandalus, a Gentleman of ſuch Nobility, and the Embaſſadour of ſo Noble a Common Wealth, was ſwne, and eaſily, and willingly woone, to come crèping with an Iron chaine on his necke, and to wallow vnder the Popes table, as a Dogge, to his owne immortall ſhame, and to the euerlaſting diſhonour of his Countrey. Verily hee would neuer haue yeelded himſelfe to ſuch Villanie, had it not bèene to auoid ſome other greater villany. For I beſeech you, whether is it more cruelty, for you to runne vpon a poore man with ſword drawne, and to ſtrike him thorow, and ſo to kill him, or elſe to force him to lay cruel hands vpon his owne body, and to kill himſelfe? In whether of theſe two acts is more cruelty? S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: A poore man oftentimes is content to wound or feſter his owne fleſh, to the end, to moue the rich man to ſome pity: Alij Capiti ſuo clauos acutos infigunt: alij per ipſum gelu nudo Corpore mendicantes petunt: Alij hiſce etiam grauiora ferentes, miſerabile de ſe præbent ſpectaculum. At dices, Non illorum capita non configimus. Vtinam verò tu configeres. Non enim tam grauis fuiſſet calamitas. Nam, qui alium interimit, longè leuius peccat, quàm is qui iubet aliquem ſeipſum interficere: Some there be, that ſticke nailes in their owne heads: Some others go begging with naked bodies in the cold Froſt: Some others ſuffer other things of greater cruelty, and ſhew themſelues miſerable to behold. But thou wilt ſay, we ſticke not theſe nailes in their heades. Would God, thou ſtickedſt them in. For then their miſerie were not ſo grieuous. For he, that with his owne hand killeth another, committeth a great deale leſſe fault, then hee, that forceth a man to kill himſelfe.

Willingly.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. Homi. 21. ad populũ Antioch. homil. 37.

So ſay we, it was farre greater griefe vnto that Noble Gentleman, ſo vilely to diſhonour and abaſe himſelfe, then if he had bèn driuen thereto through the force and violence of his enemy. In this ſort was the Emperour Henry the Fourth well content, willingly to wait vpon Pope Hildebrand at Canuſium, & three daies together to ſtand bareheaded and barefoot in the hard froſt at his gate, and as one ſaith, to be a gaſing ſtocke both to men and Angels before he might haue licence to come neere. So was the Emperour Frederick Ænobarbus contented, willingly to lay his necke vnder the Popes foot, as wee ſhall declare more hereafter. So was the poore Gentlewoman contented, willingly to caſt a halter about her owne Sonnes necke, and ſo to preſent him before Pope Hildebrand, whom hee had offended, by ſuch humble ſubiection to craue his pardon. In reſpect whereof, the Pope pardoned him his life: but commanded his foot to bee ſtricken off, of which wound, the poore yong Gentleman ſoone after died.

Vrſperg. Sabel. Ennead. 9. li. 3.

Beno Cardinal.

Ye ſay, It is a lie, that Francis Dandalus, ſo noble a Gentleman was driuen vnder the popes Table to gnaw bones. I thinke it well, M. Harding, and therefore we will rather ſay, he lay there to gather vp the crummes that fell from his Lords table.

Gnaw bones.

No Dogs vnder the Popes Table.

But vnder the Popes Table (ye ſay) certainly there were no Dogges. And this (ye ſay) is another lie notwithſtanding, this Negatiue were very hard for you to proue. Howbeit heerein I will not greatly ſtriue. And yet it had bèene a more ſeemely ſight in my iudgement, to ſée a Dogge lying there, then a man, and ſpecially a Noble Gentleman, the Embaſſador of ſo Noble a City.

To conclude, this was the ſame Pope Clemens the Fifth, that thus pronounced of himſelfe, and proclaimed the ſame vnto the whole world by a Law: Nos ſuperioritatem habemus ad Imperium: Nos vacante Imperio, Imperatori ſuccedimus: We haue the ſoueraignty ouer the Empire: The Empire being void, we are Heires apparent to the Emperor. The Venetians had giuen aid, to reſtore one Friſcus, a baniſhed man, vnto the Dukedome of Ferrara. Therefore Pope Clemens interdited them, and all that they had, and further ſignified his pleaſure vnto all the world, that whitherſoeuer they or any of them came, it ſhould be lawfull for any man, not only to take their bodies, and to ſell them for ſlaues, and to ſpoile their goods, but alſo to kill them, whether it were by right or by wrong. For ſo Sabellicus writeth, Vt eos fas eſſet vnicuique iure, & iniuria interfieere. This was the cauſe of all this great adoe. And this high indignation had neuer bèene ſlacked, had not ſo noble a perſonage abaſed himſelfe, to be tied by the necke in a chaine, and to creepe vnder the Popes Table vpon all foure like a Dogge: This diſdainefull fact, Sabellicus the Author reprooueth vehemently and with many words, as immoderate tyranny and intolerable pride, and moſt ſhamefull abuſing of the ſtate of Princes. Yet M. Harding thinketh

God giue you grace that you may blush at your misusing of Gods people, lest ye haue that face, that the Prophet saith, Is past blushing. I trust, this Defender shall neuer blush to say, either with S. Paul, Non pudet me Euangelij Christi: Est enim virtus Dei ad Salutem: I am not ashame of the Gospell of Christ: For it is the Power of God vnto Saluation. Or with S. (a) It was not the Pope, that armed Henry the Second against Henry the fourth, who by the account of some is Henry the third. Stories declare other causes of their falling out, and the more part of the Writers impute it to the iudgement of God, for punishment of his great wickednesse. After that hee was ouercome with all his power by the Saxons, in seuenteene daies he durst not to appeare abroad. In the meane time his Sonne tooke vpon him foorthwith the administration of the Empire, went into Italy with an armie, would not surrender the state which he liked well, his Father being therewith offended, he tooke prisoner (b) without any motion of the Pope, (c) with whom he was also at variance, and committed him to strait custodie.

Gregorius Heimburgensis saith thus: Paschalis Papa Principes contra Henricum 4. concitauit: imó, eius Proprium Filium: quem etiam contra Patrem fecit permultos Episcopos Rheni in Regem coronari, & vocari Henricum Quintum: Pope Paschalis raised vp the Princes of Germanie against Henry the Fourth: Nay rather he raised vp his owne Sonne, whom also he caused by many Bishops adioining to the Rheine, to be crowned Emperour against his owne Father, and to be called Henry the Fifth.

Carion Anno 1103.

Vrsperg. Anno 1105.

The case being cléere, this one Authoritie may stand in stead of many. Héereof Henrie the Father pitiously complaineth in his Letters written to the French King. Carion saith: Hunc Henricum Filium solicitarunt Episcopi, vt aduersus Patrem insurgeret, eúmque Imperio pelleret: The Bishops entised this yong Gentleman, Henrie the Sonne, that he should rise against his Father, and put him from the Empire. But these Bishops as Vrspergensis saith, were Responsales Paschalis Papæ: Pope Paschalis Agents or dorrs in those Countries. And Henrie the Sonne himselfe, when he stood in the field, neuer pretended any other colour against his Father, but only the obedience of the See of Rome.

And lest any man should doubt of the truth héereof, the Pope not long before, had likewise raised vp Rodolphus the Duke of Sueuia, against the same Emperour, Henrie the Fourth: and the better to encourage his ambitious head, and to traine him to his purpose, had sent him a Crowne with this Posée.

Petra dedit Petro, Petrus Diadema Rodolpho.

Carion.

Whereby he meant, that as Christ had giuen the state and right of the Empire vnto the Pope, so would the Pope now bestow the same vpon Rodolphus, if he would aduenture to raise his power against the Emperour his Liege Lord. Likewise he had written to the Princes of Germanie, as Carion saith: Vt Imperatorem alium designarent: That they should proceed to the Election of another Emperour. Thus the Pope thought it but a play, to place and displace the States of the world at his pleasure. Of this Emperours Vertues I will say nothing. As hée is dispraised by some, so by others hée is much commended.

Auentinus.

Auentinus saith: In Pauperes, Monachos, Sacerdotes munificentissimum, &c. His very enemies confesse that he was most Liberall vnto poore folkes, Monkes, and Priests: that he was Constant in aduersitie: Faithfull to his Prisoners: Gentle to his Foes: Deuout towards God: Wise and Politicke in Ciuill and Martiall affaires: Of a Princely Maiestie of countenance; wherein he excelled all others, and was most worthy of the Empire.

Vrsperg. Pag. 239.

Vrspergensis saith: He was Noble, Doughty, and Venturous: and was seene threescore and two sundry times in fought field, wherein he passed both Marcellus, and Iulius Cæsar, and all other Kings and Emperours that had beene before him.

Carion.

Platina in Seuerino. 1.

The greatest cause of falling out betwéene him and the Pope was this: Order was taken before, and had still béene kept from the beginning, that the Election of the Pope should be ratified by the Emperour, otherwise not to stand. And Platina saith; The Pope Elected without the Emperours Letters Patent was no Pope. Another ancient order was this, that the Emperour might bestow all the Bishoprickes and Abbies of the Empire, whensoeuer they should happen to be void. These Ancient Orders Pope Hildebrand presumed to breake. For neither would he suffer his owne Election to be ratified by the Emperor, nor the Emperour to bestow the Bishoprickes or Abbies within his dominions. In these attempts the Emperor withstood him, claiming vnto himselfe the same Right of inheritance that all other Emperors his Predecessours had lawfully and peaceably enioied before him. Therefore the Pope Excommunicated him, interdicted his Land, and called him Arch-pirate, Arch-heretike, and Apostata. Therefore he deposed him, raised vp the Duke of Sueuia, and all the world against him; and armed the Sonne against the Father, and wilfully disquieted the whole State of all Christendome. Auentinus saith: Multitum priuatim, tum publicè, &c. Many there were, that both priuately, and openly cursed Pope Hildebrand; and said, that with his hatred and ambition he troubled the world; and that vnder the colour of Christ he wrought the feares of Antichrist:

Helmoldus.

The Emperour tooke a long iournie into Italy, to submit himselfe vnto the Pope: and being at Canusium, as it is said before, in the depth of Winter, and in the hard frost, bee waited patiently three dates together with bare head and bare foot before the Popes gates to winne his fauour. In the end Pope Hildebrand, being sicke, and finding himselfe in case not to liue, sent vnto the Emperour and besought him pardon for all his iniuries. After that, the Popes that succeeded neuertheleſſe continued this quarrell still. And thus by the Popes entisement the Sonne raised a power and deposed his Father: The Bishops disrobed him of his wæd of State, and pulled the Crowne Emperiall from his head. The ancient reuerend Prince, hauing now continued in his Empire fiftie whole yéeres, bare all these things quietly, and said vnto them: Videat Deus, & iudicet: Let God see, and Iudge

Iudge your doings. At the laſt, being left naked and out of all, he turned himſelfe to the Biſhop of Spira, and ſaid vnto him: Now I beſeech you, for Gods ſake, giue me a prebend in your Church. For I am able to read, and can do ſome good in the Quire. But he was kept ſtill in cloſe priſon at Leodium, vntill he died. And being dead, he was kept fiue whole yeeres together aboue ground, at the Popes commandement, and might not be buried: ſuch courteſie found that worthie Emperour at the Popes hand, onelie for claiming of his right. Matt. Palmer.

Pope Hildebrand.

Pope Hildebrand is commended by many for ſundrie vertues. But no man (ſay you) hath more ſet foorth his worthineſſe, then Onuphrius, a man yet aliue, and one of all men, that would bee right loath in anie point to diſpleaſe the Pope. Perhaps he thought to winne ſome credit, by aduenturing his wits in a deſperate cauſe, as did he, that beſtowed ſo much eloquence in the praiſe of Baldneſſe: or he, that praiſed the Feuer quartane, or Eraſmus, that of late yeeres wrote ſo much in the praiſe of Follie.

The Heretike Ebion ſometime praiſed Iudas aboue all the Apoſtles: and Libanius the Sophiſt beſtowed great praiſes vpon Iulianus the Renegate. Certainely ſundrie Old Writers of whom ſome knew Pope Hildebrand and liued with him, haue not giuen him ſuch worthy praiſes. Beno Cardinal is faith: Hildebrand, being as yet but a Cardinall, beat Pope Alexander with his fiſt, and kept him priſoner. Poiſoned ſixe Popes his Predeceſſours: Was a Coniurer, and a raiſer of Diuels: and threw the Sacrament into the Fire. Synefius. Plato. Socrat. Lib. 3. Cap. 19. Beno Cardinal.

Auentinus making his entrie to ſpeake of Pope Hildebrand, ſaith thus: Scripturus ſum Reipublicæ Chriſtianæ, Occidentaliſque Eccleſiæ, Romanique Imperij Bella, Cædes, Homicidia, Parricidia, Simultates, Odia, Stupra, Furta, Peculatus, Sacrilegia, Diſſidia, Seditiones pluſquam Ciuiles, &c. Now muſt I ſpeake of Wars, Slaughters, Murders, Killing of Fathers, Strifes, Hatreds, Fornications, Robberies, Spoilings of Common Treaſure, Spoilings of Churches, Debates, and Seditions more then Ciuill, which haue happened in the Chriſtian Common Weale, in the Weſt Church, and in the Empire of Rome. These were the fruits of Hildebrands Popedome. Auentinus.

The Biſhops at the Councell of Brixia, touching Pope Hildebrand, pronounce thus: Nos eundem Hildebrandum procaciſſimum, &c. The ſame moſt filthie and ſhameleſſe Pope Hildebrand, a maintainer of Church-robbings and houſe-burnings, a defender of Murders and Periuries, calling in queſtion the Catholike and the Apoſtolike Faith of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, an Old Diſciple of Berengarius the Heretike, a Manifeſt Coniurer, loaden with the Spirit of Satan, and therefore out of the true Faith, we iudge worthie to bee depoſed. Whatſoeuer points of deſcant Onuphrius your Scholler hath lately learned to play hereupon, this, M. Harding, is that Holineſſe and Worthineſſe that ſundrie Old Writers haue iudged to be in Pope Hildebrand. Vrſperg. Anno 1080.

Treading on the Emperors necke.

VVHo ſo ill fauouredly and monſtrouſly put the Emperor Frederikes necke vnder his feet, and, as though that were not ſufficient, added further this text out of the Pſalmes: Thou ſhalt goe vpon the Adder & Cockatrice, and ſhalt tread the Lion and Dragon vnder thy feet? Such an example of ſcorning and contemning the Maieſty of a Prince, as neuer before that time was heard tell of in any remembrance; except, I ween, either of Tamerlanes the King of Scythia, a wild & a barbarous Creature, or elſe of Sapor King of the Perſians. All theſe notwithſtanding were Popes, all Peters Succeſſours, all moſt Holie Fathers: whoſe ſeuerall words we muſt take to be as good as ſeuerall Goſpels.

M. Harding.

Yee aske who put the Emperor Frederikes necke vnder his feete, &c. Verilie who it was, I knowe not: neither your ſelues, I beleeue.

But what if ye bring good Authoritie for it? So farre as any man doth euill, be he Pope, bee he Biſhop, Emperor, or King, or whatſoeuer he be, we defend him not. Popes themſelues be men, and do not at (a) all times behaue themſelues like Angels. But what is that to your purpoſe? Our matter is quæſtio iuris, non facti; once more I muſt tell it you. And if that were a fault in the Pope, we acknowledge it to be as Tertullian ſaith, Vitium conuerſationis, non prædicationis: The fault of conuerſation, not of Doctrine (b) preached. In præſcription Cont. Hæret.

All theſe (though ye ſcoffe neuer ſo much) were Popes, all were Peters Succeſſours, and, notwithſtanding any thing that ye can ſay againſt them to the contrarie, without making a lie, (c) all were Holy Fathers. But their ſeuerall words we be not bound to eſteeme for ſo good as ſeuerall Goſpels. Neuertheleſſe their publike Decrees we acknowledge and reuerence, and thinke they ought to be obeied.

The whole Storie hereof is thus reported by Carion: Vſus eſt Fredericus deiectione, & ſumma humilitate, &c. The Emperour Frederike vſed all manner ſubmiſſion and humilitie. For he came to Venice, and at the gates of the Church falling downe groueling before the Pope, hee ſuffered himſelfe to bee trodden on by the Pope with his feete. In the meane while the Pope cauſed Proclamation to bee made by theſe words of the Prophet Dauid, ſpoken of Chriſt: Thou ſhalt walke vpon the venomous Aſpe, and the Baſiliske: Thou ſhalt tread downe the Lion and Dragon. And ſo at the laſt hee Abſolued him. The Emperour in the meane while ſaid, hee ſhewed that humilitie, not vnto Pope Alexander, but vnto Peter. Thereunto the Pope anſwered, Et mihi, & Petro: Both to me, and to Peter too: placing himſelfe before Peter.

Treading on the Emperors necke.

Thus Carion declareth the whole Storie with ſome particular circumſtances: but whether of fauour, or hatred, I will not iudge. Neither may it well bee thought the Pope vſed the Emperour thus of any great fauour. But I thinke that the Noble Citie of Venice, that cauſed this whole Tragedie to be ſet forth in Imageris, in S. Marks Church there, for the euerlaſting remembrance of the fact, was not ſo carried away, either with loue of the one ſide, or with hatred of the other, that they would ſo openly haue recorded a knowne Vntruth.

The Pope is euer Holie.

But yee ſay: So farre as a man doth euill, bee hee Pope, bee hee Biſhop, yee defend him not. The Popes themſelues (yee ſay) be men, and doe not alwaies behaue themſelues as Angels. Yet notwithſtanding immediately after yee ſay further: All theſe were Popes, and Peters Succeſſours, and Holy Fathers. This being true, it is no hard matter for any Pope to be Holie. Pope Iohn 12. was ſlaine in Aduouterie. Pope Benedictus 9. liued without either Law, or Reaſon, and defiled Peters Chaire with all kind of ſhame. Sine Lege & Ratione vixit, & Petri Sedem omnibus probris fœdauit. And in the end he tooke money enough, and ſold the Popedome. Platina ſaith, Popes then were elected, not for their Learning and Holineſſe, but in reſpect of Money and Friendſhip. The Biſhops in the Councell of Conſtance pronounce thus of Pope Iohn 23. A tempore iuuentutis ſuæ fuit homo malæ indolis, inuerecundus, impudicus, &c. Et adhuc dicitur, tenetur, creditur, & reputatur pro tali, & vt talis: From the time of his youth he hath euermore been a man of ill diſpoſition, vnſhamefaſte, vnchaſte, vnhoneſt, &c. And ſtill hitherto he is named, holden, beleeued, taken, and reputed for ſuch a one, and as ſuch a one. Some of them haue liued filthily with their owne Daughters, and ſome worſe, and in more beaſtly diſorder. Platina calleth them, Monſtra, & portenta: Monſters, and vgly, and horrible, and ill ſhapen Creatures. Yet ſay you, all theſe were Peters Succeſſours, and Holie Fathers. And ſo muſt they needs be counted, although they had beene a great deale worſe. Dame Ioane, I truſt, ye will haue excepted out of this number. And a Speciall Statute of premunire in the Popes behalfe is written thus: Papa de Homicidio vel Adulterio accuſari non poteſt. Vnde Sacrilegij inſtar eſſet, diſputare de facto ſuo. Nam facta Papæ excuſantur, vt Homicidia Samſonis, Furta Hebræorum, Adulteria Iacob: *The Pope may neuer bee accuſed, neither of Aduouterie, nor of Murder. The Apologie, Chap. 8. Diuiſion 2. and 3.

If wee be counted Traitours, which do honour our Princes, which giue them all obedience, as much as is due to them by Gods Word, and doe pray for them: what kind of men then be theſe, which haue not only done all the things before ſaide, but alſo allow the ſame for ſpecially well done? Doe they then either this way inſtruct the People, as wee doe, to reuerence their Magiſtrate? Or can they with honeſtie appeach vs as ſeditious Perſons, breakers of the common quiet, and deſpiſers of Princes Maieſtie?

Truly we neither put off the yoke of obedience from vs: Neither do we diſorder Realmes: Nor do we ſet vp, or pull downe kings: Nor do we tranſlate Gouernments: Nor giue we our Kings poiſon to drinke: Nor yet hold foorth to them our feet to kiſſe: Nor opprobriouſly triumph ouer them: Nor leap into their neckes with our feet.

This rather is our Profeſſion: this is our Doctrine: That euery ſoule, of what calling ſoeuer it be, be it Monke, be it Preacher, be it Prophet, bee it Apoſtle, ought to bee ſubiect to kings and Magiſtrates: yea, and that the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe, vnleſſe he will ſeeme greater then Euangeliſts, then the Prophets, or the Apoſtles, ought both to acknowledge, and to call the Emperour his Lord and Master, as the Old Biſhops of Rome, who liued in times of more grace, euer did. Our common teaching alſo is, that wee ought ſo to obey Princes, as men ſent of God: and, that whoſo withſtandeth them, withſtandeth Gods ordinance. This is our Doctrine: and this is well to bee ſeene, both in our Bookes and Preachings, and alſo in the maners and modeſt behauiour of our People. Chryſ. in 13. ca. ad Romanos. Gregor ſæpe in Epiſt.

M. Harding.

The Doctrine of obedience appertaineth ſpecially to ſubiects. The Biſhop of Rome ſitting by due Succeſſion in the Chaire of Peter, (a) in Spirituall cauſes tuis haue no Superiour. In temporall matters it may be, that in one age he hath acknowledged the Emperour as the Lord of that Prouince where he liued (b) as before Conſtantine all the Popes did liue in ſubiection: and in a nother age hee may bee Lord thereof himſelfe. Likewiſe S. Gregorie might call Mauritius his Lord, either of courteſie, or of cuſtome: and yet our Holie Father Pius the Fourth ſhall not be bound to do the like, in (c) conſideration that the cuſtome hath long ſince beene diſcontinued. Neither did S. Gregorie by that title of honor preiudicate vnto himſelfe in any Spirituall iuriſdiction. For that name notwithſtanding, he gouerned the (d) whole Church, and complained that Maximus was made Biſhope of Salonæ, a Citie in Illyrico, without his Authoritie, not regarding that Mauritius the Emperor was thought to haue willed it ſo to be done. And therefore he writeth to Conſtantia the Empreſſe, that foraſmuch as neither hee nor his deputie was made priuy to it, that the thing had beene done, which neuer was done before by any of the Princes that were the Emperours Predeceſſours. 4 Epiſt. 34

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

What nede you to speake so precisely and so nicely of your Causes Spirituall, M. Harding? Yee know that your Pope hath claimed, and yet claimeth his Soueraignitie, not onely in Spirituall Causes, but also in Temporall, as it shall appeare. Ye will say, ye are an ill Proctor, and doe him wrong, and goe about to abridge his right, that will so lightly exclude that thing that hee so greedilie will haue included.

The Pope Inferiour to the Prince.

You say: The Pope can haue no Superiour in Spirituall Causes. And yet by the iudgement of sundry your Doctors, euen in Causes Spirituall the Councell is Superiour to the Pope, and may summone him, and iudge him, and giue sentence against him, and depose him, as hereafter it shalbe declared more at large. Thus it is noted of purpose vpon your owne Decrees: Cùm agitur de Fide, tunc Synodus maior est quàm Papa: When the case is moued in a matter of Faith, (that is to say, in a cause Spirituall) then is the Councell greater then the Pope. And your owne Panormitane saith, as it is alleged before: Papa tenetur confiteri: & in illo actu Sacerdos est maior illo: The Pope is bound to make his Confession: and in so doing the Priest is aboue the Pope. Againe he saith: Papa non potest cogere Sacerdotem, vt reuelet Confessionem, quia in illo actu Sacerdos est maior quàm Papa. Children know that Faith and Confession are Spirituall Causes, and not Temporall. Yee see therefore, M. Harding, by the iudgement of your owne Doctors, that the Pope may haue a Superiour, euen in Spirituall causes.

Now let vs weigh the great force of your reason. Thus you say:

The Pope sitteth in Peters Chaire: Ergo, in Spirituall Causes he can haue no Superiour.

Who taught you thus to peece your Arguments? What Child, what Sophister would so reason? Who euer gaue such Power and Vertue to Peters Chaire?

In temporall matters (ye say) it may be, that in one age the Pope hath acknowledged the Emperor as Lord of that Prouince where he liued. Graciously considered. It was the Popes Courtesie and Humilitie, no doubt: but not his dutie. Howbeit, Aaron the High Bishop of Israel was contented to submit himselfe to Moses, and of dutie to call him Lord.

Exod. 32.

Tertullian saith thus: Colimus Imperatorem, vt hominem à Deo secundum, & solo Deo minorem. Sic enim Imperator Omnibus maior est, dum solo vero Deo minor est: We honor the Emperors Maiestie, as a man next vnto God. For so is the Emperor greater then All men, while hee is lesse then onely the True God. Origen saith: Petrus & Iohannes nihil habebant quod Cæsari redderent. Dixit enim Petrus, Aurum & Argentum non habeo: qui hoc non habet, nec Cæsari habet quod reddat, nec vnde Sublimioribus Potestatibus subiaceat. Qui vero habet Pecuniam, aut Possessiones, aut aliquid in hoc sæculo, audiat, Omnis anima Potestatibus Sublimioribus subiaceat: Peter and Iohn had nothing to giue vnto the Emperor. For Peter said, Gold and Siluer I haue none: which who so hath not, hath nothing to giue to Cæsar, nor wherein hee should be subiect to the Higher Powers. But whosoeuer hath either Money, or Lands, or any thing in this world, let him heare what S. Paul saith, Let euerie soule submit it selfe to the Higher Powers.

Tertull. ad Scapulam.

Orig. ad Rom. Cap. 13. Lib. 9. Actor. 3.

And for proofe of the practise hereof, Pope Leo thus submitteth himselfe humbly vnto Lewes the Emperor: Nos, si incompetenter aliquid egimus, & in Subditis iustæ Legis mitem non conseruauimus, vestro admissorum nostrorum cuncta volumus emendare iudicio: If wee haue done any thing disorderly, and ouer our Subiects haue not kept the due trade and course of Law, by your Maiesties iudgement we will redresse all our faults.

2. Q. 7. Nos. §.

So likewise, long before Pope Leo, Pope Gregorie wrote vnto the Emperor Mauritius: Ecce per me, seruum vltimum suum & vestrum, respondebit Christus: Sacerdotes meos manui tuæ commisi, &c. Ego quidem vestræ iussioni subiectus, Legem vestram per diuersas terrarum partes transmitti feci: Behold, thus will Christ answer you by me, being both his and your most humble Seruant: I haue committed my Priests vnto thy hand. As for my part I beeing subiect vnto your Maiesties Commandement, haue caused your Order to be proclaimed thorow diuers parts of the world. Againe he saith: Christus dominari Imperatorem, non solùm Militibus, sed etiam Sacerdotibus concessit: Christ hath giuen power vnto the Emperor to beare rule, not only ouer Souldiers, but also ouer Priests. Againe he saith: Et Imperatori obedientiam præbui: & pro Deo, quòd sensi minimè tacui: I haue shewed my duty towards my Lord the Emperor: and touching God, I haue not concealed what I thought. And this is it that S. Paul saith: Let euery Soule be subiect to the Higher Powers. Vpon which words S. Chrysostome saith: Etiamsi sis Apostolus, etiamsi Euangelista, etiamsi Propheta, siue quisquis tandem fueris. Neque enim Pietatem subuertit ista Subiectio: Though thou be an Apostle, though thou be an Euangelist, though thou be a Prophet, or what one soeuer else thou be, yet be thou subiect to the Higher Powers. For this Subiection is no hinderance to Godlinesse.

Againe: Papa totius orbis obtinet potestatem: The Pope hath the power of all the world. Againe: Solus Papa est verus Dominus Temporalium: Onlie the Pope is the very true Lord of Temporall things. And againe: Omnis potestas sæcularis immediatè data est Papæ: All manner Temporall Power is giuen immediately to the Pope.

Ye say: Pope Gregory might call the Emperour Mauritius his Lord, (not of dutie, but) either of Custome, or of Courtesie: yet (say you further) our holy Father Pope Pius the Fourth shall not now be bound to doe the like. Here I beseech you M. Harding, what strange kind of Spirituall Power hath Pope Pius now gotten that was not before in Pope Gregorie? What Learning? What Vertue? What Worthinesse? What Holinesse? What good reason can ye allege, wherefore Christ, and his Apostles, and all other holy Fathers and Martyrs should be subiect to the Prince, & only your late Popes and Cardinals should stand so free?

The Pope inferior to the Emperour.

Ye say: This custome hath long sithence been discontinued: And in one age the Pope may acknowledge the Emperour as the Lord of the Land where he dwelleth: and in an other age he may be Lord thereof himselfe. That is to say, In one age the Pope may be subiect to the Emperour: and in another age the Emperour may be subiect to the Pope. This is your whole and onely reason. Thus we se your obedience towards your Prince goeth not by Gods Word, but onlie by Ages. Therefore we may say to you as S. Hilarie sometime said to the Arian Heretikes: Fides temporum est, non Euangeliorum: Your Faith passeth by Ages, not by Gospels. And yet it is written: Veritas Domini manet in Æternum: The truth of our Lord endureth (not for one Age, or other, but) for Euer. It ware a high point of Learning for an Astronomer skilfully to Prognosticate betweene the Emperour and the Pope, whether of them should be Dominus Anni. Howbeit, here may I well and iustly answer you with these words of S. Bernard: Omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit. Si omnis, & vestra. Quis vos excipit ab vniuersitate? Si quis tentat Excipere, conatur Decipere. Noli illorum acquiescere consiliis, qui cum sint Christiani, Christi tamen vel sequi facta, vel obsequi dictis, probro ducunt. Ipsi sunt qui vobis dicere solent, Seruate vestrum, Seruis honorem, &c. Ettis vos vestro Prædecessore impotentiores? Si non crescit per vos, non decrescat per vos. Hæc illi. At Christus aliter sensit & gessit. Reddite, inquit, quæ sunt Cæsaris, Cæsari: & quæ sunt Dei Deo. Let euerie Soule be subiect to the Higher Powers. If euerie Soule, then is your Soule subiect as well as others. For (notwithstanding your dignitie, yet) who hath excepted you from this generality? He that would exempt you from the Obedience of the Prince seeketh to deceiue you. Giue no eare to their Counsels. For notwithstanding they be Christians, yet they thinke it shame either to follow Christs deedes, or to obey Christs words. They vse to say vnto you, O Sir, maintaine the honour of your See, &c. Are not you so good as your Predecessor? If your See be not aduanced by you, yet let it not bee abased by you. Thus say they. But Christ hath both taught, and wrought farre otherwise. For he saith, Giue to Cæsar that belongeth to Cæsar: and giue to God that belongeth to God.

Hilar. ad Constant. Imperat. Psalm. 116. Bern. Epist. 42. ad Archiepiscop. Senonens.

Likewise he saith againe vnto Pope Eugenius: A te tamen Mos iste, vel potius, Mors ista non cœpit: Vtinam in te desinat. Vides omnem Ecclesiasticum zelum seruere sola pro Dignitate tuenda? Honori totum datur: Sanctitati nihil, vel parum. Si causa requirente, paulò submissiùs agere, ac socialiùs te habere tentaueris, Ablit, inquiunt: Non decet: Tempori non congruit: Maiestati non conuenit: Quam geras personam attende: But ye will say, this Maner, or rather, this Death began not of you: Would God it might end in you. Do ye not see, that all your Ecclesiasticall zeale and care standeth onlie in maintenance of honor? Vpon Honour altogether is bestowed: Vpon Holinesse either nothing, or very little. If vpon occasion ye would somewhat submit your selfe, and deale familiarly, O doe not so, say they: It is not meet: It is not agreeable the time: It is not conuenient for your Maiestie: Consider well what state ye beare. Such good Lessons, M. Harding, ye haue, wherewith to nurture and to traine the Pope. And if he happen of himselfe to be a foole, by such scholing ye are able to make him mad.

Bern. de Cons. lib. 4.

But Gregory (ye say) being Pope, gouerned the whole Church of God. For he complaineth, that Maximus was made Bishop of Salonæ in Illyrico without his allowance. This Authority is answered in my former Reply. But how holdeth this Argument, M. Harding? Gregorie complaineth that Maximus was made Bishop of Salonæ in Illyrico without his allowance: Ergo, Gregory ruled the whole Church.

Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 78. Articul. 4. Diuis. 25.

What Schoole will allow you such Conclusions? It is knowne, that in the Nicene Councell the charge of the whole Church was committed to three Principall Patriarkes, whereof the Patriarch of Rome was the First: The Second of Alexandria: The Third of Antioch. And each of these three was limited seuerally to his owne peculiar portion. Nilus a Greeke Writer saith: Cùm aliæ Regiones assignatæ sint Romano, Aliæ Alexandrino Nilus de Primat. Rom. Pon.

The Pope limited to a part.

drino, aliæ Constantinopolitano, non magis hi sub illo sunt, quam ille sub hisce: Forasmuch as certaine Countries are limited to the Bishop of Rome, certaine to the Bishop of Alexandria, and certaine to the Bishop of Constantinople, they are now no more vnder him, then he vnder them.

Sozomen. lib. 6 cap. 23.

As for the Churches of Illyricum, they were specially appointed to the Bishop of Rome, as it appeareth by the Epistle of Pope Damasus, written to the Bishops of Illyricum: Par est omnes qui sunt in Orbe Romano Magistros consentire: It is meet that all the Teachers that be within the Roman Prouince agree together. So saith Athanasius: Roma est Metropolis Romanæ Ditionis: Rome is the Mother Church (not of the whole world, but) of the Prouince of Rome. Nicephorus saith: Iustinianus decreuit, vt Iustiniana Prima haberet locum Sedis Apostolicæ Romæ; vtque esset Caput sibi ipsi cum plena potestate: Iustinianus the Emperour appointed that the City called Iustiniana Prima should haue the place of the Apostolike See of Rome: and that with full power it should be head vnto it selfe. Neither durst your forged and counterfeit Anacletus to claime the Iurisdiction of all the whole world, but onely a portion of the same. For thus he saith: Omnes Episcopi qui huius Apostolicæ Sedis ordinationi subiacent: All Bishops (not through the world, but) that are subiect to the ordination of this Apostolike See of Rome. So likewise S. Gregorie in his complaint vnto the Empresse, touching this same Maximus the Bishop of Salonæ, speaketh not of all the Bishops that were throughout the whole Church of God, but onelie of such Bishops as were limited vnto his particular charge. For thus hee maketh his complaint: Si Episcopi mei me despiciant, &c. If mine owne Bishops (lying within mine owne peculiar Iurisdiction) shall despise me.

Nicephor. Lib. 17. Cap. 28.

Anacl. Epist. 3. Dist 93. Iuxta Sanctorum.

Gregor lib. 4. Epist. 34.

Therefore your Diuinity wanted Logicke, M. Harding, when ye framed your Argument in this sort: Gregorie complained of Maximus, &c. Ergo, Gregorie gouerned the whole Church.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuision. 1. and 2.

But where they say, we haue gone away from the Vnity of the Catholike Church, this is not onely a matter of malice, but besides, though it be most vntrue, yet hath it some shew and appearance of truth. For the common people, and ignorant multitude, giue not eare onely to things true and of certainty, but euen to such things also, if any chance, which may seem to haue but a resemblance of truth. Therefore we see, that suttle and crafty persons, when they had no truth on their side, haue euer contended & hotly argued with things likely to be true, to the intent they which were not able to espy the very ground of the matter might be carried away at least with some pretence & probability or likelihood of the Truth. In times past whereas the first Christians, our forefathers, in making their Prayers to God, did turne themselues towards the East, as for the most part the maner was, there were that said, they worshipped the Sun, & reckoned the same as their God. Again, where our Forefathers said, that as touching Immortall and Euerlasting Life, they liued by none other meanes, but by the Flesh and Bloud of that Lambe without spot, that is to say, of our Sauiour Jesus Christ; the enuious Creatures, and Enemies of Christs Crosse, whose only care was to bring Christian Religion into slander by all maner of waies, made the People beleeue, that they were wicked persons; that they Sacrificed mens Flesh, and drunke mens Blood. Also where our Forefathers said, that before God there is neither Man, nor Woman, and that for attaining to the true Righteousnes, there is no distinction at all of persons: And whereas they called one another indifferently by the name of Sisters and Brothers, there wanted not Men with forged false tales vpon the same, saying, that the Christians made no difference among themselues, either of age, or of kinde: but like Bruit Beasts, without regard, had to doe one with an other. And whereas to pray together, and to heare the Gospel, they met often together in secret and by-places, because Rebels sometime were woont to doe the like, therefore Rumours were euery where spread abroad, that they they made Priuie Confederacies, and tooke counſell together, either to kill the Magiſtrates, or to ſubuert the Common Wealth. And whereas in Celebrating the Holy Miſteries after Chriſts Inſtitution, they tooke Bread and Wine, they were therefore thought of many to worſhip, not Chriſt, or God, but Bacchus & Ceres: forſomuch as thoſe vaine gods were worſhipped of the Heathens in like ſort, after a prophane Superſtition, with Bread and Wine. These things were beleeued of many, not becauſe they were tru indeed, (for what could be more vntrue?) but becauſe they were like to be true, & though a certain ſhadow of truth might the more eaſily deceiue the ſimple. On this faſhion likewiſe doe theſe men ſlander vs as Heretikes, and ſay, that we haue left the Church and fellowſhip of Chriſt: not becauſe they thinke it is true, for they do not much force of that, but becauſe to ignorant folke it might perhaps ſome way appeare true.

Auguſt contra Fauſt. lib. 20. cap. 13.

We haue indeed put our ſelues apart, not as Heretikes are woont, from the Church of Chriſt, but as all good men ought to doe, from the infection of naughty perſons & Hypocrites. Neuertheleſſe, in this point they triumph maruellouſly, that they bee the Church; that their Church is Chriſts Spouſe, the Pillar of truth, the Arke of Noe: and, that without it there is no hope of Saluation. Contrariwiſe, they ſay, that wee be Renegates: that we haue torne Chriſts Seat: that we are plucked quite off from the Body of Chriſt, and haue forſaken the Catholike Faith. And when they leaue nothing vnſpoken, that may neuer ſo falſely and maliciouſly be ſaid againſt vs, yet this one thing are they neuer able truly to ſay, that we haue ſwarued, either from the Word of God, or from the Apoſtles of Chriſt, or from the Primitiue Church. Surely we haue euer iudged the Primitiue Church of Chriſts time, of the Apoſtles, and of the Holy Fathers, to be the Catholike Church: neither make we doubt to name it, Noes Arke, Chriſts Spouſe, the Pillar and Vpholder of all Truth: not yet to fixe therein the whole meane of our Saluation. It is doubtleſſe an odious matter for one to leaue the fellowſhip whereunto he hath beene accuſtomed, and ſpecially of thoſe men, who, though they be not, yet at leaſt ſeeme to be, and be called Chriſtians. And to ſay truly, we doe not deſpiſe the Church of theſe men (howſoeuer it be ordered by them now adaies) partly for the names ſake it ſelfe, and partly for that the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt hath once been therein truly and purely ſet forth. Neither had we departed therefrom, but of very neceſſitie, and much againſt our wils.

M. Harding.

We grant that in old time ſlanders were made vpon the Faithfull. But no like ſlander is made by vs vpon you in the matter whereof ye ſpeake. For let vs grant that ye haue indeed put your ſelues apart, and are gone from the contagion of naughty perſons and Hypocrites. This is the very thing we lay to your charge. For though we were ſuch, as for a great number ye ſhall neuer be able to proue, yet by Chriſts own ſentence ye muſt do that (a) which they that ſit in the Chaire of Moſes bid you doe, although they be Hypocrites, as the Scribes and Phariſeis were, of whom Chriſt ſpake, &c. But it ſhall bee enough for you to doe as the Succeſſors of Peter bid you to doe, and ſo to follow their ſaying, and not their doings.

The Primitiue Church is continued with our time by the Succeſſors of S. Peter, for whoſe Faith neuer to faile Chriſt praied, and whom (b) only he made Shepheard to feed al his Flocke of Sheepe & Lambs. Chriſt (c) now requireth of you, not to obey Peter & Paul, but to obey him who ſitteth in their Chaire. Where ye ſay, it is an odious matter to forſake vs, and yet haue forſaken vs: where ye confeſſe that yee deſpiſe not the Church we be of, & yet grant that ye haue departed frō it, how ſtandeth this together? Remember ye what ye ſay? Know ye what ye doe? Who will regard your word, which with on breath ſay, and vnſay? If it be odious, why doe ye it? If ye deſpiſe not the Church, why depart ye from it.

(a) The ſame Scribes & Phariſeis commanded the people to refuſe Chriſts cōpanie, Iohan. 9. & 12. And was the people bound to follow them?

(b) Vntruth. For Chriſt neuer gaue Peter any ſuch ſpecial Priuiledge.

(c) A ſtrange kinde of Diuinity, ſuch as Peter and Paul neuer knew.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Chriſt ſaith: The Scribes and Phariſeis ſit in Moſes Chaire: Doe that they ſay, but do not that they do. Ergo (ſay you) wee may not depart away from the Pope. Howſoeuer it fare with your Conclusion, M. Harding, verily in your premisses ye compare the Pope and his Cardinals with the Scribes and Phariseis. And yet the Scribes and Phariseis sate in the Chaire and taught the Law: Your Pope and Cardinals sit still, and teach nothing. Notwithstanding, let vs well allow of this Comparison. Ye may remember that Christ also saith, Woe be vnto you, yee Scribes and Phariseis, that shut vp the Kingdome of Heauen before men: and neither doe you enter in your selues, nor will you suffer others that faine would enter. Woe be vnto you, ye blinde Guides: Woe be vnto you, that haue taken away the key of Knowledge. Likewise he saith of them vnto his Disciples: Beware of the Leauen of the Scribes and Phariseis: Let them goe: Blinde they are, and the Leaders of the blinde.

Matth. 23. Matth. 16. Matth. 15.

To sit in Moses Chaire, was truely and rightly to instruct the people, and to open vnto them the Law of Moses. S. Augustine saith: Hoc ipsum quòd bona dicebant, & ea quæ dicebant vtiliter audiebantur, & fiebant, non erat ipsorum. Cathedram enim, inquit, Mosi sedent: That they spake good things vnto the people, and that the things that they said were profitable to the hearers and doers of the same, it was not of themselues. For Christ saith, They sit vpon Moses Chaire. Againe he saith: Sedendo super Cathedram Mosis, Legem Dei docent. Ergo per illos Deus docet. Sua verò illi si velint docere, nolite audire: nolite facere. Certè enim tales sua quærunt, non quæ Iesu Christi: Sitting vpon Moses Chaire, they teach the Law of God: Therefore it is God that teacheth by the meane of them. But if they will teach you things of their owne, then heare them not: then doe it not. For certainly such men seeke their owne, and not the things that pertaine to Christ Iesus. Ye see therefore, M. Harding, we are bound to heare the Pope and his Cardinals, and other like Scribes and Phariseis, not absolutly, or without exception, whatsoeuer they list to say; but onely so long as they teach the Law of God. Further then that S. Augustine saith: We may neither heare them, nor follow their Counsell.

Aug. de Serm. Dom. in Mont. Lib. 2.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 46.

Hereunto ye thought it good to adde more force, as a supplie to aide your wants. Christ said vnto Peter, I haue praied for thee, that thy Faith shall neuer faile. Ergo, (say you) The Pope can neuer erre. This way of reasoning, I trow, ye learned of Peter de Palude, a worthy Doctour of your side. For so he reasoneth: Ego rogaui pro te, Petre, vt Fides tua non deficiat. Ex quo habetur, quòd Romana Ecclesia in Fide errare non potest: nec de eius Fide dubitare licet: sed in omnibus est sequenda: Peter I haue praied for thee that thy Faith may not faile. By these words we are taught, that the Church of Rome cannot erre in Faith. Neither is it lawfull to doubt of the Faith of that Church: but in all causes we are bound to follow it. But S. Augustine saith: Nunquid pro Petro rogabat: pro Iohanne & Iacobo non rogabat? Vt cæteros taceam: To leaue the rest, did Christ pray for Peter: and did hee not pray for Iohn and Iames? Againe he saith: Hac nocte postulauit Satanas vexare vos, sicut triticum: & ego rogaui patrem pro vobis, ne deficiat Fides vestra: This night hath Satan begged to thresh you, as if it were wheat: but I haue praied to my Father (not for Peter onelie, but) for you, that your Faith may not faile. So saith Origen: Nunquid audebimus dicere, quòd aduersus vnum Petrum non præualituræ sint portæ Inferorum: aduersus cæteros autem Apostolos, ac Præfectos Ecclesiæ, sint præualituræ? An Petro Soli dantur à Christo Claues Regni Cœlorum? Nec alius Beatorum quisquam eas accepturus est? Omnia quæque prius dicta sunt, quæque sequuntur, velut ad Petrum dicta, sunt omnium Communia: May we dare to say, that the gates of hell shall not preuaile Only against Peter: but shal prenaile against the other Apostles, and Rulers of the Church? Were the Keies of the Kingdom of Heauen giuen onely to Peter? and shall no holy man else receiue the same? Nay, al the things, both that were said before, and also that follow after, as spoken to Peter, are Common, and belong vnto all. Therefore as ye say of the Church of Rome, so may we say likewise of the Church of Hierusalem, where S. Iames was; and of the Church of Ephesus where S. Iohn was; and of other the like Apostolike Churches, notwithstanding they be now in the possession of the Turke, and haue receiued the Religion of Mahomet, yet because Christ hath once praied for them, The Faith of them shall neuer faile.

Orig. in Matt. Tract. 1.

Now if the Churches of Galathia, Corinth, Ephesus, Hierusalem, and of infinite other Noble Cities and Countries, planted by Paul, by Iohn, by Iames, and by Christ himselfe, may faile from the Faith, what speciall priuilege then, may we imagine, hath the Church of Rome, planted by Peter, that it onely of all others can neuer faile? For Christ praied indifferently, as wel for the rest of his Apostles, as for Peter, That their Faith should neuer faile.

Further ye tell vs: It shall be enough for you to doe as the Successors of Peter bid you to doe. Christ now, (you say) requireth not of you to obey Peter & Paul; but to obey him that sitteth in their Chaire. If this way bee as sure as it is short, then is there no doubt, but all is well. Though we beleeue neither Peter, nor Paul, nor whatsoeuer is written in Gods Word, yet, say you, If we follow the Pope, we cannot erre. For thus much, M. Harding, yee are able to warrant vs by your Gospell, that Christ requireth not vs now to be obedient to Peter, and Paul, but onely to the Popes Holinesse, that kéepeth residence in their Chaire. This is your Diuinity: These are your words. If yee euer recant the same, yee marre the flower of your Market. We need not now to say, Thus saith the Lord: it shall bee sufficient for vs to say, Thus saith the Pope. Yet S. Paul so farre aduenture th the Truth and certainty of his Doctrine, that he doubteth not to say, If an Angel from Heauen Preach vnto you any other Gospel then we haue Preached, accursed be he. Upon which words S. Chrysostome hath noted thus: Non dixit, Si Contraria annuntiauerint, aut totum Euangelium subuerterint: verùm, Si paulùm Euangelizauerint præter Euangelum quod accepistis, etiamsi quiduis labefactauerint, Anathema sint: S. Paul saith not, if they Preach contrary to the Gospell, or ouerthrow the whole Gospell: but, If they Preach any little thing besides the Gospel that ye haue receiued: If they ouerthrow any thing, whatsoeuer it be, accursed be they. Therefore S. Hierome saith: Ea doceat Episcopus, quæ à Deo didicerit, non ex proprio Corde, &c. Let the Bishop teach those things that he hath learned of God, and not of his owne heart, or fancie.

Last of all, as vpon some good aduantage, ye beginne to triumph. Remember ye (say ye) what ye say? Know ye what ye doe? Who will regard your word, which with one breath say and vnsay? If it be odious to leaue our fellowship, why do ye it? If ye despise not the Church, why depart ye from it. To Say, and Vnsay, it is your property M. Harding: it is not ours. Ye haue Said, and Vnsaid, and yet, were it not for shame, it is thought ye would be contented to Say againe. We despise not the Church: it is the House of God. But we mislike your defacing and disordering of the Church. Christ reproued the Priests and Pharisis, for that they had turned the Temple of God into a caue of Theeues: And yet neuertheless he despised it not: but said it was his Fathers house. To leaue the wicked fellowship of them that beare a name and shew of Godlinesse, it seemeth odious before men: but before God it is not odious. S. Iohn saith: Whosoeuer is such a one, bid him not, God speed. For who so saith, God speed vnto him, is partaker of his ill. S. Paul saith: I warne you, that you receiue no meat with any such. And God himselfe saith: Come out from her, ô my people, lest ye be partakers of her Sinnes, and lest ye receiue of her Plagues. Thus we Say not, and Vnsay againe, as you say, M. Harding. For the same thing we Said before we Say still.

But I put case an Idol be set vp in the Church of God, & the same desolatiõ, which Christ prophesied to come, stood openly in the Holy Place. What if some Theefe or Pirate inuade and possesse Noes Arke? These folks as often as they tell vs of the Church, meane thereby themselues alone, and attribute all these titles to their own selues, boasting, as they did in times past, that cried out, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord: or as the Pharisis & Scribes did, which craked, they were Abrahams Children. Thus with a gay & iolly shew deceiue they the simple, and seek to choke vs with the bare name of the Church. Much like as if a Theefe when he hath gotten into another mans house, & by violence either hath thrust out, or slain the owner, should afterward assigne the same house to himselfe casting forth of possession the right Inheritor: Or, if Antichrist, when he had once entred into the Temple of God, should afterward say, This house is mine own, & Christ hath nothing to do withal. For these men now, after they haue left nothing remaining in the Church of God, that that hath any likeneſſe of his Church, yet will they ſeeme the Patrons, and the valiant maintainers of the Church. Verily like as Gracchus amongſt the Romans ſtood ſometime in Defence of the Treaſurie, notwithſtanding with his prodigality & fond expenſes he had vtterly waſted the whole ſtocke of the Treaſury. And yet was there neuer any thing ſo wicked, or ſo far out of reaſon, but lightly it might be couered, & Defended by the name of the Church. For the Waſpes alſo make honycombes as well as Bees, although there be no hony in them: and wicked men haue companies like to the Church of God: yet for al that, They bee not ſtraightway the people of God, which are called the people of God: neither be they all Iſraelites, as many as are come of Iſrael the Father. The Arians, notwithſtanding they were Heretikes, yet bragged they, that they alone were the Catholikes, calling all the reſt, now Ambroſians, now Athanaſians, now Iohannites. And Neſtorius, as ſaith Theodoret, for all that he was an Heretike, yet couered he himſelfe τὴν ὀρθοδοξίαν σχήματι: that is to wit, with a certaine cloke & colour of the true & Right Faith. Ebion, though he agreed in opinion with the Samaritanes, yet, as ſaith Epiphanius, hee would needs be called a Chriſtian. The Mahometiſts at this day, for all that all Hiſtories make plaine mention, and themſelues alſo cannot denie, but they tooke their firſt beginning of Agar the bond Woman, yet for the very name, & Stockes ſake, chuſe they rather to be called Saracenes, as though they came of Sara the free Woman, and Abrahams true and lawful Wife. So likewiſe the Falſe Prophets of all ages, which ſtood vp againſt the Prophets of God, & reſiſted Eſaias, Ieremy, Chriſt, and the Apoſtles, at no time craked of any thing ſo much as they did of the name of the Church. And for none other cauſe did they ſo fiercely vexe them, and call them Renegates and Apoſtates, then for that they had forſaken their fellowſhip, and kept not the ordinances of the Elders. Wherefore if we would follow the iudgements of thoſe men only, who then gouerned the Church, and would reſpect nothing elſe, neither God, nor his Word, it muſt needs be confeſſed, that the Apoſtles were rightly and by iuſt Law condemned of them to death, becauſe they fell from the Biſhops and Prieſts, that is, you muſt thinke, from the Catholike Church: and becauſe they made new alterations in Religion, contrary to the Biſhops and Prieſts wils, yea, and for all their ſpurning ſo earneſtly againſt it.

What a fooliſh put caſe, and what a fond what if is that, to ſay, What if a Pirate inuade the Arke of Noe? (a) As though God ſate not at the ſterne, and had the helme in his owne hand.

(b) Antichriſt cannot ſit in the Temple of God (c) vntill the Vicar of Chriſt, who keepeth poſſeſſion, be thrown out, and then will Chriſt come with his Angels to deſtroy the wicked man with the breath of his mouth. Ye that are the herbingers of Antichriſt, are not yet able to caſt out the Lieutenant of Chriſt. Ye heaue at the vnderminiſters. Your maſter will accompliſh all iniquity, and he ſhall be the deſolation that Chriſt ſpake of. We vnderſtand what ye ſhoot at. But ye are aſhamed to vtter plainly your Blaſpemie. (d) Ye would ſay (as it may ſeeme) if ye durſt, that Chriſt is the deſolation, and that Antichriſt is the true God. (e) In effect I doe not greatly belie you.

2. Theſſ. 4. Matth. 24

Neither if the Apoſtles might goe from the Biſhops of Moſes Law, therefore may ye depart from the Vicar of Chriſt. For the Law of Moſes is changed, and the Prieſthood of Aaron is transferred: but the Law and Prieſthood of Ieſus Chriſt tarrieth for euer, as Dauid ſaid, Thou art a Prieſt for euer, according to the order of Melchiſedech. Ye halt too manifeſtly.

(a) As though S. Paul had not warned vs, that Antichriſt ſhall ſit, & ſhew himſelfe in the place of Chriſt.

(b) Ergo, Antichriſt ſhall ſit in the Popes Chair

(c) But what if Chriſts Vicar himſelfe bee Antichriſt?

(d) Vntruth, malicious and ſlanderous

(e) Ergo, ye bely vs, although not greatly.

2. Theſſ. 2.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Antichriſt (ye ſay) cannot ſit in the Temple of God, vntill the Vicar of Chriſt, who keepeth poſſeſſion, be throwne out. What ſay you, M. Harding? Doth Chriſts Vicar keepe poſſeſſion for Antichriſt? As for Chriſt himſelfe, I doubt not but he is able to keepe his owne poſſeſſion. But ſo the Old Troians ſometime ſaid, their Citie could neuer miſcarrie, while their Palladium remained amongſt them. But who told you theſe ſtrange newes, M. Harding? Who made the Pope Chriſts Vicar generall throughout the whole Church? Or, who made him keepe poſſeſſion in ſtead of Chriſt? Muſt we needs thinke, that the whole whole state of Christs Church hangeth onely of the Pope? Or, that if the Pope were not the Pope, the Church of Christ were not the Church? Or, must your simple word now be taken for a Prophesie, that Antichrist shall neuer enter into Gods Temple, before the Pope bee throwne out? This Fable would haue been better furnished with more credit.

To sit in the place of Christ.

Verily, whereas we say, Wee put case an Idol be set vp in the Church of God: Or, What if some Theefe or Pirate inuade and possesse Noes Arke; neither is this (What if) so fond as you would seeme to make it: nor this (Put case) so impossible. For S. Paul saith: Antichrist shall sit in the Church of God, and shew himselfe aboue all that is worshipped or called God: that is to say, Being a Theefe and a Pirate, hee shall enter perforce into Noes Arke.

Now, M. Harding, if Antichrist may sit in the Place of God, much more may hee sit in the place of Peter. I will not say, the Pope is Antichrist. God will reueale him in his time, and he shall be known. S. Iohn saith: This is the wisdome: who so hath vnderstanding, let him reckon the number of the Beast. Upon which words Irenæus twelueere fifténe hundred yéres agoe, saith thus: The name of Antichrist, expressed by the number, shall be Latinus: And he addeth further; Hoc valdè verisimile est: Quoniam verissimum Regnum hoc habet vocabulum. Apocalyp. 13. Irenæus lib. 5. cap. vltimo.

S. Gregorie saith: He is Antichrist, that shall claime to be called the Vniuersall Bishop; and shall haue a Gard of Priests to attend vpon him. Againe Irenæus saith: Antichristus, cùm sit Seruus, tamen adorari vult vt Deus: Antichrist, notwithstanding he be but a Slaue, yet hee will be worshipped, as if he were God. Ioachimus Abbas saith: Antichristus iampridem natus est Romæ, & altiùs extolletur in Sede Apostolica: Antichrist is long sithence borne in Rome, and yet shall be higher aduanced in the Apostolike See. Greg. li. 4 epist. 38. Sacerdotum paratus est exercitus. Irenæus lib. 5. cap. penult. Ioachi. Abbas

Thus is he described that shall sit in the place of Christ, and shall maintaine possession against Christ. But Christ shall come with his holy Angels and shall destroy him with the breath of his mouth, which is the Holy Word of the Liuing God. 2. Thess. 2.

That ye allege of the Priesthood of Melchisedech, serueth you heere to small purpose. We know that, not the Pope, but Christ alone is a Priest for euer, according to the Order of Melchisedech. S. Augustine saith: Ipse est Sacerdos noster in æternum, secundùm Ordinem Melchisedech, qui semetipsum obtulit holocaustum pro peccatis nostris: & eius Sacrificij Similitudinem celebrandam in suæ Passionis Memoriam commendauit: Christ is our Priest for euer after the Order of Melchisedech, which hath offered vp himselfe a Sacrifice for our Sins, and hath deliuered vnto vs a Similitude or likenesse of that Sacrifice, to be done in remembrance of his Passion. Therefore if ye will say, The Pope is a Priest for euer after the Order of Melchisedech; then must you also say, The Pope hath offered himselfe a Sacrifice for the Sinnes of the world. Aug in lib 83. quæst. quæ. 61.

Likewise againe he saith: Holocausti eius Imaginem ad Memoriam Passionis suæ in Ecclesia celebrandam dedit, vt esset Sacerdos in æternum: non secundùm Ordinem Aaron, sed secundùm Ordinem Melchisedech: Christ hath giuen an Image or Resemblance of that Sacrifice, to be kept in the Church in remembrance of his Passion, that he might bee a Priest for euer, not after the Order of Aaron, but after the Order of Melchisedech. In ead. quæst.

Howbeit, touching this whole matter, I haue answered more at large in my former Reply. Articul. 17. Diuis. 15.

Wherefore, like as it is written, that Hercules in old time was forced, in striuing with Antæus that huge Giant, to lift him quite vp from the Earth, that was his Mother, ere he could conquer him, euen so must our Aduersaries be heaued from their Mother, that is, from this vaine colour and shadow of the Church, wherwith they so disguise, and defend themselues: otherwise they cannot bee brought to yeelde vnto the Word of God. And therfore saith Ieremy the Prophet, Make not such great boast, that the Temple of the Lord is with you. This is but a vain confidence: These are but lies. The Angel also saith in the Apocalyps: They say, they be Iewes: but they be the Synagogue of Satan. And Christ said to the Phariseis, when they vaunted themselues of the kindred and blood of Abraham: Ye are of your father the Diuell: For you resemble not your father Abraham: As much to say, as, Ye are not the men ye would so faine be called: ye beguile the people with vaine titles, and abuse the name of the Church, to the ouerthrowing of the Church. Roman. 11. O, M. Harding, S. Paul saith vnto you, Noli altum sapere, sed time: Presume not of your selfe, but stand in awe. Such words would rather haue becommed them that said sometime vnto the Prophet Ieremie, Verbum quod locutus es nobis in nomine Domini, non audiemus: Sed faciendo faciemus omne verbum quod egredietur de ore nostro: We will neuer heare the word that thou speakest vnto vs in the name of the Lord. But we will surely do whatsoeuer thing shall passe out of our owne mouthes. Thus it is written of them that said, The Lord shall not beare rule ouer, nor master vs. With like mildnesse of spirit the wilfull Philosopher said, Non persuadebis, etiamsi persuaseris: Yee shall not make me beleeue it, no though I doe beleeue it.

You know vpon how light occasions it hath beene moued. Follow rather S. Pauls counsell, and with feare and trembling worke your owne Saluation. The way ye walke in is not your owne. The Apologie, Chap. 10. Diuision 1.

SO that these mens part had been, first to haue cleerely and truly proued, that the Romish Church, is the true and right instructed Church of God: And, that the same, as they doe order it at this day, doth agree with the Primitiue Church of Christ, of the Apostles, and of the Holy Fathers, which we doubt not but was indeed the True Catholike Church.

M. Harding.

Ye would vs to proue that the Roman Church is the true Church of God. Ye grant that once it was the true Church of God. And the Gospell sheweth, that Christ praied for it in S. Peter, who made his successors there. * What followeth hereof but that it must needs abide as true as euer it was, except Christs praier were not heard? S Paul likewise witnesseth that the Roman Faith is preached in the Vniuersall world, giuing a manifest prophesie, that the Roman faith and the Catholike faith should be all one. S. Cyprian calleth the agreeing with the Bishop of Rome, and communicating with him, Catholicæ Ecclesiæ vnitatem, &c. The allowing and firme holding of the vnity of the Catholike Church. And writing to Antonianus in the same booke, he accounteth it for one thing to communicate with Cornelius the Bishop of Rome, and to communicate with the Catholike Church. For you it is vaine to say, that it hath erred, * when the Holy Ghost hath signified, that it cannot erre.

Luke 22. Rom. 1. Lib. 4. Epist. 8.

* This is a very vaine hope. For Christ praied for the other Apostles no lesse then for Peter.

* Vntruth. For where did the Holy Ghost euer make such promise?

I haue praied for thee Peter, &c.

Iohan. 17.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I will not say, Where were your wits, M. Harding, when yee wrote these things? But well I may say, Where was your Logicke? As for Diuinity, it appeareth by your reckoning, ye make no great account of it. Christ, (say you) praied for Peter: Ergo, the Roman Faith can neuer faile. Few children would willingly make such Arguments. Yee presume very much of the Simplicity and Ignorance of your Reader. For thinke you that Christ praied onely for Peter, and for no body else? Or thinke you that Christs Praiers tooke place in none other of all the Apostles, but onely in Peter? Awake for shame, and shake off these dreames. Christ himselfe saith: O father, I pray not only for these, but also for them that by their word shall beleeue in me. And S. Augustine thus reporteth the same Praier, as it is alleged before: Ego rogaui Patrem pro vobis, ne deficiat Fides vestra: I haue praied vnto my father (not for Peter only, but) for you, that your Faith may not faile. Again hee saith: Nunquid pro Petro rogabat: Pro Iohanne & Iacobo non rogabat? Did Christ pray for Peter: And did he not pray for Iohn and Iames? Certainly Origen saith, as likewise I haue haue before alleged: Omnia, quæque priùs dicta sunt, quæque sequuntur, velut ad Petrum dicta, sunt omnium Communia: All the things that either past before, or follow after, as spoken vnto Peter, are common vnto all the Apostles. Orig. in Mat. Tract. 1.

Aug. de Verbis Dom. in Euangel. secund. Lucam, Serm. 36. Aug. in quæst. Noui Testam. quæst. 75.

But S. Paul saith vnto the Romans: Your Faith is spoken of thorowout the world. And S. Cyprian saith: The agreeing with the Bishop of Rome was the Vnity of the Catholike Church. And yet it may please you to be remembred by the way, that the same S. Cyprian reproued Cornelius and Stephanus, both Bishops of Rome: and told them, they were both deceiued: and therefore would not agree vnto them. Neuertheless hereof yee conclude thus: Ergo, the Holie Ghost hath signified that the Church of Rome cannot erre. It pitieth me, M. Harding, in your behalfe, to see, into how straite and miserable holes ye are faine to creepe. For what if the Faith and the Constancie of the Romans in old times, for the Nobility of that Empire, and Citie, were then published thorowout the whole World? Yet where did the Holie Ghost euer tell you, that therefore the Church of Rome should neuer erre? By what Word? By what Promise? By what Reuelation? Ye say: The Faith of the Romans was heard of thorowout the whole World. So was the Great Capitoll there. So was the beauty of their Princely buildings. Which notwithstanding are now made smoth, and euen with the ground. So likewise is it written of Hierusalem: De Sion exibit Lex, & Verbum Domini de Hierusalem: The Law shall come foorth from Sion, and the Word of God from Hierusalem. So in the Citie of Antioch the Faithfull were first called Christians: And therefore Chrysostome calleth the same Citie, Caput totius orbis: The Head of the whole world. Thus was Eusebius Samosatensis called, Regula Fidei: The Rule and Standard of the Faith. Thus was Athanasius called, Orbis Oculus, & Fundamentum Fidei: The Eie of the World, and the Foundation of the Faith. Would ye hereof conclude, M. Harding, that therefore the Faith of these Churches can neuer faile? Ye know that, all this notwithstanding, the Churches, as well of Hierusalem and Antioch, as also of Asia, Syria, Græcia, and of all the East, are now subiect to the Turke, and scarcely a few left there that dare to professe the name of Christ.

Will you therefore tell vs, The Thessalonians Faith shall neuer faile? Verily at this day there is no sparkle of Faith left there. For the Christians are banished and thrust out: and the Citie is fully possessed with Iewes, which are the enemies of the Crosse of Christ.

1. Thess. 1.

What a fond Paradise is this, to say, Because yee had once the Faith of Christ, therefore now ye can neuer erre? Such a fantasticall Paradise had they built vnto themselues, that cried out in old times, euen as you doe now, The Temple of God: The Temple of God: We are the Children of Abraham. But whosoeuer well considereth the Story of the time, shall soone finde, that then they cried most, The Temple of God, when they had most shamefully abused and defaced the Temple of God: and, that then they claimed most to be called the Children of Abraham, when they had forsaken both the Faith and Life of Abraham, and, as Christ saith vnto them, were become the Children of the Diuell.

Ieremie 7. Matth. 3. Iohan. 8.

Such a fantasie had they that said, Non peribit Lex à Sacerdote: Nec consilium à Sapiente: nec Verbum à Propheta: The Law shall not depart from the Priest: nor Counsell from the Wise: nor the Word from the Prophet. But God saith vnto them: Obstupescent Sacerdotes, & Prophetæ terrebuntur. Lex peribit à Sacerdote, & Consilium à Senioribus. Nox vobis erit pro Visione: & tenebræ pro Diuinatione: Your Priests shall be amazed: and your Prophets shall bee at their wits end. The Law shall perish from the Priest: and Counsell shall want in the Elders. Ye shall haue Night in stead of a Vision: and Darknesse in stead of Prophesie.

S. Paul saith vnto the Galathians: Yee began well: Who hath thus bewitched you, that yee should not obey the Truth? S. Peter saith: As there were False Prophets amongst the people in old time, euen so among you there shall be False Prophets, bringing in Sects of Perdition. Of such a change the Prophet Esay complaineth: Quomodo facta est Meretrix Ciuitas Fidelis? How is this Faithfull Citie now become an Harlot? Deceiue not thus your selfe, M. Harding, with vaine hope. Hearken rather to the voice of our Lord. Put nothing to his Word: Take nothing from the same: Turne neither to the right hand, nor to the left: So shall yee bee sure yee shall not erre.

For our parts, if we could haue iudged Ignorance, Error, Superstition, Idolatry, Mens Inuentions, and the same commonly disagreeing with the holy Scriptures, either to please God, or to be sufficient for the obtaining of

of Euerlasting saluation: or, if we could ascertaine our selues, that the word of God was written but for a time only, and afterward againe ought to bee abrogated and put away: or else, that the sayings and commandements of God ought to be subiect to mans will, that whatsoeuer God saith and commandeth, except the Bishop of Rome will and command the same, it must bee taken as void and vnspoken. If wee could haue brought our selues to beleeue these things, wee grant, there had beene no cause at all, why we should haue left these mens company.

* Thus partly M. Hard. Doctours say: partly M. Hard. himselfe: as it shal appeare

God forbid, that either ye, or any Christian man should iudge, that ignorance, errour, superstition, Idolatrie, mens inuentions contrarie to the Scriptures, either pleased God, or to bee sufficient to Saluation. Because yee lay this to the Catholike Church (a) wee can say no lesse of you, but that yee bee false liars and diuellish slanderers. And * who teacheth, that Gods word was written, but for a time only? * That his commandements be subiect to mans will? * That Gods sayings and precepts bee void, except the Bishop of Rome ratifie them? Heere would I say vnto you at least, fie for shame, but that I thinke I should preuaile no more then if I said to an impudent and common harlot, fie for shame. Who may not plainelie see, the Scripture verified on you, Frons mulieris meretricis facta est vobis? Yee haue gotten to you the impudent face of an harlot.

leten,

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Heere, M. Harding, it hath pleased you, to bestow large liueries of your False Liars: Diuellish slanders: Impudent faces: common harlots: with Fies and shame &c. Wherein no man may iustly grudge you to be so liberall of your owne. First that by your doctrine, Ignorance highly pleaseth God, and is sufficient to Saluation, besides the generall practise of your whole Church, ye may soone call to minde, that one of your dearest friends, in most honourable audience, not long sithence openly published the same, in the name and behoofe of all his brethren, as a Secret Mysterie, and the verie bottome of your Diuinitie: Ignorance is the mother of deuotion. You know, M. Harding, that a great many both worthy and honourable, are able to witnesse, that this is, neither False lie, nor Diuellish slander. You know, that Cardinall Cusanus teacheth you, Obedientia irrationalis est consummata Obedientia, & perfectissima, scilicet, quando obeditur sine inquisitione rationis, sicut iumentum obedit Domino suo. Si igitur videris Pontificem tuum non Communicare alicui, neque tu illi Communices. Ecce quantum peccant, qui detrahunt Pontifici, &c.

Nicol. Cusan. Excit. lib. 6. Vbi Ecclesia.

Obedience without reason is the full and most perfect obedience, I meane, when a man is obedient to do whatsoeuer hee is commanded without requiring of any reason, euen as a horse is obedient to his Master. Therefore if thou see thy Bishop to refuse the Communion of any man, refuse thou to communicate with the same. O how much they offend that slander their Bishop! This, M. Harding, is your Doctrine of simple Ignorance. Concerning Superstition and Idolatrie, what need we many words? The thing it selfe is to well able to proue it selfe. Whoso but looketh into your Churches, may easily, not only see it with his eies, but also feele it with his fingers. That Gods holie Word by your learning, is mutable and serueth onelie for a time, your owne Doctor Cardinall Cusanus would soone haue taught you: Notwithstanding, it may scarcely seeme lawfull for you, being so learned a man in the substance of your owne Doctrine, to plead Ignorance. Cardinall Cusanus words bee these: Scripturæ adaptatæ sunt ad tempus & variè intelliguntur: Ita vt vno tempore secundùm currentem vniuersalem ritum exponantur: mutato ritu, iterum Sententia mutetur:

Cardin. Cusan. ad Boh. ep. 2.

The Scriptures are applied vnto the time, and may haue sundrie vnderstandings: so that at one time they may bee expounded (one way) according to the vniuersall current order (of the Church) and that the same order beeing broken, the meaning of the Scriptures may be changed. Looke better on your Bookes, M. Harding, and ye shall see, that herein is neither Lie nor Slander. That the Holie Scriptures of God by your Diuinitie, bee not Authenticall, farther then they be ratified by the Pope, yee might haue learned of your Sylvester Prierias, Maister of the Popes Palace: Thus he writeth: A Doctrina Romanæ Ecclesiæ, & Romani Pontificis, Sacra Scriptura robur trahit & authoritatem:

Sylvest. Prier. contra Lutherum.

The holy Scripture taketh strength and authoritie of the Doctrine of the Roman Church, and of the Bishop of Rome. Againe he saith: Indulgentiæ authoritate Scripturæ non innotuere nobis: Sed authoritate Romanæ Ecclesiæ, Romanorumque Pontificum, quæ Maior est:

Pardons are not knowen to vs by the authoritie of the Scriptures, but by the authoritie of the Roman Church, and of the Bishops of Rome, which is greater then the authoritie of the Scriptures.

If ye say these be Lies and Slanders, ye offer great wrong to your owne Doctours, making them the Authors of Lies and Slanders. Neuertheless, if ye shall happen to crie out in the impatience of your choler, fie for shame: impudent faces: common harlots: remember remember what you your ſelfe haue written immediatly before touching the ſame. Theſe be your owne words: Recant them ye may; but deny them ye may not. Thus you ſay: Chriſt now requireth of you, not to obey Peter and Paul (that is to ſay, the Word of God) but to obey him who ſitteth in their Chaire. Wee forge not theſe words, M. Harding: they are your owne. Folkes will thinke yee haue no Modeſt Matrons face, if yee ſpeake willinglie againſt your ſelfe. M. Harding fol. 192. b.

Now ye ſee, M. Harding, who teacheth you, that Gods Word was written onely for a time: And that Gods Commandements are no further Authenticall, but as they be ratified by the Pope. Therefore henceforth yee may ſpare theſe Lies and Slanders, and cry out Fie and Shame when ſome occaſion ſhall be offered. Indeed Cardinall Cuſanus ſaith: Veritas adhæret Cathedræ. Quare Membra Cathedræ vnita, & Pontifici coniuncta, efficiunt Eccleſiam: The Truth cleaueth faſt to the Popes Chaire. Therefore the Members vnited vnto that Chaire, and ioined vnto the Pope, make the Church.

Gods word mutable.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuiſion 1.

AS touching that wee haue now done, to depart from that Church, whoſe errors were proued, & made manifeſt to the world, which Church alſo had already euidently departed from Gods Word: and yet not to depart ſo much from it ſelfe, as from the errors thereof, and not to do this diſorderly, or wickedly, but quietly & ſoberly, we haue done nothing heerein againſt the Doctrine, either of Chriſt, or of his Apoſtles. For neither is the Church of God ſuch as it may not be ducked with ſome ſpot, or alketh not ſometime reparation. Elſe what need there ſo many Aſſemblies and Councels, without the which, as ſaith Egidius, the Chriſtian Faith is not able to ſtand? For looke (ſaith he) how often Councels are diſcontinued, ſo often is the Church deſtitute of Chriſt.

Councels are kept, and Biſhops be made by the ſame prouidence of God, which prouideth partly by that meanes, and partly by other, that the Roman faith, Chaire, and Rocke, ſhall ſtand for euer. Ad quas (ſaith S. Cyprian, ſpeaking of them of Rome) perfidia non poteſt habere acceſſum. To the which vnfaithfulneſſe cannot haue acceſſe. He ſaith not only, ſhall not haue acceſſe, but, cannot haue acceſſe.

* Vntruth. Yee make your owne warrant. For Chriſt neuer made ſuch promiſe to the Church of Rome *Vntruth grounded vpon groſſe ignorance. For M. Hard. foulely miſtaketh S. Cyprians whole meaning.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

It ſeemeth, M. Harding, yee haue beene brought vp vnder ſome poore vnskilfull Chirurgian. For ye apply one ſalue to euerie ſore. Whatſoeuer be alleged againſt you, it is ſufficient for you to anſwer, The Church of Rome erreth not: The Church of Rome hath not erred: The Church of Rome cannot erre. And to this purpoſe yee haue brought vs in certaine words of S. Cyprian, farre beſides the Authors meaning. Wherby it appeareth, that ſometimes ye allege Authorities of the Fathers, not conſidering neither to what end they ſpake, nor what they meant.

The Church of Rome may erre.

For whereas S. Cyprian ſaith, Vnto the Romans Vnfaithfulneſſe can haue no acceſſe, he ſpeaketh not of the Vnfaithfulneſſe of Faith, or Doctrine, as you by errors haue imagined, but onely of the Vnfaithfulneſſe of Report. The cauſe of writing that Epiſtle, in ſhort, was this: Certaine leaud fellowes, refuſing to ſtand to the iudgement of the Biſhops of their owne Countrey of Aphrica, appealed further, and fled to Rome, with many vntrue and forged tales, to winne ſome credit to their cauſe. Hereunto S. Cyprian ſaith, The Romans bee godly and wiſe men: they will ſone bee able to eſpie their falſhood. For vnfaithfull reports and leaud tales can haue no acceſſe vnto them. If ye had conſidered, either the occaſion of the writing, or the whole drift of the letter, or the verie bare words as they lie, ye might eaſily haue ſeene, that this only was S. Cyprians meaning.

Cyprian Lib. 1. Epiſt. 3.

His words bee theſe: Poſt iſta, adhuc inſuper Pſeudopiſcopo ſibi ab Hæreticis conſtituto, nauigare audent, & ad Petri Cathedram, vnde Vnitas Sacerdotalis exorta eſt, à Schiſmaticis & profanis literas ferre: nec cogitare eos eſſe Romanos, quorum Fides, Apoſtolo prædicante, laudata eſt: ad quos Perfidia habere non poſſit acceſſum: After this, hauing a Falſe Biſhop appointed vnto them by Heretikes, they dare to take ſhipping, & vnto Peters Chaire, and vnto that Principall Church, from whence the Prieſtly Vnity grew firſt, to carry letters from Schiſmatikes and leaud men: Neither conſider they, that the Romans are that people, whoſe Faith is praiſed by S. Paul the Apoſtle: vnto whom Vnfaithfulneſſe (of reports and tales) can haue no acceſſe.

In eadem Epiſt.

If ye doubt of this Expoſition, read theſe words touching the ſame, going before in the ſame Epiſtle: Romam cum mendaciorum ſuorum merce nauigarunt. Quaſi Veritas poſt eos nauigare non poſſet: quæ mendaces linguas rei certa probatione conuinceret: They ſaile to Rome with the Merchandiſe of their Lies: as though the Truth could not ſaile after them, that by proofe of the certaintie might controll their lying tongues. This is that Vnfaithfulneſſe that S. Cyprian ſpeaketh of: and not the Vnfaithfulneſſe of Faith and Doctrine.

The Church of Rome may erre.

Now touching this Appealing, and flæing to Rome, leſt ye ſhould thinke, by occaſion of theſe words, that S. Cyprian alloweth it, or thinketh well of it, ye ſhall finde in the ſame Epiſtle, that he vtterly miſliketh it, and condemneth it. For thus he ſaith: Æquum eſt, pariter & iuſtum, vt vniuſcuiuſque cauſa illic audiatur, vbi crimen admiſſum eſt: It is meet and right, that euerie mans cauſe be pleaded in that Countrey where the fault was committed, &c. Againe: Oportet eos, quibus præſumus, non circumcurſare: It is not meet, that they ouer whom we haue Iuriſdiction, ſhould run about the World: Ye meaneth to Rome.

Cyprian in eadem Epiſt.

And againe: Niſi paucis deſperatis & perditis minor videtur eſſe Authoritas Epiſcoporum in Aphrica conſtitutorum, &c. Vnleſſe a few deſperate and wicked men thinke the Authoritie of the Biſhops of Aphrica is leſſe then the Authoritie of the Biſhops of Rome. By theſe words S. Cyprian maketh the Biſhop of Rome equall in Authoritie with himſelfe and other Biſhops. Wherefore I muſt conclude with other words of S. Cyprian in the ſame Epiſtle: Hæc eſt, Frater, vera dementia, non cogitare quòd Mendacia non diu fallant: Noctem tam diu eſſe, quoad illuceſcat dies: O my Brother, this indeed is very madneſſe, not to think that Lies cannot long deceiue: The night laſteth no longer, but vntill the day begin to ſpring.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. Diuiſion. 1. and 2.

OR, if there bee no perill, that harme may come to the Church, what need is there to retaine to no purpoſe the names of Biſhops? For ſo it is now commonly vſed among them. The Names only they beare, and do nothing. For if there be no Sheepe that may ſtray, why be they called Shepheards? If there be no Citie that may be betraied, why be they called Watchmen? If there be nothing that may run to ruin, why be they called Pillars? Anon after the firſt Creation of the World, the Church of God beganne to ſpread abroad, and the ſame was inſtructed with the Heauenly Word, which God himſelfe pronounced with his owne Mouth. It was alſo furniſhed with Diuine Ceremonies. It was taught by the Spirit of God, by the Patriarkes and Prophets, and continued ſo euen till the time that Chriſt ſhewed himſelfe to vs in the Fleſh. Thus notwithſtanding, how often, O good God, in the meane while, and how horribly was the ſame Church darkened and decaied!

3. Reg. 13.

Matth. 21.

Where was that Church then, when all Fleſh vpon Earth had defiled his owne way? Where was it, when amongſt the number of the whole World there were onely eight perſons (& neither they all chaſte & good neither) whom Gods will was ſhould be ſaued aliue from the vniuerſall Deſtruction & Mortality? When Elie the Prophet ſo lamentably and bitterly made his moane, that only himſelfe was left of all the whole World, which did truly & duly worſhip God? And when Eſay ſaid, The Siluer of Gods people (that is, of the Church) was become Droſſe: and that the ſame City which afore time had beene Faithfull, was now become an Harlot: And that in the ſame there was no part ſound thorowout the whole Body, from the Head to the Foot? Or elſe, when Chriſt himſelfe ſaid, That the Houſe of God was made by the Phariſeis and Prieſts a Den of Theeues? Of a truth, the Church, euen as a corne field, except it bee eared, manured, tilled & trimmed, will in ſtead of Wheat bring foorth Thiſtles, Darnell, & Nettles. For this cauſe did God ſend euer among, both Prophets, and Apoſtles, & laſt of all his owne Son, who might bring home the people into the right way, and repaire anew the tottering Church after ſhe had erred.

M. Harding.

M. Harding.

These and the like places haue been alreadie alleged of old time against the Catholikes, by the Donatists, as S. Augustine sheweth; and of late yeeres by your Schoolemaster Iohn Calvin of Geneua. We need not to studie for new answers to the Argument made out of these and such other places, much fitter for this purpose then these are, sith that the same is so well answered by S. Augustine. Often times (saith he) Gods word rebuketh the wicked sorts of the Church so, as though all were such, and none at all remained good. For thereby we are warned, them in their certaine number to be called all, as much to say, all the children of hell. But Sirs, what if the Church at the beginning of the world, and at the generall drowning, was of small number? And what if the Synagogue were sometime quite extinguished? Must it therefore follow, that the Church also, after that God hath giuen to Christ his Sonne the ends of the world to be his possession, may now be brought to a few, and to faile all together? Where was the Church (say ye) when of all the world there were but eight persons, and they only saued aliue from the Vniuersall destruction? Forsooth they were in Noes Arke. And now haue we * our Noes Arke also, in which whosoeuer abideth not, the same is drowned.

De Vnitate Eccles. ca. 12.

Psalm. 2.

* But the same Arke is not the Church of Rome

Neither were the Prophets and Apostles sent, nor Christ came himselfe to repaire anew the Church which had in Faith wholly erred; but both they were sent, and he came, that it should not wholly erre.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

The Church in few.

It is true that ye say: In the Holy Scriptures this word (All) is often vsed in stead of many. And thus (ye say) it fared with the Synagogue of the Iewes; for that then the faithfull were sometimes brought vnto a small number: sometimes were vtterly decaied, and consumed to nought. And in this sense (ye say) Elias complained that the Prophets of God were all slaine, and he only left aliue. 3. Regum. 19.

But now (ye say) the Church may not be brought to a few. For God hath giuen to Christ his Sonne the ends of the world to be his possession. Yet Christ himselfe, M. Harding, that best knew the reach and limits of his possession, saith thus: When the Sonne of Man shall come, thinke you he shall finde Faith in the World? Whereupon S. Ambrose saith: Tunc Fides rara: Vt ipse quasi addubitans Dominus ista dixerit: Then shall Faith be geason: So that our Lord spake these words as doubting thereof, whether there should be any Faith full left, or no. And S. Iohn in his Reuelations saith: Mulier fugit in solitudinem, vbi habet locum paratum à Deo: The woman (whereby is meant, not the Synagogue of the Iewes, but the Church of Christ) fleeth into the Wildernesse, where shee hath a place prouided of God. By which words is meant, that in time of Ignorance and Persecution the Church is without Countenance, and vnknowen. S. Paul saith: Before the day of the Lord there shall be a departing from the Faith of Christ. By these it appeareth, the decay of the Church shall be Vniuersall: and that the remanents shall not be many. Therefore Vincentius Lirinensis, putteth the case on this wise: Quid si nouella aliqua contagio iam non portiunculam tantùm, sed totam pariter Ecclesiam commaculare conetur? Tunc item prouidebit, vt Antiquitati inhæreat: What if some new corruption goe about to inuade, not only some portion of the Church, but also the whole Vniuersall Church altogether? Then must a Christian man settle himselfe to cleaue to Antiquitie: That is to say, to follow the Primitiue Church of the Apostles and ancient Fathers. This case would be neuer haue mooued, vnlesse he thought the whole Vniuersall Church might happen by some error to be deceiued. Surely S. Chrysostome speaking of the state of the Church, that he saw in his time, saith thus: Videtur Ecclesia hodie Mulieri, quæ mansuetudine veteri exciderit, similis: quæque Symbola tantùm fœlicitatis illius quædam referat: Arcas & Scrinia rerum pretiosissimarum adhuc retinens, Thesauro destituta. Huic Mulieri Ecclesia hodiè videtur similis: The Church this day is like vnto a Woman, that hath quite lost all her old modestie: and that beareth only certaine badges and tokens of her former felicity: and, that being vtterly bereft of the Treasures, keepeth only the Cases and Boxes of the precious things shee had before. To such a woman the Church this day may bee likened. Luke. 21. Ambr. in Luc. lib. 10. cap. 21. Apocalyp. 12. 2. Thessal. 2. Vincentius Lirinensis. Chrysostom. in 1. ad. Corint. Homil. 36.

Likewise S. Hierome speaking of that he saw by experience in his time, saith thus: Ecclesia, postquam ad Christianos Principes peruenit, potentia quidem & diuitijs maior, sed virtutibus minor facta est: The Church after that shee is come to Christian Princes, indeed is greater in wealth and riches: but in vertue and holinesse shee is lesse then shee was before. Therefore saith Chrysostome: Hæc dico, ne quis miretur Ecclesiam propter multitudinem: sed vt ipsam probatam reddere studeamus: Thus much I tell you, not that we should aduance the Church, because of the multitude and increase of people; but that we should endeuour to adorne her with vertue. Hieron. in vita Malchi. Chrys. ad populum Antioch. Homil. 4.

Now where ye say, the Church now can neuer be brought to few, S. Bernard saith thus vnto God by way of mone: Coniuratæ videtur contra te vniuersitas populi Christiani, à minimo vsque ad maximum: A planta pedis vsque ad verticem non est sanitas vlla. Egressa est iniquitas à Senioribus Iudicibus, Vicarijs tuis, qui videntur regere populum tuum: O Lord, the Vniuersall Companie of Christian people seemeth to haue conspired against thee, thee, from the lowest vnto the highest. From the sole of the foote, vnto the crowne of the head, there is no whole place, Iniquitie and wickednesse is gone forth from thy Elder Iudges, that be thy Vicars, that are thought to rule thy people.

Citatur ab Holcoto in Sapient. lect. 23. Bapt. Mantuan. Fastor. 4.

Againe he saith: Intestinalis & insanabilis est plaga Ecclesiæ: The wound of the Church is inward, and past recouery. Likewise Baptista Mantuan complaineth vnto Pope Leo:

Sancte Pater succurre Leo, Respublica Christi
Labitur: ægrotatque Fides iam proxima morti.

Helpe Holy Father Leo: Christs common Wealth (that is the Church) is falling downe: the Faith is sicke, and like to die.

Fortalitium Fidei. Lib. 5.

So likewise saith he that wrote the Fort of Faith: Etsi in hoc Dæmonum bello cadant Religiosi Principes, & Milites, & Prælati Ecclesiastici, & Subditi, tamen semper manent aliqui in quibus saluatur Veritas Fidei, & Iustificatio bonæ Conscientiæ: Et si non nisi duo homines fideles remanerent in mundo, in eis saluaretur Ecclesia, quæ est Vnitas Fidelium: In this battle of Diuels, notwithstanding the Godly Princes, the Souldiers, the Ecclesiasticall Prelates, and Subiects be ouerthrowen, yet euermore some remaine, in whom the Truth of Faith, and the Righteousnesse of a good Conscience is preserued. And although there remained but two Faithfull men in the World, yet in the same two the Church of God should be saued: which Church is the Vnitie of the Faithfull. The Church of God is often compared to the Moone, which sometimes is full, and round, and bright, and glorious: sometimes is wholly shadowed, and drowned in darkenesse: and yet notwithstanding is not consumed, but in Substance remaineth still. S. Augustine saith: Aliquando in Solo Abel Ecclesia erat: & expugnatus est à fratre malo, & perdito Cain. Aliquando in Solo Enoch Ecclesia erat: & translatus est ab iniquis: Sometime the Church was in only Abel: and he was destroied by his brother wicked Cain. Sometime the Church was only in Enoch: and he was translated from the wicked. Your owne Panormitane saith: Possibile est, quòd Vera Fides Christi remaneret in Vno Solo: Atque ita verum est dicere, quòd Fides non deficit in Ecclesia. Hoc patuit post Passionem Christi. Nam Fides remansit tantùm in Beata Vergine. Quia omnes alij scandalizati sunt, Tamen Christus ante Passionem orauerat pro Petro, vt non deficeret Fides sua. Ergo Ecclesia non dicitur deficere, nec etiam errare, si remanet Vera Fides in Vno Solo: It is possible, the true Faith of Christ may remaine in one alone: And so is true to say, that Faith faileth not in the Church. This thing appeared after Christs Passion. For then the Faith remained only in the Blessed Virgin. For all the rest (both the Apostles, and others) were offended. Yet hath Christ praied for Peter before his Passion, that his Faith should not faile. Therfore we may not say, the Church faileth, or erreth, if the Faith remain but in one alone. Againe S. Augustine saith: Non tamen propter hos remanebit Christus sine Hæreditate. Nouit Dominus qui sint sui, &c. Yet shall not Christ, because of the wicked, remaine without his Inheritance. The Lord knoweth who be his owne.

The Apologie, Chap. 13. Diuision 1.

But lest some man should say, that the foresaid things happened onely in the time of the Law, of Shadowes, and of Infancie, when the Truth lay hid vnder Figures & Ceremonies, when nothing as yet was brought to perfection, when the Law was not grauen in mens hearts, but in stone: (And yet were that but a foolish distinction) for euē at those daies there was the very same God that is now, the same Spirit, the same Christ, the same Faith, the same Doctrine, the same Hope, the same Inheritance, the same Couenant, & the same Efficacie & Vertue of Gods Word: Eusebius also saith: All the Faithfull, euen from Adam vntill Christ, were indeed very Christians, (though they were not so termed:) But, as I said, lest men should thus say still, Paul the Apostle found the like faults & fals euen then in the prime & chiefe of the Gospell, in the greatest perfection & in the Light; so that he was compelled to write in this sort to the Galathians, whom he had well before instructed: I feare me (quoth he) lest I haue laboured amongst you to smal purpose, & lest ye haue heard the Gospel in vaine. O my little Children, of whom I trauell anew, til Christ be fashioned again in you. And as for the Church of the Corinthians how foully it was defiled, it is nothing needful to rehearse. Now tel me, might the Churches of the Galathians and Corinthians goe amiſſe, and the Church of Rome alone may not faile, nor goe amiſſe?

The Church of Rome may erre.

M. Harding.

We anſwer, that in parts of the Church faults may be found, and ſundry men that ſeeme to be of the Church, and be in the Church indeed, may fall and periſh: all this we grant: * But that the whole Catholike and Vniuerſall Church, whoſe Faith we profeſſe, may erre, fall, and faile, that we deny vtterly, which had bin this Defenders part to proue, elſe he talketh to no purpoſe. And where S. Paul rebuketh al the Galathians in general, as though al had forſaken their Faith, he doth it after the wont of the Prophets, both in that and other Epiſtles, for the greater parts ſake, reprehending all, though ſome deſerue praiſe. As for the Corinthians, though many among them were faulty, yet who conſidereth how he beginneth his Epiſtle to them, ſhall finde that he * acknowledgeth a Church among them. For thus hee writeth: Paul by vocation an Apoſtle, &c. to the Church of God which is at Corinth, &c.

* We ſpeake not of the whole Vniuerſal Church but onely of the Church of Rome.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

That in any particular Church faults may be found, that (ye ſay) ye will confeſſe: But that the whole Catholike Vniuerſall Church may erre and faile, that (you ſay) ye denie vtterly.

* But the ſame Church this day is ſubiect to the Religion of Mahomet, and is no Church.

Notwithſtanding, it is certaine that the Churches of Corinth, and Galathia, and ſundrie others, are now, not in any particular portion, but thoroughly departed from the Faith: and are now wholly ſubiect to the Turke.

This therefore muſt needs be your meaning, that albeit all other Particular Churches thorowout the world happen to erre, yet the Church of Rome, that is to ſay, the Pope and his Cardinals can neuer erre. This Leſſon, I trow, ye learned of Petrus de Palude: For neither Chriſt, nor any of his Apoſtles euer taught it you. This worthy Doctour ſaith thus: Tota Eccleſia Petri non poteſt à Fide deficere. Omnes autem Eccleſiæ Apoſtolorũ omnium poſſunt deficere à Fide totaliter, indigentes ab Eccleſia Petri confirmari: The whole Church of Peter cannot wholly faile from the Faith. But all the other Churches of all the Apoſtles may faile wholly from the Faith, hauing need to be confirmed by the Church of Peter. And to this end you your ſelfe call the Roman Faith the Catholike Faith, making no maner difference betweene either other, as if Roman and Catholike were all one. And therefore Pope Nicolas thus aduanceth and thundreth out his owne Authoritie: Non quælibet Terrena Sententia, ſed illud Verbum quo conſtructum eſt Cælum, & Terra, per quod denique omnia condita ſunt Elementa, Romanam fundauit Eccleſiam: Not any worldly Sentence, but the ſelfe ſame Word whereby Heauen and Earth was made, and whereby all the Elements were created, was it that founded the Church of Rome. By which words he meaneth that the Roman Faith ſhall ſtand as faſt as the foundations of Heauen & Earth. Euen ſo Peter aſſured his Promiſe vnto Chriſt: Although (ſaid he) all others denie thee, yet I alone will not denie thee. No, though I ſhould preſently die with thee, yet I only will neuer denie thee. Neuertheleſſe, when it came to triall, the ſame Peter denied him firſt.

Matth. 26

Now, that the Church of Rome, which you call the Catholike Church, may erre, and be forſaken of God, it is euident by the plaine words of S. Paul. For thus hee writeth euen vnto the Church of Rome: Quòd ſi aliqui ex ramis fracti ſunt, &c. If any of the boughes bee broken off, and thou, being a wilde Oline tree, art graffed into the naturall Oline, and made Partaker of the root, and of the fatneſſe thereof, boaſt not thy ſelfe againſt the boughes. If thou boaſt, (remember) thou beareſt not the Root: but the Root beareth thee. Thou wilt ſay, The boughes are broken off, that I may bee graffed in. Well, they are broken off for their Infidelitie: but thou ſtandeſt faſt by Faith. Be not high minded, but ſtand in aw; ſeeing God hath not ſpared the Naturall boughes, leſt happily he ſpare not thee. See therefore the goodneſſe and the ſharpeneſſe of God: His ſharpneſſe towards them that are fallen away; but his goodneſſe towards thee, if thou continue and remaine in goodneſſe. Otherwiſe thou (being the Church of Rome) ſhalt likewiſe be ſmitten off. Hereby it is plaine, that the Church of Rome may faile and fall from God, no leſſe then other like Churches. For otherwiſe this aduertiſement of S. Paul had bene in vaine.

Therefore Hormiſda, being himſelfe the Biſhop of Rome, writeth thus: Dilectiſſimi Fratres, continuas preces ad Dominum fundamus, & iugi deprecatione poſcamus, vt & inſtitutione, & opere, illi, cuius eſſe membra cupimus, adhæreamus, nec vnquem ab illa via, quæ Chriſtus eſt, deuio tramite declinemus: ne ab eo iuſtè, quem impiè reliquerimus, deſeramur: My dearely beloued Brethren, let vs pray vnto God, that both by profeſſion, and by order of life, we may cleaue to him, whoſe Members we deſire to be: and that by any crooked path we neuer turne from that way, which is Chriſt, leſt we (being the Church of Rome) bee iuſtly forſaken of him, whom wickedly we haue forſaken. Thus would not the Pope himſelfe haue written in the behooſe of the Church of Rome, if he had thought the ſame Church, could neuer haue erred.

M. Harding.

The Propheſie of Daniel concerning the Abomination of Deſolation, whereof Chriſt ſpake in the Goſpel, we thinke with the * beſt learned Diuines, that it is to be referred, not to the end of the world, nor to the driuing away of the Faith by Antichriſt, as ye imagine, but to the conſummation and finall ending of the Synagogue.

Touching that ye ſay of Antichriſt, it maketh nothing againſt the Catholiks, againſt whoſe Faith he preuaileth not. Marry many good men thinke, that he hath already begunne to ſet vp his Tabernacle and ſtately Seat in the hearts of many, which ought to be the Temple of God, by his forerunners, Martin Luther, Zuinglius, Caluin, and you their Scholers, with the reſt of that wicked rable. Where ye adde and that within the Church, it is * more then ye found in S. Paul. But we vnderſtand your good will, though we finde you without euer a good reaſon. And yet we grant, ye came out from vs, as S. Iohn ſaith, but ye were not of vs. For if ye had been of vs, ye would haue tarried with vs. So may the ſaying of S. Peter be referred to you, and likewiſe that of Daniel which ye alledge, though the words be not in Daniel. For your Schoolemaſters and you are a limme of Antichriſt, and ye labour what yee can to ouerthrow and tread vnder foot the true faith of the Church, and the Catholike Religion.

* Vntruth. For the beſt learned Diuines haue thought otherwiſe, as it ſhall appeare.

What need you, M. Harding, to talke ſo much in the fauour of Antichriſt? Or why ſhould you be grieued, to heare him called the Abomination of Deſolation? S. Paul calleth Antichriſt, The Man of Sinne. Some ſay, He ſhall be wholly poſſeſſed of the Diuel. Your owne Hippolytus ſaith: He ſhall be the Diuell himſelfe. Yet haue few men found themſelues grieued with ſuch ſayings.

I know the words of Chriſt, and of Daniel, by diuerſe expoſitions haue beene diuerſly applied. Yet may ye not well thus condemne all their iudgements, that haue applied the ſame to Antichriſt. Origen one of the moſt ancient Fathers of the Church, entreating of Antichriſt, contrarie to your Expoſition, ſaith thus: Ipſe eſt Abominatio Deſolationis: Antichriſt is the Abomination of Deſolation.

S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Hic Antichriſtus dicitur Abominatio Deſolationis: quia multorum Chriſtianorum animas facturus eſt deſolatas à Deo: This Antichriſt is called the Abomination of Deſolation: for that he ſhall cauſe the Soules of many Chriſtians to be deſolate, and forſaken of God. Gregorius Nazianzenus ſaith: Antichriſtus veniet in Deſolatione Mundi: Eſt enim Abominatio Deſolationis: Antichriſt ſhall come in the Deſolation of the World. For he is the Abomination of Deſolation. S. Hierome ſaith: Abominatio Deſolationis intelligi poteſt omne dogma peruerſum: By the Abomination of Deſolation wee may vnderſtand any maner peruerſe Doctrine: Whereof no doubt in Antichriſt ſhal want no ſtore. And againe, ſpeaking namely of the Man of Wickednes, the Aduerſary of Chriſt, which is Antichriſt, that lifteth vp himſelfe aboue all that is called God, he ſaith: Abominatio Deſolationum erit in Templo vſque ad conſummationem temporis: The Abomination of Deſolation ſhall ſtand in the Church vntill the conſummation or end of time.

S. Ambroſe

S. Ambroſe ſaith: Abominatio deſolationis execrabilis Aduentus Antichriſti eſt: The Abomination of Deſolation is the curſed comming of Antichriſt, Ambr. in Luc. lib 10 cap 21.

S. Hilarie expounding the ſelfe ſame words of Chriſt, When ye ſhall ſee the Abomination of Deſolation ſtanding in the holy place, ſaith thus: De Antichriſti temporibus hæc locutus eſt: Chriſt ſpake theſe words of the time of Antichriſt. Likewiſe ſaith Theodoretus writing vpon the Propher Daniel, Abominationem Deſolationis ipſum vocat Antichriſtum. And beſides others, the moſt ancient and moſt Catholike Fathers, likewiſe ſaith Euſebius Emiſſenus in a ſpeciall Hamilie to this purpoſe. Now M. Harding, whereas ye ſo certainly aſſure your ſelfe, that theſe words of Chriſt may in no wiſe be taken of the confuſion and horror that ſhall be at the end of the world, beſides all theſe learned and godly Fathers, I beſeech you, conſider the whole drift and circumſtance of the place, and the words that Chriſt ſpake immediatly before. The Apoſtles demanded him this queſtion: What is the token of thy comming (to iudgement) and of the end of the world? To this queſtion Chriſt anſwereth in this wiſe: Take heede that no man deceiue you. Many ſhall come in my name, and ſhall ſay, I am Chriſt: and ſhall deceiue many. Ye ſhall heare of warres and talks of warres: But be not ye troubled. All theſe things muſt happen: Yet this is not the end, &c. Many falſe Prophets ſhall riſe, and ſhall deceiue many. Iniquity ſhall increaſe: Charity ſhall wax cold. Who ſo continueth vnto the end, he ſhall be ſaued. And this Goſpell of the Kingdome ſhall bee preached in all the World for a witneſſe vnto all Nations, & then ſhall come the end. The next words that follow are theſe: Therefore when ye ſhall ſee the Abomination of Deſolation, that was ſpoken of by Daniel, &c. Thus may ye ſee, M. Harding, by the very courſe and tenour of Chriſts anſwer, that if the Iudgement be the Iudgement: if the End be the End: if the World be the World, then muſt theſe words néeds haue relation to the End of the World: whatſoeuer any of your beſt learned Diuines, of whom yee haue hitherto named none, haue taught or ſaid to the contrarie. Whereas we ſay, Antichriſt ſhal ſtand euen within the Church, That (ye ſay) we finde not in S. Paul, Notwithſtanding our good will (ye ſay) ye vnderſtand: although ye find in vs neuer a good reaſon. As for the goodneſſe of our Reaſons, wee will not ſtriue. But whether S. Paul ſay, that Antichriſt ſhall ſtand in the Church, or no, let vs be iudged by S. Paul. His words be plaine: Adeò, vt in Templo Dei ſedeat, tanquam Deus: So that he will ſit in the Church of God, as if he were God. If the Church of God, be the Church, then doth S. Paul ſay: Antichriſt ſhall ſit within the Church. In like ſenſe Chriſt ſaith: Antichriſt ſhal ſit in the holy place. By which words many of the beſt learned Fathers haue expounded, the Church of God. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Non enim Templum alicuius Idoli, aut Dæmonis, Templum Dei Apoſtolus diceret: For the Temple of an Idoll, or of a Diuell, the Apoſtle would neuer call the Temple of God. And he addeth further, Quidam putant rectiùs Latinè dici, ſicut in Græco eſt, non in Templo Dei, ſed in Templum Dei ſedeat: tanquam ipſe ſit Templum Dei, quod eſt Eccleſia. Sicut dicimus, ſedet in amicum, id eſt, velut amicus: Some men thinke, we ſhould better read it in Latine, as it is in the Greeke, not, He ſitteth in the Temple of God, but he ſitteth For, or, As the Temple of God: As if he himſelfe were the Temple of God, which is the Church. As we ſay, He ſitteth for a Friend, that is, he ſitteth as a Friend. Here S. Auguſtine ſaith: Antichriſt ſhall not only ſit in the Church, but alſo ſhall ſhew himſelfe in outward appearance, as if he himſelfe were the Church it ſelfe. Now, M. Harding, who this ſhould be, I repoꝛt me to your own Doctours, of whom one hath written thus: Papa quodámodo virtualiter eſt tota Eccleſia: The Pope in a maner, by way of Vertue or Power, is the whole Vniuerſall Church. S. Hierome ſaith: Antichriſtus ſtabit in loco Sancto, id eſt, in Eccleſia, & ſe oſtendet, vt Deum: Antichriſt ſhall ſtand in the Holy place, that is to ſay, in the Church: and ſhall ſhew him ſelfe, as if he were God. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Incident in Abominationem Deſolationis, quæ ſtat in Sanctis Eccleſiæ locis: They ſhall fall into the Abomination of Deſolation, that ſtandeth in the Holy places of the Church.

S. Paul ſaith: Myſterium iniquitatis operatur: (Satan) worketh the Myſtery of Iniquity. That is to ſay, he openeth not himſelfe, but whatſoeuer he doth, he doth it in couert. thing, but onely to the Scriptures. Otherwiſe, if they looke to any thing elſe they ſhall be offended, and periſh, not knowing which is the true Church: And ſo ſhall they fall into the Abomination of Deſolation, that ſtandeth in the holy places of the Church.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuiſion 1. and 2.

ALbeit theſe ſame warnings alone may ſuffice a wiſe man to take heed he do not ſuffer himſelfe raſhly to be deceiued with the name of the Church, and not to ſtay, to make further inquiſition thereof by Gods word, yet beſide all this, many Fathers alſo, many learned and godly men, haue often and carefully complained, how all theſe things haue chanced in their life time. For euen in the middeſt of that thicke miſt of darkneſſe, God would yet there ſhould bee ſome, who though they gaue not a cleere and bright light, yet ſhould kindle, were it but ſome ſparke, which men being in the darkeneſſe, might eſpie.

Contra Auxentium. Hilarius, when things as yet were almoſt vncorrupt and in good caſe too: Ye are ill deceiued (ſaith he) with the loue of walles: yee doe ill worſhip the Church: in that ye worſhip it in houſes and buildings, yee doe ill bring in the name of Peace vnder roofes. Is there any doubt, but Antichriſt will haue his ſeat vnder the ſame? I rather reckon Hilles, Woods, Pooles, Mariſhes, Priſons and Quauemires to be places of more ſafety: for in theſe the Prophets either abiding of their accord, or forced thither by violence, did propheſie by the Spirit of God.

Gregor. lib. 4. ad Mauritium Gregorie, as one which perceiued and foreſaw in his mind the wracke of all things, wrote thus of Iohn Biſhop of Conſtantinople, the firſt of all others that cõmanded himſelfe to be called by this new name. For long agone hath the Biſhop of Rome willed to haue the whole Church depend vpon himſelfe alone. Wherefore it is no maruel, though it be cleane fallen down long agone.

M. Harding.

* Vntruth. For he writeth it often. Read the Anſwer.

Ye make a foule lie, Sir Defender, vpon S. Gregorie. The words you recite, be your owne, not his. Is it not enough to lie your ſelfe, as you doe very often, but that you father lies alſo vpon the Doctours? Thanks be to God, that ſo ye bewray the weakeneſſe of your cauſe. *Neither in any Epiſtle to Iohn Biſhop of Conſtantinople, as you ſay in your Apologie, nor in any to Mauritius the Emperour, as you haue noted in the Margent, writeth Gregorie, * That if the Church ſhall depend vpon one man, the whole ſhall fall to the ground. I ſee well, you would faine Gregory had ſo written. And if he had, yet your argument had been naught. For you take not the right Minor, which ſhoud haue been this, The Church doth depend vpon one man, if you would make your reaſon good, and after the Rules of Logike. For where your Minor ſpeaketh onely of the Popes will, thereof your concluſion followeth not. Diſpoſe your propoſitions in the forme of a Syllogiſme, and you ſhall eſpie your owne feeble reaſon. And if you make that your Minor, then grant you that, which you denie.

(a) A manifeſt vntruth without wit.
(b) Vntruth, more peeuiſh then the former.
(c) Vntruth, fond and wilfull. For S Gregorie ſpeaketh theſe words no more of the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, then of the Biſhop of Rome.

The words whereof you gather this pretenſed ſaying of Gregorie, as I ſuppoſe, be theſe: If any man hath caught vnto himſelfe that name (of Vniuerſall Biſhop) in that Church (of Conſtantinople) then the whole Church (which God forbid) fell from his ſtate, when he that is called Vniuerſall, fell. Gregorie vnderſtandeth by the name, Vniuerſall Biſhop, as himſelfe declareth in many places, (a) ſuch a one, as is a Biſhop altogether and only, ſo as there be no other Biſhop beſides him. Now if it were granted, that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople were this one, and only Vniuerſal Biſhop, this inconuenience would follow, that with the fall of that Vniuerſall Biſhop the Vniuerſall Church alſo fel. For where the Church is there be Biſhops, and where be Biſhops there is the Church: and a (b) Vniuerſall Biſhop by Gregory is as much as all Biſhops. That this being granted, the whole Church is fallen from the Faith, thus hee proueth: For (ſaith he) the Biſhops of Conſtantinople haue fallen into the gulfe of great & deteſtable hereſies; as Neſtorius, who thinking Chriſt to be two perſons, and beleeuing that God could not bee made man, ranne to a Iewiſh Infidelity: and as Macedonius, who denied the holy Ghoſt to bee God. Wherefore if the Biſhop of Conſtantinople be the Vniuerſall Biſhop, according to the ſenſe aforeſaid, then at the fall of him from the Faith, as when thoſe two before named fell, the Church alſo falleth, as then by this reaſon, when they were Biſhops it fell. Thus reaſoneth S. Gregorie in that Epiſtle to Mauritius But becauſe to Gregorie it ſeemeth very far from reaſon and incredible, that the Church ſhould fal from the Faith, and faile; therefore he enueyeth againſt Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople for challenging that name of vniuerſall Biſhop, and concludeth that the (c) Biſhop of that See in any wiſe cannot ſo be.

Epiſt. lib. 4. ad Maurit. epiſt.

But

But if the word Vniuerſall, ſignifie a Soueraigntie of charge & ſupremacie of Gouernment ouer the whole Church, (d) which Chriſt committed to Peter, & in Peter to his Succeſſors the Biſhops of Rome, when he ſaid, Feed my ſheepe: in this ſenſe it is not impious nor erroneous, nor contrary to the minde of S. Gregory, to call the Succeſſor of Peter, Chriſts Vicar in Earth, the Vniuerſall Biſhop (e) that is to ſay, the higheſt of all, and hauing power ouer all other Biſhops, and Biſhop of the Vniuerſall Church. And as Chriſt gaue to S. Peter and his Succeſſors, for the benifit of his Church, a ſupreme authority and power, ſo for the ſame Churches ſake, for whoſe loue he deliuered himſelfe to death, by petition made to his Father he obtained for him & his Succeſſours the Priuilege of this ſuprome and moſt excellent grace that their Faith ſhould neuer faile. In conſideration of which ſingular priuilege, obtained by Chriſt & (f) granted to the See Apoſtolike, and to none other, Gregory rebuketh Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſo much, as one that preſumptuouſly vſurped that new name of Vniuerſal Biſhop againſt the ſtatutes of the Goſpell, and againſt the Decrees of the Canons.

To conclude, if neither Gregory or any other man ſhould ſay, that the Church dependeth vpon one man. he might ſeme to ſay truth, meaning rightly, & that not alone, nor without good authority. For ſuch a ſaying we finde vttered by S. Ierome. The ſafety of the Church (ſaith he) dependeth vpon the dignity of the higheſt Prieſt, who if he haue not authority peereleſſe & aboue al other, there wil be ſo many Schiſmes in the Church, as there be Prieſts. Which peerleſſe authority aboue al other, as S. Hierome in that place doth attribute to (g) the Biſhop of euery Dioceſſe directly, ſo conſequently to Peters Succeſſour, to whom it was ſaid, Feed my Sheepe. For by what reaſon in ech Dioceſſe it behoueth one Prieſt to be higheſt ouer other Prieſts, by the ſame and in like proportion no leſſe it behoueth, that in the whole Church one Biſhop be higheſt ouer other Biſhops, I meane for auoiding Schiſmes.

(d) Vntruth. For Chriſt neuer gaue out any ſuch Commiſſion.

(e) This ſame was it, that Gregory reprooued: for thus he writeth. Cauſa Ch i. ſit Membra ſibi conaris Vniuerſalis appellatione ſupponere: Greg. lib. 4 epiſt. 38.

(f) Vntruth, vtterly void of ſhame.

(g) Here M. Harding recanteth his error. For before hee ſaid, These words belong onely to the Pope.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

If ye had better loked on your Bookes, M. Harding, ye would not haue bene ſo haſty in dealing Lies. We falſifie not that good Fathers words: but report them truely, as we finde them. For thus he writeth in ſundry places of Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, that firſt aduanced himſelfe aboue all his brethren, and required to be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop of all the World: Vniuerſa Eccleſia à ſtatu ſuo corruit, quando is, qui appellatur Vniuerſalis, cadit: The whole Vniuerſall Church falleth from her ſtate, when he falleth that is called the Vniuerſall Biſhop. This is no Lie, M. Harding; conferre the places, and ye ſhall finde the words, as we report them. It ſtandeth not, neither with your profeſſion, nor with your modeſty, ſo vncourteouſly to vſe your tongue. We neither Lie our ſelues, nor father Lies vpon the Doctours. God be thanked, his cauſe is ſuch, as may well bee maintained without Lies.

The Vniuerſall Church falleth.

Greg. lib. 4. epiſt. 76.

But, to put you further out of doubt, the ſenſe of theſe words ye may finde often vttered by S. Gregory, in other places. Vnto Anaſtaſius the Biſhop of Antioch, hee writeth thus: Vt de honoris veſtri iniuria taceam, ſi vnus Epiſcopus vocatur Vniuerſalis, Vniuerſa Eccleſia corruit, ſi vnus Vniuerſus cadit: To diſſemble the iniurie done to your Honour, if one Biſhop be called Vniuerſall, then if that one Vniuerſall Biſhop fall, the whole Vniuerſall Church goeth to ground. Againe he ſaith in the ſame Epiſtle: Vos eandem cauſam Nullam dicere non debetis. Quia ſi hanc æquanimiter portamus, Vniuerſæ Eccleſiæ Fidem corrumpimus: Ye may not ſay, This is a matter of no importance. For if we patiently beare theſe things, we deſtroy the Faith of the Vniuerſall Church. Againe he ſaith: In iſto Sceleſto vocabulo conſentire, nihil aliud eſt, quàm Fidem perdere? To conſent vnto this wicked Name, is nothing elſe, but to loſe the Faith. Againe: Flens dico: Gemens denuntio: Quia cùm Sacerdotalis Ordo intus cecidit, foris diu ſtare non poterit: I ſpeake it with teares: I tell it with ſigh of heart. For, ſeeing the Order of Prieſthood is fallen within, it cannot now ſtand long without. Againe: Diabolus ita validè in quibuſdam Eccleſiæ neceſſarijs Membris dentes figit, vt nulli ſit dubium, quin, niſi vnanimiter, fauente Domino, cunctorum prouida Paſtorum turba concurrat, omne, quod abſit, citiùs ouile dilanient: The Diuell ſo ſtrongly faſteneth his teeth in the neceſſary Members of the Church, that vnleſſe by Gods grace, the prouident company of all Biſhops ioine together, there is no doubt, but he will ſoone deſtroy the whole flocke: which God forbid. And againe he compareth the Pride of this name with the Pride of Antichriſt: and ſaith, that the one ſhal worke the confuſion of the Church, no leſſe, then the other. Thus he ſaith: Nunquid non, cùm ſe Antichriſtus veniens Deum dixerit, friuolum valdè erit? Sed tamen nimis perniciosum. Si quantitatem vocis attendimus, Duæ ſunt Syllabæ: ſi pondus iniquitatis, Vniuerſa pernicies: When Antichriſt ſhall come, and call himſelfe God, ſhall it not bee a very triſle? Yet ſhall it be marueilous hurtfull (to the Church.) *If ye weigh the quantity of the word, it ſtandeth in two Syllables: if ye conſider the weight of the wickednes*ſe, it is an Vniuerſall Deſtruction. These are no Lies as it liketh you to call them, M. Harding, they are verie plaine words: it is the vndoubted meaning of S. Gregory. And therefore he calleth this claime of Vniuerſall Power, a Superſtitious, a Prophane, an Vngodly, and a Wicked Title: a name of Hypocriſie, and a name of Blaſphemie.

Deus.

To auoid theſe authorities, being ſo pregnant and ſo cleare, ye are faine to fancie ſundry prettie ſhifts, ſuch as, neither Iohn, nor Gregory was euer able to vnderſtand.

Firſt, ye ſay, This Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, meant by this title, vtterly to diſgrade all Biſhoppes and Patriarkes, whatſoeuer: and to make himſelfe the

Onlie

One only Bishop.

Onely Bishop of all the world. It is a childish labour to seeke a knot in a rush, and to imagine doubts, where the case is cleare. It is certaine, that the Bishop of Constantinople meant none other Vniuersall authority, then that now is claimed by the Pope. Therefore it is thus noted in the Booke called Chronicon Eusebij: Institutum fuit, vt Romana Ecclesia Caput esset Ecclesiarum omnium: cùm priùs Constantinopolitana id vsurpare tentasset. Order was taken that the Church of Rome should be the head of all Churches: whereas before, the Church of Constantinople had attempted to vsurpe the same. Which thing is also noted by Matthias Palmerius of Florence, and that without any maner difference or change of words. Sabellicus saith: Bonifacius 3. egit ab initio administrationis suæ cum Phoca, vt Romana Ecclesia esset omnium aliarum Caput. Estque id ægrè, nec sine multa contentione Apostolicæ sedi datum. Græci id adse decus trahentes, ibi Christianæ Pietatis Arcem esse oportere aiebant: vbi & Imperij: Pope Bonifacius the third, at the first entrie into his office, was an earnest suter vnto the Emperor Phocas, that the Church of Rome might be the head of all other Churches. Which thing hardly and with great labour was granted to the Apostolicke See of Rome. The Græcians drawing the same honour vnto themselues said: It was necessary, the head of Christian Religion should be there, whereas was the head of the Empire, which was at Constantinople.

Coronicon Eusebij, anno. 607.

Matthias Palmerius.

Sabellicus Enead. 8. lib. 6.

Thus it plainely appeareth, that the Bishop of Constantinople, and the Bishop of Rome craued both for one thing. Which thing, being wicked in the one, cannot well be godly in the other.

Vrspergensis in Phoca.

Likewise writeth Vrspergensis: At the request and sute of Pope Boniface, Phocas the Emperour appointed the See of the Apostolike Church of Rome, to be the Head of all Churches. For before that time, the Church of Constantinople wrote her selfe the First, or Chiefe of all others.

By these it may appeare, M. Harding, it was great follie for you thus to cauill at the name. For the Power and Iurisdiction then claimed by the Bishop of Constantinople, and afterward vsurped by the Bishops of Rome was all one. Therefore S. Gregory saith to Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople: Tu quid Christo, Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ capiti, in extremi Iudicij dicturus es examine, qui cuncta eius membra tibimet conaris Vniuersalis appellatione supponere? What answer wilt thou make at the trial of the last Iudgemẽt, vnto Christ the head of the Vniuersall Church, which thus by the name of Vniuersall Bishop, seekest to make all his Members subiect vnto thee? Euen the selfe same Vniuersall power claimeth now the Bishop of Rome, and seeketh to make all other Bishops throw the world, and the whole Vniuersall Church of Christ, thrall and subiect vnto himselfe.

Gregor. lib. 4. epist. 82.

The Bishops of Constantinople fell sometimes into Heresies, and were deceiued. But Christ hath prayed for Peter, that his Faith should not faile. Ergo, say you, The Bishop of Rome can neuer possibly be deceiued. O M. Harding, let shame once force you to refraine these vanities. I doubt not, but hereafter in place conuenient, I shall be able to shew, that there haue bene moe Heretikes placed in S. Peters Chaire, euen in the See of Rome, then you are able to finde in any one Sea within Europe.

Verily S. Gregories reason, touching the danger and confusion of the Church, weigheth no more against the Bishop of Constantinople, then against the Bishop of Rome. For thus he saith: If he that is called the Vniuersall Bishop, happen to erre, then needs must the whole Vniuersall Church fall together with him into error. And therefore if ye had perused the Counsell of Basil, ye should haue found this selfe same reason alleged there, not against the Bishop of Constantinople, but against the pride and arrogancie of the Bishop of Rome. The words be these: Alioqui, errante Pontifice, sicut sæpe contigit, & contingere potest, tota erraret Ecclesia: Otherwise, whensoeuer the Pope erreth, as he hath often erred and may erre againe, the whole Church should erre with him. Thus wrote the Bishops, and by your owne iudgement, Catholike Bishops, in the Councell of Basil: yet had they not forgotten the Prayer, that Christ made for S. Peter.

Concil. Basil in Epist. Synodal.

And therefore Franciscus Zabarella, a notable Canonist, and Cardinall of the Church of Rome, seeing the great enormities that grew hereof, saith thus: Papæ faciunt quicquid libet, etiam illicita: & sunt plusquam Deus. Ex hoc infiniti sequuti sunt errores. Quia Papa occupauit omnia iura inferiorum Ecclesiarum, ita vt inferiores Prælati sint pro nihilo. Et nisi Deus succurrat statui Ecclesiæ, Vniuersalis Ecclesia periclitatur: The Popes doe now, whatsoeuer they list to doe, yea although it be vnlawfull, and are become more then God. Hereof haue followed infinite errors. For the Pope hath inuaded and entred vpon all the right of the inferiour Churches: so that the inferiour Bishops may goe for naught. And vnlesse God helpe the state of the Church, the Vniuersall Church is in danger. Thus hitherto, M. Harding, ye haue found no Lie.

Francis. Zabarell Citatur ab Illyrico, de Sectis.

Now where ye would seeme to say, Gregorie so reproued the Bishop of Constantinople, ple, that neuertheleſſe he claimed the ſame title and Vniuerſall authoritie to himſelfe: may it therefore pleaſe you herein to ſtand to the iudgement of S. Gregorie himſelfe, of whom, I reckon, ye do not doubt, but he vnderſtood his owne meaning. Doubtleſſe, if ye had ſo diligently conſidered S. Gregorie as yee beare vs in hand, yee ſhould haue found, that, touching any his owne right herein, hee diſclaimeth this title, and refuſeth it vtterlie. For ſo hee writeth to the Emperour Mauritius: Nunquid ego in hac re, piiſſime Domine, propriam cauſſam defendo? O my moſt gracious Lord, doe I heerein quarrell for mine owne right? Againe hee ſaith: Non mea cauſſa, ſed Dei eſt: Non ego ſolus, ſed tota turbatur Eccleſia: Quia piæ Leges, quia venerandæ Synodi, quia ipſa Domini noſtri Ieſu mandata, Superbi, atque pompatici cuiuſdam Sermonis inuentione turbantur: It is Gods cauſe: It is not mine. Not I onely am troubled therewith, but alſo the whole Church. For the godly Lawes, the reuerend Synodes, and the verie Commandements of our Lord Ieſu are broken by the inuention of a certaine proud and pompous name. Againe: Nullus Romanorum Pontificum hoc Singularitatis Nomen aſſumpſit: Nullus Predeceſſorũ meorum hoc tam profano vocabulo vti conſenſit: Nos hunc honorem nolumus oblatum recipere: None of all the Biſhops of Rome euer tooke vpon him this name of Singularitie, to bee called the Vniuerſall Biſhop: None of my Predeceſſours euer conſented to vſe this vngodly ſtile: wee our ſelues will not receiue this honour, though it were offered. Thus it appeareth by the iudgement of S. Gregorie, that this Vniuerſall authoritie is vtterly vnlawfull, not onely in other Biſhops, but alſo euen in the Biſhop of Rome.

The Pope himſelfe diſclaimeth, &c.

Touching the place of S. Hierome, I ſee, ye are content to giue ouer, and to recant your former error. For in your Firſt Booke, ye ſay, These words are Notable aboue others; and therefore might not be diſſembled. And where S. Hierome ſaith, The ſafetie of the Church hangeth of the Dignity of the high Prieſt (meaning thereby euery ſeuerall Biſhop within his owne Limits) yee thought it good, thus to lard the ſame, by a proper Parentheſis, with certaine other ſpeciall ſtuffe, of your owne prouiſion: He meaneth the Pope, Peters Succeſſour: as if this High Prieſt of whom S. Hierome writeth, could bee none other, but the Biſhop of Rome. Now vpon ſome better aduice, and by way of Retractation, ye ſay thus: This peereleſſe authority aboue all others, S. Hierome doth attribute to the Biſhop of euery Dioceſſe. Which indeed was the very meaning of S. Hierome. Certainly, if S. Hierome by theſe words meant only the Biſhop of Rome, as ye told vs before, then hee meant not the Particular Biſhop of euerie Dioceſſe, as ye tell vs now. Therefore ye muſt needs confeſſe, that either now or before, yee haue ſought meanes to beguile your Reader. As for the Pope, Peters Succeſſour, S. Hierome meant no more of him, then of any other Biſhop. If it ſhall likewiſe hereafter pleaſe you, to call in other your like ouerſights, yee ſhall publiſh more truth, and encumber your Reader with leſſe error.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuiſion 3.

Bernard the Abbat, aboue foure hundred yeeres paſt, writeth thus: Nothing is now ſincere, and pure amongſt the Clergie: wherefore it reſteth, that the Man of Sinne ſhould be reuealed. The ſame Bernard in his Treatie of the Conuerſion of S. Paul: It ſeemeth now, ſaith he, that Perſecution hath ceaſed: no, no, perſecution ſeemeth but now to begin, and that euen from them, which haue chiefe preeminence in the Church. Thy friends and neighbours, O God, haue drawen neere, and ſtood vp againſt thee: from the ſole of the foot to the crowne of the head, there is no part whole. Iniquity is proceeded from the Elders, the Iudges and Deputies, which pretend to rule thy people. Wee cannot ſay now, Looke how the people is, ſo is the Prieſt. For the people is not ſo ill, as is the Prieſt. Alas, alas, O Lord God, the ſelfe ſame perſons bee the chiefe in perſecuting thee, which ſeeme to loue the Higheſt place, and beare moſt rule in thy Church. The ſame Bernard againe vpon the Canticles writeth thus: All they are thy friends; yet are they all thy foes: All thy kinſfolke: yet are they all thy aduerſaries. Beeing Chriſts ſeruants, they ſerue Antichriſt. Behold in my reſt, my bitternes is moſt bitter.

ROger Bacon also, a man of great fame, after he had in a vehement Oration touched to the quicke the woefull state of his owne time: These so many errours, saith he, require and looke for Antichrist. Gerson complaineth, that in his daies all the substance and efficacie of Sacred Diuinity was brought vnto a glorious contention, and ostentation of wits, and verie Sophistry. The poore men called Pauperes à Lugduno, men, as touching the maner of their life, not to be misliked, were woont boldly to affirme, that the Romish Church (from whence alone all Counsell, and Order was then sought) was the very same Harlot of Babylon and rout of Diuels, whereof is prophesied so plainly in the Apocalyps.

M. Harding.

Now commeth me he in with a new band, which consisteth of tagge and ragge, and a weake companie, God knoweth, they be to shew their faces against the Catholike Church, which (as the holy Ghost speaketh by Salomon) is terrible like an armie of men set in battell ray.

First Friar Bacon the Coniurer and Necromancer, as commonlie they say of him, he is set in the forward, a man of great fame forsooth.

Then commeth in the good plaine father Gerson, a Writer in our Grandfathers time, hee complaineth that Friars and Students gaue themselues too much to the vnprofitable subtilitie of Scholastical questions. What maketh this against the Faith of the Church?

After these, this Defender placeth in an outwing the false brethren of Lions, commonlie called Waldenses, or Pauperes de Lugduno, notorious Heretikes condemned of the Church. These beeing detestable Heretiks condemned of the Church, we reckon not what they say, no more then what Luther saith, what Zuinglius, what Caluine, what these Defenders themselues say, what Antichrist, what Satan saith. For the enemies of Gods truth may not be admitted to giue witnesse against the truth.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Of these last Authorities which ye call tagge and ragge, we neuer made any great account. Notwithstanding both Iohannes Gerson, and Rogerus Bacon, were notable and famous in their times, and in all respects comparable then with the best. Plaine Father Gerson (for by such words yee thought it best to quaile his credit, being otherwise counted a suttle Disputer, and a profound Schole Doctor) was Chancelar of the Vniuersitie of Paris: and for his wisdome and learning was thought worthy to be the Director of all the Bishops in the Councell of Constance, that is to say, all the Bishops of the World. Such a Poore Simple Plaine Father was Father Gerson.

Rogerus Bacon, as it appeareth by his Booke, De Idiomate linguarum, was able to iudge of the Latin, Greeke, and Hebrew tongues: and besides diuers other Bookes, writeth also sundrie Epistles vnto Pope Clement: wherein he much complaineth of the ruine, and Confusion of the Church. Certainelie the weakest of these both hath more weight and substance then either your Amphilochius, or your Abdias, or your Hippolytus, or your Leontius, or your Anacletus, or your Pope Clemens, whom yee so often call the Apostles fellow.

Howbeit, there is no man so simple, but may beare witnesse to the truth. Clemens Alexandrinus, Lactantius, Arnobius, Eusebius, S. Augustine, and other holy Fathers, thought it no preiudice to their cause, to allege the witnesse of the Frantike Sibyls. S. Paul allegeth the Authorities of the Heathen Poets, Aratus, Menander, Epimenides, that neuer knew God. Christ thought it no scorne, to receiue witnesse at Infants mouthes. So, he refused not the Diuels, when they beare witnesse with him, and said, We know thee that thou art Christ the Sonne of the liuing God. Pauperes à Lugduno found fault with the pride of the Pope, with the leaud life of the Clergie, with Purgatorie, with Holie Water, with Pardons, and with other your like deceiuings of the people.

Æneas Syluius in Historia Boemica.

They translated the Bible, and praied in their naturall knowne mother tongue. Lo these were their errors: Therefore were they called detestable Heretikes: therefore were they condemned by your Church of Rome. But Gods name be blessed for euer: sithence that time the Popes painted power hath still abated, and these poore detestable condemned Heretikes haue still increased.

The

The Apologie, Chap. 15. Diuision 2.

I know wel enough, the Authoritie of these foresaid persons wil be but lightly regarded amongst these men. How then if I call forth those for witnesse, whom they themselues haue vsed to honour? What if I say, that Adrian the Bishop of Rome did frankely confesse, that all these mischiefes brast out first from the High Throne of the Pope of Rome?

Rome the root of ill.

M. Harding.

Here haue we a man of straw set vp, whom this Defender nameth Adrian the B. of Rome. He giueth him a waze of straw in his hand, that a farre off seemeth to be a sore weapon, taken out of the armorie of Platina, (a) as is pretended. But when ye come neere, and behold what fellow this is, and conferre with Platina touching his weapon, ye see it to be a fained thing. For there is no such saying by Platina attributed to any of the (b) six Adrians Bishops of Rome, (b) whose liues he writteth. And moe there were not. Therfore where you say, What if I say, that Adrian, &c. I answer thereto, that if you so say, you say a false lie.

(a) A great follie. For Platina was dead threescore yeeres before Adrian 6. was Pope.

(b) Vntruth, vain & vnaduised. For Platina writeth not one word of Adrian the 6,

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Touching this prety fancie of a man of Clours, and a waze of straw, I see well, M. Harding, yee thought it good policie to clout vp the matter, and to satisfie your Reader with a strawen answer. The straw was in your eies, M. Harding, and not in the man. Ye stood too farre aloofe: your eies dazeled, and therefore ye knew not what ye saw. If ye had drawen neere, ye should some haue found your owne errour. It was no man of straw, but Pope Adrian the sixth and last that we speake of: vnlesse ye thinke the Popes Holinesse to be a man of straw. For thus he pronounced at Norinberg in Germany in the great assembly of the Empire, by the mouth of Cheregatus his Legate à Latere: A Sacerdotibus iniquitatem populi dimanare: multis nunc annis grauiter multisque modis peccatum esse Romæ: & inde à Pontificio Culmine malum hoc atque luem ad inferiores omnes Ecclesiarum Præfectos defluxisse: Thus Pope Adrian bade his Legate say: That the iniquity of the people grew from the Priests: And that now, for the space of many yeeres, there haue beene great and grieuous offences committed in Rome: And that all this plague and mischiefe hath flowed vnto all the inferior Rulers of the Church, euen from the High Throne of the Popes Holinesse. This same story is also extant, printed at Colaine, in a Booke called Fasciculus rerum Sciendarum.

Iohan Sleidan. lib. 4. An. 1523

Fasciculus rerum Sciendarum.

Thus therefore once againe we say, M. Harding that Pope Adrian 6. frankly confessed, that all these mischiefes proceeded first euen from the Throne or Seat of the Popes Holinesse: and saying the same, notwithstanding your vnctuill speech, we say no Lie.

And lest ye should thinke this Legate Cheregatus, either of forgetfulnesse, or of malice, did his errant otherwise then he had in Commission, the like words haue sithence bin vttered in your owne late Chapter at Trident, by Cornelius the Bishop of Bitonto. These they be: Effecerunt tandem, vt Pietas in Fucum & Hypocrisim, &c. They haue brought to passe, that Godlinesse is turned into Hypocrisie: and that the Sauour of life is turned into the Sauour of death. Would God they were not gone wholly with generall consent from Religion, to Superstition: from Faith, to Infidelity: from Christ, to Antichrist: from God, to Epicure: saying with wicked heart, and filthy mouth, There is no God. Neither hath there beene this great while any Pastor or Pope that regarded these things. For they all (both Pope, and others) sought their owne: and not so much as one of them (neither Pope, nor Cardinall) sought for the things that pertaine to Jesus Christ.

Cornel. Bitontinus in Concil. Trident.

Therefore, M. Harding, ye may henceforth spare your Vnsauory and bitter speeches. For in these reports there is no Lie.

The Apology, Chap. 15. Diuision 3.

Pighius acknowledgeth herein to bee a fault, that many Abuses are brought in, euen into the very Masse, which Masse otherwise he would haue seeme to be a most reuerend matter. Gerson saith, that through the number of most fond Ceremonies, al the Vertue of the holy Ghost, which ought to haue full operation in vs, and all true godlinesse is vtterly quenched, and dead. Whole Græcia and Asia complaine, how the Bishops of Rome, with the marts of their Purgatories and Pardons, haue both tormented mens Consciences, and picked their purses.

M. Harding.

Errors in the Masse.

Indeed Pighius in his sixth controuersie, speaking of Priuate Masses, denieth not but certaine abuses be crept into that most holy and most healthfull thing, for so hee speaketh. And adding further: Wee know (saith he) to what man, and to what men it perteineth the same to correct. And let each man acknowledge his own measure, and vnderstand his duty. As who should say, It is not meet for euery man to take vpon him to amend any thing that is amisse about the Masse. For he meaneth not that the Masse it selfe is erroneous, as full well there he declareth; but that men be faulty in abusing that most Holy Sacrifice. For many come to the Altar vnworthily. Many be present at it, that ought not to come within the Church dores. Some Priests be of so leaud liues, and of so vnreuerent behauiour at it, as it were better they abstained. Albeit, I thinke he meant rather such abuses as the learned Fathers of the prouinciall Councell of Coulen would to beamended: to wit certaine peculiar offices of Masses deuised by men of late yeeres, besides the ordinance of the Ancient Forefathers.

As for the other great troupe ye bring with you out of Greece and Asia, first we require you to make them agree with your selues, and with the Catholike Church, about the procession of the Holy Ghost, and then we shall answer both you and them concerning your grieuous matter of Purgatory and Pardons. It is not our maner to take the sayings of Heretikes for good and sufficient Authority.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Indeed, M. Harding, heere yee hew ouer high. Ye take vpon you to make vs vnderstand Pighius meaning: and yet by your owne confession it appeareth ye neuer knew your selfe what he meant. Ye say: Hee found fault with the vnworthinesse, either of the Priests, or of the people, ye know not whether: or with somwhat else noted in the late Chapter of Colaine, ye know not what. Yet whatsoeuer it shall please you to imagine, ye thinke you haue wrong if wee beleeue you not immediatly vpon your word. But Pighius himselfe, whose tale ye would so faine tell, saith not, as you would make him say, Abuses haue crept into the Priest, or people: But plainely and simply he saith; Errours haue crept into the Masse.

Howbeit, These Errors (ye say) whatsoeuer they bee, no man may redresse, but only the Pope. And good cause why. For your Doctours say: Papa ex nihilo potest facere aliquid: The Pope of nothing can make some thing. And whatsoeuer he doe no man may say vnto him, Domine, cur ita facis? Sir, why doe you so? And the very heart and root of all your Diuinity of Louaine is this: Christ hath praied for Peter: Ergo, The Pope can neuer erre. But if ye meane plainely, and if their bee no dissimulation nor Hypocrisie in your words, tell me, I beseech you, euen as you desire to bee beleeued, of all the Errours that Pighius meant, for the space of these fortie yeeres what one Errour hath the Pope redressed?

Extr. de translation. Episcop. Quãto in Glos. Extra de. Concess. prebenda. Proposuit. In Glossa.

There is no plainnesse in this dealing, M. Harding. Your minde is not to seeke redresse, bee the fault neuer so euident: but still to continue your selues in credit, and the world in errour.

Al the Christians of Græcia and Asia (ye say) be Heretiks: and therfore ye reckon not what they say. No doubt: for they say, The Pope is not the Head of the Church, which thing whatsoeuer denieth, saith Pope Nicolas, must needs be holden as an hereticke. Thomas Aquinas for that good affection and reuerence he bare towards the Pope, saith thus: Dicere Papam non habere Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ Primatum, est error similis errori dicentium, Spiritum Sanctum à Filio non procedere: To say that the Pope hath not the Primacy of the Vniuersall Church, it is an Error, like vnto the Error of them that (maintaine Heresie touching the Holy Trinity, and) say, The Holy Ghost proceedeth not from the Sonne of God.

Dist. 22. Omnes.

Of your readinesse herein Ludouicus Viues writeth thus: Augustinum Veruulas sua tuetur. Qui si reuiuisceret cum Paulo, certè ille contemptui esset Rhetorculus, aut Grammaticulus: Paulus verò vel insanire, vel Hæreticus videretur: S. Augustine is safe now because of his age. But if he and Paul were aliue againe, he should be shaken off as a bad Rhetorician, or a poore Grammarian. But S. Paul should bee taken, either for a madde man, or for an Heretike. We may say of this generation as S. Augustine said of certaine in his time: Quicquid amant, volunt esse Veritatem: Whatsoeuer thing they fancie, be it what it may be, the same they will haue to be the Truth. Now iudge you, M. Harding, what Church of yours is this, whereas S. Paul the Apostle of Christ, if hee were now aliue, should goe for an Heretike. Vespurius as I remember, after he had trauelled farre, and had seene the Maners and Religions of many Countries, saith thus: Græci implicati sunt multis Erroribus: The Greekes are entangled with many Errors: But hee addeth withall: Faxit Deus, ne & Latinis multæ irrepserint stultitiæ: God grant there be not many follies crept also into the Church of Rome.

Surely the Christian men that be this day in Græcia, and Asia, vtterly abhorre the Pope, with all the deformities of his Church. The Greeke Emperour Michael Palæologus, logus, for that he had submitted himselfe to the Pope in the Late Councell of Florence, was therefore afterward abhorred and hated of his people while hee liued; and being dead, was forbidden Christian Buriall. Isidorus the Archbishop of Kiouia in Russia, for that he, being returned from the said Councell, hee began for vnities sake to moue the people to the like submission, was therefore deposed from his Bishoprick, and put to death. In such reuerence the Churches of Asia, and Græcia haue this day the Church of Rome. Matth. à Michouia in Nouo Orbe.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuision 6.

AS touching the Tyranny of the Bishops of Rome, and their Barbarous Persian-like Pride, to leaue out others, whom perchance they reckon for enemies, because they freely and liberally find fault with their vices, the same men, which haue led their life at Rome in the Holy City, in the face of the most Holy Father, who also were able to see all their secrets, and at no time departed from the Catholike Faith; as for example, Laurentius Valla, Marsilius Patauinus, Francis Petrarke, Hierome Sauanorola, Abbat Ioachim, Baptist of Mantua, and before all these, Bernard the Abbat, haue many a time and much complained of it, giuing the worlde also sometime to vnderstand, that the Bishop of Rome himselfe (by your leaue) is very Antichrist. Whether they speake it truly, or falsely, let that goe. Sure I am, they spake it plainely. Neither can any man allege, that those Authors were Luthers, or Zuinglius Scholars. For they liued not only certaine yeeres, but also certaine ages ere euer Luther or Zuinglius names were heard of.

M. Harding.

If this Defender were compared to a mad dogge, some perhaps would thinke it rude, and an vnmanerly comparison. Let the man be as he is, whosoeuer he be: verily the manner and fashion of both is like, howsoeuer I be content his person be honored with the due regard of a man. For as the mad Dog runneth vp and downe, heere and there, and now biteth one thing, and then another, snappeth at man & beast, & resteth not in one place: So this Defender, to deface the Church, sheweth himselfe to haue a very vnquiet head. Now he runneth at the Bishop of Rome, then at the whole Clergie. Now he barketh at errors in Doctrine, and sheweth none, then he snappeth at maners, and backbiteth mens liues Now he bringeth foorth Scriptures, and them he stretcheth & racketh, but they reach not home. Then commeth he to the Doctors, and maketh them of his side whether they will or no. From Doctors he runneth to Coniurers, to riming Poets, and to Heretikes themselues. I thinke they had rather run to the Turkes, then the Catholike Faith should be receiued. And here leauing that he took in hand to proue, that the Church erreth in necessary Doctrine, hee flingeth at the Tyrannie and Pride of the Bishops of Rome, and bringeth in for witnesse against them white and blacke, good and bad. So he hurt them, he careth not how, by what meanes, ne by what persons.

First, to get credit he vttereth a manifest lie, saying of them al, they led their life at Rome in the Holy City, vnder the nose of the most Holy Father, and might see all his secrets, and neuer forsooke the Catholike Faith. His witnesses be these: Laurentius Valla, Marsilius of Padua, Francis Petrarch, Hierome Sauanorola, Ioachim Abbat, Baptist of Mantua, and S. Bernard, whom of spight he calleth Bernard the Abbat. Now let vs see how many lies here be made at once. Whereas of all these (a) neuer a one led his life at Rome, but Laurence Valla, who was a Canon of Laterane, and this Defender saith that all did, there is one lie That all these might see the Popes secrets, there be two lies. That none of these forsooke the Catholike Faith, (b) there be three lies. As for Laurence Valla, he was not in euery point very sound, as it appeareth in his Booke of Free Will, and in his Annotations vpon the New Testament. In al things he handled he shewed himselfe new fangled, rather then groundedly learned, as well in Grammar and Logicke, as in Diuinitie.

But Marsilius of Padua, to please the Emperor Ludouicus Bauarus, who liued about two hundred yeeres past, through malice conceiued against Pope John xxij. of whom the said Ludouicus was for iust causes excommunicate, went so farre in Schisme, (c) as at length he fell into Heresie. And Abbat Ioachim, whiles he reproued Peter Lombard, (d) vttered Heresie contrary to the Catholike Faith, touching the Trinity: and therefore his Booke was condemned by the Church, though his person was not condemned, because hee submitted himselfe and his writings to the iudgement of the Holy Roman Church, as we finde in the Decretals. That all these haue greatly and often complained of the Bishops of Rome their tyranny and pride, (e) there be foure lies. That they declared the Pope himselfe to bee very Antichrist, (f) there be fiue lies. And whereas to make this shamefull lie you aske leaue, so wee aske leaue of you to tel it you, & to challenge you of a lie, and say plainely vnto you, that speaking of them all, you belie them, and that you shall neuer be able to proue that you say of them.

cum de sum. Pontif. & fide cap. 2.

Francis Petrarch the Italian Poet, and Baptist of Mantua the Latine Poet, speake like Poets, eche of them once in their workes against the euil maners of the Court of Rome. But what proofe maketh all this, that the Roman Church, that is to say, the West Church, which only remaineth, & euer hath remained whole & sound of Faith, erreth in Doctrine? Or what Argument can you gather out of all these? I will not say against the life, but against the Office, Authority, & Dignitie of the Bishop of Rome? The Argument you can make hereupon is this: Poets reprehend the Vices of the Court of Rome: Ergo, the Pope

(a) Vntruth. For Mantuan dwelt in Rome: Petrarcha was made Poet in Rome: Sauanorola was often in Rome, &c.

(b) Vntruth. Otherwise shew wherin they forsooke the Faith.

(c) Vntruth. Otherwise shew in what Article hee was an Heretike.

(d) This is Vncertaine. Read Luther touching the same.

(e) Vntruth. For this will soone appeare.

(f) Vntruth. For by most expresse words they call him Antichrist.

Pope is Antichriſt. Or, Ergo, the Catholike Church erreth, and is to be forſaken. What force is in this reaſon, euery reaſonable man, be he neuer ſo meane of wit, may ſoone iudge.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Your Compariſon of Mad Dogs, M. Harding, becommeth well the reſt of your courteous eloquence. Whoſo ſhall marke how vainely you ſnap at whatſoeuer ye can imagine is in your way: now at our Logicke: now at our Rhetoricke: now at our Greeke: now at our Latine: now at our Lawneſſe: now at our leane Cheekes: now at our thinne Beards: now at our Superintendentſhips: now at our Miniſterſhips: now at our Maſterſhips: now at our Maſhips: (for this is the ſobrietie and grauitie of your ſpæch:) and further how grædily and eagerly ye faſten your tæth, and fæd your ſelfe with winde, and are ſtill ſnapping, and catch nothing: although in regard of manhood he ſpare to call you a Mad Dogge, as it liketh you to call others, yet he may well thinke you ſcarcely to bea ſober man.

Chriſt found fault, Sometime with the Biſhops: Sometime with the Prieſts: Sometime with the Scribes: Sometime with the Phariſeis: Sometime with the People: Sometime with their Religion: Sometime with their Traditions: Sometime with their Ignorance: Sometime with their Praiers: Sometime with their Faſtings: Sometime with their Life: Sometime with their Hypocriſie: Sometime with their Cruelty: And thus in your fantaſie, he ran hither and thither, vp and downe. Yet, I trow, yee will not touch him with your Compariſons, nor ſay therefore as ye ſay to vs; Hee had a verie vnquiet Head.

Whoſo hath eies to ſæ, and conſidereth the miſerable Abuſes of the Church of Rome, touching either Life, or Religion, cannot lightly want inuft matter to reprœue. Yet remember what Church it is, whereof S. Bernard ſaith, A planta pedis vſque ad verticem Capitis, non eſt ſanitas vlla: Non eſt iam dicere, Vt Populus, ſic Sacerdos: Quia nec ſic Populus, vt Sacerdos: There is not one whole place from the ſole of the foote to the top of the Head. We may not now ſay, As is the People, ſo is the Prieſt: For the People is not thing ſo ill as is the Prieſt.

Bernardus in Conuerſione Pauli, Serm. 1.

Yee ſay: Theſe witneſſes dwelt not in Rome. And hœre in a ſmall matter ye haue noted a great Lie. Howbeit Bernard the Abbat, that dwelt furtheſt off, was twice in Rome, and was Chiefe of Counſell with Pope Innocentius in his greateſt affaires. Franciſcus Petrarcha was made Poet in the Capitoll, and kept Laura his Concubine in the eie of the Pope, and had his moſt abode in Rome. Laurentius Valla was Canon of the Cathedral Church in Laterane, and lead his Life, and died in Rome. Briefly, S. Bernard only excepted, all the reſt were Italians, and dwelt neuer farre from Rome: and, as it may appeare by the plainneſſe of their ſpæch, vnderſtood ſome part of the dœpeſt Secrets of the Church of Rome.

Guiliel. Abb. in Vita Bernardi. Raphel. Volaterran.

Marſilius Patauinus, ye ſay, was an Heretike. But what one Hereſie hee defended, or before what Iudge hee was conuicted, or where he was either abiured, or puniſhed for the ſame, neither you, nor any of all your fellowes haue hitherto tolde vs. Therefore we muſt thinke, He was an Heretike without Hereſie, as ſome men bee Doctors without Diuinitie.

Marſilius Patauinus.

Ioachimus Abbas found fault with the Biſhop of Rome, and therefore he muſt nœds be an Heretike. As for that he is charged in the Popes Decretals, with errour touching the Trinitie, it is a great vntruth, as ye may clœrely perceiue by a Booke that Martin Luther hath purpoſely written in his defenſe.

Ioachim. Abb. Extra. de ſum. ma Trinitate, & Fide Catholic. damnamus.

Certainely Laonicus Chalcocondyla, a Greeke Writer, giueth vnto this Ioachimus a very worthy Commendation. For thus he ſaith of him: De Pontificibus, Ioachimus Abbas, &c. Ioachimus the Abbat, regarded among the Learned in Italie, as a man of a ſingular gift in Prophecie, foretold many things of the Popes, how they ſhould come to the Popedome, and how they ſhould line. And as he ſpake, euen ſo it came to paſſe. As touching his knowledge, hee ſeemed to be a heauenly man.

Laonic. Chalcondyla Li. 6.

But to come nœre the matter, and to ſpeake of the thing that moſt miſliketh you, S. Iohn ſaith: Antichriſt ſhall ſit in a City built vpon ſeuen Hils: (and ſo is the Citie of Rome.) Irenæus ſaith: The number of Antichriſts Name ſhall be expreſſed by this word Latinus, whereby it is likely is meant the Biſhop of Rome. Sybilla ſaith: The greateſt terrour and fury of his Empire, and the greateſt woe that he ſhall worke, ſhall be by the bankes of Tyber. And there is Rome. Theſe circumſtances ſœme plainely to paint out the City of Rome. S. Hierome ſaith: Antichriſtus ſedebit in Templo Dei, vel Hieroſolymis, vt quidam putant, vel in Eccleſia, vt verius arbitramur: Antichriſt ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, either at Hieruſalem, as ſome thinke, or elſe in the Church (of God) it ſelfe, which wee take to bee the true meaning.

meaning. S. Gregory saith: Ego fidenter dico, quòd quisquis se Vniuersalem Sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari desiderat, in elatione sua Antichristum præcurrit: I speak it boldly, whosoeuer calleth himselfe the Vniuersall Priest, or desireth so to be called, (as doth the Pope) in the pride of his heart, he is the Forerunner of Antichrist. Gregor. Lib. 9. Epist. 30.

Antichrist.

And when Iohn, the Bishop of Constantinople, had first entred his claime vnto this title, S. Gregorie made answer vnto the same: Ex hac eius Superbia quid aliud, nisi propinqua iam esse Antichristi tempora designatur? By this Pride of his, what thing else is signified, but that the time of Antichrist is euen at hand? Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 34.

Againe he saith vpon occasion of the same: Rex Superbiæ propè est, &, quod dici nefas est, Sacerdotum est præparatus exercitus: The King of Pride (that is, Antichrist) is comming to vs, and an armie of Priests is prepared, which thing is wicked to be spoken. S. Hierome saith: Antichristus omnem Religionem suæ subijciet potestati: Antichrist shall cause all Religion to be subiect to his Power. Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 34. Hieronymus ad Algasiam.

I will not here take vpon me to describe, either the person, or the dwelling place of Antichrist. Who so hath eies to see, let him see. These Circumstances agree not vnto many. S. Paul saith: Antichrist worketh the Mystery or secret practise of Iniquitie. Whereupon the Glosse saith: Mystica est Impietas Antichristi, id est, Pietatis nomine palliata: The Wickednesse of Antichrist is Mysticall, that is to say, (it is not plaine, and open, or easie to be espied of euery body, but) cloked vnder the name of Godlinesse. And your Glosse vpon S. Paul vnto Timothy saith thus: Habentes speciem Pietatis, id est, Christianæ Religionis: Hauing a shew of Godlinesse, that is to say, a shew of the Religion of Christ. So Mysticall shall Antichrist be in all his dealing. And forasmuch as M. Harding thinketh wee misallege these Writers, and violently force them to our side, whether they will or no, S. Bernard saith thus: Bestia illa de Apocalypsi, cui datum est os loquens Blasphemias, & bellum gerere cum Sanctis, Petri Cathedram occupat, tanquam Leo paratus ad prædam: The Beast that is spoken of in the Booke of Reuelations, vnto which Beast is giuen a Mouth to speak Blasphemies, and to keepe warre against the Saints of God, is now gotten into Peters Chaire, as a Lion prepared to his prey. Behold, M. Harding, S. Bernard telleth you, that Antichrist is possessed in Peters Chaire. Howbeit ye may some finde a salue for this sore. For ye will say, Bernard wrote these words against Petrus Luna, an Intruder and Vsurper of the See of Rome, and not against Innocentius 7. that was Pope indeed. This is true, M. Harding, and not denied, nor any way preiudiciall to our purpose: for hereby yee may see, by Bernards iudgement, it is not impossible, but either by Election, or by intrusion, by one way, or by other, Antichrist may sit in Peters Chaire. Marke well his words: thus he saith: Bestia habens os loquens Blasphemias, occupat Cathedram Petri. But if you M. Harding, or any other your friends, shall hope to start out at this poore hole, what will you then say vnto Arnulphus, that saith, The very Pope himselfe, notwithstanding any his Canonicall Election, if he want Charity, is Antichrist, sitting in the Temple of God? What will you say to Bernard himselfe, that calleth the Popes of his time, Traitours, Wolues, Pilates, Diuels, and the Darknesse of the World? Tell your friends, M. Harding, that Bernard speaketh not these words of Intruders. This shift will not serue. Yee speaketh them of very Popes indeed, of Christs Vicars, of Peters Successors, and of the Heads of the Church. Ioachimus Abbas said aboue three hundred yeares sithence: Antichristus iam pridem natus est Romæ, & altiùs se extollet in sede Apostolica: Antichrist is already born in Rome, and shall aduance himselfe higher in the Apostolike See. 2. Thess. 2. 2. Timoth. 3. Bernar. Epist. 125. pa. 1316. Ioach. Abbas

Arnulphius in the Councell of Remes saith thus: Quid hunc, reuerendi Patres, in subiimi Solio residentem, veste purpurea, & aurea radiantem, quid hunc, inquam, esse censetis? Nimirùm, si Charitate destituitur, solâque Scientia inflatur, & extollitur, Antichristus est in Templo Dei sedens, & se ostendens, tanquam sit Deus: What thinke you, Reuerend Fathers, of this man (he meaneth the Pope) sitting on high in his Throne, glittering in Purple, and cloth of Gold? What thinke ye him to be? Verily if he be void of Charitie, and be blowne vp and aduanced only with knowledge, then is he Antichrist sitting in the Temple of God, and shewing out himselfe, as if he were God. The Bishops in the Councell at Reinspurg say thus: Hildebrandus Papa sub specie Religionis iecit Fundamenta Antichristi: Pope Hildebrand vnder a colour of holinesse (by forbidding Priests marriage) hath laid the foundation for Antichrist. Dantes an Italian Poet by expresse words calleth Rome the Whore of Babylon. Franciscus Petrarcha likewise saith: Rome is the Whore of Babylon, the Mother of Idolatrie and Fornication, the Sanctuary of Heresie, and the Schoole of Error. I know these words will seeme odious vnto many. Therefore I will stay, and spare the rest. The Pope himselfe, for that he saw to whose person and credit these things belonged, therefore in his Late Councell of Laterane gaue strait Commandement to all Preachers, that no man should dare once to speake of the comming of Antichrist. In Concilio Remensi, Inter Opera Bernardi. Aventinus. Dantes in Canzione 32. Franc. Petrarcha, Epist. 20. Conc. Lateran. sub Iulio & Leone, Sess. 11.

Indeed many places of the Holy Scriptures, spoken of Antichrist, seemed in old times to be darke and doubtfull, for that as then it appeared not vnto what state and gouernment they might be applied. But now, by the Doctrine and practise of the Church of Rome, to them that haue eies to see, they are as cleare and as open as the Sunne.

The Apology, Chap. 17. Diuision 1.

The state of the Church of Rome.

AND what maruel if the Church were then carried away with errors in that time, specially when neither the Bishop of Rome, who then only ruled the rost, nor almost any other, either did his dutie, or once vnderstood what was his dutie? For it is hard to be beleeued, whiles they were idle, and fast asleepe, that the Diuel also al that while either fell asleepe or else continually lay idle. For how they were occupied in the meane time, and with what faithfulnesse they tooke care of Gods House though we hold our peace, yet I pray you, let them heare Bernard their own friend, The Bishops (saith he) who now haue the charge of Gods Church, are not Teachers, but deceiuers: They are not feeders, but Beguilers: They are not Prelates, but Pilates. These words spake Bernard of that Bishop, who named himself the highest Bishop of all, and of the other Bishops likewise which then had the place of Gouernment. Bernard was no Lutheran: Bernard was no Heretike: he had not forsaken the Catholike Church: yet neuertheless he did not let to call the Bishops that then were, Deceiuers, Beguilers, & Pilates. Now when the people was openly deceiued, & Christian mens eies were craftily bleared, & Pilate sate in Iudgment place, & condemned Christ & Christs Members to Sword and Fire: O good Lord, in what case was Christs Church then? But yet tell me of so many, and so grosse errors, what one error haue these men at any time reformed? Or, what fault haue they once acknowledged, and confessed?

M. Harding.

Why Sirs, are ye so well learned, and so holy of life your selues, that ye take vpon you to iudge the Bishop of Rome? Christs chiefe officer in earth, and all other men, before the time of your Apostates, & Renegate Friers to haue been both impious for not doing their dutie, and ignorant for not knowing what was their dutie? Was all Vertue so farre banished, all necessary knowledge and Christian learning so cleane put out, that we must now begin to learne how to beleeue, and how to liue a Christian life, of such light Preachers, wicked Vow-breakes, leaud lecherous Lurdens, and detestable Blasphemers, as your diuelish rable is?

The Spirit of Modesty.

S. Bernards words to Eugenius be these: Age, indagemus adhuc diligentius quis sis, &c. Well, go to, let vs somwhat more diligently examine what maner a man thou art, what person thou beerest for the present time in the Church of God. Who art thou? The great Priest, the highest Bishop. Thou art the chief of al Bishops, thou art the heire of the Apostles: For Primacie thou art Abel, for Gouernment Noe, for Patriarkship Abraham, for holy order Melchisedech, for dignity Aaron, for authority Moses, for iudgement Samuel, for power Peter, *for thy annointing Christ. Thou art he to whom the Keies were deliuered, to whom the Sheep were committed. There be also other Porters of Heauen, and Pastors of flocks. But thou so much far passing all other, as thou hast inherited both names much more indifferent. They haue their flocks assigned vnto them, each man one. All are committed to thee, the one whole flocke to one. Neither art thou only the Pastor of all the Sheepe, but also the onely Pastor of all the Pastors.

Lib. 2. de consid. ad fin.

* The Pope is Christ. This is well to be marked.

Wherefore according to thine own Canons, other are called into part of care, thou into fulnesse of power. The Authority of others is restrained to certaine prescript bounds: thine is extended euen vpon those who haue receiued power ouer others. Canst not thou, if there bee cause why, close vp heauen gates against a Bishop, depriue him of his Bishopricke, and giue him vp to the Diuell?

Now heare an other reason, which confirmeth that prerogatiue to thee, as well as the other. The Disciples rowed, and our Lord appeared vnto them on the shore, and that in his Body now againe restored vnto life, which was more comfortable vnto them. Peter knowing that it was our Lord, leapt into the Sea, and so came vnto him, and the rest came by boat. what meaneth this? Forsooth it was a signe of the singular Popedome of Peter, by which he tooke into his Gouernment not only one Ship, as the other did, each man his owne, but the whole World.

S. Peter leapeth for the Popedome.

Ioan. 21.

M. Harding.

Apostates, Renegates, Lecherous Lurdaines, Detestable, Diuelish rable? O, M. Harding, the Vessell that held this liquor was not cleane. Wee condemne not your Clergie, either for life, or for Learning; but onely report therein the iudgement of others your speciall friends. And therefore if any thing mislike you herein, the fault is in them, and not in in vs. S. Bernard saith, Your Bishops in his time were not Doctors, but Deceiuers: not Feeders, but Defrauders: not Prelates, but Pilates. Iudge you now in what case the Church of God stood then, when the Bishops that were the Guides and Leaders of the people might be compared to Pilate, that gaue Sentence in Iudgement against Christ.

The state of the Church of Rome.

Iohannes Vitalis a Cardinall of Rome, and therefore in no wise of your part to be refused, saith thus: De Sacerdotibus modernis dicit Hieremias, Stupor & mirabilia facta sunt in Terra. Prophetæ prædicabant mendacium: & Sacerdotes applaudebant manibus, & Populus meus dilexit talia: Concerning the Priests that now be, Hieremie saith, Horrour and wonders are wrought vpon the Earth. The Prophets haue preached Lies: the Priests haue clapt their hands at it for ioy, and liked it well: and my people hath loued such things.

Iohan. Vitalis de Prælatis & Sacerdot. Hier. 5.

Albertus Magnus saith: Illi qui modò præsunt in Ecclesijs, plurimùm sunt Fures & Latrones: plùs Exactores, quàm Pastores: plùs Spoliatores, quàm Tutores: plùs Mactatores, quàm Custodes: plùs Peruersores, quàm Doctores: plùs Seductores, quam Ductores: Isti sunt Nuntij Antichristi, Subuersores Ouium Christi: They that now gouerne the Church, for the most part, be Theeues and Murtherers: more Catchers then Feeders: more Spoilers, then Defenders: more Killers, then Keepers: more Deceiuers, then Doctors, more Beguilers, then Guiders. These be the Vauntcurrers of Antichrist, the subuerters of the Sheepe of Christ.

Albertus in Iohan. ca. 10. E. E

William Holcote saith: Sacerdotes moderni, sunt similes Sacerdotibus Baal: sunt Angeli Apostatici: sunt similes Sacerdotibus Dagon: sunt Sacerdotes Priapi: sunt Angeli Abyssi: The Priests of this time are like the Priests of Baal: They are the renegate Angels: They are like the Priests of Dagon: They are the Priests of Priapus: They are the Angels of Hel. S. Bernard saith: Dicimini Pastores, cùm sitis raptores. Fratres, Iesus hodie elegit sibi multos Diabolos Episcopos. Non sunt Pastores, sed Traditores: Yee are called Bishops, but yee are Rauenners. O my Brethren, Iesus at this time hath chosen vnto him many Diuels to be Bishops: they are not Feeders, they are Traitors. Iohannes Sarisburiensis said boldly vnto Pope Adrian the Fourth: Ideò mea opinione Papæ frequentiùs moriuntur, ne totam corrumpant Ecclesiam: Therefore in my iudgement the Popes die the oftner, lest (if they should continue long) they should infect the whole Church.

Guil. Holcote in li. Sapientiæ, Lectio. 182.

Bernar. in Concil. Remensi.

Iohan. Sarisb. in Polyc. l. 6. c. 24.

Againe S. Bernard saith: Pudeat Successores Apostolorum, Lucem non esse Mundi, sed Modij: Mundi autem tenebras. Dicamus eis, Vos estis tenebræ Mundi: Let it shame the Successors of the Apostles not to be the Light of the world, but the light of the Bushel: and rather the Darkenesse of the World. Let vs therefore say vnto them, Ye are the darkenesse of the World.

Bern. in Cant. Serm. 66.

Thorow these spectacles we may behold the state of the Church of Rome. For Christ saith: If the Light it selfe that is in thee, be made Darknesse how great then will the Darkenesse it selfe be? How can the City be kept in safety, if the Watchman be blind and see nothing? If the Blinde lead the Blinde, both fall into the pit. Christ saith: Dormientibus illis creuerunt Zizania: While the Husbandmen were asleepe, then the Cockle and Darnel grew. S. Hilarie saith: Ecclesiæ, intra quas verbum non vigilat, naufragæ sunt: The Churches wherein Gods Word watcheth not, suffer shipwracke and are drowned.

Matth. 6. Matth. 15. Matth. 13. Hilar. in Matth. Canon. 8.

But Bernard, ye say, stoutly maintained the Supremacy. I grant you. Neither did wee euer allege him, to proue the contrarie. He defendeth also other great and grosse errors, as liuing in a time of deepest Darkenesse. But the reasons he vseth, seeme very weake, specially to winne so great a matter. For thus hee saith: Peter leapt into the water and came to Christ:

Bern. de Consideratione ad Eugen lib. 2.

The rest of the Disciples came by boat:

Iohan. 21.

Ergo, The Pope hath the iurisdiction of all the World.

Such other pretty Reasons, made in the Popes behalfe, yee may finde many. Peter Crab that lately compiled the Bookes of Councels, reasoneth thus:

Concil. to. 1. Pagin. 10.

Peter paid the tribute money for Christ, and himselfe: Matth. 17.

Christ said vnto Peter, follow thou me: Iohan. 21.

Againe he said, Launch foorth into the deepe: Luc. 5.

Againe, Peter, art thou asleepe? Couldest thou not watch with me one houre? Mark. 14.

And againe from henceforth thy name shall be Peter: Luc. 22.

And, Peter drew his Sword, and cut off Malchus Eare: Iohan. 1.

Ergo, saith he, The Pope hath vniuersall authority ouer the whole Church of God. Matth. 26.

Here be Reasons euen for a Pope. He must needs bee hard hearted, that will not yeeld to them.

Notwithstanding, howsoeuer these Reasons hold, Bernard saith: The Popes are the Heads of the Church. True it is. But againe the same Bernard saith: The same Heads are the Ministers of Antichrist, Deceiuers Defrauders, Rauenners, Traitours, the Darkenesse neſſe of the World. Wolues, Pilates and Diuels. And this was ſufficient for our purpoſe.

Greg. hom. 17. in illa verba, Meſſis quidem multa. S. Gregory ſaith: Conſiderate, quid de Gregibus agatur, quando Lupi ſunt Paſtores: When the Woolfe is become the Shepheard, conſider then, what may become of the Flocke.

The Pope is Chriſt. As for that S. Bernard ſaith: The Pope is Abel: The Pope is Noë: The Pope is Abraham: The Pope is Melchiſedech: The Pope is Aaron: The Pope is Moſes: The Pope is Samuel: The Pope is Peter: The Pope is Chriſt: I doubt not, but your owne Conſcience will anſwer, it is too much. Yet of the two, that is a great deale more likely, that others haue ſaid, as I haue alleged before: The Pope is Antichriſt. For both Heauen and Earth knoweth, he is not Chriſt.

The Apologie, Chap. 18. Diuiſion 1.

BUt, forſomuch as theſe men auouch the Vniuerſall poſſeſſion of the Catholike Church to be their owne, and call vs Heretikes, becauſe we agree not in iudgemēt with them, let vs know, I beſeech you, what proper marke & badge hath that Church of theirs, wherby it may be known to be the Church of God. Verily it is not ſo hard a matter to finde out Gods Church, if a man will ſeeke it earneſtlie and diligently, and as hee ſhould. For the Church of God is ſet vpon a high and gliſtering place, in the top of an Hill, and built vpon the Foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets: There (ſaith Auguſtine) let vs ſeeke the Church: there let vs trie our matters. And, as he ſaith againe in another place: The Church muſt bee ſhewed out of the Holy and Canonicall Scriptures: and that which cannot be ſhewed out of them is not the Church. Yet for all this, I wot not how, whether it be for feare, or for conſcience, or deſpaire of victory, theſe men alway abhorre and flie the Word of God, euen as the Theefe flieth the Gallowes. And no wonder truly. For, like as Men ſay, the Cantharus by and by periſheth and dieth, as ſoone as it is laid in Balme: notwithſtanding Balme be otherwiſe a moſt ſweet ſmelling Ointment: euen ſo theſe men will ſee, their own matter is damned and deſtroied in the Word of God, as if it were in poiſon. Therfore the Holy Scriptures, which our Sauior Ieſus Chriſt did not only vſe for authority in al his ſpeech, but did alſo at laſt ſeale vp the ſame with his owne Bloud, theſe men to the intent they might with leſſe buſineſſe driue the people from the ſame, as from a thing dangerous and deadly, haue vſed to call them a bare Letter, Vncertaine, Vnprofitable, Dumbe, Killing and Dead: which ſeemeth to vs all one, as if they ſhould ſay, The Scriptures are to no purpoſe, or as good as none at all. Hereunto they adde a ſimilitude not very agreeable, how the Scriptures be like to a Noſe of Wax, or a Shipmans Hoſe: how they may bee faſhioned and plied all maner of waies, and ſerue all mens turns.

Ang. de Vnit. Eccl. Catholic.

Albert Pighius in controuer. De Eccleſia.

M. Harding.

Where ye ſay the Church is builded vpon the Foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, and ſhewed by the holy Canonicall Scriptures: wee confeſſe the ſame with S. Auguſtine. When yee adde, the Church, which cannot be ſhewed out of the Scriptures to be no Church, we ſay, that though (a) S. Auguſtine haue no ſuch words in the Chapters, which ye allege in the Margin, yet were it neuer ſo much granted, that he had thoſe words in that place, they ſhould make nothing for your purpoſe. S. Auguſtine in that Booke diſputeth againſt the Donatiſts, who would reſtraine the Catholike Church to the only Country of Afrike, denying other Chriſtian men to be members thereof. S. Auguſtine refuting their Hereſie, declareth the Son of God to be the head, and all the true Faithfull to be the Body of the Church: and that it is not ſufficient to hold with the head alone, or with the Body alone: but we muſt hold with both together, if we will be ſaued.

(a) Vntruth. For S. Auguſtine in the ſame places and elſwhere oftentimes ſaith the ſame.

(b) Vntruth. For S. Auguſtines words are generall.

(c) Here M. Harding ſecretly confeſſeth that his Church of Rome cannot be ſhewed by the Scriptures.

The Donatiſts did grant the head Ieſus Chriſt, and denied his Body the Church. For this cauſe ſaith S. Auguſtine, Ipſum Caput de quo conſentimus, oſtendat nobis Corpus ſuum, de quo diſſentimus: Let the Head, vpon whom we agree, ſhew vnto vs his Body, whereupon we diſagree. The Head is Chriſt, who ſpake firſt by his Prophets, afterward by himſelfe, and laſt of all by his Apoſtles. In his igitur omnibus quærenda eſt Eccleſia: In all theſe (ſaith he) the Church muſt be ſought.

If thou marke, good Reader, that which I haue here rehearſed out of S. Auguſtine, it is to be ſeen, that he bindeth not the proofe of the Church ſimply to the holy Scriptures, (b) but only in a caſe, whē he hath to doe with an Heretike, who will not admit the authority of the Church. Therefore (c) a true Church may be found, which is not ſhewed in the Scriptures, ſo the contrary therof be not ſhewed in the Scriptures.

Where the Church muſt be ſought.

tures. Now if these Defenders will haue that to be no Church, which cannot be shewed out of Scriptures, they shal vnderstand, that as therein they play the Donatists, so we must needs follow S. Augustine in bringing Scriptures against them not as the (d) only proofe indeed (which they fasly say) but as a very good and chiefe kind of proofe, most profitable in all cases, and necessary at such time, as the aduersary will admit none other proofe, &c.

(d) Vntruth. For S. Chrys. stome saith: Nunc nullo modo cognoscitur, quæ sit vera Ecclesia, nisi tantummodo per Scripturas.

Wherefore it remaineth, that it is the Synagogue of Antichrist and Lucifer. Who as he fel out of Heauen like a lightning, so he maketh a blase and shew of a Church in the Earth for a time. But as we can tell when it was not borne, so shall it not be long, but that through Gods power it will vanish away, dispersed, and be scattered by the lightsome Maiestie of Christs true Church, which from S. Peters time to this day, flourisheth in her Head the Bishop of Rome, and in her Members thorowout the Worlde, (e) which abide in the Vnity of the same Bishop.

(e) In the Vnitie of the Bishop of Rome

We esteem and vnderstand the Scriptures to be the sense and the word. If they can pretend the bare word, they thinke themselues good enough to make a sense of their owne. Which bare word, as they misuse it, Pighius perhaps compareth to a nose of wax. But the Scriptures he neuer meant to dishonour with that similitude. If it were lawfull for vs to vse Scripture after our owne interpretation, as they doe, we should not lacke sufficient matter in the Holy Bookes to ouerthrow by our owne applying all their false opinions and Heresies. (f) But we are bound to that religious awe and reuerence of them, that except we haue an Author to auouch the sense wherof we take hold, we dare bring forth nothing. And yet read our Bookes who will, he shall lacke neither Scriptures in them, nor witnesses of our interpretation in any controuersie of this age. Let it be agreed, that for decision of controuersies, such sense of the Scriptures be taken for Scripture, which the Holy Ghost hath taught the Church, and then let the World iudge, who flieth the word of God, as the Theefe doth the Gallowes.

(f) Vntruth, manifest. for M. Hard knoweth that in the greatest cases that lie in question, hee can allege neither Scripture nor Doctour.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Contrary to that, we haue here alleged of S. Augustine, ye say: A true Church may bee found, which is not shewed in the Scriptures. Whereby it appeareth, ye are loth your Church should come to the triall of this Standard. But forasmuch as this quarrell groweth of S. August. let S Augustine himselfe be the Iudge. And to allege a few words in stead of many, thus he saith: Vtrùm ipsi Ecclesiam teneant, Diuinarum Scripturarum Canonicis Libris ostendant. Ecclesiam Christi, sicut ipsum caput Christum, in Scripturis Sanctis Canonicis debemus agnoscere: Whether they haue the Church, or no, let them shew by the Canonicall Bookes of the Holy Scriptures. We must know the Church of Christ, euen as we likewise know Christ, which is the head of the Church, in the holy Canonicall Scriptures. Againe he saith: Ecclesiam sine vlla ambiguitate Sancta Scriptura demonstrat: The holy Scripture sheweth the Church without any doubtfulnesse. Againe: Quæstio est, vbi sit Ecclesia. Quid ergo facturi sumus? Vtrùm in verbis nostris eam quæsituri, an in Verbis Capitis sui, Domini nostri Iesu Christi? Puto, quòd in illius potiùs verbis eam quærere debemus, qui veritas est, & optimè nouit Corpus suum: The question or doubt is, where the Church should be. What then shall we doe? Whether shall we seeke the Church in our owne words, or in the words of her Head, which is our Lord Iesus Christ? In my iudgement we ought rather to seeke the Church in his words: for that he is the Truth, and best knoweth his owne Body.

Likewise saith S: Chrysostome: Nunc nullo modo cognoscitur, quæ sit vera Ecclesia Christi, nisi Tantummodò per Scripturas: Now can no man know, which is the true Church of Christ, but Only by the Scriptures. Againe he saith in like forme of words: Volens ergo quis cognoscere, quæ sit vera Ecclesia Christi, vnde cognoscat in tanta confusione similitudinis, nisi Tantummodò per Scripturas: If a man be desirous to know, which is the true Church of Christ, how can he know it in such a confusion of likenesse, but Onelie by the Scriptures? These words be so euident and so plaine, that no man with modestie may well denie them.

Bernard ſaith to the Pope and his Clergie, as it is alleged before: Vos eſtis Tenebræ Mundi: Ye are the Darkeneſſe of the World. Therefore ye may not well vant your ſelues ſo much of the brightneſſe of your beames. As for that, ye call our Church the Synagogue of Lucifer and Antichriſt, we may well ſuffer it to blow ouer, as the vaine vnſauory ſmoke of ſome impatient cholericke humors. Our cauſe is not the worſe, M. Harding, in the iudgement of the wiſe, for that you haue learned ſo readily to ſpeake ill.

Vnity of the church in one Pope.

But what Louanian vanity is this, to ſay, The members of the Church of Chriſt abide in the Vnity of the Pope? What Scripture or Doctor, or Father euer tolde you of ſuch Vnity? S. Paul ſaith: We are all one (not in the Pope, but) in Chriſt Ieſu. And what ſo great Vnity can you ſay, there is, or hath bene in your Popes? Platina ſaith: Poſt Stephanum ſemper hæc conſuetudo ſeruata eſt, vt acta Priorum Pontificum ſequentes aut infringerent, aut omninò tollerent: It hath beene an ordinary cuſtome among the Popes euer ſithence the time of Pope Steuen, that the Popes, that followed afterward, would euermore either breake, or aboliſh the acts of the Popes that had beene before them. Eraſmus ſaith: Iohannes 22. & Nicolaus totis Decretis inter ſe pugnant, idque in his, quæ videntur ad Fidei negotium pertinere: Pope Iohn 22. and Pope Nicolas in their whole Decrees are contrary the one againſt the other: yea and that in matters that ſeeme to belong to caſes of the Faith.

Galat. 3.

Platina in Stephano 6.

Eraſm. in Annotationib. in 1. Cor. 7.

To be ſhort, the Popes haue foulie corrupted the Scriptures: they haue corrupted the Decrees and Canons of Councels: they haue beene Sorcerers: Idolaters: Scribes and Phariſeis: They haue bene Arian Heretikes: Neſtorian Heretikes: Monothelite Heretikes: Montaniſt Heretikes: they haue maintained damnable Hereſies againſt the Godhead of Chriſt: againſt the Perſon of Chriſt: againſt the Will of Chriſt: and againſt the Immortality of the Soule: they haue bene contrary to themſelues, one directly, and expreſly againſt another: Yet muſt the Pope beare vp the whole Church of God, euen as Atlas beareth vp the Heauens? and vnleſſe all the world abide in him, is there no Vnity in the Church?

So ſaith Hoſius: Vnum præeſſe toti Eccleſiæ, vſque adeo eſt neceſſarium, vt abſque hoc Eccleſia vna eſſe non poſſit: It is ſo neceſſary a thing, that one haue the Gouernment of the whole, that otherwiſe the Church of God cannot be One.

Hoſius in Petricouien. Confeſſ. cap. 27.

Clem. 5. Ad noſtram in Gloſſa.

Likewiſe it is noted in the Popes owne Gloſſes vpon his Decretals: Conſtat Eccleſiam ideò eſſe Vnam, quia in Vniuerſali Eccleſia Vnum eſt Caput Supremum, ſcilicet Papa: It is plaine, that the Church is One, for that in the Vniuerſal Church there is One Supreme head, that is, the Pope. Another of your Doctors doubteth not to ſtep yet a little further, and thus to expound the words of Chriſt. Fiet Vnum Ouile, & Vnus Paſtor: Quod quidem de Chriſto intelligi non poteſt, ſed de aliquo alio Miniſtro, qui præſit loco eius: There ſhal be one Fold and one Shepheard. Theſe words we may not vnderſtand of Chriſt, but of ſome other Miniſter, that may rule in his roome. By which Doctors Catholike iudgement, wee finde, that the Vnity of the Church hangeth not of Chriſt, but of the Pope.

Ioh. de Pariſijs, de Poteſt. Regia & Papali, c. 3.

But theſe be ouer vaine and groſſe vanities. For though the Pope were no Pope, yea though Antichriſt were the Pope, yet is Chriſt able to hold his Church in perfect Vnitie. S. Paul ſaith: Chriſtus eſt Caput, ex quo totum Corpus coagmentatur, & connectitur: Chriſt is the Head, of whom the whole Body (of the Church) is framed faſt, and ioined together. Therefore S Chryſoſtome ſaith: Ex hoc Capite Corpus habet, & vt ſit, & vt bene ſit. Quid relicto Capite Membris adhæres? Of this Head (that is, Chriſt) the Body hath both to be, and alſo well to be. What cleaueſt thou to the Members, and leaueſt the Head?

Chryſ ad Coloſ. homil. 7.

This is the Vnity of the Church, that the whole Flocke may heare the voice of that One Sheepheard and follow him. And that One Sheepheard is Chriſt the Sonne of God, and not the Pope. Therefore S Auguſtine ſaith: Per hanc Poteſtatem, quam ſolùm ſibi Chriſtus retinuit, ſtat Vnitas Eccleſiæ, de qua dictum eſt, Vna eſt Columba mea: By this Power, which Chriſt (he ſaith not, hath giuen ouer to the Pope, but) hath reſerued onely to himſelfe, ſtandeth the Vnity of the Church: of which Vnity it is ſaid, My Doue is One.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 6.

Yee ſay, there appeareth in your Bookes ſufficient abundance of Scriptures, touching any controuerſie of this age, and that according to the very ſenſe and meaning of the ſame, together with the conſent and iudgement of the Holy Fathers. But for vs (yee ſay) we build only vpon the bare words, and make a meaning of our owne.

Indeed it is no great maſtery for you, to arme your ſelfe with ſome ſhew of Scriptures. The Diuell was not altogether void of ſuch furniture, when hee came to tempt Chriſt. S Cyril ſaith: Omnes Hæretici de Scriptura diuinitùs inſpirata ſui colligunt erroris occaſiones:

Matth 4.

In Conc Chalced. Actione 1.

siones: All Heretikes out of the heauenly inspired Scriptures gather occasion of their error. Athanasius saith: Hæretici Scripturarum verbis prò esca vtuntur: Heretikes vse the words of the Scriptures for a bait. Athan. contra Arian. Orat. 1.

Tertullian saith: Fidem ex his impugnat, ex quibus constat: An Heretike assaulteth the Faith by the same words of Gods, that breed the Faith. Tertullian. de Baptismo.

Abusing of the Scriptures.

But forasmuch as ye say, ye beare such aw and reuerence vnto the Word of God, and in the interpretation thereof, follow onely the sense of the Holy Ghost, and the iudgement of the Doctors, and Fathers of the Church, for some triall of your truth herein, let vs see, how discreetly and reuerently ye haue vsed the same.

In your late Councell holden at Lateran in Rome, one Simon Begnius, the Bishop of Modrusia, saith thus vnto Pope Leo: Ecce venit Leo de Tribu Iuda, Radix Dauid, &c. Te Leo Beatissime Saluatorem expectauimus, &c. Behold the Lion is come of the Tribe of Iuda, the root of Dauid, &c. O most blessed Leo, we haue looked for thee to be our Sauiour. In your late Chapter at Trident, Cornelius the Bishop of Bitonto said thus: Papa Lux venit in mundum: & dilexerunt homines tenebras magis quàm Lucem. Omnis, qui male agit, odit Lucem, & non venit ad Lucem: The Pope being the Light, is come into the World, and men haue loued the Darkenesse more then the Light. Euery man that doth euil, hateth (the Pope, that is) the Light, and commeth not to the Light. Concil. Lateran. Sess. 6. pa. 601. Concil. Tridet. Cornelius Bitontinus.

Pope Adrian saith: Papa non iudicabitur à quoquam: Quia scriptum est, Non est Discipulus supra Magistrum: No man shall iudge the Pope: for it is written, the Scholar is not aboue his Master. Conc. to. 2. Decreta collecta per Adrianum pag. 613.

The Pope suffereth the Embassadours of Sicilia, to lie prostrate on the ground, and thus to cry vnto him, as if it had beene vnto Christ: Qui tollis peccata mundi, miserere nostri: Qui tollis peccata mundi, dona nobis pacem: O thou (holy Father) that takest away the Sinnes of the World haue mercie vpon vs: thou that takest away the Sinne of the World, giue vs peace. Paulus Æmilius lib 7. Conc. tom. 1. in purgat. Sexti.

Pope Sixtus saith; Who so accuseth the Pope, can neuer be forgiuen. And his reason is this: Quia qui peccat in Spiritum Sanctum, non remittetur ei, neque in hac vita, neque in futura: He that sinneth against the Holy Ghost, shall neuer be forgiuen, neither in this World, nor in the World to come. And by these words of the Scriptures, so well applied, hee concludeth, that no man may accuse the Pope. And is the Pope indeed, The Lion of the Tribe of Iuda? Is the Pope the Root of Dauid? Is the Pope the Light? Is the Pope the Sauiour of Mankinde? Is the Pope that Lambe of God, that taketh away the Sinnes of the World? Was this the very sense of the Holie Ghost? Was this the meaning of the Scriptures? And to leaue a heape of other examples (for they are infinite) you your selfe, M. Harding, haue often vsed the Scriptures in like sort.

Thus ye say, The Sonne of Man came not to destroy (the Soules of men) but to saue. Ergo, The Substance of Bread in the Sacrament is not annihilate or consumed to nothing. M. Harding fol. 99. a.

And this, ye say, was the sense and meaning of the Holy Ghost. This is the Iudgement of all the Doctors and holy Fathers. Such religious aw and reuerence ye beare towards the word of God. Yet saith your Doctor Hosius: The Scripture as it is alleged by vs, is the Word of the Diuell: but as it is alleged and handled by you, so onely it is the word of God. If yee had not vtterly wipte all shame from your faces, ye would neither make such mockeries of Gods holy Word: nor so leaudly abuse the people of God. Hosius contra Brentium, lib. 4 fol. 178. a.

The Apology, Chap. 19. and 20. Diuision 1.

VVOteth not the Bishop of Rome, that these things are spoken by his own Minions? or vnderstandeth he not, he hath such Champions to fight for him? Let him hearken then how boldly, and how godlie one Hosius writeth of this matter, a Bishop in Polonia, as he testifieth of himselfe: a man doubtlesse well spoken, and not vnlearned, and a very sharpe, & a stout maintainer of that side. Thou wilt marueil, I suppose, how any good man could either conceiue so wickedly or write so despitfully of those words which he knew proceeded from Gods mouth, and specially in such sort as he would not haue it seeme his owne priuate opinion alone, but the common opinion of all that band. He dissembleth I grant you indeed, and hideth what he is, and setteth forth the matter so, ſo, as though it were not he, and his ſide, but the Zuenkfeldian Heretiks, that ſo did ſpeake. Wee (ſaith he) will bid away with the ſame Scriptures, whereof we ſee brought, not only diuers, but alſo contrary interpretations: and we will heare God ſpeake, rather then we will reſort to the naked Elementes or bare words of the Scriptures, and appoint our Saluation to reſt in them. It behoueth not a man to be expert in the Law and Scripture, but to bee taught of God. It is but loſt labour, that a man beſtoweth in the Scriptures. For the Scripture is a Creature, and a certaine bare Letter. This is Hoſius ſaying, vttered altogether with the ſame Spirit, and the ſame mind wherwith in times paſt the Heretiks Montanus and Marcion were moued, who, as it is written of them, vſed to ſay, when with cõtempt they reiected the Holy Scriptures, that themſelues knew many mo, and better things, then either Chriſt or the Apoſtles euer knew.

Hoſius de expreſſo verbo Dei.

What then ſhall I ſay heere, O yee principall poſts of Religion, O yee Archgouerners of Chriſts Church: is this that your reuerence which ye giue to Gods Word? The holy Scriptures which S. Paul ſaith, came by the inſpiration of God, which God did commend by ſo many Myracles, wherein are the moſt perfect prints of Chriſts owne ſteps, which all the Holy Fathers, Apoſtles, and Angels, which Chriſt himſelfe the Sonne of God, as often as was needfull, did allege for teſtimony and proofe: wil ye, as though they were vnworthy for you to heare, bid them Auant? That is, will ye enioine God to keepe ſilence, who ſpeaketh to you moſt cleerely by his own mouth in the Scriptures? Or, that Word, whereby alone, as Paul ſaith, we are reconciled to God, and which the Prophet Dauid ſaith, is Holy and Pure, and ſhall laſt foreuer, will ye call that but a bare, & dead Letter? Or wil ye ſay, that al our labour is loſt, which is beſtowed in that thing which Chriſt hath commanded vs diligently to ſearch, and to haue euermore before our eies? And will yee ſay that Chriſt and the Apoſtles meant with ſubtilty to deceiue the people, when they exhorted them to read the Holy Scriptures, that thereby they might flow in al wildome and knowledge? No maruell at all, though theſe men deſpiſe vs and all our doings, ſeeing they ſet ſo little by God himſelfe & his infallible ſayings. Yet was it but want of wit in them, to the intent they might hurt vs to doe ſo extreme iniurie to the Word of God.

But Hoſius wil here make exclamation, and ſay, that we do him wrong & that theſe be not his own words, but the words of the Heretik Zuenkfeldius. But how then, if Zuenkfeldius make exclamaton on the other ſide, & ſay, that the very ſame words be not his, but Hoſius own words? For tell me where hath Zuenkfeldius euer written them? Or, if he haue written them, and Hoſius haue iudged the ſame to be wicked, why hath not Hoſius ſpoken ſo much as one word, to confute them? Howſoeuer the matter goe, although Hoſius peraduenture wil not allow of thoſe words, yet he doth not diſallow the meaning of the words. For welneere in all Controuerſies, & namely touching the vſe of the Holy Communion vnder both kinds, although the words of Chriſt be plaine and eudent, yet doth Hoſius diſdainefully reiect them, as no better, then Cold and Dead Elements: and commandeth vs to giue Faith to certaine New Leſſons, appointed by his Church, and to, I wot not what, Reuelations of the Holy Ghoſt. And Pigghius ſaith: Men ought not to beleeue, no not the moſt cleere and manifeſt words of the Scriptures, vnleſſe the ſame bee allowed for good by the interpretation and authority of the Church: Whereby he meaneth the Church of Rome.

M. Harding.

M. Harding.

How ignorantly, wickedly, and ſtubbornly the Author of this Apology burdeneth the reuerent Father in God, and Honourable Prelate Cardinall Hoſius with that he neuer ſaid, it is not vnknown to al men who haue read that Booke which he wrote De expreſſo verbo Dei, of the expreſſe word of God. Here I aske ſo much pardon, as to detect an hereticall touch or two before I make direct anſwer to the foule ſlandering of Hoſius.

Firſt I note with what fidelity theſe new holy brethren do their things. It may be thought that the Secretary of this new Clergie, at his penning of the Apology, ſaw not Hoſius Booke of the expreſſe word of God. But as they haue been conuerſant in S. Auguſtine, Hierome, Chryſoſtome, and the Ancient Fathers, ſo vſe they Hoſius at this time, that is to ſay, they read neither the Old Fathers with any diligence, neither the Writers of our time. But by inaps & peeces either themſelues write out here & there a line or two, or vſe that which ſome of their own ſect hath take out of them. So that for moſt part they neuer know the tru meaning of the place which they allege. But vſing patched note-bookes, & bringing in ſcattered Authorities, they be deceiued themſelues, & deceiue others. And he that took the note knew well they were not the words of Hoſius, & did but only put the name of Hoſius vnto them becauſe they were taken out of his Booke. The Writer of this Apology not knowing, nor not remembring ſo much, when he found in the note-booke the name of Hoſius with ſuch words, he did raſhly put them in print, to his owne great ſhame and diſcredit. If this excuſe be not true wee muſt needs lay maruellous malice to the ſaid Writer, who wittingly and of ſet purpoſe did impute the words to Hoſius, which he reported by way of miſliking of them, and ſhewing whoſe Hereſie they contained.

Now let the Defenders chuſe whether they will haue their Secretary condemned of ignorance, or of malice. Howſoeuer it be, marke yet the third point, which heereof wee will gather. The Apology was ſcant printed and publiſhed, but that groſſe error was out of hand eſpied, and word thereof brought to the Author, I meane him that penned it. But what did he? Did he confeſſe that he was deceiued? Did he crie Hoſius mercy? No, no. That is not the wont of Heretikes. They will go forward with the matter once begun whatſoeuer come of it. What did he then? When it ſhould be ſet forth in Engliſh, and word came to him thereof, he made an excuſe I warrant you meet for an Heretike, whoſe property it is Proficere in peius, as S. Paul ſaith, to proceed to worſe and worſe, to take his degree backward, and of a great fault to make a far greater. For whereas before (as Charity moueth me to thinke) he had made an error, ſuppoſing Hoſius to haue ſaid that which he had not, afterward by ſtubborne maintaining of it, he ſheweth what Spirit he is of, and when he might reaſonably haue excuſed his ignorance, choſe rather ſpightfully to diſcouer his malice; as it ſhall manifeſtly appeare by the circumſtance of the thing. Hee laieth to Hoſius charge, & in his perſon to al our charges, that we do not eſteem the holy Scriptures. He proueth it by certaine words alleged out of a treatiſe made by Hoſius, De Expreſſo Verbo Dei. The words are here put in the Apologie, as the Reader may ſee. The true Argument of Hoſius Booke is no other then to ſhew that all Heretikes haue alleged the words of God, as they be written; but none of them al haue taken the right vnderſtanding of Gods word, as they do indeed ſignifie. For that only the Catholik Church attaineth vnto, becauſe only it hath the Holy Ghoſt. Al Heretikes haue brought for their opinions the written word of God ſo long, vntil at the laſt (ſaith Hoſius) there were found who by the words of the Scriptures tooke vpon them to take away all Authority from Scriptures. Natum eſt (ſaith he) nouum quoddam Prophetarum genus, qui non ſunt veriti Scripturarum authoritate Scripturis authoritatem omnem detrahere. En quo perduxit rem tandem Satanas: A certaine new kind of Prophets is riſen, who ſticke not by the Authority of Scriptures to take away all authority from Scriptures. See whither at the length the Diuell hath brought the matter.

Now afterward expounding this matter more at large, he declareth the Capraine of that Hereſie to haue been Zuenkfeldius. He ſheweth that by a Text of Scripture, where Dauid ſaith, I will heare what our Lord ſpeaketh in me, Zuenkfeldius went about to will men to heare what God telleth euery man by inſpiration, rather then to giue attendance to the written word of God. And whiles Hoſius reporteth what Zuenkfeldius ſaid for the maintenance of his fond Hereſie, as among other his words theſe are, which he brought in this Apologie againſt Hoſius, and againſt the Catholiks; whereas it is neither Hoſius, nor any Catholike that ſpeaketh them, but onely Zuenkfeldius himſelfe.

Hitherto we haue ſhewed, that the words alleged in the Apologie vnder the name of Hoſius make neither againſt him, nor againſt vs, as not being his words, nor ours, but only the words of Zuenkfeldius. Well, what credit may we giue to this man in expounding the Word of God, (whoſe true meaning hee may falſifie at his pleaſure, becauſe we cannot bring forth God himſelfe to declare his words) ſeeing he dareth to burden Hoſius with theſe words, which Hoſius himſelfe, being yet aliue, can declare to haue another meaning, as the booke it ſelfe doth witneſſe to al that liſt to read the ſame. This was a great fault, to impute ſo horrible an Hereſie to Hoſius vniuſtly. This was a great ignorãce, to charge him with that Hereſie which he refuteth, and impugneth. They are great crimes, and yet ſuch as might riſe of miſreport and ignorance. But when he was told of them, he ſhould of reaſon haue corrected them. Hee ſhould haue repented with Peter, and not diſpaired with Cain and Iudas.

But what did he, when he vnderſtood he had erred? He addeth a Gloſſe far more malicious then the former error was. For grãting that Hoſius ſetteth out the matter ſo, as though neither he, nor any of his ſide, but the Heretiks Zuenkfeldians ſpake ſo, this notwithſtanding he burdened both him and the Catholikes with it, ſaying, that he diſſembleth, and hideth what he is. Sir, was this the way to amend your fault, to grant that Hoſius ſpake againſt the Zuenkfeldians, and yet to beare men in hand, he fauoured them? If he had fauoured their Hereſie, what needed he to refell it? But how ſay you that Hoſius diſſembleth & hideth what he is, ſith that euen here in two places in moſt plain words you lay the Zuenkfeldian Hereſie to his charge? Read your owne Booke. Before the allegation of Zuenkfeldius Hereſie, ſay you not thus? We, ſaith he, wil bid away, &c. And after the allegation haue you not theſe words; This is Hoſius ſaying? How ſtandeth all this together? You haue forgotten the Prouerbe that biddeth a lier to be mindfull. I cannot tel how to name this kind of your dealing, lying, or detraction, ſlandering, or malicious ſpeaking. But Sir, if Hoſius haue ſpoken euill, why giue you not witneſſe againſt him of euill? If he haue ſpoken well, euen by your owne confeſſion, in reputing the Zuenkfeldians for Heretiks why find you fault with him for his good works, ſuch, I ſay, as your ſelfe confeſſe to be good: You reproue him who ſpeaketh not againſt Zuenkfeldius: and againe you grant he ſpeaketh againſt him: and yet becauſe you had once reproued him, you will continue in it without reaſon, learning, or wit. But it muſt needs ſo be: for without pertinacie no man is either a perfect Heretike or a perfect ſlanderer.

If yet you ſtand in defence of it, all the world will account you for a deſperate perſon. For no man that euer ſaw Hoſius workes can thinke that he was guilty of that you burden him with. But ſome man might thinke you were deceiued, and miſtooke Hoſius. But ſith you grant you do not now miſtake him, & yet charge him with auouching that which he holdeth for Hereſie, he that vnderſtandeth thus much of you, may aſſure himſelfe, that you are diſpoſed to belie and ſlander Hoſius, though it coſt you the damnation of your Soule. For ſham a man repent, and reuoke that, for which your own conſcience ſtinteth not to barke at you.

But Hoſius (ſay they) peraduenture will not allow the words of Zuenkfeldius: yet hee doth not diſallow the meaning of the words. Well and Clerkly reaſoned. As though words were allowed or diſſallowed for any other ſo principall a cauſe, as for their meaning. And therefore he that diſalloweth words, hath much more diſſallowed the meaning of them. Yet (ſay they) of the Holy Communion vnder Both Kindes he reiecteth the plaine words of Chriſt, as dead and cold Elements. Verily a man might thinke this Booke was ſet forth by ſome enemy of our New Engliſh Clergy, it is ſo much to their defacing, had not themſelues at diuers times acknowledged it for a whelp of their own litour. A man for his life cannot finde one leafe in it without many Lies.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

I cannot greatly blame you, M. Harding, though you ſhew your ſelfe hot and vehement in defenſe of Hoſius. For of him you and ſome of your Fellowes may ſay, as Carneades ſaid ſomtime of Chryſippus: Niſi Chryſippus fuiſſet, ego non eſſem: If Chryſippus had not beene, then had I neuer beene. For had not Hoſius beene good vnto you, and ſpared you part of his furniture, ſuch as it was, your Diuinity had beene full bare.

Ye ſay: We read neither the Old Writers, nor the New, but are vtterly ignorant, and void of all learning, and in reſpect of the Beames of your knowledge, know nothing. It were a very ambitious and Childiſh vanity, to make vaunts of learning. For aſmuch as ye ſeeme deſirous of the fame of great Reading, ye ſhall haue the whole praiſe and glory of it, M. Harding, without contention. We will rather ſay with S. Paul, We know nothing, but only Ieſus Chriſt Crucified vpon his Croſſe. Yet notwithſtanding wee are not ſo ignorant, nor ſo idle, but that we are able, and haue leaſure to read, as well the Old Doctors and the Fathers of the Church, as alſo your light vnciuil Pamflets, and blotted Papers: which, God wot, in all reſpects are very New. And for either of them we are much aſhamed in your behalfe. For the Old Doctours and Fathers, to ſee them of your part, either of wilfulneſſe, or of forgetfulneſſe, or of ignorance, ſo foulely miſuſed: of your owne Papers and Nouelties, to ſee them with vntruth and other vncourteous ſpech ſo fully freighted.

1. Corinth. 2.

But touching Hoſius, ye condeme vs vtterly, either of Ignorance, or of Malice. For the words wherein we finde ſuch fault, were vttered by him, as you ſay, not as any part of his owne Iudgement, but onely as in the perſon of the Heretike Zuenkfeldius. Therefore ye ſay: We charge him wrongfully with the allowing of that thing, which he expreſly and plainly reprooueth.

First of all, the Authour of the Apology proteſteth, that if there were any ouerſight heerein, it proceeded of errour and not of malice; as it may well appeare in that he was not deceiued alone. For if he were deceiued in miſtaking theſe words, diuers others, the beſt learned in this age, haue beene deceiued therein as well as he. Nicolaus Gallus hereof writeth thus: Hoſius Cardinalis, Legatus Sanctiſſimi, & Preſidens Concilij Tridentini, in ſuo Libro, De Expreſſo Verbo Dei, ait, Nos verò Dei de Cœlo ſententiam potiùs expectabimus, &c. Non oportet Legis aut Scripturæ eſſe peritum, ſed à Deo Doctum. Vanus eſt labor, qui Scripturis impenditur. Scriptura enim Creatura eſt, & egenum quoddam Elementum: Cardinall Hoſius, Legate vnto the moſt Holy Father, and Preſident of the Councell of Trident, in his Booke, De Expreſſo Verbo Dei, ſaith thus: Wee will rather wait for Gods Will from Heauen, &c. It behoueth not a man to be skilfull in the Law of God, or in the Scriptures, but to be taught of God. It is but loſt labour that is ſpent in the Scriptures. For the Scripture is a Creature, and a poore kind of outward Element. Thus Nicolaus Gallus burdeneth your owne Catholike Friend Hoſius with theſe words, and not the Heretike Zuenkfeldius.

Nicolaus Gallus.

Flacius Illyric. in Norma Concilij.

Likewiſe ſaith Flacius Illyricus, ſpeaking of the ſame words of Hoſius: Vnum locum ex plurimis proferam, in quo Hoſius alterius cuiuſdam ſententiam de hac re citans, comprobat: Nos Dei de Cœlo Sententiam potiùs expectabimus, &c. Vanus eſt labor, qui Scripturis impenditur: One place I wil alledge out of many, where Hoſius bringing in the ſaying of one certaine man (meaning Zuenkfeldius) alloweth wel of the ſame. Theſe words, ſaith

Illyricus,

Illyricus, Hosius vttereth in the name and person of Zuenkfeldius: yet neuertheleſſe hee alloweth them as his owne.

To like purpoſe writeth Iacobus Andreæ: who after he had reported all the foreſaid words, in the end concludeth thus: Hactenus Hosius: Quæ verba siue Hosius ſuo, siue aliorum nomine reciter, certè hanc eſſe Aſoti & Hoſij de Sacra Scriptura ſententiam, non eſt obſcurum: Thus farre Hosius: Which words howſoeuer Hosius report them either in his owne name, or in the name of ſome other, without all doubt, This is the Iudgement that both Aſotus and Hosius haue of the Holy Scripture. Iacob. Andr. de Authorit. Sacræ Scripturæ.

So likewiſe ſaith that moſt Graue and Learned Father Iohannes Brentius: Interea vociferantur, Sacram Scripturam eſſe Dubiam, Ambiguam, Præceptorem Mutum, Literam Occidentem, Literam Mortuam: adeòque, ſi Reuerendis illis Patribus libuerit, Æſopi Fabulas: In the meane while they cry out, that the Holy Scriptures are blinde and doubtfull, a dumbe Schoolemaſter, a killing Writ, a dead Letter: yea, and if it ſhall like theſe Reuerend Fathers, no better then Æſops Fables. Perhaps ye will ſay of theſe learned men, as ye ſay of ſome others; They vſed only their patched Note-bookes, and ſcattered Authorities, by ſnaps and peece, heere and there a line or two, and vnderſtood not what they wrote. Notwithſtanding, whatſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe you to ſay, as therein your grace is very great, yet you ſee by theſe few, and muſt needs confeſſe, if the Author of the Apologie, touching this place of Hosius, were happily ouerſeene by errour, yet he had ſo many of the beſt learned of this age to keepe him companie in his errour. Verily they ſay not as you ſay, Thus ſaith Zuenkfeldius: They ſay as we ſay, Thus ſaith Hosius. If Hosius were able to blinde ſo many, we muſt thinke he was a ſkilfull Writer. Iohan. Brentius in Præfatione in Iacob. Andreæ contra Hosium.

The miſtaking of Hosius.

The faireſt colour ye can lay heereon is this: Howſoeuer theſe words be vttered by Hosius, yet was this no part of his meaning. Yet Iacobus Andreæ ſaith: Hanc eſſe Aſoti & Hoſij ſententiam, non eſt obſcurum: Without doubt this is the very meaning of Aſotus and Hosius. And Illyricus ſaith, Hosius alleging the ſaying of one certaine man, (whereby he meaneth the Heretike Zuenkfeldius) alloweth well of the ſame. Iacob. Andreæ. Flac. Illyricus. Alterius cuiuſdam ſententiã de hac recitans, comprobat.

But forasmuch as ye ſay, This Gloſſe is more malicious then the former Error: and that therein we ſpightfully diſcouer our malice, without Reaſon, without Learning, without Wit, and require vs to repent for ſhame. as if it were a Sinne, not againſt Hosius, but againſt the Holy Ghoſt; I beſeech you therefore indifferently to conſider with what reuerence and modeſtie, not only Hosius, but alſo ſundry others your friends of that ſide, haue vſed to ſpeak and write of the Word of God.

Ludouicus a Canon of the Church of Laterane in Rome, in an Oration openly pronounced in your late Chapter at Trident ſaith thus: Eccleſia eſt Viuum Pectus Chriſti: Scriptura autem eſt quaſi Mortuum Atramentum: The Church is the liuely Breaſt of Chriſt: But the Scripture is as it were Dead Inke. Likewiſe ſaith the Biſhop of Poitiers in the ſame your Chapter: Scriptura eſt res inanimis, & muta, ſicut etiam ſunt reliquæ Leges Politicæ: The Scripture is a Dead and Dumbe thing, as are all other Politike Lawes. Albertus Pighius ſaith: Si dixeris, Hæc referri oportere ad Iudicium Scripturarum, Communis te ſenſus ignarum eſſe comprobas: Sunt enim Scripturæ Muti Iudices: If thou ſay, Theſe matters muſt be put ouer to the Iudgement of the Scriptures, thou ſheweſt thy ſelfe to be void of common reaſon. For the Scriptures are dumbe Iudges, and cannot ſpeake. Ludouic. Citatur ab Illyr. in Norma Concil. Iohan. Sleidanus. Lib. 23. Alber. Pighius, Controuerſ. 3. de Eccleſia.

Eckius calleth the Scriptures, Euangelium Nigrum, & Theologiam Atramentariam: The Blacke Goſpell, and Inken Diuinitie. Againe Pighius ſaith: Eccleſia habet illam poteſtatem, vt poſſit Scriptis qui buſdam impertiri Canonicam Authoritatem, quam nec ex ſe, nec ex ſuis Authoribus habent: The Church hath power to giue Canonicall Autheritie vnto certaine Writings, which otherwiſe they haue not, neither of themſelues, nor of their Authours. There may be certaine Bookes allowed for Scripture, ſaith he, that haue no Credit nor Authority of themſelues. Therefore the meaning hereof muſt needs be this: The Church (of Rome) hath Authority to make Scriptures. Againe he ſaith: Sunt Scripturæ, vt non minùs verè quàm feſtiuè dixit quidam, velut Naſus Cereus qui ſe horſum, illorſum, & in quamcunque volueris partem, trahi, retrahi, fingíque facilè permittit: As one man both truly and merrily ſaid, the Scripture is like a Noſe of Wax, that eaſily ſuffereth it ſelfe to be drawen backward, and forward, and to be moulded and faſhioned, this way, and that way, and howſoeuer ye liſt. Martin. Kemnitius in Examine Con. Trident. Pag. 32. Martin. Kemnitius in eo. em Examine, pag. 240. Pighius Hierar. Lib. 3. cap. 3. Fol. 103.

Thus, M. Harding, ye teach the people to reuerence and weigh the Word of God. Ye call it Dead Inke: a Liueleſſe matter: a dumbe Iudge, that cannot ſpeake: a Blacke Goſpell: Inken Diuinity: a Noſe of Wax: and a thing vtterly void of Authoritie of it ſelfe. Examine theſe places: weigh theſe words. They are no Lies: they are no Slanders. Iudge vprightly: remoue affection: ye ſhall finde that Hosius, and Zuenkfeldius, and all the reſt of your brethren, touching the Authority and Credit of Gods Word, accord in one. For proofe whereof, when obiection was made, that King Dauid, being, not a Bishop, but only a Temporall Prince, had written the Psalmes, that is to say, the very Key of the Scriptures, Hosius made answer: Quid ni scriberet? Scribimus indocti doctique poemata passim: Wrote Dauids psalmes? And why should he not write them: Horace saith: We write Ballads euery body, learned and vnlearned, tagge and ragge. So vnreuerently, and like an Heathen, he scorneth and scoffeth at the Scriptures of God, and likeneth the Heauenly Ditties of the Holy Ghost to a Vile, Heathenish, Wanton Ballad. This in Zuenkfeldius had bene great Blasphemie: Ye allow it in Hosius as a vertue.

Hosius li. 2 cõtra Brentium.

Luke. 7.

S Luke saith: Pharisæi & Iurisperiti spreuerunt Consilium Dei in semetipsis: The Pharisees and learned in the Law despised the Councell of God in themselues. Irenæus saith: Hæretici accusant Scripturas, quasi non rectè habeant, nec sint ex Authoritate, &c. Heretikes finde fault with the Scriptures, as if they were not well written, and as if they were not of sufficient Authority, &c. And thus they doe, to the end to cause the people to loth and doubt the Word of Life, and so to become captiue to their owne Traditions. Therefore Cardinall Cusanus saith thus: Hæc est omnium sanè intelligentium sententia, qui Scripturarum Authoritatem, & intellectum in Ecclesiæ approbatione fundant: & non è conuerso, Ecclesiæ Fundamentum in Scripturarum Authoritate locant, &c. Dico, nulla esse Christi præcepta, nisi quæ per Ecclesiam pro talibus accepta sunt: This is the Iudgement of all them that meane well, which found the Authoritie and vnderstanding of the Scriptures in the allowance of the Church: but contrariwise lay not the Foundation of the Church in the Authority of the Scriptures. Thus I say, There are no Commandements of Christ, but only such as by the Church are allowed for Christs Commandements. So saith your highest Doctour Albertus Pighius: Apostoli quædam conscripserunt, non vt Scripta illa præessent Fidei, & Religioni nostræ, sed potius vt subessent: The Apostles wrote certaine things, not that their writings should be aboue our Faith and Religion, but rather that they should be vnder. Iohannes Maria Veractus saith: Determinatio Ecclesiæ appellatur Euangelium: The Determination of the Church is called the Gospell.

Nicol. Cusan. ad Bohemos. Epist. 2.

Albert. Pighius Hierar. Lib. 1. Cap. 2.

Iohan. Maria Verractus, edit. An. 1561.

Therefore Hosius by his Episcopall Authoritie pronounceth Sentence Definitiue in this wise: Quod Ecclesia docet, Expressum Dei Verbum est: quod contra Sensum & Consensum Ecclesiæ docetur, Expressum Diaboli Verbum est: Whatsoeuer the Church teacheth, (by the Church he meaneth the Pope, and his Cardinals, and the Church of Rome, &c.) that is the Expresse word of God: Whatsoeuer is taught against the Meaning and Consent of the Church, that is the Expresse Word of the Diuell.

Hosius de Expresso Verbo Dei pag. 97.

This was sometime an ordinary practise of sundry Old Heretikes, to scorne and to disdaine the Scriptures of God; and to ground themselues vpon other conclusions, and imaginations of their owne. So the Heretike Carpocrates said, He knew more then either Christ himselfe or his Apostles.

Epiphan. lib. 1. Hæres. 27.

Tertullian. de Præscriptione.

Tertullian saith: Discipuli Montani dicunt, Paracletum plura in Montano dixisse, quàm Christum in Euangelio protulisse: nec tantùm plura, sed etiam meliora atque maiora: The Disciples of Montanus the Heretike said, that the Holy Ghost vttered more things in Montanus their Master, then euer Christ vttered in the Gospell: and not onely more things, but also greater and better things. And againe they said: Paulus ex parte sciebat, & ex parte prophetabat. Nondum enim venerat quod perfectum est: Paul knew in part, and prophesied in part. For the perfection (that was afterward in Montanus) was not yet come. Therefore it is not vniuersally true, M. Harding, that you say, All Heretikes haue alleged the Scriptures. For some Heretikes, in whose steps ye seeme to tread, haue made light of and disdained the Scriptures, as well as you. But as some Heretikes haue alleged the Scriptures, as you doe, without sense, euen so all Heretikes are euermore reproued by the Scriptures, as you be. And that is the cause that you and your fellowes, for the most part, so fearefully shun the Scriptures, For he that doth euill feareth the light.

Augustinus ad Quoduultdeũ. Hæres. 26.

Therefore whereas ye call vs forth, and bid vs humbly to cry you mercie, first bid Hosius your Schoolemaster to recant his Errours: will him to speake more reuerently of Gods Word: for it is Holy. Let him confesse, and repent his Blasphemie in comparing the Scriptures of God with Heathenish Ballads. Recant you the Errours that Pighius, Cusanus, Eckius and other your Doctours and fellowes haue set abroade: And the Author of the Apologie shall doe whatsoeuer shall behoue him.

Remember also how vniust and vntrue reports you your selfe and your fellowes haue wittingly and willingly published, and blased in writing, not sparing any man, whom it pleased you to touch with slander. You your selfe in this selfe same Booke haue written thus: The Learned Gospellers of the Sea Townes in Saxonie, teach that there is no Hell at all. I beseech you, M. Harding, where saw you these Heretikes? What were their names? In what Sermon, in what Booke, in what Talke opened they this Heresie?

M. Harding fol. 141. b.

In

In what language spake they? What were their words? Who euer either knew them, or saw them, or heard them, or dreamed of them, but your selfe alone, or some other as idely occupied as your selfe? And dare you so vainly to slander a whole Countrey, without proofe, without witnesse, without ground? Leaue this fondnesse. No man beleeueth you, no not your owne fellowes, no not your selfe. It is to childish. Vanity it selfe would not be so vaine.

The mistaking of Hosius.

Another of your company there thus most vniustlie slandereth that godly Father, Doctor Peter Martyr: Petrus Martyr negat Christum esse nostrum Deprecatorem: Peter Martyr denieth that Christ is our Intercessour. Likewise againe with one generall slander hee misreporteth all the Professours of the Gospell whatsoeuer: Omnes Euangelici Pseudomartyres negant Christum venisse in Carne: All the Gospellers (whom he thought it better to call the False Witnesses of the Gospell) deny that Christ euer came in the Flesh. I will presse you no further with Examples of your immoderate slanders. As your vncourteous tongue hath no bridle, so your waste words haue no end.

Copus Dial. 3. Pag. 331.

Copus Dial. 6. Pag. 878.

All these, and othere like reports, your conscience knoweth are most vntrue. Yet haue yee not doubted thus to hazard your whole credit, and vainely with the same to fede the World. Suffer mee therefore, M. Harding, to answer you with your owne words: For shame man repent, and reuoke that, for which your owne Conscience stinteth not to barke against your selfe.

The Apologie, Chap. 21. Diuision 1.

AND yet, as though this were too little, they also burn the Holy Scriptures, as in times past wicked king Aza, or as Antiochus, or Maximinus did, & are woont to name them Heretikes Bookes. And out of doubt, as it seemeth, they would do as Herod in old time did in Iurie, that hee might with more surety keep still his vsurped Dominion: who being an Idumean borne, & a stranger to the stocke & kindred of the Iewes, & yet coueting much to be taken for a Iew, to the end he might establish to him & his Posterity the Kingdome of that Country, which hee had gotten of Augustus Cæsar, he commanded all the Genealogies & Petigrees to be burnt, and made out of the way, so that there should remaine no Record, whereby it might be known to them that came after, that he was an Alien in Blood: whereas euen from Abrahams time these Monuments had beene safely kept amongst the Iewes, & laid vp in their Treasury: because in them it might easily & most assuredly be found of what Linage euery one did descend. So (in good faith) do these men, when they would haue all their own doings in estimation, as though they had been deliuered to vs euen from the Apostles, or from Christ himselfe: to the end there might be found no where any thing able to cõuince such their dreames & lies, either they burn the Holy Scriptures, or els they craftily conuey them from the people

Euseb. Lib. 1. Cap. 7. 8.

M. Harding.

Pardon me, I pray thee, Reader, if I vse words somewhat vehement, the cause so requiring. This Defender crieth out, O ye pillars of Religion! But how much more iustly cry we againe to him; O thou captaine liar! O most worthie, not the reward of a whetstone, but the iudgement of a backbiter, of a slanderer, of a cursed speaker, of a mocker, of the accuser of the brethren, of a Blasphemer! Is this the regard thou hast, I say not to God, or to Christian men, but to thine owne estimation, & common honestie of a man? Canst thou perswade thy selfe to get credit by lying, to seeme sober by railing, honest by villanie, charitable by slandering, vpright by deceit, iust by impietie? Why saiest thou of vs in generall, that is to say, of the Catholike Church, that we despise, hate, cast away, and burne the holie Scriptures? Had wee not loued and kept the Scriptures, how couldst thou and thy fellowes haue come by them? Had ye not them of vs? From the Apostles time to this day we haue kept them (a) vnspotted and vndefiled: and yee within these fiftie yeeres haue by your vulgar translations (b) corrupted them, that lamentable it is to consider. And when we burned the same corrupt translations, or any part thereof, or any of your Hereticall treatises, we burned not the Scriptures, (c) no more then one doth the Apple tree, that burneth the Caterpillers.

All this is M. Hardings sobrietie: It is no railing.

(a) Vntruth. For the Old Latine Text hath infinite corruptions.

(b) Vntruth, Otherwise let M. Hard. shew one point of corruption.

(c) But hee is a foolish man that burneth downe both the Trees and Caterpillers all together.

The Scriptures we honour, and keepe most reuerently and diligently. Therefore your comparing of vs with the wicked Kings, Aza, Antiochus, Maximinus, and Herod, is false and slanderous. For how say you, Sir Captaine of liers, (d) had we not the Scripture in euerie Monasterie, Cathedrall Church, College, in euerie priuate Library of any that was learned?

(d) You had it in your libraries, but the poore people had it not

The like thing was obiected to S. Augustine & the Catholikes in his time by the Donatists, beeing then Heretikes, as ye are now. To whom he answered, as we will answer you: Certè ille ignibus tradidisse credatur, qui eis locis non consentire conuincitur: Let him be thought to haue cast the holy Scriptures into the fire, who, when they are read, is conuict not to consent vnto them. Wee read in the Holy Scriptures, that Christ said, This is my Body. Who beleeueth it, yee (e) that deny it, or we who are content to die for the defense of that his reall Body in the blessed Sacrament? S. Iames saith, A man is iustified by works, and not by Faith only. Who beleeueth this, they which say, that only Faith iustifieth, or they which say, that works be required also to Iustification? Christ saith, * Qui manducat hanc Panem, viuet Iohn 6. in æternum: Hee that eateth this Bread, shall liue for euer. * Who beleeueth this, they that say, both kindes be necessarie to Lay men by commandement of Christ, or they who say, that one kinde is sufficient to saluation concerning the eating of the Sacrament?

(e) Vntruth. For we denie it not. * A worthy Argument, and full wisely applied. Read the Answer.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Burning of the Scriptures

Yee may some bee pardoned, M. Harding, for speaking ill: forasmuch as, for ought that may appeare by your speech, yee haue not yet learned to speake well. Whether ye haue burnt the Scriptures of God, or no, both Heauen, and Earth, and Sea, and Land, may beare witnesse. For a poore excuse ye say, ye haue burnt our Errors, and Hereticall Translations, and not the Scriptures: as the Husbandman vseth to burne the Caterpillers. Howbeit, hee may be thought an vnwise Husbandman, that burneth vp his Caterpillers, and Trees to both together: and to weake himselfe of the one, is content to destroy the other. If all Bookes conteining Errour should bee burnt, then should your Louanian Nouelties goe to wracke. For yewis, M. Harding, contention and vaine glory set apart, yee know right well, they are full of Errors. Moreouer ye know, there be Errors in S. Augustine, there be Errors in Origen, in Tertullian, in S. Ambrose, in S. Hierome: There be Errors in euerie of the Ancient Fathers: in the Greekes, in the Latines: in one, and other. There bee Errors in your Schoole Doctors: There bee Errors in your Canonists. Briefly, your Holie Fathers Decrees and Decretals are not voide of Errors. Yet is there no Booke worthie to be burnt, in respect of Error, but onely the Booke of the Scriptures?

If there were such Errours in the Vulgar translations, ye should haue descried them, although not all, yet for your credits sake, one at the least. Yee should haue removed the Errour, and haue restored the Scriptures, to the vse and comfort of the people. But this is it that troubleth you so sore, that the Scriptures are published in the Common knowen tongues, and that the simple people of all sorts (whom otherwise ye call Dogs, and Swine, and filthy brute Beasts voide of reason) may vnderstand them. This, M. Harding, is that great and horrible Errour. This is the Errour of all Errours. Therefore Irenæus saith, as it is alleged before: Hæretici, cum ex Scripturis arguuntur, in accusationem vertuntur Scripturarum: Heretikes when they bee reproued by the Scriptures, then begin they to finde fault with the Scriptures. And therefore S. Ambrose saith: Herodes conscius ignobilitatis suæ, Scripturas incendit, ne qua posteris suis, vel de Præscripto Veteri, quæstio moueretur: existimans, quòd si iudicia de publico sustulisset, nullis aliis Testimonijs clarere posset, quin de Patriarcharum & Proselytarum Veterum genere emanaret: King Herod, for that hee well vnderstood the baseneſſe of his Houſe, therefore hee burnt the Scriptures; leſt that by meane of ſuch Ancient Records, ſome doubt might afterward be mooued againſt his poſterity. For he thought if he had once remooued ſuch Monuments, it could neuer be proued by any maner other witneſſe, but that hee came by deſcent from the ſtocke of the Patriarkes, and Old Proſelytes: whereas indeed hee was a meere aliene, and a stranger to the House of Israel, and a very tyrannous Vsurper of the Crowne, as being lineally descended, not from Iacob, but from Esau.

Keeping of the Scriptures.

But ye say: You haue kept and preserued the Scriptures in your Libraries, in velum, and, I trow, in letters of gold. Euen in like sort, and with like truth ye might say, that you haue kept the Sunne, and the Moone; and had it not beene for your keeping, they had beene lost. It was God, M. Harding, that of his Mercie preserued his Holie Word: euen as he preserued Daniel in the Caue of Lions: Ionas in the Whales belly: The three Children in the midst of the flaming Fire. Yee kept the Scriptures as the Dogge keepeth the hay: which neither eateth it himselfe, nor suffereth the poore hungry cattle, that faine would eate it: Yee keepe them in ward, in dust and mould, as the Iewes, before the time of King Iosias, kept the Booke of Deuteronomie closely in the corners, or amongst the Treasures of the Temple, so that no man knew where to find it. Had it not beene for Gods speciall prouidence, notwithstanding your keeping, they might haue perished.

Thus the Iewes made their vants, that they were the keepers of the Law, and that the Christians had all of them. S. Augustine saith: Iudæi dicunt, non Nostra nos Legi vti, sed Sua: The Iewes ſay, that we haue no Law of our owne, but only theirs. Likewise euen at this day the Jewes keepe and vse the Law of God with all reuerence: They neuer lay any other Booke vpon the Bible: They wash their hands before they touch it: They will not sit vpon the bench where the Bible lieth: as often as they either open it or shut it, they vse to kisse it: when the Pope goeth thorow Rome to his Palace of Laterane, the Iewes meet him vpon the way, and offer him the Bible, and desire him reuerently to embrace it, as though the Pope could haue no Bible, but only of them. All these things notwithstanding the Pope answereth them of course, euen as we may answer you: Sanctam Legem, vim Hebræi, & laudamus, & veneramur: obseruantiam verò vestram, & vanam interpretationem damnamus, & improbamus: Yee men of the Iewes profession, wee praise and honour the Holie Law; But your Tradition, and vaine Interpretation wee vtterly condemne and reproue.

Keeping of the Scriptures

Ceremon. lib. 1. cap. 8.

For Chrysostome saith: Nihil nunc apud Iudæos remansit, nisi Sola Scriptura Librorum, omni Legis obseruantia pereunte: There remaineth now nothing among the Iewes, but only the writing contained in Bookes, for all the obseruation of the Law is past from them. Againe he saith: Literæ quidem Legis apud illos sunt: Sensus autem est apud nos: The Letters of the Law are with the Iewes: But the Sense and Meaning is with vs. Likewise he saith vnto the Iewes: Vos complicatis membranas animalium mortuorum: Nos possidemus Spiritum viuificantem: You turne the leaues of the Scriptures, made of the skinnes of dead Cattle: but we haue the Spirit that giueth Life. So saith S. Augustine: Iudæi in Libris suffragatores nostri sunt: in Cordibus hostes nostri: The Iewes help vs, and aid vs with their Bookes: But they are our enemies in their hearts. Againe he saith: Magnum aliquid actum est in vsum nostrum de Infidelitate Iudæorum: vt iidem ipsi, qui hęc propter se non haberent in Cordibus, ea propter nos haberent in Codicibus: Some great good thing is wrought to our vse by the infidelity of the Iewes, that they, that, to doe themselues good, had not these things in their hearts, yet for our sakes, to doe vs good, should haue the same things in their Bookes.

Speake not therefore so much, M. Harding, of your safe keeping of the Scriptures. For the Iewes haue kept, and vntill this day doe keepe them as safelie as you. Yee kept the Scriptures as the Augures of Rome sometime kept the Sibyls Bookes: that is to say, yee kept them to your selues, in close prison and in secrecie: that the people should know nothing, but in all cases should bee forced to seeke to you. Thus yee kept the Light in Darknesse: and, as S. Paul saith, yee kept the Truth of God in Wickednesse. Rom. 1.

S. Chrysostome saith: Quando vides Scripturas Prophetarum, & Euangelij, & Apostolorum traditas esse in manus falsorum Sacerdorum, num intelligis, quòd Verbum veritatis traditum est Principibus iniquis, & Scribis? When thou seest the Scriptures of the Prophets, of the Gospell, and of the Apostles to bee deliuered into the hands of False Priests, doest thou not vnderstand, that the Word of Truth is deliuered vnto the wicked Princes and vnto the Scribes? To be short, I may answer you with the words of Chrysostome: Arcas & Scrinia rerum pretiosissimarum adhuc seruatis, Thesauro destituti: Yee keepe still the Chests and Boxes of most pretious things: but the Iewels and Treasures be cleane gone. Therefore your safe keeping of the Scriptures notwithstanding, we may say to you, as S. Augustine sometime said to the Heretike Petilian: Iudas Christum Carnalem tradidit: Tu Spiritualem: furens Euangelium Sanctum flammis sacrilegis tradidisti: Iudas betraied Christ Carnall: thou hast betraied Christ Spirituall: for thou in thy rage hast deliuered the Holie Gospels vnto wicked fires.

Chryss. in 1. Cor. hom. 36.

Aug. contra Literas Petiliã. lib. 2. cap. 8.

Yee reply, You rather haue burnt the Gospell, for that you deny the words of the Gospell. For example yee allege these words of Christ, This is my Bodie: which words (ye say) of our part are denied. God be thanked, as wee haue not burnt, so haue we not denied any word or parcell of the Gospell. Touching these words by you alleged, we embrace them, and reuerence them, and beleeue them, euen as the Words of Christ. But wee embrace them, not as you haue fondly rackt and wrested them, and foully abused them, by your vaine Constructions: but as Christ meant them, and as the ancient Catholike Fathers in the old times haue expounded them. S Chrysostome saith: Sacræ Scripturæ Verba non vult Deus, vt Simpliciter, sed multa cum prudentia intelligantur: God will not that we should vnderstand the words of the holie Scripture simplie and plainely, as they lie, but with great wisdome and discretion. Againe hee saith: Diligenter inuigilandum est: vel potius Diuina gratia opus est, ne nudis verbis insistamus. Ita Hæretici in Errorem incidunt: We must take great heed: or rather we haue need of the Grace of God, that wee rest not vpon the bare Wordes of the Scriptures. For by that meanes Heretikes fall into Errour. S. Augustine saith: Omne Figuratè, aut factum, aut dictum, hoc enuntiat, quod Significat: Euerie thing that is either done or spoken in a Figure, sheweth foorth the same thing that it Signifieth. S. Hierome saith: Ne putemus in Verbis Scripturarum esse Euangelium, sed in Sensu: Let vs not thinke that the Gospell standeth in the Words of the Scriptures, but in the Meaning.

Againe

Hier. in Matt. cap. 16. Againe he saith: Cùm Seniores putentur in Ecclesijs, & Principes Sacerdotum, Simplicem sequentes Literam, Occidunt Filium Dei: Whereas they bee taken for the Elders of the Church, and the Chiefe of the Priests, following the plaine Letter (as it is written, and not regarding the meaning) they kill the Sonne of God.

This is my Bodie. Let vs see therefore, in what sense the holy Catholike Fathers haue in old times expounded these words of Christ: This is my Body.

Tertull. contra Marcionem. lib. 4. First, Tertullian saith thus: Christus acceptum Panem, & distributum Discipulis, Corpus suum illum fecit dicendo: Hoc est Corpus meum, hoc est, Figura Corporis mei: Christ, taking the Bread and dividing it to his Disciples, made it his Body, saying: This is my Body, that is to say, This is a Figure of my Bodie. S. Augustine saith: Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, Hoc est Corpus meum, cùm daret Signum Corporis sui: Our Lord doubted not to say, This is my Bodie, when he gaue a Token of his Bodie.

Auguſt. contra Adiman. ca. 12. I leaue infinite other authorities to like purpose. By these few wee may easily perceiue, in what sense the holie Fathers in Old time vnderstood these words of Christ. This is my Body. Yet were they neuer therefore condemned of Heresie, nor thought to denie any parcell of the Scriptures.

Aug. in quæſtionib. in Leuit. quæſt. 57. S. Augustine saith: Solet res, quæ significat, eius rei nomine, quam significat, nuncupari: Hinc est, quod dictum est, Petra erat Christus. Non enim dicit, Petra significat Christum: Sed tanquam hoc esset, quod vtique per Substantiam non erat, sed per significationem: The thing that signifieth, is commonly called by the name of that thing, that it signifieth. Therefore is it, that S. Paul saith: The Rocke was Christ. For hee saith not, The Rocke signified Christ (but, The Rocke was Christ) as if the Rocke had beene Christ indeed, whereas touching the Substance it was not so, but so it was by signification.

In this sort is the Bread, Christs Bodie: not verily and indeed: but as S. Augustine saith, after a certaine phrase or manner of speech. And so is it noted euen in your owne

De Con. dist. 2. Hoc est, in Gloſ. Glosses: Vocatur Corpus Christi, id est, Significat Corpus Christi: The Bread is called the Body of Christ: that is to say, The Bread signifieth the Bodie of Christ. Thus wee denie not Christs Words, M. Harding: but wee denie the fond and fantasticall sense, that you haue imagined of Christs Words. Therefore where you allege these words, as spoken by S. Augustine: Hee is a burner of the Scriptures, that consenteth not vnto the Scriptures, yee might haue remembred, that the same S. Augustine likewise saith:

Aug. epiſt. 162. Ille credatur Testamentum tradidisse flammis, qui contra voluntatem litigat Testatoris: He is to bee thought to haue deliuered the Testament to the fire, that quarrelleth (as you doe) against the will and meaning of him that made the Testament.

Gregorius in Iob. lib. 4 cap. 1. S. Gregorie saith: Facilè in verbis agnoscimus aliud esse, quod intimant, aliud, quod sonant: Tantò autem quisque notitiæ illius extraneus redditur, quantò in sola eius superficie ligatur: In words we doe well perceiue, that there is one thing, that they signifie, and another thing that they sound. And the more a man bindeth himselfe to the outward sight and shew of the Letter, the further off is he from the vnderstanding of the same.

Aug. in lib. 83. quæſt. q. 76. Part 1. cap. 10. Diuiſion. 1. The obiection of difference, that yee make betweene S. Iames and S. Paul (S. Augustine saith) is made by them that vnderstand, neither S. Iames, nor S. Paul. The whole force thereof is answered before. It is easie to see, that S. Paul speaketh of one kind of Workes, and S. Iames of another: and againe, S. Paul of one kinde of Iustification, and S. Iames of another. Therefore this difference is soone auoided. Certainly we denie neither S. Paul nor S. Iames, nor thinke the one of them to be contrarie to the other.

Ioh. 6. Touching the Words of Christ, that yee haue alleged out of S. Iohn, it appeareth, yee were in some haste, and therefore were faine to take that came first to hand. For I will not say, M. Harding, What Doctour or Father, but what wit or discretion of common sense euer taught you to reason thus? Christ saith: Hee that eateth of this Bread shall liue for euer: Ergo, The people must receiue the Communion vnder one kinde?

Kemnitius in Examin. Conc. Trid. pag. 598. Who euer taught you thus to reason? Eckius your fellow reasoneth with like discretion to like purpose:

Giue vs, saith he, our dailie Bread:

Ergo, Wee may restraine the people from the Cup.

Perhaps ye will say, The name of Bread belongeth to Eating only, and not to Drinking. This may be granted well without preiudice. Notwithstanding S. Cyprian doubted not to say, Manducauerunt & Biberunt de eodem Pane: They did both Eat and Drink of one Bread. And againe he saith: Manducamus & Bibimus eius Sanguinem: We Eat and Drinke his Bloud.

Cypr. de Cœna Domini. In eod. Serm. Yeere haue you both Drinking of Bread, and Eating of Bloud.

Howbeit, indeed these words of Christ in the sixth of S. Iohn belong only to the Spirituall Eating, and drinking of Christs Body, and Bloud (that is wrought, not by the Mouth, Mouth, but only by Faith) and nothing to the outward Ministration of the Sacrament. One of your owne Doctours saith: Hæc verba nihil directè pertinent ad Sacramentalem, vel Corporalem Manducationem. Nam hoc verbum dictum fuit, antequam Sacramentum Eucharistiæ esset institutum. Ex illa igitur Litera de Sacramentali Communione non potest fieri Argumentum efficax: These words of Christ in the sixth Chapter of S. Iohn, directly pertaine nothing to the Sacramentall or Corporall eating. For these words were spoken long before the Sacrament was ordained. Therefore of this place there can be made no good sufficient Argument, touching the Sacrament all Communion. You say, your proofe, taken of these words is sufficient, and therewith ye deceiue the Ignorant. Your owne Doctour saith: It is not sufficient. Now let your indifferent Reader iudge, whether of you two is deceiued. Nicolaus Lyra in Psal. 110.

This is my Body.

And, whereas ye would seeme to say, Christ gaue no Commandement of Both kindes, to be receiued of the people, euen so, and with like truth yee might also say, Christ gaue no Commandement, no not of one kinde at all to be receiued of the people. For there was no man present, but only the Apostles, at the Institution, aswell of the one kinde, as of the other. Therefore that the people may claime any one part of the Sacrament, they haue it not of any right, but onely of your meere, and free liberality. For otherwise of duty, by your iudgement, they should haue nothing.

Notwithstanding Christ saith: Bibite ex hoc omnes: Drinke ye (not only the Apostles, but) Drinke ye all of this. Which words Paschasius expoundeth thus: Bibite ex hoc omnes, hoc est, tam Ministri, quàm reliqui Credentes: Drinke ye all of this: that is to say, aswell the Ministers, as the rest of the Faithfull. Another saith thus: Bibite ex hoc Omnes: Omnes, scilicet, sine personarum acceptione: Drinke yee all of this: All, that is to say, without difference or choice of persons. Paschasius. Gloss Citatur à Cassandro, de vtrâq; Specie.

But heereof we haue spoken more at large in other places.

The Apologie, Chap. 21. Diuision 2. and 3.

Very rightly, and aptly doth Chrysostome write against these men. Heretikes, saith he, shut vp the gates against the Truth: for they know full well, if the gate were open, the Church should be none of theirs.

Theophylact also: Gods Word, saith he, is the Candle, whereby the Theefe is espied.

The Apologie, Chap. 21. Diuision 4.

And Tertullian saith: The Holy Scripture manifestly findeth out the fraud and theft of Heretikes. For why doe they hide, why doe they keepe vnder the Gospel, which Christ would haue preached aloud from the house top? why whelme they that light vnder a Bushel, which ought to stand on the Candlestick?

M. Harding.

The Scripture saith: There shall be men standing in their owne conceit, vnchaste, louing pleasure more then God. Who are vnchaste? They that exhort all men to * Chastity, and themselues abstaine from wedlocke for the better meane to serue God: or ye, that bid men which haue vowed chastity, to breake their vowes. Iulian.

* This Chastity in the more part is open filthines. They forbid mariage, and suffer Concubines for the better mean to serue God. Matth. 23.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I leaue your Chastity to the iudgement of the World. Yet you may remember there were some in old times, whom Christ likened to Painted graues: outwardly in appearance faire and glorious: but inwardly full of stinking bones. It appeareth by the whole course and order of your liues, that Single Life and Chastity, are sundry thinges. S. Hierome saith thus: Super Concupiscentiam fœminarum non intelligeti De Antichristo facilior interpretatio est: quòd idcò simulet Castitatem, vt plurimos decipiat: Hee shall haue no skill, touching the desire of Woman: The better exposition heereof, is to applie these words to Antichrist: For that hee shall Counterfet Chastity, to the end to deceiue many. Hieron. in Daniel. cap. 11.

The cheſt of the Popes boſome.

All men ſee now wel and well againe, what good ſtuffe is in that cheſt of the Biſhop of Romes boſome. This thing alone of it ſelfe may be an argument ſufficient, that they worke not vprightly and truly.

M. Harding.

You are much troubled with the cheſt of the Popes boſome, wherein he is thought to haue all Lawes At this you ſcoffe foure or fiue times in your Apologie, medling with a matter that you vnderſtand not. For it is a Lawyers phraſe. Who preſuppoſeth the Prince of euery common-weale to know the Law of the ſame, no leſſe then if it were written in his Breaſt. Heretikes to death.

M. Harding.

Ye flie not to the Fire, as we doe, say ye, but vnto the Scriptures: Neither doe ye reason with vs with the Sword, but with the Word of God. Ah good word of God, thou seruest to many purposes. And is it indeed the Word of God Sirs, that keepeth so many reuerend Fathers in prison these many yeeres? Is it the word of God, that hath depriued so many men, some of their liuings, some of their Countries, whose life ye cannot blame? Is it the Word of God that by cruelty of imprisonment of late yeeres gaue most certaine occasion of death to those holy, learned and Worshipfull men, who for their singular vertue being well knowne, need not here to be named? Is it the word of God that made so much adoe in your late Parliament for establishing of your bloody Law, wherby ye would haue power to put men to death (a) for the Faith of Christendome? The Turks and Saracens haue alwaies suffered them to liue in their Dominions, but our Gospellers by their word of God are taught to kil them. Blessed be God, who hath giuen to our noble and most clement Queene Elizabeth, a better spirit to vnderstand his word in this point, (b) then these Gospellers haue yet attained vnto.

If any of you do say, that the new Superintendents doe not keepe the old Bishops and learned Clergy in prison, but the Law of the Realme: I answer, first, that the Law is a crab of your owne stocke: next that neither the Bishops before time burnt Heretiks, but the Law of the Realme, the Law of the Prince, the Law of all Christendome. Neither was the same made by Papists of late yeeres, as ye would your deceiued disciples to beleeue, but of old time thought (c) necessarie by Princes to be enacted for the better maintenance of quiet in their Dominions.

All this now is extreme cruelty not long sithens it had bin taken for great mercy.

(a) Vntruth. For it is either Idolatry or open follie, and no part of the Faith of Christendome.

(b) What Spirit then had you M. Harding, & your fellowes that burnt so many?

(c) This matter thus vttered in generalitie, is a great Vntruth.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

It is no new practise (ye say) to kill Heretikes. I grant you. Neither is it a new practise, to condemne godly men by the name of Heretikes. Your Fathers sometime cried out against Christ the Sonne of God, We haue a Law, and by the Law he ought to die. And Christ himselfe said sometime to Hierusalem, the Citie of Blood, O Hierusalem, Hierusalem, that killest the Prophets, and stonest them to death that be sent vnto thee. But S. Augustine saith: Nullis bonis in Catholica hoc placet, si vsque ad Mortem in quenquam, licèt Hæreticum, sæuiatur: It seemeth good vnto no good man in the Catholike Church, that cruelty vnto death be shewed vnto any man, no though he be an Heretike.

Notwithstanding, it agreeth well with your Religion, M. Harding, though your mouthes now be musled, yet to rampe, and gape still after blood. Fulfill ye the measure of your Fathers. Let it not greeue you, to heare, what Salomon saith: Viscera impiorum crudelia: The very bowels of the wicked are full of cruelty. When your Fables and follies be espied, then ye flee to Sword and Fire. Which being once wrested from you, your whole Religion must needs come to ground. S. The Apologie, Chap. 22. Diuiſion. 2.

If an angel from heauen, &c.

For we know, that the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt is the power of God vnto Saluation, and that therein conſiſteth Eternall Life. And as Paul warneth vs, wee doe not heare, no not an Angell of God though hee come from Heauen, if he goe about to pull vs from any part of this Doctrine.

M. Harding.

Boaſt no more of the Goſpell. We (I meane the Catholike Church) had it, we kept it and vnderſtood it, before ye were borne, and before your Hereſie was heard off.

But a Diuel comming from hell, (for who is author of diuiſion but Satan?) hath caried you away into an other Goſpell: whereas indeed there is but one true Goſpell. And heere let any indifferent man conſider how vprightly you allege S. Paul. You write, that S. Paul warneth you not to giue eare to an Angell comming from Heauen, if he go about to draw you from any part of this Doctrine. Of which this Doctrine meane you? Of this, which you haue declared in this Apology? * Did S. Paul euer read your Apology? How then pronounced he of it that ſentence? We meane (ſay you) by this Doctrine the Doctrine of the Goſpel. If you meane ſo, we ſay the ſame. But we tell you, that S. Paul ſpake not of euerie Goſpell generally, but of a certaine Goſpell qualified. For he ſaith: Si quis vobis Euangelizauerit præter id quod accepiſtis, anathema ſit: If any man preach a Goſpell vnto you, beſides that ye haue receiued, be he accurſed. Heare you the Goſpell S. Paul ſpeaketh of? It is not euery Goſpel. It is a Goſpell preached and receiued. If ye preach that Goſpell which ye receiued, we ioine hands with you. But if ye preach a Goſpell which ye haue receiued of no Apoſtle, nor Apoſtolike Preacher, and which was heard of in the earth, when Luther ran out of his cloiſter and forſooke his Religion: then be ye aſſured, that ye are the men, who are holden for accurſed of S. Paul.

* And did Saint Paul euer reade you late Chapter of Trent?

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Heere, M. Harding, ye would faine ſcape away with a childiſh canill. Paul ye ſay, ſpeaketh of a Goſpell qualified: whereby yee meane a Goſpell deliuered and receiued: as if ye would ſay, the Goſpell of Chriſt, vnleſſe it be deliuered by you, is no Goſpell. But S. Paul meant not the Doctrine deliuered from hand to hand, or from Pope to Pope: But the Doctrine deliuered and receiued in the Scriptures. And in this ſenſe hee ſaith of himſelfe: Quod accepi à Domino, hoc & tradidi vobis: The thing that I haue receiued of the Lord, the ſame haue I deliuered vnto you. In like ſort he calleth himſelfe an Apoſtle, not of men, nor by men, but by Ieſus Chriſt. Howbeit, what need many words? The caſe is cleere. S. Auguſtine ſaith plainely: Paulus ait, Si Angelus de Cœlo vobis annunciauerit, præterquam quod in Scripturis legalibus, & Euangelicis accepiſtis, Anathema ſit: If an Angel from heauen preach vnto you any other thing, then ye haue receiued (not by Tradition or by deliuery from your Elders, but) in the Scriptures of the Law and of the Goſpel, accurſed be he. Theſe words be plaine, M. Harding, and quite diſgrace all your Gloſſes.

The Apologie, Chap. 22. Diuiſion 1.

For where theſe men bid the Holy Scriptures away, as dumbe and fruitleſſe, & procure vs to come to God himſelfe rather, who ſpeaketh in the Church, and in their Councels, that is to ſay, to beleeue their fanſies and opinions, this way of finding out the Truth is very vncertaine, and exceeding dangerous, and in maner a fantaſticall and mad way, and by no meanes allowed of the Holy Fathers.

Councels.

M. Harding.

Where they ſay, we paſſe but little on the Scriptures, as dumbe and vnprofitable, therein they *ſlander vs, as in other things. We do not ſo: But we ſay, that as euery Act of Parlament muſt be executed by a lawfull Iudge, ſo the holie Scriptures haue their execution by lawfull Iudges, who are the Biſhops and Fathers, as well in other places, as ſpecially when they bee lawfully aſſembled in generall Councels. Now ſay theſe men, that way is very vncertaine, dangerous, in maner mad, and not allowed of the Fathers. Who euer heard men (thought to haue their right wits) talke after ſo looſe a ſort? Did the Fathers *diſprooue the order of comming together in Generall Councels? Or thought they the ſame to bee a way for men to be the ſooner deceiued? If ſo many may be deceiued with moſt diligent ſtudie, and mature iudgement conferring together, how much ſooner may one or two alone, led by priuate fanſie and ſelfe-will, be carried away into error? At the Nicene Councell came together 318. Biſhops. At the firſt of Conſtantinople, 150. At the Epheſine Councell, 200. At that of Chalcedon, 630. All theſe foure Councels ſundry ancient Fathers, namely S Gregorie, eſteemed as the foure Goſpels. Yea but, ſaith he, I haue the word of God. But what if three hundred farre holier, and better learned men ſay, hee hath it not? Let the Reader be Iudge, ſaith he. A meet Iudge in ſuch a cauſe. The Scholars may read, but iudge of their Maſters they may not, by Chriſts Doctrine, who ſaid, Non eſt diſcipulus ſupra magiſtrum: The Scholar is not aboue his Maſter. Why not, for all that, ſay you, if the Holy Ghoſt inſpire him? Sir, is it not to be thought God doth aſſiſt his Church repreſented in ſuch ſolemne aſſemblies of three hundred or moe Fathers, gouernours of Chriſtian people, rather then one man.

turned from all other Bishops vnto Councels, from Councels to the Pope, and from one Pope to another, we shall euermore build vpon sand, and vncertainetie, and neuer be assured where to stand.

The people cannot iudge.

Whether the Scripture be well alleged, or otherwise, thereof (yée say) the people may not iudge. For Christ saith, The Scholar is not aboue his Master. Certainelie, M. Harding, the simplest of all the people, notwithstanding, by your restraint, hee may not iudge of the Scriptures, yet he may easily iudge of you, either that ye vnderstand not, or that ye vnhaniselie abuse the Scriptures. Whether it be the Word of God, or no the people (yee say) may not iudge. And that yee proue euen by the Scriptures, God knoweth, full handsomely and full discréetly applied. For the Scholar (ye say) is not aboue his Master. Thus we may learne by the Logicke of Louaine, that Populus is Latine for a Scholar: and that Scripture is Latine for a Master. And thus by your vaine premisses without sense ye proceed vainly, and conclude nothing.

O, M. Harding, haue some regard to that ye write. The simplest may soone espie your doings. Ye can no longer thus mocke the world with shewes of words. Christ spake not these words of the vnderstanding of the Scriptures; but of persecution for the Scriptures. Marke well the place. Thus the words lie together: When they shall persecute you in one City, flee into another, &c. The Scholar is not aboue his Master: Nor the Seruant aboue his Lord. If they haue called the Master of the House Beelzebub, how much more will they so call his houshold Seruants?

Matt. 10.

Alas, where learned you to frame such Arguments, The Apostles being the Scholars, can no more escape persecution, then could Christ that was the Master: Ergo, The people cannot vnderstand what they read in the Scriptures? Heere is neither Antecedent, nor Consequent, nor Sequele in Reason. For the honor of the Vniuersity, haue better regard vnto your Logicke. Ye bewray the weaknesse of your cause, when ye so slenderly abuse the Scriptures.

The Apologie, Chap. 22. Diuision 4.

Chrysostome saith: There be many often times, which boast themselues of the holy Ghost: but trulie whoso speake of their owne head, do faslie boast that they haue the Spirit of God. For like as (saith he) Christ denied he spake of himselfe, when he spake out of the Law and Prophets, euen so now, if any thing bee pressed vpon vs in the name of the Holy Ghost, saue the Gospell, we ought not to beleeue it. For as Christ is the fulfilling of the Law and Prophets, so is the Holie Ghost the fulfilling of the Gospell. Thus farre goeth Chrysostome.

M. Harding.

They allege out of Chrysostome, that whosoeuer speake of their owne, do vntruly attribute to themselues the Spirit of God. But they remember not how they who are gathered together in the name of Christ do not speak of their owne, because Christ, who is the truth, hath promised to be in the midst of them. Now if they tell vs, that the Fathers at Trent were not gathered together in the name of Christ, how much more truly may we reply to them, that the temporall men (assembled together at Auspurg, at Marpurg, at Wormes, at Smalcald, at Baden, at Westminster, or any where else) came not together in the name of Christ? I require but a man of common sense to sit Iudge in this cause. They cannot possibly bring any thing out of the Scriptures, or Ancient Fathers, for maintenance of this their great case.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Yée build ouer boldly, M. Harding, on Christs promises. God is true whatsoeuer hee promise: but oftentimes men are false. Christ hath promised to bee present where soeuer two or three be gathered together in his name. But it appeareth by the words of the Prophet Dauid, that Councels often times meet together against God, and against his Christ. The Prophet Michæas saith: Sic dicit Dominus de Prophetis, qui errare faciunt populum meum: Abominantur iudicium, & omne rectum peruertunt: Super Dominum requiescebant, dicentes, Nunquid non est Dominus in medio nostri? Thus saith our Lord of the Prophets that deceiue my people: They abhorre iudgement: They ouerthrow all that is right: And yet they rest themselues vpon our Lord, saying, Is not our Lord in the midst amongst vs?

Psalm. 2. Actor. 4. Michæas 3.

This is your defense, M. Harding. Whether the Word of God bee with you, or against you, yet ye say, ye haue still the Spirit of God, & our Lord himselfe is in the midst amongst you. But this boldnesse, by Chrysostomes iudgement, is presumptuous and dangerous. And therefore his counsell is, that if any thing bee pressed vpon vs by the name of the Holie Ghost, Chrysost. om. de Sanct. & Adorando Spiritu.

Ghoſt, ſauing only the Goſpell of Chriſt, we ſhould not beleeue it. In like ſenſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Sua illi ſi docere velint, nolite audire: nolite facere. If they bring any Decree or Fantaſie of their owne, heare it not: doe it not. Auguſt. in Ioan. Tract. 46.

Councels.

Thus the Old Frantike and Fanaticall Heretikes, when they found themſelues conuinced by the euident teſtimonies of Gods Word, they appealed to the Spirit of God which, they ſaid, euen as you ſay, euermore aſſiſted them, and could not faile them. Hereof S. Auguſtine writeth thus: Videtis ergo, id vos agere, vt omnis de medio Scripturarum authoritas auferatur: & ſuus cuique animus Author ſit, quidin quaque Scriptura probet, quid improbet: id eſt, vt non Authoritati Scripturarum ſubijciatur ad Fidem, ſed ſibi Scripturas ipſe ſubijciat: Non vt ideò illi placeat aliquid, quia hoc in ſublimi Authoritate ſcriptum legitur: ſed ideò rectè ſcriptum videatur, quia hoc illi placuit: Ye ſee therefore, this is your drift, that al Authoritie of the Scriptures be remooued: that each man may be led by his owne fantaſie, what he liſt, either to allow in the Holy Scriptures, or to diſallow: that is to ſay, that he ſubmit not himſelfe, touching his Faith, to the Authority of the Scriptures, but that he make the Scriptures ſubiect vnto him: Not that he will allow any thing, becauſe it is written in that high Authority of the Scriptures: but that he will thinke it well written, becauſe he alloweth it. Auguſt. contra Fauſt. Manich. lib. 32. cap. 19. By meane hereof it commeth to paſſe that S. Hilarie writeth: Qui quæ ſcripta ſunt negas, quid ſupereſt, niſi, vt quæ non ſcripta ſunt probes? For aumuch as thou deneſt the things that be written, what remaineth there, but that thou muſt allow the things that be not written? Hildr. de Trinitate. Lib. 9.

Concerning the Authority and Credit of Councels, wee ſhall haue cauſe to ſay more hereafter. But where ye require but a man of common ſenſe to ſit as a Iudge in this cauſe, it appeareth that either ye remember not, or elſe ye weigh not that ye immediately ſaid before. For in this ſelfe ſame Chapter ye ſay: The people may not iudge of their Biſhops. And that, as ye tell vs, by Chriſts owne Doctrine: For the Scholar is not aboue his Maſter. Yet now ſuddenly, as hauing forgotten your owne words, ye call forth the Scholar, yea, and as it may be thought, one of the meaneſt of all your Schoole, as a man only endued with common ſenſe, to ſit in iudgement ouer his Maſter.

Notwithſtanding, God is no accepter of perſons. Gods Holy Spirit is not bound to Councels, or Companies: but breatheth freely, where it liſteth. And therefore, as your owne Doctor Panormitane ſaith, in caſes of Religion the iudgement of one ſimple plaine man ought ſometimes to be reiected before the iudgement of the Pope. Actor. 16. Heere endeth the Fourth Part.

THE FIFTH PART.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuiſion 1.

BVT heere, I looke, they wil ſay, though they haue not the Scriptures, yet it may chance they haue the Ancient Doctors, and the Holy Fathers with them. For this is a high bragge they haue euer made, how that all Antiquitie, and a Continuall Conſent of all Ages doth make on their ſide: And, that all our cauſes be but New, and yeſter daies worke; and vntill theſe few late yeeres were neuer heard of. Queſtionleſſe, there can nothing be more ſpightfully ſpoken againſt the Religion of God, then to accuſe it of Noueltie, as a matter lately found out. For as there can be no change in God himſelf, ſo ought there to be no change in his Religion.

Yet neuertheleſſe, we wot not by what meanes, but we haue euer ſeene it come to paſſe from the firſt beginning, that as oftē as God didgiue but some light, and did open his Truth vnto men, though the Truth were not onely of greatest Antiquity, but also from Euerlasting, yet of wicked men, & of the Aduersaries it was called Newfangled, and of late deuised. That vngracious and bloodthirstie Haman, when hee sought to procure the King Assuerus displeasure against the Iewes, vsed this accusation against them: Thou hast heere (saith hee) a kinde of people, that vseth certaine new Lawes of their owne, but stiffe-necked, and rebellious against all thy Lawes. When Paul also began first to preach and expound the Gospell at Athens, he was called a Tidings bringer of New Gods: as much to say, as of a New Religion. For (said the Athenians) may we not know of thee, what New Doctrine this is? Celsus likewise, when he of set purpose wrote against Christ, to the end he might more scornefully scoffe out the Gospel by the name of Noueltie; What (saith he) hath God after so many ages now at last and so late bethought himselfe? Eusebius also writeth, that the Christian Religion from the beginning, for very spight was called νέα καὶ ξένη, that is to say, New and Strange. After like sort these men condemn all our matters as Strange and New: but they will haue their owne whatsoeuer they are to be praised as things of long continuance.

M. Harding.

They had said somewhat, if they had prooued that the Doctrine (a) of Christ had been called new by them, who were the professors and followers of it. But now reporting that the Gentiles, who knew not God, as Aman, as the Athenians, as Celsus the Ethnike, and such the like, called the right and true Religion of God, new; they say nothing to any purpose. But let them shew, that before the comming of Christ any such Religion was allowed that was new: Or, that sithence Christs incarnation, among Christian men, what soeuer Religion was not shunned and reiected as Hereticall, which was new. Heere are they dumbe. And yet for shew of learning, in a matter not necessary, they bring forth their store, and declare that the Doctrine and Religion of truth was new to them, which knew not God, nor Christ the Sonne of God, which no man denieth.

(a) A vaine distinction. For neither doe wee call our doctrine New.

Thus all men of any iudgement may see how fondly they reason. Wee (b) tell them, that all new Doctrine now in the Church of Christ is naught: and they proue, that Infidels haue in the time of Moses Law, and at the first preaching of the Gospell, impugned Gods Euerlasting Truth with the odious terme and reproch of newnesse. New Doctrine was good to vs at our first conuersion from Infidelitie. But since that we receiued the true Faith from S. Gregory the Bishop of Rome, (c) who conuerted the Realme of England to the Faith by S. Augustine his Legate, and others sent for that godly purpose worthily we shun and abhorre all new Gospels, new Faiths, new Doctrines, new Religions.

(b) We tell you, yee haue lost the right names of things: and call that New, that in deede is Olde

(c) Vntruth. For the true Faith of Christ had beene planted, and still continued in this Realme, foure hundred yeeres before the comming of this Augustine.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

The Truth of God neither is furthered by the face of Antiquitie, nor hindred by the opinion of Noueltie. For often times the thing that indeed is New, is condemned as Old: and the thing that indeed is Old, is condemned as New. If Newnesse in Religion in all respects and euery way were ill, Christ would not haue resembled his Doctrine to New Wine; Nor would he haue said to his Disciples; I giue you a New Commandement: Neither would he haue called the Cup of Thanksgiuing, The New Testament in his Blood. Arnobius saith: Religionis Authoritas non est tempore æstimanda, sed numine: nec quo die, sed quid colere cœperis, intueri conuenit. Quod Verum est, Serum non est: The Authority of Religion must be weighed by God, and not by time. It behoueth vs to consider, not vpon what day, but what thing wee beganne to worship. The thing that is true is neuer too late.

Matth. 9. Iohan. 13. Luke. 22.

S. Augustine saith: Quod Anterius est, inquiunt Ethnici, falsum esse non potest. Quasi Antiquitas & Vetus Consuetudo præiudicet Veritati: The Heathens say, The Religion that was first, cannot be false. As though Antiquity and Old Custome could preuaile against the Truth. Againe he saith: Nec dici debet, quare modò? & quare serò? Quonian mittentis Consilium non est humano ingenio penetrabile: Neither may we say, Why commeth it now? Why commeth it so late? For the Counsel of God that sent it is vnsearchable to the wisdome of man. Ye say, They were Infidels only, that charged the Religion of Christ with Noueltie. And further ye say, Wee tell them, that all New Doctrine now in the Church of Christ is naught. Hereto, M. Harding, we soone agree. And therefore wee tell you, that your New Fantasies, which ye haue painted with the colour of Ancienty, and therewith haue deceiued the world, are vaine and naught. As for vs, we haue planted no New Religion, but only haue renewed the Old, that was vndoubtedly founded and vsed by the Apostles of Christ, and other Holy Fathers in the Primitiue Church; and of this long late time, by meane of the multitude of your Traditions and Vanities, hath beene drowned.

Aug. inquæst. Noui & Veteris, Testamenti quæst. 114.

Aug. de Ciuit. Lib. 10. ca. 32.

Therefore

Therefore we may say with S. Bernard: Nouitatem dico, propter linguas hominum imperitorum: qui cùm manifestum Lumen obnubilare non queunt, de Solo Nouitatis nomine cauillantur, &c. Sed hæc Nouitas non est nouella vanitas. Res enim est Antiquæ Religionis: Perfectæ fundatæ in Christo Petra: Antiquæ Hæreditatis Ecclesiæ Dei: I call it Nouelty, because of the ignorance of men, that cannot abide to behold the manifest light of the Truth, and cauillations of the Only name of Nouelty. But this nouelty is no new vanity (as is this late vpstart Religion of Rome.) For it is a matter of Old Religion: of perfect Godlinesse founded in Christ: The ancient inheritance of the Church of God. Bernardus, de vita Solitaria.

Old. New.

The Old Learned Father Tertullian saith: Videtur ergo, quibus Nouum est, quod sibi est Vetus. Hæresis non ratio Nouitas, quæ vel in Veritate admittitur. Quodcunque denique Veritatem sapit, hoc est Hæresis, etiam Veteribus inducta. Let them see therefore (as I said) which, count that thing New, that is not Old. For it is not to be taken of Nouelty, but by Verity. Whatsoeuer thing sauoureth Truth, that is no Heresie, but ought to be a Custome neuer to Old-ignorant Error. Quid enim tam Antiquum Christo Iesu? Any Antiquity is Christ Iesus. Tertull. de Virginibus veland. Ignat. ad Philadelphien.

For otherwise the Religion of Christ at that time was counted New, and in respect of the Ancient Religion of the Martyrs, euen to Nouelties lately vniuersally and of all men was commended.

That Augustine the Monke of Rome brought first the Faith into this Land, it is vtterly vntrue. For, as I haue said before, it appeareth plainely by sundry the Ancient Fathers, Origen, Tertullian, Chrysostome, Hilarie, Theodoret, Eusebius, and others, that the Faith of Christ hath beene vniuersally receiued, and perfectly obserued in this Realme many hundred yeeres before this Augustine the Monke was borne. Indeed he brought in great heapes of strange Nouelties, and Superstitions, as Candles, Shauelinges, Banners, and Holy Water, and other like shewes, whereof the Church of God had no great need. And yet haue the same sithence been increased, by other New Deuices, and Vanities aboue measure.

Augustine of England.

But forasmuch as certaine of M. Hardings Beaupéres of Louuine haue lately found themselues talke, and kept great Mootes in the behoofe of their Augustine the Italian Monke, whom they call the Apostle of England, and will nedes haue to be receiued and honoured as a Saint, I haue thought it therefore good, briefly and by the way, to note a few words touching the same.

It seemeth they be much offended, that so vertuous a Man, and so holy a Saint should be charged with Pride and Cruelty. With Pride, in so disdainfully despising his brethren, the Bishops of this Iland of Britaine: With Cruelty, in procuring the death both of many thousands of Christian people, and also specially of the innocent and vnarmed Monks of Bangor: and all this, for that they refused to receiue him as their Metropolitane, and to agree with him in certaine small points of the Romain Religion. Howbeit, his Pride is well blazed by Beda, writing purposely of the same, in that he sate still in his Throne, and disdained to rise vp, and to giue any token of Reuerence vnto the seuen Bishops, and other learned and graue men of the Britains, making their appearance at his Councel. And therefore they said they would not hearken to his demands, nor take him for their Archbishop, as hauing otherwise of old an Archbishop of their own, to whom they owed their obedience. Their words as they are reported by Beda, were these: Si modò nobis assurgere noluit, quantò magis, si ei subdi cœperimus, iam nos pro nihilo contemnet? If euen now he disdaine to rise vp vnto vs, how much more will he despise vs, and regard vs as nothing, when we shall once be vnder his Iurisdiction? Beda, Septem Britan. Episc. & plures Viri Doctissimi. Bed. lib. 2. ca. 2.

But to excuse this Augustine of shamefull Cruelty, lest he should seeme to be accessary to the Murthering of so many, and so by their owne Lawes to be Irregular, as a man of Blood, they say; He neither enkindled the Warre against the Britains, nor was present at the fight, but was dead long before. Which thing also they thinke may be proued by the expresse words of Beda. For thus he saith: Quamuis ipso Augustino iam multo antè tempore ad Cœlestia Regna sublato: Notwithstanding Augustine himselfe, long before the time of this Warre, was taken vp into the Kingdome of Heauen. For the Truth and Certainty hereof, it may please thee, good Christian Reader, to vnderstand, that these last words of Beda, concerning the Death of Augustine, are manifestly forged, and haue beene violently thrust into the Text by a guilefull Parenthesis, by them that sithence haue beene ashamed of his Cruelty, and were neuer written by the Author, as by euident proofes it shall plainly appeare. Beda eod. loco.

But first of all, in an Old Chronicle written in French aboue two hundred yeeres past by Thomas Gray, ye shall find it recorded thus: Augustine being thus refused of the Bishops, and others the Learned of the Britaines, made such complaint thereof to Ethelbert the King of Kent, that forthwith he leuied his Power, and marched against them, and slew them in most cruel wise wise, hauing (as he saith) no more regard of Mercie, then a Woolfe hath vpon a Sheepe. Heere by it appeareth, that this Augustine was the Inflamer of the Warre, and so the cause of the Slaughter.

The true Story of Beda translated by King Alfrede.

And whereas by the words of Beda, as they be now commonly extant in the Latine, we are told, this Augustine was dead long before the warre began, it appeareth plainely by the true Beda indeed, translated aboue seuen hundred yeres agone into the old English, or Saxon tongue, by Alfredus, or Aluredus, then King of this Land, that the same Augustine was yet aliue, after the same Warre was ended; and that hee afterward Consecrated two Bishops, Mellitus and Iustus: Mellitus to be Bishop of London, and Iustus to be Bishop of Rochester. Which things thus declared, it followeth orderly in the Story, Then (these Wars being ended, and these Bishops Consecrated) afterward died the beloued Father Augustine. After the Warre he died, saith he, and not before, as they fitteth altered it in the Latine. I trow, M. Harding, ye are not so much amazed with the admiration of your Augustine, that ye will say he had power to Consecrate Bishops, and to vse his Archiepiscopall Authority, being dead.

Augustine aliue in the time of the Warre.

As for these words that we finde reported by the Parenthesis in the Latine, as is noted by Beda; (Quamuis Augustino iam multo ante tempore ad Cœlestia Regna sublato) forasmuch as they are quite contrary to the very course and order of the Story, and specially for that they are not once touched in the Ancient Saxon Translation, sundry Copies whereof at this present are extant, and to be seene, of such Reuerend Antiquity, as may not iustly be called in question, therefore we haue good cause to iudge that the said words haue been sithence forged and shifted in by some good skill and policy, lest Augustine, a Holy a Man, should be found guilty of so great a Crueltie.

Augustine aliue, & in company with the Verily in the Old English Chronicle it is recorded, not only that this Augustine, the Italian Monke, by his complaint caused the King of Kent to arme his people against the true and Faithfull Christians of the Countrie, then being in Wales: or, that he was aliue at the time of the battel, but also that he was himselfe present in person going toward the same. The words be these: Augustine came againe, and told King Ethelbert, that the Britans would not obey him. Wherefore the King was wroth, and sent to Elfrede the King of Northumberland to come to helpe him to distresse the Britans of Wales. And (Augustine) the Archbishop Archbishop of Canturburie met with them at Leicester. The King of Leicester at that time was called Brocuale. He being afraid of the two Kings, fled out of the Land, and came neuer againe. And the two Kings seised all his Lands, and parted them betweene themselues. And afterward they went towards Wales. The Britans heard of them and sent men to them in their shirts, and barefoot, to aske mercy. But they were so cruel, that they had of them no pitie, &c. Hereby it appeareth, that this Augustine not only enkindled this cruell warre, but also was aliue and present in the Armie. Kings marching towards the Field. Augustine of England.

Addition. ☞ But to put both you and your friends quite out of doubt, touching as well the truth hereof, as also the manifest and sensible corruption of your Beda, I will here shew you the Copie of a Chartar granted by Ethelbert the King of Kent to the Abby of S. Peter in Canturburie, and confirmed by Augustine the blacke Monk, and Archbishop there, the selfe same yeere, when the slaughter of the Monks, whereof we speake, was committed. Thus it beginneth: ✠ In nomine Domini nostri Iesu Christi. Omnem hominem, qui secundùm Deum viuit, & remunerari à Deo sperat, & optat, oportet vt puris precibus consensum hilariter ex animo præbeat: quoniam certum est, tantò facilius ea quæ ipse à Domino poposcerit, consequi posse, quanto & ipse libentius Deo aliquid conceserit. Quocirca ego Æthelbertus Rex Cantiæ cum Consensu Venerabilis Archiepiscopi Augustini, ac Principum meorum, do & concedo Deo, in honorẽ Sancti Petri, aliquam partem terræ Iuris mei, quę iacet in Oriente Ciuitatis Dorobernia. Ita duntaxat, vt Monasterium ibi construatur, & res quæ supra memoraui, in potestate Abbatis sit, qui ibi fuerit ordinatus. Igitur adiuro, & præcipio in nomine Domini Dei Omnipotentis, qui est omnium rerum Iudex iustus, vt præfata terra subscripta Donatione sempiternaliter sit confirmata, Ita vt nec mihi, nec alicui Successorum meorum, Regum, aut Principum, siue cuiuslibet conditionis, dignitatibus, & Ecclesiasticis gradibus, de ea aliquid fraudare liceat. Si quis verò de hac Donatione mea aliquid minuere, aut irritum facere temptauerit, sit in præsenti separatus à Sancta Communione Corporis & Sanguinis Christi, & in die Iudicij, ob meritum malitiæ suæ, à consortio Sanctorum omnium segregatus. Circumcincta est hęc terra his terminis: In Oriente Ecclesia S. Martini: In Meridie via Othburgæ: In Occidente & in Aquilone Druting in Ciuitate Doroueni, in anno ab Incarnatione Christi DCV. Indictione VIII.

✠ Ego Æthelbertus Rex Cantiæ, sana mente, integroque consilio, Donationem meam signo Sanctæ Crucis propria manu roboraui, confirmauique. Ego Augustinus Gratia Dei Archiepiscopus, testis consentiens libenter subscripsi. Ego Eadbaldus Regis Faui. Ego Hemigisilus Dux Laudaui. Ego Hocca Comes Consensi. Ego Angemundus referendarius Approbaui. Ego Graphio Comes Benedixi. Ego Tangisilus Regis Optimas Confirmaui. Ego Pinca Consensi. Ego Geddi Corroboraui.

This Chartar is extant, and may be seene vnder Authenticall Seales: and another likewise bearing the same Date, and like Inscription. Marke well the yeere of our Lord, M. Harding, and compare wel the times. This Chartar, as it is plaine and euident to the eie, was Sealed and Dated in the yeere of our Lord 605. And the selfe same yeere, as it appeareth by the Chronicle of Peterburrough, the Monkes were slaine, euen the selfe same yeere, I say, in which this Chartar was granted by the King, and confirmed by Augustine. Now, I beseech you, where is the credit of your vaine Storie? How can it possiblie be true, that your corrupted Beda saith: Quamuis Augustino iam multo antè tempore ad Cœlestia Regna sublato? If Augustine were aliue the selfe same yeere, how can it be true, I say, that hee was dead so long before? Doe ye not see manifest forgerie with your eies? Is not this corruption so grosse that yee may feele it with your fingers? If Augustine had been dead so long time, or so many yeeres before, how could he confirme Chartars the same yeere present? Will you make him so Holy a man, that hee was able to write, and seale, and confirme Chartars being dead? Your Beda, as hee is by some of your side guilefully corrupted, saith, Augustine was dead a great long while before the slaughter. But Augustine himselfe saith, hee was aliue the selfe same yeere when the slaughter was made. And that he proueth not by coniectures and ghesses, as you doe often, but by sufficient Record vnder the Kings great Seale. And I beseech you, what better euidence may be shewed? It was an easie matter, by enterlarding a few words, to falsifie the truth of a Storie: And there was good cause in regard of your Augustines credit, why yee should doe it. But what cause can you imagine, why any man in this point should corrupt and falsifie the Kings great Seale? What gaine could hee haue had therein? Anno 605.

therein? Or what hope of gaine? or if there had beene cause neuer so great, yet what man could so easilie haue wrought it? Nay Matthæus Westmonasterienſis that wrote Flores Hiſtoriarum, ſaith, that Auguſtine liued vntill the yeere of our Lord 608. And was aliue three yeeres after the Monks were ſlaine. If he were aliue three yeeres after the ſlaughter, how is it true, that you ſay, He was dead ſo long a while before the ſlaughter?

Matth. Weſtmonaſterienſ.

Now may it be your choice, M. Harding, whether ye will beleeue King Ethelbert and your Auguſtine himſelfe vnder their owne Inſtruments and authentical Seales, or elſe your Storie of Beda, manifeſtly corrupted and wreſted quite from the Originall, as it is moſt eaſie to be ſeene.

Therefore M. Harding, it ſhall henceforth be good, both for you and for your followers, not to aduenture ſo rathely in iudgement before ye know. Thus much briefly, as anſwer vnto them, that ſo faine would haue their Auguſtine acquited of Pride and Cruelty.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuiſion. 2.

Pretenſe of Antiquity.

Wherein they do much like to the Coniurers and Sorcerers now adaies, who working with Diuels, vſe to ſay, they haue their Bookes, and all their holy & hid Myſteries from Athanaſius, Cyprian, Moſes, Abel, Adam, and from the Archangel Raphael; to the end, that their cunning being thought to come from ſuch Patrons & Founders, might bee iudged the more High & Holy. After the ſame maner theſe men becauſe they would haue their owne Religion, which they themſelues, and that not long ſithence haue brought forth into the World, to be the more eaſily and rather accepted of fooliſh perſons, or of ſuch, as caſt little, whereabout they or others doe goe, they are wont to ſay, they had it from Auguſtine, Hierome, Chryſoſtome, from the Apoſtles, and from Chriſt himſelfe. Full well know they, that nothing is more in the peoples fauour, or better liketh the common ſort, then theſe names.

M. Harding.

Nay Sirs, your ſelues may with more reaſon be likened to Enchanters, Necromancers, and Witches. For as they ſay that they haue their Bookes & their Myſteries from thoſe Doctors, and firſt Fathers, and from Raphael the Archangell, but cannot ſhew the deliuery thereof by any Succeſſion from hand to hand, as for example who receiued the ſame from Raphael, from Adam, from Abel, &c. and who kept them from time to time: So ye ſay alſo, that ye haue your Goſpell, and euery part of your Doctrine, from the Apoſtles, from Chriſt, from the Prophets, from the Patriarkes, from Heauen, from Godsown boſome, who is the Father of Lights. But ye cannot ſhew vs your lawfull Succeſſion, by whom, and by whoſe preaching, as by hands, it came downe along from Chriſt and his Apoſtles vnto you. (a) Where lay your Sacramentary Doctrine hidden between the time of your Prophet Zuinglius, and your Patriarke Berengarius? How and by what deliuery from hand to hand continued the ſame thoſe fiue hundred yeeres? Shew vs your Succeſſion. Where be your Biſhops? Where be your Churches?

(a) It lay in the Scriptures, and in the Bookes of the holy Fathers

The Doctrine which the Catholikes of our Countrey hold and profeſſe, (b) as wel touching the bleſſed Sacrament, as all other points of our Faith, they haue receiued it of their Biſhops and they of their Predeceſſors, by order vntill they reach to S. Auguſtine: S. Auguſtine receiued it of S. Gregory: (b) he of others before him, (b) and they all one of another by continuall aſcent vnto S. Peter who receiued it of Chriſt: Chriſt of God his Father. (b) And this Doctrine we find taught and plainely ſet foorth in the Bookes that (c) S. Auguſtine, Hierome, Chryſoſtome, Ambroſe, Baſil, Cyprian, Dionyſe, and the other Holy Fathers haue left to the poſteritie. And ſo they be witneſſes of the truth of the Doctrin which our Biſhops haue taught vs.

(b) Vntruth: vaine. Read the Anſwer.

(c) Vntruth. For all this is but a ſhew of empty names, and nothing in them.

Preach ye, and cry ye out neuer ſo much, make ſo many Lawes in your Parliaments, as ye liſt, imbrue your Swords in the blood of the Catholike Chriſtians, as ye cry for it in your Pulpits, yet ſhal that rock Mat. whereon we ſtay, be too hard for you. Neither ſhall ye euer be able to ouerthrow the Catholike Church builded thereupon. For certaine we are, that neither al your power, nor hel gates ſhal preuaile againſt it.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Marcus Varro was wont to ſay, Vtile eſt Ciuitatibus, vt ſe viri fortes, etiamſi falſum ſit, ex Dijs genitos eſſe credant: It is very behoouefull for Cities and Common Weales, that men of valiant courage beleeue themſelues to be the children of the Gods yea although indeed it be vntrue.

Vnto which words S Auguſtine addeth theſe: Hæc ſententia, cernis, quàm latum locum aperiat falſitati: Tee ſee how large a ſcope this ſaying doth open to the maintenance of falſhood. Many vaine men, to aduance the Nobilitie of their Blood, haue fet their petit degrees, ſome from Achilles, ſome from Æneas, ſome from Hercules, and ſome from the Arke of Noë. The Heretike Dioſcorus, to get ſome credit to his Doctrine, would ſeeme to bring the deſcent thereof from all the ancient Fathers of the Church. For thus hee ſaid in

I am thrown forth with the Fathers: I defend the Fathers doctrine: I ſwarue not from them in any point: I haue their witneſſe, not barely, nor by the way, but in their Bookes.* Conc. Chalced. Act. 1 pa. 767.

So ſaid the Heretike Eutyches: Ego legi Scripta Beati Cyrilli & Sanctorum Patrum, & Sancti Athanaſij: I haue read the Bookes of Cyrillus, of the holy Fathers, and of Athanaſius. Conc. Chalced. Act. 1 pa. 793.

So ſaid the Heretike Caroſus: Ego ſecundum expoſitionem trecentorum decem & octo Patrum, ſic Credo: ſic Baptizatus ſum: Thus doe I beleeue, and thus was I Baptized, according to the Expoſition of the three hundred and eighteene Fathers in the Councell of Nice. Conc. Chalced. Act. 4 pa. 877.

Thus the Arian Heretikes alleged the authoritie of the ancient Father Origen: thus the Pelagian Heretikes alleged the authority of S. Auguſtine. As vpon occaſion, it hath beene ſaid before. Socr. l. 4. ca. 21.

Euen with ſuch truth, M. Harding, are you wont to blaſe the armes of your Religion. There is no toy ſo vaine or ſo fabulous, but ye are able by your cunning to bring it lineally, either from Chriſt himſelfe or from his Apoſtles, or from one or other of the ancient Fathers. The Biſhop of Sidon, in the late Diet of the Empire holden at Auguſta, auouched openly, that ye had your whole Canon from the Apoſtles of Chriſt, word by word, euen as it is præciſely written in your Maſſe Bookes. Andreas Barbarius præcheth the antiquitie of the Cardinals of Rome, by theſe words, written in the firſt Booke of the Kings: Domini ſunt Cardines Terræ: Et poſuit ſuper eos Orbem: The corners of the Earth bee the Lords: and vpon them he hath ſet the World. Abbat Panormitane ſaith: Cardinalatus eſt de Iure Diuino: Quia Papa per Sacerdotes Leuiticos intelligit Cardinales: The Cardinalſhip ſtandeth by the Law of God: For the Pope by the Leuiticall Prieſts vnderſtandeth his Cardinals. Hoſius ſæmeth to ſay, that Monkes haue their beginning euen from the Apoſtles, meaning thereby, as one of your companions there doth, in fauour, I trow, of Religion, that Chriſt himſelfe was the Abbat. For thus he ſaith: Chriſtus Dux, & exemplar vitæ Monaſticæ: Chriſt was the Captaine and ſamplar of Monkes life. And yet the ſame man afterward, as hauing forgotten his former dreame, vtterly diſplaceth Chriſt, and giueth the whole honour hereof vnto Elias and Elizæus. Theſe be his words: Elias & Elizæus Duces inſtituti Benedictini: Elias and Elizæus were the Captaines of S. Benets order, that is to ſay, they were Blacke Monkes. By like wiſdome ye would ſæme to fetch your Holy Water from Elizæus: your Cardinals Hat from S. Hierome: your Monkes Cowle from S. Auguſtine. This was ſometime a iollie good way to win credit, ſpecially whiles whatſoeuer ye ſaid, the people was readie to giue you eare. So the old Arcades ſaid in commendation of their Antiquity, that they were a day or two elder then the Moone. Saturnus, being in Italy, for that he was a ſtranger, & no man knew from whence he came, therfore was called Filius Cœli, and was thought to come from Heauen. Romulus and Alexander for that they were borne in baſtardy, and neuer knew their owne Fathers, therefore to magnifie the Nobility of their Blod, would be called the Children of the Gods: the one of Mars, the other of Iupiter. Anno. 1548. 1 Regum. 2. Polyd. de Inuēt. lib. 4. cap 9. Extra, Qui filij ſint legitimi. per Venerabilem Abb. Hoſius in Confeſſione Petricouien. cap. 88. *Cop. With ſuch Truth and Fidelity, M. Harding, your wont is to paint out all the parts and Membres of your Doctrine. For be it neuer ſo vaine or childiſh, or lately deuiſed, yet ye beare vs in hand, That your Predeceſſours receiued the ſame (as you ſay) of their Biſhops: and they of others their Predeceſſors by order, vntil they reach vnto your Auguſtine the Monke of Rome, whom ye haue full worthily made a Saint: Your Auguſtine (ye ſay) receiued the ſame of Gregory: Gregory of others before him: and they all one of another by continuall aſcent vnto S. Peter: and Peter of Chriſt and Chriſt of God his Father. No Herald could lightly haue ſaid more in the matter. I trow, ye would proue by this Aſcent and Deſcent, that God the Father made Holy Water, and ſaid Maſſe.

Indeed, as wel herein, as alſo in your emptie names of Auguſtine, Hierome, Chryſoſtome Ambroſe, Baſil, Cyprian, Dionyſe, &c. as I tolde you once before, ye bring vs only a vaine ſhew of painted bores, and nothing in them. For in all theſe Holy Fathers, where find you either your Priuate Maſſe: or your Halfe Communion: or your Accidents without Subiect: or the reſt of your like Vanities, wherewith yee haue ſo long time deceiued the world? Leaue your diſſimulation: ſet apart your coniectures and blinde gheſſes: and for your credits ſake, once ſhew vs theſe things in the ancient Holy Fathers, and ſhew them plainelie, and indeed, that we may thinke, there is ſome weight in your word.

But your owne Gloſſe, ſpeaking of the Miniſtration of the Holy Communion, which now in your Churches in a maner is wholly aboliſhed, ſaith thus: Hoc Antiquum eſt. De Con. diſt. 2. peracta in Gloſ.

Nam

Pretenſe of Antiquity.

Nam hodie videtur eſſe relictum: This was the Old Order, that the people ſhould receiue together: For, as it ſeemeth, now it is left. Doctor Tonſtall ſaith, it was no Hereſie to denie your Tranſubſtantiation, before your late Councell of Laterane. Eraſmus, whoſe iudgement, I thinke, ye will not refuſe, ſaith thus: In Synaxi Tranſubſtantiationem ſerò definiuit Eccleſia: In the holy Miniſtration, it was long and very late, ere the Church determined the Article of Tranſubſtantiation. All this notwithſtanding, ye bluſh not to ſay, that both theſe and all other your fantaſies haue bene conueied vnto you by moſt certaine Succeſſion, from hand to hand: from your Engliſh Auguſtine: from Gregory: from the Fathers: from the Apoſtles: from Chriſt: and from the boſome of God himſelfe.

The Apology, Chap. 1. Diuiſion 3.

But how if the things which theſe men are ſo deſirous to haue ſeeme New, be found of greateſt Antiquity? Contrariwiſe, how if all the things welnigh, which they ſo greatly ſet forth with the name of Antiquity, hauing been wel and thorowly examined, be at length found to be but New, and deuiſed of very late? Soothly to ſay, no man that hath a true & right conſideration, would thinke the Iewes Lawes and Ceremonies to be New indeed for al Hammons accuſation. For they were grauen in very ancient Tables of greateſt Antiquity. And although many did take Chriſt to haue ſwarued from Abraham and the old Fathers, & to haue brought in a certaine New Religion in his owne name, yet anſwered he them directly: If yee beleeued Moſes, ye would beleeue me alſo. For my Doctrine is not ſo New, as you make it. For Moſes, an author of greateſt Antiquity, & one, to whom ye giue all honor, hath ſpoken of me. S. Paul likewiſe, Though the Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt be of many counted to be but New, yet hath it (ſaith he) atteſtimony moſt old, both of the Law and of the Prophets. As for our Doctrine, which we may more rightly cal Chriſts Catholike Doctrine, it is ſo farre off from New, that God who is aboue all moſt Ancient, and the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, hath left the ſame vnto vs in the Goſpel, in the Prophets, and Apoſtles workes, being monuments of greateſt age. So that no man can now thinke our Doctrine to be New, vnleſſe the ſame thinke, either the Prophets Faith, or the Goſpell, or elſe Chriſt himſelfe to be New.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 1. and 2.

AND as for their Religion, if it be of ſo long continuãce, as they would haue men ween it is, why doe they not proue it ſo by the examples of the Primitiue Church, and by the Fathers and Councels of Old times? Why lieth ſo ancient a cauſe thus long in the duſt, deſtitute of any Aduocate? Fire and Sword they haue had alwaies readie at hand: but as for the old Councels and Fathers, all mum, not a word. They did ſurely againſt all reaſon, to begin firſt with theſe ſo bloody & extreame meanes, if they could haue found other more eaſie and gentle waies.

And if they truſt ſo fully to Antiquity and vſe no diſſimulation, why did Iohn Clement a Countryman of ours, but few yeers paſt, in the preſence of certaine honeſt men, and of good credit, teare and caſt into the fire certaine leaues of Theodoret the moſt ancient Father, and a Greeke Biſhop, wherein he plainely and euidently taught, that the Nature of Bread in the Communion is not changed or aboliſhed, or brought to nothing? And this did he of purpoſe becauſe he thought there was none other Copie thereof to be found.

M Harding

Touching the matter ye haue deuiſed vpon M. Clement, he doth not only deny it in word, that euer he burnt or otherwiſe deſtroied any leafe of Theodoritus, but alſo declareth by the whole order of his life, & by ſpecial regard & loue he beareth to the tong, which that learned Biſhop wrote in, that he hath euer euer beene, and yet is farre from the will to burne or deſtroy any ſcrappe, ſyllable, or letter of Greeke, much more certaine leaues of the learned Father Theodoritus, where any ſuch thing was written, as you imagine. Nay, will ye haue the troth? In very deed he ſaith, and by ſuch way as a godly and graue man may auouch a truth, proteſteth, that hee neuer had hitherto any part of that Booke, neither in Greeke or in Latine in written hand.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This report was made in the preſence and hearing of M. Peter Martyr, and ſundry other learned men, of whom certaine are yet aliue. The Reporter was both a learned man and a graue Father, and not long ſithence a Biſhop in England: who ſaid, hee was preſent and ſaw the thing done with his eies. More to ſay heereof, I am not able.

Why ſaith Albertus Pigghius, that the ancient Father S. (a) We neuer tooke our ſelues bound to any priuate opinion of whatſoeuer Doctor. For all our Faith is Catholike, that is to ſay, Vniuerſall, ſuch as not one Doctor alone (b) but the Vniuerſall number of Doctors haue taught, and Chriſtian people haue receiued. If in a ſecret point of learning S. Auguſtine or S. Cyprian teach ſingularly, wee follow them not. Much leſſe doe wee binde our ſelues to maintaine whatſoeuer Albertus Pigghius hath written. Our Doctrine of Originall Sinne is to be read in the fifth Seſſion of the late Tridentine Councell. If Pigghius diſſent from that, he diſſenteth from vs. But if he ſtand only vpon ſome point not yet determined by the Church, his opinion may bee tolerated vntill the Church define that queſtion. When you note the point, (for there are many points in that Doctrine) then we will ſhew you further our minde heerein.

Sub Paulo 3.

The Mariage, which is made after a ſimple Vow of Chaſtity, ſtandeth in his force, by reaſon that there is more in Mariage, then was in the bare Vow. (c) For in the ſimple Vow there is nothing but a promiſe made to God, without any deliuerance of that thing which was promiſed. But in Mariage the man and woman by preſent acceptatiō of each others bond, do make the mater to extend beyond the nature of a promiſe. Therefore if likewiſe the Vow made to God were not a ſimple promiſe, but alſo a deliuering of the thing promiſed: then cannot the mariage following make void the Vow, which was not only promiſed, but alſo performed (d) The performance is, when he that voweth, doth profeſſe himſelfe in the hands of his Superior by taking the habite of ſome Religiō, or by receiuing holy Orders of the Biſhop. For in that ſolemne act he deliuereth vp all his owne right & power, ſo that now he is not maſter of himſelfe to giue his Body to any perſon in mariage or otherwiſe. You ſhall know by the Law of Nature, if you would conſider it, that if I promiſe a Horſe to one man, & afterward promiſe the ſame, and deliuer him to another, that the ſecond man is true Lord of that Horſe, although I haue done iniurie to him, to whō I made the firſt promiſe. For the promiſe with the deliuery, is more vaileable to tranſſer my right in the horſe, thē my promiſe alone. Euen ſo it is a great ſin to break a ſimple Vow of Chaſtity made to God.

(a) M. Harding refuſeth S. Auguſt. authority.
(b) This vnetruth is ouer cold and vain. For M. Harding well knoweth the ſubſtance of his Doctrine ſtandeth not by the Dooctours.
(c) Promiſe made vnto God without deliuery. A folly of all follies.
(d) A Vow made before the Biſhop or Abbat, is of more force then a Vow made before God alone.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

How lightly your Captaine Generall, Albertus Pigghius weigheth the authority of S. Auguſtine, it may appeare by his words. For thus he writeth: Quòd non ſolùm incerta ſed etiam falſa ſit Auguſtini Sententia, ita mihi demonſtrari poſſe videtur: Thus me thinketh I am able to proue, that S. Auguſtines iudgement herein is not onely vncertaine, but alſo falſe. And againe afterward in the concluſion: Quòd Auguſtini Sententia non ſolùm incerta, ſed etiam certò falſa ſit, ſatis mihi demonſtratum videtur: That S. Auguſtines iudgement is, not only vncertaine, but alſo certainely falſe, me thinketh I haue ſufficiently proued. And againe: Non multum me mouet Auguſtini Sententia: mihi non placet Auguſtini ea de re Definitio & Sententia: S. Auguſtines iudgement doth not greatly moue me: I like not S. Auguſtines determination and iudgement, touching this matter. And againe: Ego omnium, non ſolùm aduerſariorum, ſed etiam Catholicorum receptas in Scholis redarguo Sententias: I doe reproue the iudgements, not only of our aduerſaries, but alſo of the Catholikes allowed in the Schools. For theſe cauſes Ruardus Tapper of Louaine, and Lirienſis of Portugall haue namely written againſt Pigghius. And forasmuch, as yee are deſirous to haue the point noted, wherein Pigghius ſo much miſliketh S. Auguſtines iudgement, Dominicus à Soto your owne Doctor noteth it thus: Pigghius de hoc malè audit, quaſi Peccata in nobis Originalia omninò inficietur: Pigghius is ill reported of, as a man that vtterly denieth Originall Sinne. Thus your Doctors weigh S. The Vow Simple and Solemne.

The matter of Marriage after a Vow, is blowen away with a fi'ly Diſtinction, of a Vow Simple, and a Vow Double, which ye commonly call a Solemne vow: and all the ſame is ſubſtantially and cléerely prowed by the promiſe and deliuerie of a Horſe. For this example of all others, liked you beſt. Surely, M. Harding, a very ſimple Creature, and ſomewhat inferiour to a Horſe, would hardly bee tied to ſuch Diſtinctions. For the better cléering hereof, that yee call a Simple Vow, that is made before God alone: that Double or Solemne, that is made in the preſence of the Biſhop or Abbat. Now, it is plainely confeſſed by your owne Doctors, that your Simple Vow, be it neuer ſo Simple, yet bindeth you as ſtraitly before God, as the Double. For Pope Cœleſtinus ſaith: Votum Simplex apud Deum non minùs ligat, quàm Solenne: The Simple Vow before God, bindeth no leſſe, then the Solemne. And touching the Promiſe and Deliuerie of your Horſe, Iohannes Scotus ſaith: Alia ratio eſt, quòd Vouens Solenniter mittit in poſſeſſionem illum, cui Vouet Solenniter: Vouens autem Priuatè, non: ſed quaſi promittit. Sed hæc ratio valet minùs, quàm ſecunda. Quia omnia, quæ intrinſeca ſunt Voto, vt Votum reſpicit actum voluntatis, per quem obligat ſe vouendo & transfert Dominium ſuum in alterum, omnia, inquam, iſta ſunt æqualia hinc inde. Igitur non magis datio hîc, quàm ibi: nec promiſſio ibi, quàm hîc: Another reaſon that they vſe, is this: That he that maketh a Solemne Vow, putteth him, to whom he ſo Voweth in poſſeſſion. But ſo doth not he that maketh a Simple Vow: but onely giueth his promiſe. This Reaſon is worſe and weaker then the Second. For all things that bee of the Subſtance of the Vow, (as a Vow concerneth the act of the minde, whereby the minde bindeth it ſelfe by Vowing, and tranſpoſeth the ownerſhip of it ſelfe vnto another) all theſe things, I ſay, are of like weight and equall of either ſide. Therefore there is no more performance of promiſe in the Solemne Vow, then in the Simple: nor more promiſe in the Simple Vow, then in the Solemne. Thus you ſée, M. Harding, with great trauell and much ado, yee haue found a difference without difference. Cardinall Caietane ſaith: Eiuſdem ſpeciei eſt tranſgreſſio Voti Solennis & Simplicis: Et differunt ſolùm ſecundùm magis graue, & minùs graue: The breaking of a Vow Simple, and a Vow Solemne is of one kinde or nature: And the difference is onely in more grieuous and leſſe grieuous, that is, that the one is more grieuous and offenſiue then the other.

Therefore Thomas of Aquine himſelfe, the firſt Father, as it appeareth of this Diſtinction, ſaith thus: Videtur, quòd Eccleſia poſſit diſpenſare in Voto Continentiæ Solennizato per ſuſceptionem Sacri Ordinis: It ſeemeth that the Church may diſpenſe with a Vow of Chaſtity ſolemnized by the receiuing of holy Orders.

Auguſt. de bono Viduitat. ca. 10

And this is it, that S. Auguſtine ſaith: Qui dicunt talium Nuptias, non eſſe Nuptias, ſed potiùs Adulteria, mihi non videntur ſatis acutè, ac diligenter conſiderare, quid dicant: They that ſay the Marriage of ſuch Men or Women (as haue Vowed Chaſtity) is no Marriage at all, but rather Aduouterie, (as M. Harding and his fellowes haue ſaid) ſeeme vnto me, not to conſider diſcreetly or aduiſedlie what they ſay. Thus therefore, M. Harding, notwithſtanding your Simple or Double Vow, S. Auguſtine ſaith vnto you, Yee ſpeake Vnaduiſedly and Vndiſcreetly, and vnderſtand not what you ſay. But of this whole matter, wee haue entreated before more at large.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuiſion 4.

Liber hodie extat & circumfertur mutilus.

Alſo, when they did of late put in Print the Ancient Father Origens worke vpon the Goſpell of S. Iohn, why left they quite out the whole ſixth Chapter, wherin it is likely, yea rather of very ſurety, that the ſaid Origen had written many things concerning the Sacrament of the Holy Communion, contrary to theſe mens mindes, & would rather put foorth that Booke mangled, then full & perfect, for feare it ſhould reprooue them, & their partners of their error? Call yee this truſting to Antiquity, when ye rent in peeces, keepe backe, maime and burne the ancient Fathers?

M. Harding.

* Hereby M. Harding ſhaketh much the credit of his owne learning.

A wiſe man affirmeth no more then he knoweth: a good man no more then ſtandeth with Charity: a learned man in matters of weight, no more, then he can auouch by euident * reaſons, * ſure proofes or * ſufficient authorities. This Defender charging the Catholikes with mangling of Origen vpon S. Iohns Goſpell as though of purpoſe they had left out the ſixth Chapter, which he imagineth to containe their Sacramentarie Doctrine contrary to the Catholike Faith: forasmuch as he is vncertaine hereof, & thereby noteth a great vntruth in the ſetters foorth of that work, neither by any meanes is able to prooue the ſame: he ſheweth himſelfe a foole, a ſlanderer & an vnlearned man. We are like, I perceiue, to heare of the faults they know by vs, ſith that they burden vs with that they know not, & for the ſame can pretend but but a ſlender coniecture. But Sir Defender, why complaine you not of the leauing out of other Chapters & parts of that worke, aſwel as of the ſixth Chapter? For whereas Origen wrote vpon Iohn nine & thirty Tomes, as S. Hierome witneſſeth: the Latine tranſlatiõ Printed in Venice hath but 32 lacking the ſeuen laſt Tomes. Neither be all they whole & perfect, but many of them maimed and mangled.

Origen.

prologo 39. in Matth. Origenis Lucam.

What maner a Doctrine of the bleſſed Sacrament he hath vttered vpon the ſixth Chapter of Iohn, & how Catholike he was in that point, it appeareth by diuers his other workes, that you haue no cauſe to belie him in that you neuer ſaw. For the truth of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, his teſtimonies be euident. For credits ſake heere will I recite a couple. In one place he ſaith thus: Ye know, which haue been wont to be preſent at the Diuine Myſteries, how that when ye take the Body of our Lord, yee keepe it with all warineſſe & reuerence, that no whit thereof fall downe, that nothing of the conſecrated gift miſcarrie. For ye beleeue your ſelues to be guilty, & right well do ye ſo beleeue if by negligence ought fal downe. In another place, writing vpon the Centurions words ſpoken to Chriſt, Matth. 8. When (ſaith he) thou rakeſt that holy meat, & that vncorrupt daintie, when thou enioieſt that Bread & Cup of Life, thou Eateſt & Drinkeſt the Body and Blood of our Lord, then our Lord entreth vnder thy roofe.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

We lay not in the mangling of this Ancient Father, as matter of ſufficient euidence, but only as a great coniecture of your Corruption, referring the iudgement thereof vnto the Reader. Certainely, M. Harding, we haue good cauſe many waies to doubt your dealing: but in nothing more then in the handling of the Fathers. Yee remember how wickedly Pope Zoſimus, the better to colour his Ambition, long ſithence corrupted the Nicene Councell. Neither can ye forget what trifles and fabulous Vanities yee haue lately ſent vs abroad vnder the old ſmokie names of Abdias, Leontius, Amphilochius, Hippolytus, and Clemens, whom ye ſo ſolemnly call the Apoſtles Fellow. In theſe vncleanely conueiances to any wiſe man there can appeare no ſimple meaning. Notwithſtanding, ye thought it good policie to deceiue the world by any ſhift or ſhadow of ancient Fathers.

Conc. Aphricanum. cap. 105.

What Origen thought of the words of Chriſt in the ſixth Chapter of S. Iohn, it is eaſy to coniecture by that he hath written otherwheres. Vpon the Leuiticus he writeth thus: Eſt & in Euangelio Litera quæ occidit: Si enim ſecundùm Literam ſequaris illud quod dictum eſt, Niſi comederitis Carnem Filij hominis, &c. ea Litera occidit: Euen in the Goſpell there is a Letter that killeth: For whereas Chriſt ſaith, Vnleſſe yee eat the Fleſh of the Sonne of Man, &c if ye take the ſame according to the Letter that Letter killeth. This was Origens iudgement of the Sacrament: And the ſame in thoſe dates was counted Catholike.

Origen in Leuit. hom. 7.

Yee reply, Origen ſaith: When ye take the Body of our Lord, yee keepe it with all warineſſe and reuerence, that no part thereof fall downe. And againe: When thou takeſt that holy meat, then our Lord entreth vnder thy roofe. Both theſe places in my former Replie are fully anſwered. But what Catholike Doctrine, M. Harding, can ye picke out of theſe words? What Tranſubſtantiation? What Reall Preſence? What Accidents without Subiect? Ye will ſay, Origen calleth the Sacrament Chriſts Body. So doth Chriſt himſelfe: So doth Paul: So doe all the Ancient Fathers: So doe we our ſelues, becauſe it is the Sacrament of Chriſts Body. Your owne Gloſſe ſaith, as it hath beene often alleged: Vocatur Corpus Chriſti, id eſt Significat Corpus Chriſti: It is called the Body of Chriſt, that is to ſay, It ſignifieth the Body of Chriſt. But the people (ye ſay) receiued it warily, and with reuerence. So doe they now, euen in thoſe Churches that you moſt miſlike withall.

De Conſecrat. Diſt. 2. Hoc eſt.

Yee ſaith further: When thou receiueſt that holy meat, then our Lord entreth vnder thy roofe. And what great matter thinke you to win hereby? Euen in the ſame place Origen ſaith: Intrat etiam nunc Dominus ſub tectum credentium duplici Figura, vel more: Euen now the Lord entreth vnder the roofe of the Faithfull after two maners or ſorts. For when the holy and godly Biſhops enter into your houſe, euen then through them our Lord entreth. Will ye conclude hereof, that the Biſhop is Tranſubſtantiate into Chriſt? Or, that Chriſt is Really and Subſtantially dwelling in him? This is an Allegory, M. Harding, or a Myſticall kinde of ſpæch, wherein, as you know, that Learned Father was much delighted. The Roofe that he meaneth is not Materiall, but Spirituall: that is to ſay, not the Body of Man, but the Soule: Like as alſo the Comming or Entring of Chriſt into the ſame is not Bodily, but only Spirituall.

So S. Auguſtine ſaith: Prædicant Chriſtum, & eum annuntiando venire faciunt in exhauſta fame viſcera filij eſurientis: They Preach Chriſt, and by Preaching, cauſe him to come into the Bowels of the hungry Child, waſted with Famine. Likewiſe againe he ſaith of the Centurion: Tecto non recipiebat Chriſtum: Corde recipiebat: Quantò humilior, tantò capacior, tantò plenior: He receiued not Chriſt into his Houſe: He receiued him into his Heart: The more humble, the more roome had he to receiue him, and the fuller bee was. So ſaith Chryſoſtome: Qui vocant Dauid cum Cythara, intus Chriſtum per ipſum vocant? They that cal in Dauid with his Harpe, by meane of him call in Chriſt. Againe he ſaith:

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuiſion 1. and 2.

Images painted in Churches.

It is a world to ſee how welfauouredly, and how towardly, touching Religion, theſe mẽ agree with the Fathers, of whom they vſe to vaunt, they be their owne good.

The Old Councell Eliberine made a Decree, that nothing that is honoured of the people ſhould be painted in the Churches.

M. Harding.

The words of that Prouinciall Councell be theſe: It is thought good, that paintings bee not in the Church: that what is worſhipped or Adored, it be not painted on walles. This expreſſe prohibition of painting, and that nought be painted in Church walles, that is worſhipped or Adored, may ſeeme both to preſuppoſe a former vſe of ſuch paintings, and alſo to allow the other ſort of Images. Whether it do, or no, *it forceth not greatly. The ſeuenth Generall Councell, aſſembled at Nice againſt the Image-breakers, hath not only allowed the * Deuout vſe of Images commonly vſed in the Churches of Chriſtian people, but alſo condemned all thoſe that throw them downe, and maintaine the contrarie opinion. Now we are taught, that a Prouinciall Councell ought to giue place to a Generall.

Elliber. Conc. Ca. 36.

*It forceth not greatly.

* Deuout vſe of Images.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The painting of Images in Church walles was forbidden in the Councell holden at Liberis, or Granado, in Spaine: Ergo, ſay you, ſuch Images were vſed before that Councell. All this may well be granted without preiudice. But ye ſée plainely they were forbidden in that Councell. One ſaith: Ex malis moribus bonæ Leges ortæ ſunt: Of ill maners came good Lawes. Men vſed (ye ſay) before that time to paint Images in Church walles. But this vſe was naught. And therefore the Councell Decréed againſt it: and that, as it may be gathered by the words, for feare of Idolatrie.

But you ſay, The Second Generall Nicene Councell allowed well the deuout vſe of Images. And a Generall Councell ought to take place before a Prouinciall: for that in a Generall Councell there are many Biſhops: in a Prouinciall there are but few. Thus, I ſée, ye weigh your Religion, not by Truth, but by Companie. Howbeit, this Rule is very lowſe, and may ſone deceiue you.

God Chriſtian Reader, let no man beguile thée by the colour of Councels. Read this Second Nicene Councell throwout, if thou be able. Thou wilt ſay, there was neuer any Aſſemblie of Chriſtian Biſhops ſo vaine, ſo péeuiſh, ſo wicked, ſo blaſphemous, ſo vnworthy in all reſpects to be called a Councell. The bleſſed Biſhops there agréed together with one conſent, that Images in Churches are not onely to be allowed, but alſo deuourly and reuerently to be honoured, and that with the ſame honour that is due to God himſelfe. One of them ſaith: Venerandas Imagines recipio, & Adoro, & id perpetuò docebo: I receiue and worſhip the reuerend Images, and this will I teach while I liue. * Another ſaith: Sacras Imagines perfectè Adoro: qui verò ſecùs confitentur, eos anathematizo: I do perfectly Adore the Holy Images: and I accurſe all them that hold the contrary. Another ſaith: Non ſunt duæ Adorationes, ſed vna, Ipſius Imaginis, & primi Exemplaris, cuius eſt Imago: There be not two kindes of Adoration, but one onely, due as vnto the Image, as to the Patterne of the Image. This Holy Councell (ye ſay) decreed againſt Image-breakers: but the Councell of God decréeth againſt Image-worſhippers & Image-makers.

S. Augustine saith: Sic omnimò errare meruerunt, qui Christum & Apostolos eius non in Sanctis Codicibus, sed in Pictis Parietibus quæsierunt. Nec mirum, si a Pingentibus Fingentes decepti sunt: So were they worthy to be deceiued, that sought Christ and his Apostles not in the Bookes of holy Scripture, but in Painted Walles. Neither may wee marueill, if Fainers by Painters were deceiued. Augu. de Consen. Euangel. Lib. 1. Ca 10.

Adoring of Images.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision 3.

The Old Father Epiphanius saith: It is an horrible wickednesse, and a Sin not to be suffered, for any man to set vp any Picture in the Church of the Christians, yea though it were the Picture of Christ himselfe. Yet these men stoze al their Temples, and each cozner of them, with painted and carued Images, as though without them Religion were nothing wozth. Epiphan. in Epist. ad Iohan. Episcop. Hierosolymitan.

M. Harding.

To that ye pretend to allege out of Epiphanius, we say, first, that although he were of the minde you make him to be of, and said, as you report of him, yet is he but one man, whose singular opinion is not to be preferred before the (a) iudgement of all other so many excellent Fathers, and the determination of the whole Church. (b) Now indeed you misreport Epiphanius. For he saith not so, as you write. He calleth not the hauing of the Image of Christ, or of any Saint in the Church an horrible wickednesse, or a sinne not to be suffered: he hath no such words.

Secondly what if we say, this place maketh nothing at all against the vse of Images, and that (c) hee speaketh neuer a word against the Image of Christ, or his Saints in the Church, but only against one particular Image, which he found hanging at a Church doore in a Village of Palestine called Anablatha? And seeing he (d) speaketh not generally against all Images, but against such as that was, which there he noteth by this speciall word, Ittiusmodi Vela, veiles of this sort: he giueth vs to vnderstand, that he misliked some quality or circumstance of that one Image, and not reprooued the (e) common and receiued custome of the Church in hauing Images in due order. Now what circumstance that was, it dependeth of so many particularities, which might happen either on the Images part, as it is most like, or on the peoples part there inhabitant, and is so little declared by Epiphanius in that place, that neither we can say any thing determinately thereof, nor ye should bring such an obscure and vncertaine matter to the disproofe of a veritie alwaies so well in the Church acknowledged and practised.

(a) Vntruth. For the ancient Fathers make no mention of Images.

(b) Vntruth. For wee report him truly, as shal appeare.

(c) Vntruth. For his words bee plaine: Imaginem, quasi Christi. aut Sancti cuiusdam.

(d) A childish & a vaine shift. For Epiphanius speaketh directly against al Images.

(e) Vntruth. For Images then were not commonly receiued in the Church. Copus Dial. 5. Pag. 692.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

O how many, and how pzety shifts heere be deuised, if any would helpe to serue the purpose! One of the Late Louanian Clergie, foz that he saw these wozds were cleere, and might not be auoided by any Gloose, therefoze he thought it the wisest way, First, to bzing the Authozity and Credit hereof in question, and to say, that Epiphanius neuer wrote any such Epistle: Nert he saith; The same Epistle was neuer translated by S. Hierome: But fozasmuch as he saw, that his folly herein was open, and easie to bee controled; Thirdly he saith, that the Image that Epiphanius rent in sunder was not the Image either of Christ, oz of any Christian Saint, but the Heathen Image of Iuppiter, oz Hercules, oz some other Idoll, he knoweth not what: Fourthly he saith; The said Holy Father Epiphanius was an Heretike, one of those that were called Anthropomorphitæ, whose errour was, that God in his Diuinity, had the whole shape and pzopoztion of a Man. Howbeit, this folly farre passeth all the rest. Foz it behoued those Heretikes most of all others, foz defense of their errour, to maintaine Images. And yet it seemeth a very vnciuill part, to condemne so Reuerend and so Godly a Father of so grosse an Heresie, without pzoofe: and specially such a Father as hath so learnedly written against all Heresies: Fifthly hee saith, euen as D. Harding heere saith, Epiphanius was but a man, and one man, and his iudgement singular, and therefore the lesse to be esteemed: Last of all he saith, The same Holy Father Epiphanius was a Iew: and being a Christian, and a Reuerend Father, and a Christian Bishop, yet notwithstanding maintained the Religion of the Iewes, and therefoze rent in sunder the Image of Christ in despight of Christ. And foz pzoofe hereof he alleged, Simeon Metaphrastes, a Doctoz as wise as himselfe.

D. Harding, foz that he imagined these shifts were very vnsauoury, and would hardly serue, therefoze hath deuised to conuey himselfe out some other way. First he saith: Wee falsifie this Holy Father, and allege his words otherwise then they be. Secondly hee saith: It was not the Image of Christ that Epiphanius found painted in the Veile, but some other pzetie thing, he knoweth not what. Lastly he saith: Epiphanius reproueth not generally all such Veiles, so painted, but onely that one Veile that he found.

Foz triall hereof I referre my selfe to the Oziginall. The wozds thereof be these: Inueni ibi velum pendens in foribus eiusdem Ecclesiæ, tinctum atque depictum, & habens Imaginem, quasi Christi, aut Sancti cuiusdam. Non enim satis memini cuius Imago fuerit. Cùm ergo hoc vidissem in Ecclesia Christi, contra Authoritatem Scripturarum, Hominis pendere Epiphanius ad Iohan. Hierosolymitan, Apud Hieron. Tom. 2.

Epiphanius rent the image, &c.

pendere Imaginem, ſcidi illud, & magis dedi conſilium Cuſtodibus eiuſdem loci, vt pauperem mortuum eo obuoluerent, & efferrent, &c. Quæſo vt iubeas Presbyteros eiuſdem loci præcipere, in Eccleſia Chriſti iſtiuſmodi vela, quæ contra Religionem noſtram veniunt, non appendi: decet enim honeſtatem tuam hanc magis habere ſollicitudinem, vt ſcrupuloſitatem tollat, quæ indigna eſt Eccleſia Chriſti, & populis qui tibi crediti ſunt: I found there a Veile hanging at the entrie of the Church, ſtained and painted, and hauing the Image, as it were, of Chriſt, or of ſome Saint. For whoſe Picture it was indeed, I doe not remember. Therfore when I ſaw the Image of a man to hang in the Church of Chriſt, contrarie to the commandement of the Scriptures, I tare it in ſunder, and gaue councell to the Wardens of that Church, that they ſhould winde and bury ſome poore body in it, &c. I beſeech you, charge the Preiſts of that place, that they giue commandement, that ſuch Veiles as be contrarie to our Religion be no more hanged vp in the Church of Chriſt. It behoueth your reuerence to haue care heereof, that this Superſtition, vnmeet for the Church of Chriſt and vnmeet for the people to thee committed, be remooued. Now iudge you, M. Harding, wherein we haue falſified this learned Fathers woꝛds. You ſay, He ſpeaketh not one word againſt the Image of Chriſt, or his Saints. I beſeech you then, againſt what other Image ſpeaketh he? Epiphanius ſaith plainly, It had the Jmage, as it were, of Chriſt, or of ſome Saint. You ſay, He found fault with that Veile onely, and not with any other. Once againe, I beſeech you, tell vs, what had the Image of Chriſt, or of his Saints, offended Epiphanius moꝛe then other Images? If the Image of Chriſt may not be ſuffered in the Church of Chriſt, what Image then may bee ſuffered? What cauſe of difference can you imagine, that any other Veiles ſhould be allowed rather then this? Your anſwer is this: We cannot ſay any thing determinately thereof Whereby it appeareth, ye would faine ſay ſomewhat, if ye will what. Yet muſt wee be ouer-ruled by all and euery ſuch your determinations, yea although you your ſelfe confeſſe ye can determinately determine nothing.

Habent imaginē, quaſi Chriſti, vel Sancti cuiuſdam.

Notwithſtanding, the Ancient Fathers of the Church haue long ſithence determinately and plainely iudged againſt you. Lactantius ſaith in plaine woꝛds: Non eſt dubium, quin Religio nulla ſit, vbicunque Simulachrum eſt: Determinately and out of all doubt, there is no Religion, where ſoeuer there is an Image. Tertullian ſaith: Idolum tam fieri, quàm coli Deus prohibet. Quantò præcedit, vt fiat quod coli poſſit, tantò prius eſt, ne fiat, ſi coli non licet. Facio, ait quidam, ſed non colo: quaſi ob aliquam cauſam colere non audeat niſi ob quam & facere non debeat: Scilicet, ob Dei offenſam vtrobiquè. Imò tu colis, qui facis vt coli poſſit: God hath forbidden an Image, or an Idoll, as well to be made, as to be worſhipped. As farre as making goeth before worſhipping, ſo farre is it before, that the thing be not made that may not be worſhipped. Some man will ſay, I make it: but I worſhip it not: As though he durſt not to worſhip it for any other cauſe, but only for the ſame cauſe for which he ought not to make it. I meane both waies for Gods diſpleaſure. Nay rather thou worſhippeſt the Image, that giueſt the cauſe for others to worſhip it.

Images in Churches.

Therefoꝛe S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Image of God the Father, ſaith thus: Talem ſimulachrum Deo fingere, nefarium eſt: To deuiſe ſuch an Image for God, it is abominable.

Aug. de Fide & Symbolo. ca 7. Citatur in Cōcil. Nicen. 2. Actione. 6.

Theodorus the Biſhop of Ancyra ſaith; Sanctorum Imagines & Species ex Materialibus coloribus formari, minimè decorum putamus. Manifeſtum enim eſt, quod vana ſit huiuſmodi cogitatio, & Diabolicæ deceptionis inuentum: Wee thinke it not conuenient to paint the Images of Saints with Materiall or Earthly colours. For it is euident, that this is a vaine Imagination, and the procurement of the deceitfulneſſe of the Diuell.

To like purpoſe writeth Epiphanius: Eſtote memores, dilecti Filij, ne in Eccleſias Imagines inferatis, neque in Sanctorum Cœmiterijs eas ſtatuatis. Sed perpetuo circumferte Deum in cordibus veſtris. Quinetiam, neq; in domo communi tolerentur. Non enim fas eſt, Chriſtianum per oculos ſuſpenſum teneri, ſed per occupationem mentis: My deare Children, be ye mindefull, that ye bring no Images into the Churches, and that ye erect vp none at the burials of the Saints. But euermore carrie God in your hearts. Nay, ſuffer not Images to be, no not in your priuate houſes. For it is not lawfull to lead a Chriſtian man by his eies, but rather by the ſtudie or exerciſe of his minde.

For this cauſe Epiphanius ſaith, The Superſtition of Images is vnfit for the Church of Chriſt.

The Apology, Chap. 3. Diuiſion 4.

Origen. in Leuit. Cap. 16. Chryſ. in Matth. Homil. 2. Idē in Iob. 31.

The Old Fathers Origen and Chryſoſtome exhoꝛt the people to read the Scriptures, to buy them Books, to reaſon at home betwixt themſelues of Diuine Matters: Wiues with their Huſbands, and Parents with their Children. Theſe men condemne the Scriptures, as dead Elements, and, as much as euer they may, barre the People from them.

M. Harding

M. Harding.

(a) Partly it is true, partly falſe, that you ſay. Origen exhorteth all to reſort to the Churches in the Holy daies, and there to heare the words of God: and thereof afterward to thinke earneſtly, and to meditate on the Law of God, and to exercile their minds in it day & night, in the way, in their houſe, in their bed and when they riſe. This hold we withall, and be deſirous the (b) people beare away that the true and godly Preachers teach them in the Church, and that they thinke of it, and put it in daily practiſe of life. For elſe to what ſerueth all our preaching?

Tom. 9. in Leuit. cap. 16.

Chryſoſtome Homil. 2. in Matth ſpeaketh againſt them which contemned the Scriptures, and ſaid, they were no Monks, but had Wiues, and Children, and care of houſhold. As though it pertained not to married men to read any part thereof, but to Monkes only.

If in our time the people might be induced to read the holy Scripture, with ſuch minds, for ſuch cauſes, to ſuch intents and purpoſes only, as Chryſoſtome requireth, God forbid we ſhould by any meanes ſtay them therfrom. (c) But conſidering the maner of our time, and calling to due examination the curioſity, the temerity, the vnreuerence, the contempt of al holy things, that now all men may eſpie in the people; if we thinke it not good they be admitted to the reading of the Scriptures freely and without any limitation, howſoeuer you and your fellowes iudge of vs, we doubt not of the account we haue to make of that our meaning before our Lords dreadfull ſeat of iudgement. Now to conclude, we tel you, that you haue miſreported both Chryſoſtom, & ſpecially Origen. For howſoeuer they ſpeak of the reading & meditation of the Scriptures, for amendment of life, verily in the places by you quoted (d) they exhort not the people to reaſon and diſpute of Diuine matters among themſelues, ſpecially the Husbands with their Wiues, the Parents with their Children, as you ſay they doe.

(a) Vntruth. For the whole hereof is true: and no part falſe.

(b) O vaine excuſe! Many of your people neuer heare Sermon in all their liues.

Forasmuch as ye ſay, Part hereof is true, and part falſe, I truſt, ye will giue vs leaue frée lie to vſe the Truth, vntill ye ſhall finde your ſelfe better able to proue the Falſhood. It ſéemeth not greatly, to miſlike you, that the people haue ſome little liberty to read ſome ſuch part of the Scriptures as you may beſt ſpare them, for the ordering of their liues. Whereby it appeareth, that for quieting of their Conſciences in matters of Religion, and cauſes of Truth, ye thinke it beſt, they read nothing. And this (ye ſay) yee are able to anſwer before the dreadfull Seat of Gods iudgement. Touching the truth hereof, to ſay ſo much as might be ſaid, it would require great waſte time. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Si deſit, aut ignoretur, quà eundum ſit, quid prodeſt noſſe, quò eundum ſit? If we haue not, or know not what way to goe, what ſhall it profit you to know whither to goe? S. Hierome ſaith: Vt maius eſt voluntatem Domini facere, quam noſſe, ita priùs eſt noſſe, quàm facere. Illud merito præcedit: Hoc ordine: As it is more to doe the will of our Lord, then to know it: ſo the Knowledge of the ſame goeth before the doing. In goodneſſe Doing goeth before: In order, Knowing. Againe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Si Scripturas Diuinas aut non Legimus ipſi, aut legentes alios non libenter audimus, ipſa nobis Medicamenta conuertuntur in Vulnera: & inde habebimus Iudicium, vnde potuimus habere Remedium: If we either read not the Scriptures our ſelues, or bee not deſirous to heare others read them, then are our Medicines turned into Wounds: and then where wee might haue had Remedy, wee ſhall haue Iudgement. Such ſayings are common and ordinarie in S. Chryſoſtome. Thus hee ſaith: Librum Diuinum accipiat aliquis in manum: conuocatiſque proximis, per Diuina Eloquia riget & ſuam mentem, & conuenientium, vt ſic Diabolicas inſidias effugere valeamus: Let one of you take in hand the Holy Booke: and let him call his Neighbours about him: and by the Heauenly Words let him water and refreſh both their mindes, and alſo his owne. Againe he ſaith: Poterimus & domi verſantes, ante & poſt Conuiuium, acceptis in manus Diuinis Libris, vtilitatem inde capere, & Spiritualem Cibum animæ præbere: Being at home we may both before, and after meat, take the Holy Bookes in hand, and thereof receiue great profit, and miniſter ſpirituall food vnto our Soule. And againe: Etiam domi vacemus Diuinarum Scripturarum lectioni: Euen when we be at home, let vs beſtow our time in reading the Scriptures.

Cyprian. Epist. 11. Lib. 1. Epiphan. contra Apostolicos, Heref. 61. Hieronym. ad Demetriadem. Augu. de Bono Vidut. ca. 10.

The Ancient Fathers Cyprian, Epiphanius, and Hierome, say, For one who perchance hath made a Vow to lead a sole life, and afterward liueth vnchastely & cannot quench the flames of lust, it is better to marry a Wife, and to liue honestly in Wedlocke. And the Old Father Augustine iudgeth the selfe same Marriage to be good, and perfect, and that it ought not to be broken againe. These men, if a man haue once bound himselfe by a Vow, though afterward he burne, keepe Queanes, and defile himselfe with neuer so sinful and desperate a life, yet they suffer not that person to marry a wife: or if hee chance to marry, they allow it not for Mariage. And they commonly teach, It is much better and more godly to keepe a Concubine, or an Harlot, then to liue in that kinde of Marriage.

Aug. ad Ianuar. Epist. 118.

The Old Father S. Augustin complaineth of the Multitude of vain Ceremonies, wherewith he euen then saw mens Minds and Consciences ouercharged: These men, as though God regarded nothing else but their Ceremonies, haue so out of measure increased them, that there is now almost none other thing left in their Churches, & places of Prayer.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

In the 2. part, 8. Chap. 1. Diuis. And 2. part, 17. Chapter, 1. Diuision.

All that M. Harding hath heere to say, hath beene both alleged, and also fully answered before in a place more conuenient.

The Apology, Chap. 3. Diuision 5.

Again, that Old Father S. Augustine denieth it to be lawful for a Monk to spend his time slothfully in Idlenesse, and, vnder a pretensed & counterfet Holinesse, to liue all vpon others. And who so thus liueth, the Old Father Apollonius likneth him to a Theefe. These men haue (I wot not whether to cal them Droues, or Heards of Monks) who for all that they do nothing, nor yet once intend to beare any shew of Holinesse, yet liue they not only vpon others, but also riot lauishly of other folks labors.

(a) But S. Augustine calleth it worse then idlenesse.

(b) As though Christs rule were lost, or were not sufficient.

M. Harding.

(a) We doe not maintaine, that a Monke should liue idly. But we reproue you for accounting the Seruice of God, Idlenesse. Neither is that the thing only which ye can alleage in defence of that your Brethren haue done to Monasteries in the Countries, where your Gospel proceedeth. For ye haue required not only such Monkes as were proued idle, but al Monks generally that would serue God according to that Vow which they made vnder the (b) approued rule of S. Benedict, S. Augustine, S. Francis, S. Dominicke, or of any other. You say, wee haue Droues and Heards of Monkes, thereby signifying, they are beasts beasts rather then men. Whereas S. Augustine calleth them Seruos Dei, the Seruants of God, in that verie worke which you allege.

Sith that our Monks (I meane al Religious men) serued the Altar, and were appointed to Preach, Ministre the Sacraments and bestow their time in praier for their owne infirmities, and for the sins of the people: (c) by the Doctrine of S. Augustine, they are not bound to labor, as they who for sowing spiritual all things to the behoofe of others, may reape their temporal things to their own necessary sustenance.

(c) Vntruth, plaine contrary to S. Augustine.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Monks (ye say) be Gods Seruants: and Monkes life is the Seruice of God. And herein yee vse such earnest talke as though, if the whole generation of Monkes were remoued, God should sit without Seruice. Indeed S. Augustine shewing vs what good Seruice the Monks of his time did vnto God, saith thus: Isti non Deo seruiunt, sed suo ventri: These Monks serue not God, they serue their bellies. Againe he saith: Tactantia eo est periculosior, quo sub nomine Seruitutis Dei decipit: Hypocrisie or vanting of Holinesse is the more dangerous, for that it deceiueth vs vnder the name of Gods Seruice. Againe he saith: Fallit Dolosa imagine Sanctitatis: It deceiueth vs by the deceitfull countenance or Image of holinesse. Againe, touching these Monks he saith: Non apparet vtrum ex proposito Seruitutis Dei venerint, an vitam inopem, & laboriosam fugientes, vacui pasci, & vestiri voluerint: We cannot tell whether they became Monks for purpose to serue God, or else being weary of their poore and painefull life, were rather desirous to be fed and clothed doing nothing. And therefore he calleth the Almouse that they get, Sumptus lucrosæ egestatis: & simulatæ prerium sanctitatis: The charges of gainefull pouerty: and the price of fained holinesse. Againe he saith: Venalem circumferunt Hypocrisim: They carrie their Hypocrisie about to sale.

S. Hilary speaking of the same kinde of holy people, saith thus: Conuiuia sub obtentu Religionis sumptuosa sectantur. Apothecas suas inutili Religiosorum obsequio defendunt: de quibus Scriptum est, Comedentes domos Viduarum. Etiamsi Dominum se credant inuocare, tamen audient, quod est in Euangelio, scimus quia peccatores Deus non audit: Vnder the colour of Holinesse, they seeke for dainty and costly fare: They maintaine their storehouses by the vnprofitable seruice of Religious people: of whom it is written: They deuoure vp poore Widowes houses. Although they thinke they serue God, yet the same answer shall be made them, that is written in the Gospell, We know that God giueth no care to sinners. Vpon these words of the Gospel: Sell all that thou hast, and giue it to the poore, and come and follow me; your very Ordinary Glosse saith thus: Bene operando, non mendicando: Follow me in wel-doing, not in begging.

Hilar. in Psalmum. 52. Matth. 23. Iohn 9. Luke 19. Matth. 18.

And lest ye should thinke we speake onely of old forren faults, and that all such things sithence those daies haue béene reformed, Nicolaus Cusanus a Cardinall of Rome, one of your New Doctours, saith: Vix fallacia illorum, qui sub habitu Christi apparent, potest sciri ob suam varietatem. Nam alius quidem sub hac veste, alius sub capitio, alius sub hoc Religionis signo, alius sub alio, Christo se militare asserit: Licèt pene omnes, non quæ Christi, sed quæ sua sunt, quærant. Omnes enim student auaritiæ à maximo vsque ad minimum. Et in his omnibus Vna Doctrina comperit eorum fallaciam: scilicet, Ex fructibus eorum cognoscetis eos: The deceitfulnesse of them that shew themselues vnder the apparell of Christ, because of their variety can hardly be known. For one of them saith, He serueth Christ vnder one weed, another vnder another: One vnder a Hood, another vnder the badge of Religion, another vnder another. Notwithstanding they all for the most part seeke their owne, and not the things that pertaine to Christ Iesus. For they are all giuen to couetousnesse from the most to the least. And yet in all these diuersities, by this marke or Doctrine ye may deserie their falshood, By their works ye shall know them.

Nicol. Cusanus Excitat. lib. 7. Moneta.

We grant, the seruice of God may not rightly be called Idlenesse. But what if S. Bernard say of your Monks: Serui Christi, seruiunt Antichristo: They pretend Christs Seruice and serue Antichrist? For where did God euer require you to do him such Seruice? S. Hierome saith of them: In statu seruili & abiectionis esse abhorrent. Laborare recusant præpigritia: Mendicare erubescunt validi: quia nihil daretur eis: They are loth to be abiects and in seruile state. For Idlenesse they will not labour: and to beg they are ashamed. For being valiant and lusty people, no man would giue them any thing. Likewise saith S. Augustine: Tanquam Conseruatricem Euangelij prædicant pigritiam: They speake much of their Idlenesse, as if it were the Keepe and Castle of the Gospell. Againe he saith: Contingit eis, quod in viduis iunioribus indisciplinatis cauendum Apostolus dicit: Simul & otiosæ esse discunt: non solùm autem otiosæ, sed & curiosæ, & verbosæ, loquentes quæ non oportet: The same thing happeneth vnto them, that S. Paul speaketh of yong Widowes, liuing out of order: they learne to be idle: and not only idle but also curious, and full of words, speaking such things as are not meet. Thus ye see M. Harding, that this pretence and colour of Gods Seruice hath oftentimes of the ancient Fathers beene called Idlenesse.

Monkes Bodily labour.

Ye say, Monkes now Serue the Altar and Minister Sacraments: and therefore are not bound to bodily labour. This is a faire colour to shadow their Idlenesse. For who euer bade Monkes to Serue the Altar, or gaue them authority to Minister Sacraments? What Doctor? What Father? What ancient Councell? In Old times it was not lawfull for a Monke to be a Priest. S. Gregory saith: Nemo potest Ecclesiasticis Officijs deseruire, & in Monastica Regula ordinatè persistere: No man can serue the Ecclesiastical Office, and orderly keepe the Rule of Monkerie. And S. Hierome saith: Monachus, non Docentis, sed Plangentis habet officium: A Monkes Office is not to Preach but to Mourne. Againe he saith: Alia causa est Monachi, alia Clerici: Clerici Oues pascunt: Ego pascor: The state of a Monke is one thing, and the state of a Priest is another. Priests feed the Flocke: I (being a Monke) must bee fed. Whereupon the Glosse saith: Ego pascor Sacramentis ipsorum: I am fed with the Sacraments of the Priests. Whereby it is euident, that the Monke himselfe had no authority to Minister Sacraments, no not so much as priuately to himselfe. But touching Bodily labour, S. Hierome saith, This was holden as a Law among the Monkes in Ægypt, that who so would not labour, should not eat.

Of such idle Monkes, S. Augustine saith: Isti manus otiosas, & repositoria plena habere Volunt: These Monkes will haue Idle hands and full Cellars. A learned Father was wont to say by the report of Socrates: A Monke that laboureth not with his hands may bee resembled vnto a Theefe. S. Aug. de Opere Monach. ca. 28

The first Suppressors of Monasteries within this Realme, in our memorie, were two of your dearest friends, Cardinall Woulsee, and Doctor Fisher, the Bishop of Rochester: either of them well warranted thereto by the authority of the Pope. Long before that time, the godly learned Bishop Letoius ouerthrew and burnt the Messalians Monasteries and said they were dens of Theeues: and as Theodoretus reporteth, chased the Woolues away from the Fold.

Theodoretus, lib. 4 cap. 11. σπήλαια λῃστῶν. Τὰ λοιπὰ ἐκ τῆς συμπεῖξάμεν.

Of late yeeres, sundry of the Cardinals of Rome, amongst whom also was Cardinall Poole, being specially appointed in Commission by Pope Paulus 3. to view the disorders, and deformities of the Church, returned their answer in this sort: Alius abusus corrigendus est in Ordinibus Religiosorum: quòd adeò multi deformati sunt, vt magno sint scandalo Sæcularibus, exemploque plurimùm noceant. Conuentuales ordines Abolendos esse putamus omnes: Another abuse there is to be reformed in the Orders of Monks and Friers. For many of them are so vile, that they are a shame vnto the Seculars: and with their example doe much ill. As for Conuentuall Orders we thinke it good they be all abolished.

Concil. Tom. 3. Con. Delectorum Cardinal. pag. 822.

This, M. Harding, was the iudgement of your own friends. And therefore ye haue the lesse cause to be offended with the suppressing of Abbies. For your own deare Catholike Fathers, Cardinall Woulsee, Cardinall Poole, Doctor Fisher, and others, partly haue suppressed them, themselues, and partly haue consented vnto the same. In the Booke called Opus Tripartitum, ioined vnto the Councell of Lateran, it is written thus: Totus ferè mundus obloquitur, & Scandalizatur de tanta multitudine Religiosorum Pauperum, qui introierunt in Mundum: Welneere the whole World crieth against, and is offended for so great a multitude of begging Monks and Friers that are entred into the World.

Concil. Lateran. Sub Innocent. 3. cap. 13.

Therefore was this Decree published in the Councell of Lateran: Ne nimia Religiosorum diuersitas grauem in Ecclesiam Dei offensionem inducat, firmiter prohibemus: ne quis de cætero Nouam Religionem inueniat: Lest ouer great diuersitie of Religious folke bring great offence into the Church of God, we doe earnestly forbid, that from henceforth no man deuise any New Religion. Thus it appeareth, your Pope himselfe and his Cardinals were so wearied and accloied with multitudes of Monkes, that they would haue them increase no further. Damasus speaking of the order of them, that were called Chorepiscopi, saith thus: Vnde iste Tertius ordo processerit, ignoramus: & quod ratione caret, extirpari necesse est: From whence this third order is come we cannot tell. And the thing that wanteth reason, must needs be taken vp by the roots.

M. Harding.

(a) We find no such Canon in the old Roman Councels. Your allegations noted in the margin bee false for the most part, as your Doctrine is. Yet find we that Nicolaus and Alexander Popes haue willed no man to heare the Masse of that Priest, whom he knoweth vndoubtedly to keepe a Concubine. (b) But wise men in the Law thinke only that to be an vndoubted knowledge, when either the Iudge hath by open sentence published such a man to keepe a Concubine, or the fact it selfe is notorious. (c) Whereas you say, we let Concubines out to farme to our Priests, it is meet for you to say it, because it is false and slanderous. (d) Neither was euer any man, or at this day is driuen to heare his Masse, who keepeth a Concubine. For if he will take vpon him to prooue any Priest to keepe a Concubine, himselfe not being so infamous, as he may not stand in iudgement, it is certaine, he shall be heard. If hee cannot prooue it, then is not he out of doubt by order of Law, that this Priest keepeth a Concubine, & therefore he is bound as other Christian people be, to heare his Masse. (e) Which is no sacrilege as your sacrilegious heart thinketh, and blasphemous tongue vttereth, but the blessed & holy Sacrifice, which Christ made at his last Supper.

If it had pleased you better to haue perused your Bookes, ye might some haue found these selfe same words in the Councell of Rome, holden there vnder Pope Nicolas the second. Which, although it be not so old, as may be compared with the ancient Fathers Councels, yet it is elder then some parts and branches of your New Religion. To like purpose writeth Pope Zacharie: Quis sapiens iudicabit eos esse Sacerdotes, qui nec à Fornicationibus abstinent: What wise man will reckon them to be Priests that abstaine not so much as from Fornication? If no wise man can iudge them to be Priests, what man then is he that will authorize them to Minister Sacraments?

Now of the other side, M. Harding, consider you the common and ordinarie practise of your Church of Rome. First, touching the Pope himselfe, your Glosse saith: Factà Papæ excusantur, vt Adulterium Iacob: The Popes doings (or Aduouteries) are excused as the Aduouterie of Iacob. And againe: Communiter dicitur, quòd pro Simplici Fornicatione quis deponi non debet: cùm pauci sine illo vitio inueniantur: It is commonly said, that a man may not be deposed or depriued for Simple Fornication: for asmuch as few (Priests) be found without that fault.

Againe whereas the words of the Decree are these: Nullus audiat Missam Presbyteri, quem scit Concubinam indubitanter habere. Let no man hear the Masse of that Priest, whom he vndoubtedly knoweth to keepe a Concubine; the Glosse vpon the same saith thus: Hic Canon quandoq; fuit latæ Sententiæ: Sed hodiè non est: This Decree in old times stood as a ruled case: but now it is not so. Ideo licèt notoria sit Fornicatio, tamen non est propter eam abstinendum ab officijs Presbyterorum: And therefore although the Fornication be notoriously knowen, yet may we not therefore refraine from the Seruice of the Priest.

Hereunto very wel agreeth the Glosse vpon Othoes Legantines: Quid ergo si Sacerdos inueniatur coire cum muliere? Respondeo: adhuc dicitur occultum: nec propter hoc debet eum vitare in publico, nisi aliter Conuincatur: What if a man finde the Priest in the manner with a woman? I answer: All that notwithstanding, the fault is priuie. Neither may a man therefore auoid that Priests Seruice, vnlesse he be otherwise conuicted.

De Concubinis Clericor. remouendis. Licet ad prælig. andum.

And againe in the same Glosse vpon these words: Qui publicè detinet Concubinas, it is noted thus: Tu dic publicè, quando multitudini se patere non expauet. Secùs ergo, si secretè intra domum propriam, vel alienam detineat hanc Concubinam. Nam tunc pœnam huius Constitutionis non incurret. Domus enim rem secretam, non autem publicam denotat: By this word Openly, vnderstand thou, If he be not afraid lest the World espie him. Therefore he is otherwise, if he keepe the same Concubine secretly whether it be in his own house or in some other mans. For then he is not within the danger of this Law. For a house betokeneth a thing to be Secret, and not open.

Glossa in eundem titulum.

By this fauourable and gentle Construction, vnlesse the Priest keepe his woman openly in the Market place, he is without all danger of Lawes and Canons, and we may not refraine to heare his Seruice.

It is no Sacrilege (you say) but the Blessed and Holy Sacrifice. Hereto I may answer you with the the words of S. Augustine: Quæ sunt Sacrilegia, si illa erant Sacra? Aut quæ Inquinatio, si illa Lauatio? What is Sacrilege, if this be a Sacrifice? Or what is staining, if this be washing? Verily your owne Pope Hildebrand hereof writeth thus: Imperamus vobis, ne eorum Officia, Orationes, & Cultus audiatis. Quia Benedictio eorum vertitur in Maledictionem, & Oratio in Peccatum: Testante Domino per Prophetam, Maledicam Benedictionibus vestris. Qui verò huic Saluberrimo præcepto obedire noluerint, Idololatriæ pœnam incurrent: We command you, that you heare neither their Offices, nor their Praiers, nor their Seruice. For their Blessing is turned into Cursing, and their Praier into Sinne. As the Lord himselfe witnesseth by the Prophet: I will curse your blessings, saith the Lord. And whosoeuer will not obey this wholesome Commandement, he shall fall into the paine of Idolatry. Iudge ye now M. Harding, whether this be Sacrilege, as ye say, or as you say, a Blessed and a holy Sacrifice. If it be a Sacrifice, if it be Blessed, if it be Holy, why should he be accursed, as an Idolatour that will come vnto it?

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision 7.

The Old Canons of the Apostles command, that Bishop to bee remoued from his Office, which will supply the place both of a Ciuill Magistrate, and also of an Ecclesiasticall person. These men for all that, both doe and will needs serue both places. Nay rather, the one office, which they ought chiefly to execute, they once touch not: and yet no body commandeth them to be displaced.

M. Harding.

* Vntruth, vaine aboue measure. For it was not vnseemly for Christs Apostles to be married

* S. Paul speaketh thus, not onely of Priests but also of euery priuate Christian man.

If we ought to sticke at any one certaine worldly businesse, * which may seem vnseemly for a Bishop or a Priest, as too base for his dignity and too much hinderance to his vocation, vndoubtedly marriage is of that sort. Whom may we better credit for this case, then S. Paul? * He that is without a wife (saith he) is carefull for the things that be of our Lord, how he may please God. But he that is coupled with a wife, is carefull about the things, which are of the world and is deuided.

But with our fleshly Ministers, this businesse is not fleshly and worldly at all, but altogether spirituall, because their spirit is wholly occupied therein.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Ambr. Cor. 11.

Matrimony chaste and Pure.

Heb. 13.

Rom. 8.

Christ thought so little hinderance to be in Marriage towards the preaching of the Gospell, that of his twelue Apostles he chose eleuen that were married. So S. Ambrose saith as it is alleged before: Apostoli omnes, exceptis Iohanne & Paulo, Vxores habuerunt All the Apostles had Wiues, sauing only S. Iohn and S. Paul.

But ye say, With our fleshly Ministers, this businesse is not fleshly, but altogether Spirituall: because their Spirit is wholly occupied therein. It pitieth me, M. Harding, to see you so vainely to bestow your Spirituall Cogitations. Matrimony is Gods ordinance. God neuer ordained man to liue in villany and filthinesse. S. Paul saith: Matrimony is honourable in all men, (as well in Priests as in others) and the bed vndefiled. But Aduouterers and Fornicatours the Lord himselfe will iudge. And againe writing vnto the Married people of Rome he saith: Vos non estis in Carne, sed in Spiritu: You are not in the Flesh, but in the Spirit. They were married and liued in the Lawes of Marriage. Yet S. Paul saith: They were not in the Flesh, but in the Spirit.

Aug de Bono coniugal. ca. 11 Origen. in epist. ad Rom. ca. 12. Chrys. ad Hebr. homil. 57.

S. Augustine saith: Sancta sunt etiam Corpora Coniugatorum, Fidem sibi, & Domino seruantium: The Bodies of Married people, keeping faith both to themselues, and to the Lord are cleane and holy. Origen saith: Non solùm virgines, aut Continentes, offerunt, Corpora sua Hostiam Sanctam: Not onely Virgins or others, that liue in Single Life, (but also Married folkes) offer vp their Bodies a holy Sacrifice. Chrysostome saith: Sanctificationem Paulus vocat Pudicitiam & Temperantiam Coniugalem: The honest Chastity and Temperance that is betweene Man and Wife, S. Paul calleth Holinesse. And againe: Carent Culpa Nuptiæ, nec à Virtute quicquam prohibent: Marriage is void of fault: and is no hinderance vnto vertue.

Hereof we haue spoken before more at large. But touching the chast life of your Spirituall Clergie, M. Harding, as sundry your owne friends haue recorded, and as the whole world is well able to iudge, it is nothing else, but a spirituall filthinesse.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision. 8.

The Old Councel of Gangra commandeth, that none should make such difference betweene an Vnmarried Priest, & a Married Priest, as to thinke the one one more holy then the other for Single Lifes sake. These men put such a difference between them, that they straightway thinke all their Holy Seruice to be defiled, if it be done by a good and honest man that hath a wife.

Marriage in Priesthood.

M. Harding.

It was not for your purpose, Sirs, to vse true dealing, and to allege the words as they are in that old Councel. For they speake of an (a) external Sacrifice (b) which the Church calleth the Masse. The same it behoued you to dissemble, lest ye bewrayed your cause. The words be these: If any man make a difference of a Priest, who hath beene married, as though when he sacrificeth, a man might not communicate with his oblation, be he accursed. Those Fathers spake euidently of a Priest, who hath sometime been married, that is to say, before his Priesthood. (c) For after Priesthood it was neuer heard sithence the time of Christ, that any Priest might marry by the Law either of the Greek or of the Latine Church. We therefore condemne the marriages of Priests, which be made after the taking of Holy Orders, and say, that he is no good & honest man, but an incestuous aduouterer, that marrieth afterward.

Canon. 4.

(a) Vntruth, fond and peeuish. For this word External, is not once named in all that Councel.

(b) The Councel of Gangra neuer once named the Masse.

(c) Vntruth, so vaine, that I marueil M. Hard. can report it without blushing. Chrys. ad Hebr. homil. 17 Hoc Sacrificium exemplar. illius est. Magis Recordationem Sacrificij. operamur. Plutarchus in Romulo. Alexander ab Alexandro. Pachymeres: λειτουργὸς λέγεται διακόνος καὶ τὸν τῶν ὑποδιακόνων λεγόμενος. Rom. 13. Actor. 13. Chrys. in Act. homil. 27.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

To answer all your trifles, M. Harding, it were too long. We refuse not the names of Oblation or Sacrifice. We know, that the Holy Ministration is commonly so called by the ancient Fathers: for that, as Chrysostome saith, it is the Memory, the Remembrance the Samplar, the Token of that one Sacrifice, that Christ once offered in his Body vpon the Crosse. Howbeit, the reason hereof, that ye would seeme to wrest out of the Greeke word λειτουργήσωσιν αὐτῷ, is very simple and bewraieth in you, either want of skill, or great corruption. For being learned in the Greeke tongue, ye must néeds know, that λειτουργία signifieth not a Sacrifice, but a Ministerie or publike Seruice. Plutarchus saith thus: Lictores, quasi Litores dicebantur, quòd essent λειτουργοὶ. Δοῦλοι γὰρ τοῦ λαοῦ, ἢ τοῦ δήμου ἐν χερσὶ τὸν ὠμὸν ὑπομαίζουσι. Hereby it appeareth, that the common Hangman of the City was called λειτουργὸς, and his office λειτουργία: Which I trow, M. Harding, ye would not haue to be called a Sacrificer, and a Sacrifice. Pachymeres in his Annotations vpon Dionysius saith thus: λειτουργούς, appellat Diaconos, aut eos, qui nunc Hypodiaconi appellantur: He calleth them λειτουργούς, that are called Deacons or Subdeacons. S. Paul speaking of Kings and Ciuill Princes, saith: λειτουργοὶ θεοῦ εἰσι: λειτουργοὶ, aut Ministri Dei sunt: I reckon ye will not say, that either Deacons or Subdeacons, or Kings, or Princes had authority to Minister the Holy Communion, or as you say, To offer vp the Daily Sacrifice. Whereas S. Luke saith, λειτουργούντων αὐτῶν, Ministrantibus illis: Chrysostome demandeth this question: Quid est Ministrantibus, λειτουργοῦσιν? He answereth, Prædicantibus. Whereby it appeareth, that the Apostles Sacrificing, was their Preaching. It had béene ouermuch vanity to note these things, had not your vaine quarrell giuen the occasion. Certainely there is no mention in the said Councell of Gangra, either of your Masse, or of your External Sacrifice.

After Priesthood (ye say) it was neuer heard sithence the time of Christ, that any Priest might Marry by the Law, either of the Greek, or of the Latine Church. This warrant were vndoubtedly good, if euery your word were a Gospell. But what if your owne Glosse, that is to say, the very ground and Mother of your Diuinity, stand against you, and say, Ye warrant vnwisely, or if that mislike you, vnaduisedly, ye know not what? Verily, vpon the Popes owne Decrees ye shall finde it noted thus: Multi ex hac Litera dixerunt, quòd Orientales possunt contrahere in Sacris Ordinibus: Of these words many haue gathered, that the Priests of the East Church may Marry, being within holy Orders. Nicephorus saith, that Eupsychius, being a Priest, and the Bishop of Cæsaria in Cappadocia, married a Wife a little before that he was Martyred. The like he séemeth to write of Apollinaris the Elder, that being a Priest, married a Wife at Laodicea.

Here, M. Harding will answer vs boldly, as he hath done before, that this Eupsychius was neither Bishop nor Priest, but only a Gentleman of noble parentage: and for proofe thereof he will allege Sozomenus and Nicephorus. But let him read the Second Councell of Nice: there shall he finde that the same Eupsychius is called Eupsychius Presbyter: Eupsychius the Priest: Let him read the ancient learned Father Athanasius: there shall he finde that the same Eupsychius is called Episcopus Cappadociæ: The Bishop of Cæsaria in Cappadocia: Thus shall M. Harding finde, that Eupsychius was both a Priest, and a Bishop too. And I speake of the same Eupsychius the Martyr, and of none other. Therefore, good Reader, it may please thée to tell M. Harding, He deserueth small credit in his answer, that will aduenture to answer before he know.

But certainely that is a seldome thing and very hard.* He saith, Marriage may be taken or chosen: And thus he speaketh namely of the Marriage of Priests and Bishops.

M. Harding fol. 305. a.

Addition. ☞ Whereas M. Iewel beareth thee in hand, that Chrysostome saith, Marriage may be taken or chosen, and that of Priests and Bishops, for of their Marriage he speaketh, saith this man, all this is false. For first, vnderstand thou, this sentence is not in Chrysostome at all: not in the Greeke, I say, in which tongue only he wrote. For I haue seene the Greeke and diligently conferred it my selfe. But it is added vnto his text, either by the translation, or by falshood vsed at the Printing, as in these corrupt times false Printers haue corrupted many bookes of the Old Fathers. Againe, these words are not spoken specially of Priests Marriage, but generally and indefinitely of all Marriage. The Answer. I say, Chrysostome speaketh these words namely of the Marriage of Priests and Bishops. M. Harding, answereth me gently, as his maner is, All this is false. Gentle Reader, I beseech thee, if thou be able, consider the whole place of Chrysostome, and weigh well the causes of his writing: so shalt thou be able indifferently to iudge, whether M. Harding or I, haue dealt vntruly. First of all Chrysostome expoundeth these words of S. Paul, A Bishop must be the Husband of one Wife. This is the ground of the rest that followeth. And speaking hereof vnto the people, he saith thus: Cur non ait Paulus, Oportet Episcopum Angelum esse &c. Why did not S. Paul say, A Bishop must be an Angel, subiect to no infirmity or affection, or vice of man? &c. Why did he not say, A Bishop must goe out of the world, and be aboue all the cares of this life? &c. He answereth, Lest the Ministery of the Church should be forsaken, S. Paul required not in a Bishop that vertue (of Chastity) that is so high & so heauenly, but another Vertue that is meane and reasonable, lest the Church should be left without Bishops.

To be short, in that very same place, Chrysostome aboue foure and twenty times hath the expresse names of Priest and Bishop. And yet must we beleeue M. Harding only vpon his word, that Chrysostome speaketh these things, only of the Marriage of all men in generall: and not one word specially of the Marriage of Priests. Now forasmuch as M. Harding telleth vs, All this is false, Iudge thou, good Reader, betweene vs both, in whether of vs is the Falshood. And as thou findest him herein, so thinke of the rest of all his dealings.

M. Harding fol. 305. b.

These words are not in the Greeke, I haue conferred it: it is falshood vsed at the Printing: false Printers haue corrupted many Bookes. The Answer. What Printers, M. Harding? What were their names? Where dwelt they? What did they? Will you pronounce your sentence of Condemnation against them al, not knowing, neither against whom, nor against how many, nor wherefore? You say, Ye find not these words in the Greeke. But what if your Greeke Bookes be corrupted? as indeed they are in sundry places. Certainely all the Latine translations, that I haue seene, either Printed or Written, or Old or New, haue this whole place euen word by word, as I haue alleged it. But because you thinke the Greeke is best able to direct you, I will find you also the like sentence in Chrysostome in the Greeke. These be his words: Matrimonium non solùm nihil obstat ad Philosophandum Deo, si voluerimus esse sobrij, sed etiam magnam adfert consolationem: Marriage not only hindereth vs nothing from the seruice of God, if we will be sober, but also bringeth vs great comfort. These words both beare the same sense, and also are found in the Greeke. You may conferre them at your pleasure.

Chrys. in Genesin. homil. 21.

You say, although it be thus written, Marriage may so be taken that it shall be no let vnto perfect life, yet it followeth in the same sentence, But certainly that is a thing very seldome, and of great difficulty. All this, M. Harding, you your selfe haue already answered. For you say, It is not in the Greek, & therfore no part of Chrysostome, but shifted in by the falshood of the Printers. This is your answer, it may well be taken against your selfe. I grant, there be many impediments in Wife, Children, Seruants, Family and worldly cares. But marke your vneuen and partiall dealing. The same Chrysostome, euen in the same sentence, saith thus: Abundance of Riches doth hardly bring a man into the Kingdome of Heauen: yet oftentimes many rich men haue entred into it: so also doth Marriage. As Marriage hindereth, so do Riches: and no more the one, then the other. Christ calleth riches Thornes and Brambles. I do not remember, that euer of Marriage he said the like. Yet the Pope reſtraineth his Prieſts only from Marriage, and alloweth them Benefices, Prebends, Abbies, Biſhopricks vpon Biſhopricks, with Money and Treaſure, as much as they liſt, and thinketh it no hinderance to perfect Life.

Eraſmus ſaith: The Prieſts of the Greeke Church this day, notwithſtanding their Orders, marry Wiues. The like writeth Cornelius Agrippa againſt the Louanians Your owne Gloſſe vpon the Decrees, as I haue alleged before, noteth thus: Dicunt quòd olim Sacerdotes poterant contrahere, ante Siricium: They ſay, that in old times, before Pope Siricius, it was lawfull for Prieſts to contract Matrimonie. Likewiſe Cardinall Caietane ſaith: Nec Ratione, nec Authoritate probari poteſt, quòd abſolutè loquendo, Sacerdos peccet contrahendo Matrimonium: It cannot be proued, neither by Reaſon, nor by Authority, ſpeaking abſolutely, that a Prieſt offendeth God in marrying a Wife.

Eraſm contra Bedã, pag. 197. Cornel. Agrip. contra Louanien. Artic. 18. Diſt. 84. Cùm in præteritu, In Gloſſa. Caietan. in Quodlibetis.

How could he haue ſaid thus, if he had thought the Vow of Chaſtitie had bẽ annexed of neceſſity to the Order of Prieſthood?

Addition. ☞ Addition. Cardinall Caietane hath his errors. We are not bound to maintaine whatſoeuer he ſaith, &c. Like as the Order or habit of Monkes hath Chaſtity annexed vnto it, and therefore hee that receiueth it, is ſaid thereby to make a Vow conſequently; euen ſo Holy Order in the Weſt Church hath Chaſtity annexed inſeparablie, &c. The Anſwer. Here is hard ſhift, M. Harding. Muſt theſe matters be proued by Friers Weedes, and Monkes Cowles: In the Weſt Church (you ſay) Chaſtity is inſeparably annexed vnto Prieſthood. I trow, you meane not true Chaſtitie indeed, but onely the promiſe and vow of Chaſtitie. For otherwiſe both Eaſt and Weſt may ſee by your Concubines, and other practiſes, that your Prieſthood and Chaſtity may well goe aſunder. But if the Vow of Chaſtitie bee neceſſarily annexed vnto Prieſthood, as you haue told vs, why ſpeake you then more of the Weſt Church, then of the Eaſt? Is their Prieſthood and yours of ſundry natures? Why ſhould you thus peſter the World with ſo much vanitie? Once againe I ſaie, If the Vow of Chaſtitie be neceſſarily annexed to the Order of Prieſthood, how can Cardinall Caietane ſay, It cannot bee proued, neither by Reaſon, nor by Authority, ſpeaking abſolutly, that a Prieſt offendeth God in marrying a Wife?

M. Harding fol 307. b.

Marriage in Prieſthood.

So likewiſe ſaith Anſelmus in a Dialogue betweene the Maſter and the Scholar, touching theſe matters: Deſideramus certificari tua Solutione ſuper vulgari in toto orbe quæſtione, quæ ab omnibus penè quotidiè ventilatur, & adhuc lis indiſcuſſa celatur, Scilicet, An liceat Presbyteris, poſt acceptum Ordinem, Vxores ducere: Wee are deſirous by your Anſwer to be certified about this common queſtion, that is now toſſed thorow the world, and as yet lieth vndiſcuſſed, I meane, Whether a Prieſt, being within Orders may marry a Wife. Hereby it appeareth, that in the time of Anſelmus, which was about a thouſand yeeres after Chriſt, This matter lay in queſtion and was not yet diſcuſſed.

Anſelm. Dial. Inquiſitione prima.

Addition. ☞ Addition. Anſelme wrote three Dialogues, in which he maketh the Maſter and the Scholar to talke together. Moe Dialogues he neuer wrote, that may appeare by the Works that are printed in his name: and in theſe there is no ſuch Dialogue touching theſe matters. There is no ſuch thing at all among all his Dialogues. Whether Frier Ball, or Illyricus or ſome other gatherer of rifraffe haue deceiued you, or your ſelfe haue vſed your owne inuention (I will not call it plaine lying) I know not. The Anſwer. And will you not call it plaine lying, M. Harding? There is the more courteſie in your dealing. Such talke becommeth you ſo well, as nothing better. It is your maner to preſume boldly before you know. Certainly there is ſuch a Dialogue of Anſelmus: There is ſuch a Dialogue. And although you ſaw it neuer, yet haue I ſeene it. And if any your friend, for his better ſatisfaction, ſhall deſire the ſight thereof, I am able to helpe him. If ye reſt only vpon the credit of Printed Bookes, yee may ſoone bee deceiued. For there are ſundry Bookes written by Anſelmus, that neuer were printed. Abbas Trithemius, after he had made a long rehearſall of his Bookes, in the end ſaith thus: Alia plura ſcripſiſſe dicitur, quæ ad notitiam meam non venerunt: Anſelmus hath alſo written many other Bookes, which neuer came to my knowledge.

M. Harding. fol. 308. a. b.

Trithemius, de Scriptoribus. Eccleſiaſticis.

But touching the number and certainty of Anſelmes Bookes, I ſee no cauſe but Anſelme himſelfe may as well be beleeued as M. Harding. Anſelme himſelfe ſaith, hee hath written moe Dialogues then thoſe foure that you haue alleged: as you might eaſilie haue ſeene by his Prologue before his Dialogue, De Veritate. One other Dialogue he wrote, De paſſione Domini; the ſpeakers whereof are Anſelmus and Maria. Hee wrote another Dialogue betweene the Maſter and the Scholar, beginning thus: Plura ſunt de quibus tuam diu deſidero reſponſionem. There is another Booke of Anſelmus, De Corpore Chriſti; and another, De Conceptione Beatæ Virginis Mariæ, beginning thus: Principium quo ſalus Mundi: which, and other like Bookes, I trow, in your printed Colonian Tomes will not be found. There came lately abroad another Dialogue of Anſelmes betweene the Maſter and Scholar, named, Promptuarium, ſeu Elucidarium, printed at Paris by Fredericus Morellus, Anno Domini 1560. Your Coloniens in their Tomes of Anselmes Workes, haue set forth one speciall Booke of his Epistles, containing in the whole thirteene only Epistles, and no moe. Yet notwithstanding I can send you to two seuerall Authentike Bookes of Anselme, wherein you may finde three hundred threescore and eight of his Epistles. Therefore, M. Harding, if you satisfie your selfe onely with the Records of Colaine, you may happily be deceiued. You may remember, Anselmus was the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Metropolitane of this Realme of England: whether euer he saw the City of Colaine, or no, I haue not heard. Therefore it were more wisdome for you to seeke his Bookes in England, then in Colaine. May your Coloniens themselues confesse that they haue not printed all Anselmes Bookes, but onely so many as came to their hands. For thus they write in the Inscription or Title of the same: Operum Anselmi, quæ quidem haberi potuerunt, omnium: And againe in the third Tome: Catalogus opusculorum omnium D. Anselmi, quæ ad hunc vsque diem haberi potuerunt.

Marriage in Priesthood.

Spare therefore your vnmanerly speeches of plaine Lying, M. Harding, and learne rather your selfe to speake the truth. As for the matter it selfe, that the Priests of England were commonly and lawfully married in the time of Anselmus, which was in the yere of our Lord, A thousand and foure score, it is euident by all that haue written the Story of that Age.

You may adde further heereto the Example of Moses, not the great Captaine of Israel, but a Christian Priest: who, as it appeareth by the Popes owne Records, being within Holy Orders, toke a Wife, and liued with her without any maner offense of Law. Your Doctours tell you, that vntill the time of Pope Siricius, that is to say, for the space welneere of foure hundred yeeres after Christ, it was lawfull for all Priests to marrie without exception, neither Vow, nor Promise, nor Law, nor Ordinance, nor other restraint being then to the contrarie. Panormitane your principall Canonist saith thus: Si clarè constet de Matrimonio Papæ, tunc aut vxor inducetur ad Continentiam, aut si noluerit, reddat debitum, & nihilominus stet in Papatu. Quia non repugnat substantiæ Papatus, seu Clericatus. Nam & Petrus habebat Vxorē cùm promoueretur in Papam. Continentia autem processit ex Constitutione Ecclesiæ: If it may appeare clearely, that the Pope hath a Wife (as hauing married her before he was a Pope) then either his Wife shall be perswaded to liue Single, or if shee will not, let the Pope yeeld her marriage dutie, and yet neuer theleſſe remaine in the Popedome still. for Mariage dutie is not contrarie to the Substance and Office, neither of Popedome, nor of Priesthood. For Peter had a Wife when he was promoted to be a Pope. As for the rule of Single Life, it was brought in by ordinance of the Church. And therefore he saith further: Vnde videmus, quòd Presbyteri Græci sine peccato contrahunt Matrimonium: We see that the Priests of Græcia, being within Orders, doe marrie Wiues: and we see they doe it, sine peccato, without sinne or breach of Law, either of God, or of man. He goeth not by blinde peraduenture, and by ghesse, as you doe, M. Harding: but speaketh of certaintie. We know it, saith he, and we see it. Another of your Cardinals, Nicolaus Cusanus saith: In Nouo Testamento, post aliquot tempora, visum fuit, irrationabile fore, quòd in Sacris Ordinibus existentes contraherent, similiter & solenniter vouentes: In the New Testament, after a certaine time, it was thought it should not be reasonable for Priests, being within Holy Orders, to contract Matrimonie: likewise it was thought of them that had made Solemne Vowes. After a certaine time (saith he) this Decree was made. Hee meaneth the time of Pope Siricius, as we haue said. Before which time it was lawfull as well for Priests, as also for them that had made a Solemne Vow of Chastity, to marrie lawfully without restraint.

Dist. 84. Cùm in præterito. In eadem Dist. Extra. de Electione. C. licet de Vsand. Abb. Nicol. Cus. ad Bohem epist. 2.

Thus, M. Harding, you see by your Canonists, That the Priests of the East Church may marry, being within Holy Orders: By the Ancient Councell of Ancyra, that Deacons, after protestation made, might lawfully marry: By Chrysostome, that Priests and Bishops may so take the state of Marriage, that it shall be no hinderance to any perfection: By Cardinall Caietane, that speaking absolutely, a Priest offendeth not in marrying a Wife, his Orders or Priesthod notwithstanding: By Anselme, that a vj. hundred yeres after Christ, that is to say, vntill within one hundred yeres sithence the Conquest, this matter notwithstanding it had beene much beaten thorow the world, yet lay still vndiscussed: By Panormitane, Erasmus, and Agrippa, that the Priests of Græcia marry this day, and that, Sine Peccato, without Sinne: By others your Doctours, that vntill the time of Pope Siricius it was lawfull for Priests to marry. You see that Moses, being a Christian Priest, and Eupsychius, being a Christian Bishop, and a Martyr, toke either of them a lawfull Wife, and so liued in Marriage without offense. Yet all this notwithstanding, can you say againe without blushing, M. Harding, as you haue said, We denie

M. Harding fol. 280.

veterly that any man, after that he hath receiued Holy Orders, may marrie? Or will you say, It cannot be shewed, that the Marriage of such was euer accounted lawfull in the Catholike Church?

If ye knew these things before, M. Harding, ye were to blame to dissemble them: if ye knew them not, ye were to blame to controll them. I doubt not but it may appeare by these few, that sithence the time of Christs Resurrection, sundry Priests being within Holy Orders haue married Wiues: and that not only in the Greeke Church, but also in the Church of Rome.

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision. 9.

The Ancient Emperour Iustinian commanded, that in the Holy Administration all things should be pronounced with a cleere, loud, and treatable voice, that the people might receiue some fruit therby. These men, lest the people should vnderstand them, mumble vp their Seruice, not only with a drowned & hollow voice, but also in a strange & Barbarous Tongue. In Nouel. Constit. 123.

M Harding

Iustinian the Emperour willeth praiers at the holy oblation (which these Defenders heere translate administration, as being ashamed of their owne Authour, because they hold (a) against the Sacrifice of the Masse) to be made not in silence, but with an audible voice. Not meaning as though praiers made in silence were vnfruitfull to the people, as these men would make vs beleeue. And therefore they corrupt his words as what thing doe they not corrupt, that commeth vnder their hands. They say Iustinian made that Law, Vt fructus ex ea re aliquis ad populum redire posset: That some fruit might come therof to the people, as who should say, (b) no fruit were like to come if praier were made in silence. But what saith Iustinian? His words be: Quò maiore exinde deuotione in depromendis Domini Dei laudibus audientium animis efferantur: To the intent the mindes of the hearers may thereby with the more deuotion be lifted vp in setting forth the praises of our Lord God. He saith that the loud Voice helpeth to more deuotion, he saith not that some fruit, but, with more deuotion. (c) Some fruit is alway had euen by secret praier, and more fruit sometime then by loud praier. Nouel. Constit. 123.

Two faults then are committed, or rather two lies made in Iustinians words; one, that for oblation they turned administration, which falshood M. Iewel vseth in his printed Sermon, and in his replies to M. D. Cole. Whether he be also guiltie of this? Another fault is, that for more deuotion, they put, some fruit. The third lie is, in that they say, we doe whisper all our Seruice, so is the Latine, albeit this good Lady liketh better the terme of mumbling. (d) I weene few who haue the sense of hearing will say with them, that the singing of Psalmes, Hymnes, Epistle, Gospell, Grailes, Offertories, Preface, and such like Seruice vsed in the Catholike Church, is whispering, or mumbling. The fourth lie is, where they say, wee doe it to lest the people should vnderstand vs. (e) Wee with that all the people vnderstood all our praiers. But we thinke it not conuenient, in a common prophane tongue to vtter high Mysteries. Therefore we with they would learne the (f) mysticall tongue, and gladly doe wee teach their children the same. S. Dionyse the Areopagite Scholar to S. Paul, teacheth Timothie, and in him all vs, Communicare ea quæ vim perficiendi habent, cum vs qui perficiunt: To communicate those things which haue power to make men perfect, with them who make men perfect: (g) that is to say, to publish Priestly office of Consecration (for nothing maketh vs more perfect) among them only who are Priests, and not among others.

Last of all, the fifth lie is, to say that wee pronounce our Seruice and our mysteries in a Barbarous tongue. (h) As though the Latine tongue were barbarous, and not rather euery vulgar tongue. That tongue is most barbarous which is most vsed of the vulgar sort, most priuate, most vnknowen in respect of all. (i) When England commeth to haue a seruice of their owne, a tongue of their own in Churches, and hath a Church of their owne beside the whole, then haue they lost their part with the Catholike Church, whereunto God restore it againe.

(a) Vntruth, fond and peeuish. For Iustinian speaketh not of any Sacrifice of the Masse.

(b) Vntruth. For S. Augustine saith: Quid prodest locutionis integritas, quam non sequitur intellectus audientis?

(c) Vntruth. For M. Hard. owne Councels expresse it by these words Insusurrare, and Murmurare:

(d) vntruth, notorious & contrary to their owne principall position, Ignorance is the Mother of deuotion.

(e) Mysticall tongue. A Mysticall follie of all follies.

(f) Vntruth, and a glosse contrarn The tongue both to the Text, and also to the continual practise of the Church of Græcia. (g) Follie. For S. Paul saith, is Barbarous, that is not knowen. (h) A solemne Decree without sense.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

O, M. Harding, we corrupt not such things as come vnder our hands. The World saith, that is your ordinary and peculiar practise: It is not ours. Ye rubbe vs both here and elsewhere with your Lies vpon Lies. Such is the ciuilitie and courtesie of your speech. Yet hitherto we haue not rebubbed you with any one Lie. Sobrietie and modestie rather becommeth them that speake of God.

First yee say, we haue corrupted Iustinians words. And yet yee know we alleged onely Iustinians meaning, and otherwise not one of all his words. Ye say: Iustinian meant not as though praiers made in silence were vnfruitfull to the people. For some fruit (ye say) there is alwaies had euen by secret and vnknowen praier. But what fruit, or how much, or how ye know it, or can assure it, ye spare to tell vs. Yet S. Augustine saith: Quid prodest locutionis integritas, quam non sequitur intellectus audientis? Cùm loquendi omninò nulla sit causa, si quod loquimur non intelligunt, propter quos, vt intelligant, loquimur: What profit is there in speech, bee it neuer so perfect, if the vnderstanding of the hearer cannot attaine it? For there is no cause why we should speake at all, if they vnderstand not what we speake, for whose sake we speak, that they may vnderstand vs. Againe he saith: Mens mea sine fructu est: Hoc ait, quando *Aug. Iustini. Imper. Authen. Const. 123 We command all Bishops and Priests to minister the holy Oblatiõ, &c. not vnder silence, but with a loud voice, quando id quod dicitur non intelligitur: My minde is without fruit: This the Apoſtle S Paul ſaith, when the thing that is ſpoken is not perceiued. And againe: Si intellectum mentis remoueas, nemo ædificatur audiendo quod non intelligit: Set apart the vnderſtanding of the Minde, and no man hath fruit or profit of that thing that he perceiueth not. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Quid opus eſt iubilare, & non intelligere iubilationem: vt vox noſtra ſola iubilet, & cor non iubilet? Sonus enim cordis intellectus eſt: What needeth vs to ſing, if we vnderſtand not what we ſing: to ſing with our Voice, and not with our Heart? For vnderſtanding is the ſound, or voice of the Heart.

&c. that the hearts of the hearers may be ſtirred to more deuotion, &c. Aug. in Geneſ. ad literam. Li. 11. Cap. 8.

Aug. in Pſ. 99.

M. Harding telleth vs ſadly; The deuout people is edified by the Latine Praiers, though they vnderſtand not one word that is ſpoken. But S. Auguſtine ſaith: By that thing that he vnderſtandeth not, no man is edified. M. Harding ſaith: There is alwaies ſome fruit euen by ſecret and vnknowen Praier. But S. Auguſtine ſaith: There is no fruit in ſpeech, be it neuer ſo perfect, if the vnderſtanding of the heart cannot attaine it. So properly S. Auguſtine and M. Harding agree together.

Praier in ſtrange Tongue.

Theſe words, Whiſpering, and Mumbling, miſlike you much. Yet your owne friends intreating hereof, haue often vſed the ſame words. In your late Councel of Colaine it is written thus: Vt Presbyteri Preces non tantùm Ore Murmurent, ſed etiam Corde Perſoluant, nunquam à manibus eorum Liber Legis, hoc eſt, Biblia, deponatur: That the Prieſts may not only Mumble vp their Praiers, but alſo pronounce them from their Hearts, let the Book of the Law, that is to ſay, the Bible, neuer be laid from their hands.

Cone. Coloniens. ca 5. An 1536. part. 2.

Likewiſe Regino reporteth the words of the Councell of Nantes: Ridiculum eſt, Muris aut Parietibus inſuſurrare ea quæ ad populum pertinent: It is a peeuiſh thing to Whiſper thoſe things to the Walles, that perteine vnto the people.

Regino. 2 Concil. Nannetenſi.

Notwithſtanding, whether it be Whiſpering, or Mumbling, or by whatſoeuer name elſe it ſhall pleaſe you to call it, that good Emperours Commandement and meaning was, that ye ſhould ſo vtter all things in the Congregation, Diſtinctly, and Plainely with loud and Open Voice, that the people might vnderſtand you, and anſwer, Amen. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Nos qui in Eccleſia Diuina eloquia cantare didicimus, ſimul etiam inſtare debemus, eſſe quod ſcriptum eſt, Beatus populus, qui intelligit iubilationem. Proinde, Chariſſimi, quod conſona voce cantauimus, ſereno etiam corde noſſe & tenere debemus: We that haue learned to ſing in the Church the Heauenly words of God, muſt alſo endeuour to be that thing that is written; Bleſſed is the people that vnderſtãdeth what they ſing. Therfore, dearely beloued, that we haue ſung together with tuneable voice, we ought alſo to know and ſee with pure heart.

Authen. Conſtitut. 123. Aug. in Pſa. 18.

S Ambroſe declaring the Eccleſiaſticall order of his time, ſaith thus: Reſponſorijs Pſalmorum, Cantu Virorum, Mulierum, Virginum, Paruulorum, conſonus undarum fragor reſultat: With the anſwering of Pſalmes, and with the Singing together of Men, Women, Maides, and little Children, the Church ſoundeth, as if it were the daſhing and beating of the Sea.

Ambro. Hexamer. lib. 3. ca. 5.

To like purpoſe Leo ſaith: Totius Eccleſiæ vna eſt Oratio, & vna Confeſſio: The whole Church hath one Praier, and one Confeſſion.

Leo de Ieiunio Septim. menſis, Sermon. 3.

That ye allege out of Dionyſius is vaine and Childiſh, as is the reſt of your talke, and quite contrary to the Authours minde, and therefore not worthy to be anſwered. For Dionyſius ſaith not as you haue imagined, M. Harding, that the Prieſt ſhould talke alone in his Myſticall vnknowen tongue, as a iangling Cymball without ſenſe: but rather telleth you, that by his order the Prieſt and the whole people ſhould ſing together. Theſe be his words: Percipiens ipſe, & alijs tradens Diuinam Communionem, poſtremò deſinit in Gratiarum actionem, vnà cum tota Eccleſiæ multitudine: The Prieſt both receiuing himſelfe the Holy Communion, and alſo deliuering the ſame vnto others, laſt of all endeth with Thankſgiuing, together with all the whole multitude and Companie of the Church.

Dionyſ. Cap. 3. Μετὰ ταῦτὰ τῶ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας ἱερῶ πλεροῦμενος,

Thus out of one place ye haue alleged two manifeſt Teſtimonies againſt your ſelfe: The one to condemne your Priuate Maſſe: The other to condemne your Myſticall Praiers in Vnknowen Tongue.

Ye ſay: Wee wiſh the people would learne the Myſticall Latine Tongue: and gladly doe wee teach their Children the ſame. Ye ſay, The Myſticall Latine Tongue. O vaine man, and more vaine then Vanitie it ſelfe! Why ſeeke you ſo fondly to deceiue Gods people? Who euer taught you theſe kindes of Myſteries? What Scripture? What Counſell? What Doctour? What Father? How know you that the Latine Tongue, that euery Childe may ſo commonly and ſo eaſily vnderſtand, ſhould be ſo Myſticall? And wherefore are all other Tongues, the Greeke, the Hebrew, the Chaldee, the Arabicke, the Italian, the French, the Spaniſh, the Iriſh, leſſe Myſticall then the Latine? What haue theſe Tongues offended? What hath that Tongue deſerued? The Tongue is nothing else but a Tongue. It is the matter and meaning of the words that is Mysticall. S. Augustine saith: Audimus hæc verba, Beata Vita: & rem ipsam omnes nos appetere fatemur. Non enim sono delectamur. Nam hoc cum Latinè audit Græcus non delectatur: quia ignorat quod dictum est: Sicut etiam Latinus, si Græcè hoc audierit. Quoniam res ipsa nec Græca, nec Latina est: We heare these words, Blessed Life, or the Life to come. And the thing it self we al confesse we desire to haue. For we haue no pleasure in the sound of the words. For when a Grecian heareth these words spoken in Latine, he hath no pleasure in them, because he vnderstandeth not what is spoken. Neither hath the Latine any pleasure if hee beare the same spoken in Greeke. For the thing it selfe is neither Greeke, nor Latine. It were a great Mysterie to reach the bottome of your Mysteries. S. Paul calleth you, not the Hiders, or Couchers, but the Dispensers and Stewards of Gods Mysteries. Your Mysticall policy is to lead Gods people through Mist and Darkenesse. Ye wish the people would learne the Latine Tongue, which you call Mysticall. No doubt, a worthy and learned Wish. Ye might as good cheape, and as well haue wished, that all the whole people of al Countries, would learne to speake Greeke and Hebrew. But your meaning is, that vntill all the Plowmen, and Artificers and Labourers of the world be able to vnderstand and to speake your Mysticall Latine Tongue, they may not in any wise be allowed to vnderstand any parcel of their Prayers.

Augu. Confes. lib. 10. cap. 20.

Praier in a strange Tongue.

1. Corinth. 4.

Lactantius speaking of the subtill practises and policies of the Heathens, saith thus: Hinc Fida Silentia instituta sunt ab hominibus callidis: vt nesciret populus quid coleret: Therefore trusty silence and secresie was appointed by subtill and false factors, that the people (til being blinde) should neuer know what they worshipped.

Lactant. lib 5. cap. 20.

This is not the Mysterie of the Kingdome of Heauen: it is rather the Mysterie of iniquity: The same Mystery that S. Iohn mentioneth in his Reuelations: In Fronte eius Nomen scriptum est, Mysterium: Babylon Magna, Mater Abominationum & Fornicationum Terræ: A name was written in her forehead, a Mistery: Great Babylon, the Mother of the Abominations, and of the Fornications of the Earth. Of these Holy Mysteries your Latine Tongue, as ye haue vsed it, may well and iustly be called Mysticall.

Matthæ. 13. 2. Thessal. 2. Apocalyp. 17.

S. Hierome saith of your Fathers in the old time: De Domo Dei Scenam facere Populorum: Of the House of God they haue made a Stage-play of the People. And speaking of the Valentinian Heretikes, he saith: Barbaro simplices quosque terrent sono, vt quod non intelligunt, plus mirentur: With a Barbarous vnknowne sound of words they feare the simple, that whatsoeuer they vnderstand not, they may the more esteeme, and haue in reuerence.

Hier. in Epist. ad Ephes. ca. 5. Hieronymus ad Theodoram.

But the Latine Tongue (ye say) is not barbarous: and therein, as your wont is, yee haue noted a wonderfull great Lie in our Apology. Yet vnto S. Paul that tongue seemeth Barbarous that is vnknowne vnto the hearer, be it Latine, be it Greeke. Thus he saith: Nisi sciero vim vocis, ero illi qui loquitur Barbarus: & ille qui loquitur, mihi Barbarus: Vnlesse I vnderstand the power or meaning of the words, I shal be Barbarous to him that speaketh: and he that speaketh (in what tongue soeuer he speaketh) shall be Barbarous vnto me. Hereof I had occasion to say somewhat in my Former Reply. S. Augustine saith: Malle quisque cum Cane suo versari, quàm cum homine ignotæ linguæ: Any man would rather dwel with his Dogge, then with a man of an vnknowne tongue.

To conclude, ye say: When England commeth to haue a Seruice of their own, and a Tongue of their own in Churches, then haue they lost their own part with the Catholike Church. Here M. Harding, a little more reason would haue giuen some credit to your words. For as touching the Publike Seruice of the Church, I beseech you, euen in your owne time of Barbarous blindenesse, what Seruice had the Church of England, but Peculiar, and Speciall to her selfe? Touching the variety of Tongues, S. Augustine saith: Astitit Regina à dextris tuis in vestitu deaurato, circundata varietate. Vbi significatur Linguarum varietas in omnibus Gentibus: quarum tamen vna est intùs & Simplex Fides: The Queene stood at thy right hand, apparelled in Cloth of Gold, adorned with variety. Hereby is signified the diuersity of Tongues in all Nations: The Faith whereof, that lieth within, is one and simple. Likewise againe he saith: Vestitus Reginæ huius quis est? Et pretiosus & varius est: Sacramenta Doctrinæ in linguis omnibus varijs. Alia lingua Aphricana: alia Syria: alia Græca: alia Hebræa: alia illa, & illa. Faciunt istæ Linguæ varietatem vestis Reginæ huius. Quomodo autem omnis varietas vestis in vnitate concordat, sic & omnes Linguæ ad vnam Fidem. In veste varietas sit, scissura non sit: Ecce varietatem intelleximus de Diuersitate Linguarum: & Vestem intelleximus propter Vnitatem: What is this Queenes apparell? It is pretious, and full of variety: The Mysteries of Doctrine in all sundry Tongues. There is one Tongue of Aphrica: another of Syria: another Greeke: another Hebrew: *another this, another that. These Tongues make vp the variety of the Queenes apparell. variety in the Apparell: But rent or cut there may not be. Behold, by the Variety we vnderstand the Diuersitie of Tongues: and by the Apparell we vnderstand the Vnity (of the Church.) Againe he saith: Distant inter se Linguæ: Sed Linguarum distantiæ non sunt Schismata: Tongues are diuided one from another: But the Diuision of Tongues is no Schisme, or Diuision in Religion. Therefore, M. The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision 10.

Conc. Carth. 3.

The Old Councell at Carthage commanded, that nothing should bee read in Christs Congregation, but the Canonical Scriptures: These men read such things in their Churches, as themselues know for a Truth to be starke Lies and fond Fables.

Scriptures onely to be read in Churches.

M. Harding.

A man were better, I assure thee, good Reader, to make two new bookes then to correct one so full of lies & falsified places, as this Apologie is. * This old Councel of Carthage is newly falsified by our new Clergie. The words of the Councell are these: Placuit, vt præter Scripturas Canonicas nihil in Ecclesia legatur sub nomine Diuinarum Scripturarum: It hath seemed good vnto vs that besides the Canonicall Scriptures, nothing be read in the Church vnder the name of holy Scriptures. They leauing out these foure words sub nomine Diuinarum Scripturarum, vnder the name of the diuine Scriptures, would beare men in hand, the Councel willed nothing to be read in the Church, besides the holy Scriptures. Are not these trustie men, to whom ye may commit the charge of your Soules for your Faith and Saluation?

Concil. Carth. 3. cap. 47.

It followeth in the same Decree: Liceat etiam legi passiones Martyrũ, cùm anniuersary dies celebrantur: Let it be lawful also for the Martyrdomes of Martyrs to be read when their yeerely feasts are kept. And yet dare they not only to say, nothing must be read besides the Scriptures, but also to allege that very place for that special lie, which saith the contrary. Looke in the Booke thy selfe, good Reader, and see how falsly they handle so holy matters. * Another lie is, when they say, we read those things in the Churches which our selues know to be stark lies, & fond fables. When they cannot themselues shew that we haue any such, it is vaine lying Rhetoricke to say, wee doubt not of it, or know it our selues for a truth. I wonder not if they blush not in belying vs, who haue belied so many Scriptures, Councels, and Fathers.

* Vntruth. For if this old Councell be falsified, it was falsified twelue hundred yeeres agoe in the Councell of Hippo.

* Vntruth. For it is confessed by the best of M. Hardings owne side.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It standeth well with your truth, M. Harding, so often to charge vs with Lies and Falshood. I trust it will appeare yee had no great cause to kéepe so great reuell vpon so poore a Conquest. Indéed these words be not expressly found in the third Councel of Carthage: yet are they found in the Councell of Hippo, which is the Abridgement of the third Councell of Carthage, as it appeareth by the Title of the same: Concilij Hipponensis Abbreuiationes factæ in Concilio Carthaginensi Tertio.

Conc. Hippon. Cap 38.

The words of the Councell of Hippo, and for so much also of the third Councel of Carthage be these: Scripturæ Canonicæ in Ecclesia legendæ quæ sunt: & præter quas alia non legantur: The Scriptures Canonicall which are to be read in the Church: and besides which nothing may be read. Heere haue you, M. Harding, the plaine words of the Councell of Hippo, abridged out of the third Councell of Carthage, That nothing may be read in the Church, but only the Canonicall Scriptures. Iudge you therefore how iust cause ye had so vnaduisedly, for I dare not say so vnlearnedly, to charge the Apologie with Lies and Falshood.

Heere may we adde the like Decrée of the Councell holden at Laodicea: Sabbatis Euangelia cum alijs Scripturis legenda esse censemus: We agree, that the Gospell, with other Scriptures, be read vpon the Sabbath day. If these words seeme not sufficient, it followeth further in the same Councell: Non oportet Libros, qui sunt extra Canonem, legere, nisi solos Canonicos Veteris & Noui Testamenti: We may not reade any Bookes that be without the Canon, but only the Canonicall Bookes of the Old and New Testament.

Chrys. in Mat. Homil. 38.

To like effect Chrysostome saith: Idcò Christus mensas nummulariorum euertit: Significans quòd in Templo Dei non debent esse nummi, nisi Spirituales, id est, qui Dei imaginem habent: Therefore Christ ouerthrew the Exchangers bankes, meaning thereby, that there may be no coine in the Church, but only Spirituall, that is to say, that beareth the Image of God.

read in the Churches, but only the Apoſtles Writings: or at leaſt, the Writings of ſuch others, as were of Apoſtolicall Authority. Likewiſe ſaith Abbas Auſigiſus, reporting the Eccleſiaſtical Decrees of the French Kings, Lewis and Charles: In Templis tantùm Canonici libri, id eſt, Sacræ Literæ legantur: Let there be read in the Churches only the Canonicall Books, that is to ſay, the holy Scriptures. Hereby may you ſee, M. Harding, if there were any want before, thus many waies it may be ſupplied.

Anſigiſus lib. 1. ca. 19. Impreſſus Pariſijs Anno 1550.

Another lie (ye ſay) is this, when they ſay, wee read thoſe things in the Church, which our ſelues know to be ſtarke lies, and fond fables. For triall hereof, we ſhall not need to trauell far. Your own Bookes and Legends are proofe ſufficient.

Eraſmus therof ſaith thus: Hodiè quorumlibet ſomnia, imò mulierc ularum Deliramenta leguntur inter Diuinas Scripturas: Now adaies euery fooles Dreames, yea very womens doting fanſies are read with the holy Scriptures.

Eraſ. in Annotat. in Hieron. de Eccleſiaſticis Scrip.

Likewiſe ſaith Polydore Virgil: Multorum Diuorum vitas recitant, tametſi parùm ad Fidem Scriptas: They read many Saints liues, although not written according to the truth. Ludouicus Viues writing of your Legenda Aurea, which was the Mother of all your deuout Eccleſiaſticall Stories or Fables, ſaith thus: Neſcio cur Aurea dici debeat, cùm ſcripta ſit ab homine ferrei oris, & plumbei Cordis, & pleniſſima ſit impudentiſſimis mendacijs: I ſee no cauſe why it ſhould be called the Golde Legend, ſeeing it was written by a man of an iron face, and a leadden heart, and is freight full of moſt ſhameleſſe lies. If ye know not theſe things M. Harding, your friends will thinke ye know nothing. Such truths yee read and publiſh deuoutly and ſolemnely in your Churches. Yet may we neither ſay nor thinke, yee mocke the people.

The Apology, Chap. 4. Diuiſion 1.

BUt if there be any that think theſe aboue rehearſed Authorities be but weak & ſlender, becauſe they were decreed by Emperors, and certaine priuate Biſhops, and not by ſo full and perfect Councels, taking pleaſure rather in the authority and name of the Pope: let ſuch a one know, that Pope Iulius doth euidently forbid, that a Prieſt in Miniſtring the Communion, ſhould dip the Bread in the Cup. Theſe men contrarie to Pope Iulius Decree, diuide the Bread, and dippe it in the Wine.

M. Harding.

Ye may be ſure, many men thinke your homely ſtuffe not only weake and ſlender, but alſo corrupt venemous, and lothſome. But now belike ye wil amend your fault. But how? Surely by going from very euill to as bad or worſe, if ye can do worſe, then hitherto ye haue done. Iulius the Pope (ſay yee) doth euidently forbid, that a Prieſt in Miniſtring the Communion, ſhould dip the Bread in the Cup. Now verily your former fault of lying is well amended. For where before yee left out, caſt in, or changed ſome of thoſe words, which ye pretend to allege, now ye make euery whit new of your own. Where hath Iulius theſe words? I ſpeake not of your falſe alleging of places in your Books margin. I forgiue you the putting of cum enim nemo, in ſtead of cum omne. Theſe be ſmal and ſlipper faults which if they were alone might be winked at in ſuch ſlipper merchants as ye are. But let vs heare what Pope Iulius ſaith: Apoſ quoque audiuimus intinctam Euchariſtiam populis pro complemento communionis porrigere: We haue heard alſo of others, who giue to the people the Euchariſt dipped or ſtiped, for making vp of the Communion. It is to be vnderſtanded, that whereas Chriſt gaue the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar to his Apoſtles, he gaue it vnder both kinds. And when the Prieſts in ſome countries, either for lacke of wine at al times ready, either for ſome priuate fanſie, vſed to dip or to ſtipe the Sacred Body of our Lord vnder forme of Bread in the conſecrated Blood and ſo to giue it to the people; Pope Iulius findeth fault therewith, for that neither Chriſt ordained ſo, nor the Apoſtles left ſuch order to the Church. So that Iulius meaneth nothing elſe, but to reproue and reforme that vſe of dipping or ſtiping the one kind in the other in the adminiſtration of the Communion vnto the people. Read the place, who liſteth, hee ſhall finde the ſame ſenſe more largely vttered a litle after.

But what ſenſe make theſe Defenders a Gods name? They ſay Iulius forbiddeth the Prieſts, ne dum peragit Myſteria, panem immergat in Calicem: that in miniſtring the Communion (ſo the Lady turneth) hee ſhould dip the Bread in the Cup. There is no ſuch word in the whole decree. Iulius nameth Euchariſtiam they call it bread. Iulius hath * intinctam porrigere populis, that no Prieſt * giue the Sacrament dipped to the people: they leauing out, giuing it to the people, ſay, he forbad the Prieſt to dippe it. They leaue out alſo the chief cauſe of the whol, which is, pro cõplemento Cõmunionis, for making vp of the Communion. For he forbiddeth to giue vnto the people only the conſecrated hoſt dipped in the Chalice, as though it were the whole Cõmunion, no leſſe then if the Blood were giuen apart. Theſe men (ſay they) contraile to the decree of Pope Iulius, diuide the bread and dip it in the Wine. We in the Maſſe breake the hoſt in three parts, not without ſignification of a Myſterie: two we receiue apart, the third we put into the Chalice and receiue it together with the blood. What haue ye to ſay againſt this.

* A fond vanity. For if hee forbid the Prieſt to dip the Sacrament, and to deliuer it, then hee forbiddeth the Prieſt to dip the Sacrament.

* Theſe Myſtical ſignifications, be myſticall follies. Read the Anſwer.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Euery part hereof, is largely anſwered in my Former Reply to M. Harding. True it is, the fault that Iulius here findeth in Dipping and Miniſtring the Sacrament, agreeth not

not fullie with the preſent diſorders of the Church of Rome. Yet notwithſtanding in condemning the one, he muſt nœds condemne the other. Ye ſay we leaue out theſe words: Intinctam porrigunt Euchariſtiam populis: They dippe the Sacrament, and deliuer the ſame vnto the people. And againe theſe words: Pro complemento Communionis: For the accompliſhment of the Communion. The more matter we haue left out, the more haue we concealed your faults: and ſo much the more are you beholden to vs. For what meant you, M. Harding to mention any of all theſe words? Doe you deliuer the Sacraments vnto the people? Do you make it a perfect Communio..? What needed you to burthen your ſelfe with moe abuſes, and ſo much to bewray your follie?

Iulius ſaith, They dipped the Sacrament into the Cup, and deliuered it vnto the people. You dippe the Sacrament as they did: but vnto the people ye giue nothing. Iulius ſaith, They meant by dipping to make it a full and perfect Communion. Contrariwiſe you defraud the people of the Holy Cup, and deliuer them onlie the Halfe Communion. And therefore ye are much more blame worthy, then euer were they whom Iulius reproued. For they offended onlie of Simplicitie, and you of Wilfulneſſe: they onlie in one thing: you in three things together in one place.

But touching the matter it ſelfe, the fault that we finde with you, and the fault that Iulius found with others yours Predeceſſors, is al one. You dip the Bread into the Cup, and ſo did they. They breake Chriſts Inſtitution, and ſo doe you. And therefore Iulius ſaid vnto them: Hoc quàm ſit Apoſtolicæ & Euangelicæ Doctrinæ contrarium, & conſuetudini Eccleſiaſticæ aduerſum, non difficilè ab ipſo Fonte Veritatis probatur, a quo ordinata ipſa Sacramentorum Myſteria proceſſerunt: How farre contrary this is to the Apoſtolicall and Euangelicall Doctrine, and to the Cuſtome of the Church, it is eaſie to proue by the Fountaine of the Truth, by whom the myſteries of the Sacraments were ordained, and from whom they firſt proceeded.

Ye thinke the matter well diſcharged, for that ye deliuer not the Sacrament ſo dipped vnto the people, but miniſter it onlie vnto your ſelfe. Here by the way, it were a matter of ſkil, to vnderſtand, by what authority, either of Scripture, or of Councel, or of Doctor, it may appeare, that it is lawfull for the Prieſt ſo to vſe and receiue the Sacrament, and vnlawful for the people. If the people may not as ſafelie, & as lawfully ſo receiue the Sacrament, as may the Prieſt, wherefore then are theſe words writtē in your Maſſe Books, euen in the Canon & Secrets of your Maſſe? Hęc Sacroſancta commixtio Corporis & Sanguinis Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti fiat mihi, & omnibus ſumētibus, ſalus animę & Corporis: This holy mingling of the Body and Blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, be vnto me & vnto all that receiue it, the health of Soule & Body. Verily theſe words, Omnibus ſumētibus, cannot by any ſhift poſſibly be expounded of one only Prieſt, but muſt nœds be extended vnto ỳ people.

Ye would faine tel vs of certaine Speciall Myſteries, that ye haue found out in the breaking of the Sacrament, if ye will what they were. But ye are in caſe, as ſometime was Nabuchodonozor, ye are not able well to tell vs your owne dreame. Sometime ye ſay, The Bread is broken: ſometime yee ſay, The Accidents remaine alone by Miracle, and they are broken: ſometime ye ſay, Chriſts Immortall and Impaſſible Body it ſelfe is broken: ſometime ye ſay, Our eies be deceiued, and nothing is broken.

Senten. lib. 4. Diſt. 12.

Againe (ye ſay) the Firſt peece ſignifieth the Church trauelling in the world: The Second ſignifieth the Bleſſed Saints in Heauen: the Third ſignifieth the Soules in Purgatory. But Pope Sergius, the Father of theſe fantaſies, conueieth his Myſteries another way. For the Firſt portion, ſaith he, ſignifieth Chriſts Body after his reſurrection: The Second, Chriſts Body walking on Earth: The Third, Chriſts Body in the Graue. Theſe M. Harding, be your Holy Significations and Speciall Myſteries. With ſuch follies and Myſticall vanities, ye mocke the world. In old times, the Bread was not broken to buſie mens heads with Significations, but only to be deliuered to the people: as in my former Reply I haue declared more at large. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Panis Benedicitur & Sanctificatur, & ad diſtribuendum Comminuitur: The Bread is Bleſſed and Sanctified and broken in peeces, to the end it may be deliuered.

Pope Clement ſaith, it is not lawfull for a Biſhop to deale with both Swords: For if thou wilt haue both, ſaith he, thou ſhalt deceiue both thy ſelfe, and thoſe that obey thee. Now adaies the Pope challengeth to himſelfe both Swords, and vſeth both. Wherefore it ought to ſeeme leſſe maruell if that haue followed, which Clement ſaith, that is, that he hath deceiued both himſelfe and thoſe, which haue giuen eare vnto him.

M. Harding.

If these fellowes had not sworne to belie all the world for maintenance of their new Gospell, they would, at this time at least haue made a true report of S. Clements words. S. Clement speaketh not of two swords. The place truly alleged hath thus: (a) Si mundialibus curis fueris occupatus, & teipsum decipies, & eos qui te audiunt. If thou be occupied in worldly cares, thou shalt both deceiue thy self, & those that listen to thee. The Author of this Apology, hauing spight at the Church, which is Christs fold, and at the Pope, the head Shepheard, enuying at his authority, forgeth a lie vpon S. Clement, making him to say, Si vtrunque habere vis, if thou wilt haue both swords, thou shalt both deceiue thy selfe, & those that obey thee. (b) Whereas Clement speaketh no word of the two swords, but of worldly cares, wherewith what Bishop soeuer is intangled, shall (as he saith) deceiue both himselfe & others that hearken to him. For which cause these Defenders being coupled with yoke fellowes in pretensed wedlocke, which state wrappeth a man in worldly cares, because such a one, (c) careth for the things of the world, how to please his wife, & is diuided, as S. Paul saith: it must needs follow, that hauing taken the office of superintendents, & charge of Soules vpon them, (d) they haue deceiued themselues, & daily doe deceiue so many, as heare them, & follow their false doctrine.

1. Cor. 7.

(a) These words are partly Clements, partly S. Bernards.

(b) Fond and childish. As though a Bishop may haue the Temporall Sword, and execute a Temporal office without worldly cares.

(c) What cares haue they that keepe Concubines?

(d) Eleuen of the twelue Apostles and many holy Fathers and Bishops were Married, and yet deceiued not the people.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

O what a pleasant grace, M. Harding hath to talke of Lies? A man would thinke it were some good part of his study. In this place two sundrie Authorities, the one of Clemens, the other of S. Bernard, I know not, by what errour, were ioined in one, and both alleged and set forth vnder the name only of Clemens. I grant, there was herin an ouersight: but Lie or Falshood there was none, as it shall appeare.

The words of Clemens are as you report them. The words of S. Bernard written vnto Pope Eugenius, are these: Planum est, Apostolis interdici Dominatum. I ergo tu, & tibi vsurpare aude, aut Dominans Apostolatum: aut Apostolus Dominatum. Planè alterutro prohiberis. Si vtrunque similiter habere velis, perdes vtrunque: It is plaine, that vnto the Apostles of Christ, Lordship or Temporall Princehood is forbidden. Go thou thy way therfore (thus he saith to the Pope) and dare thou to vsurpe, either the Apostleship, being a Lord: or a Lordship, being an Apostle. From one of them vndoubtedly thou art forbidden. If thou wilt indifferently haue both, thou wilt lose both.

Bern. de consideration. lib. 2.

Both Swords in one hand.

Of such S. Hierome writeth thus: Militantes Christo, obligant se negotijs Sæcularibus, & eandem imaginem offerunt Deo & Cæsari: Being the Souldiers of Christ, they bind themselues to worldly affaires, and offer vp one Image to God and Cæsar. In the Canons of the Apostles it is written thus: Non oportet Episcopum aut Presbyterum, se publicis administrationibus immittere: sed vacare & commodum se præbere vsibus Ecclesiasticis. Nemo enim potest duobus Dominis seruire: A Bishop or a Priest may not entangle himselfe with worldly Offices, but be at rest, and shew himselfe meet for the vse of the Church. For no man can serue two Masters. Yet the Pope this day claimeth the right of both swords, not only of the Spirituall, but also of the Temporall. And Pope Bonifacius 8. in the Great Iubilee, and in the open sight of the World, when he had one day shewed himselfe in his Pontificalibus, apparelled in Procession as a Bishop of Bishops, the next day he put vpon him the Emperours robes of Maiesty, and had the Emperiall Crowne vpon his head, and the Sword naked and glittering borne before him.

Hieronim. in Sophonian. ca. 1 Canon. Apost. Canon. 80. Matth. 10. De Maior. & Obed. Vnam. Sanctam. Paralipomena Vrspergensis.

As for Pope Clemens, his Canon is easily shifted by a prety Prouiso. For thus saith your Glosse touching the same: Cessante causa, cessat effectus: Verbi causa, prohibetur, ne Presbyteri gerant tutelas, hac causa, vt melius vacent Diuinis Officijs. Hæc causa finalis est. Vnde, cessante hac causa, cessat effectus. Vnde, si non vacent Diuinis Officijs, poterunt gerere tutelas: The cause ending, the effect endeth too. For example: The Law commandeth, that a Priest shall not be charged with the Wardship of a Childe in his nonage. The cause heerof is this, that he may the better applie his Diuine Service. This is the finall cause. This cause removed, the effect giueth place. Therefore if the Priest follow not his Diuine Seruice, then he may haue the Wardship of a Childe. Euen so, if the Pope do not the Office of a Bishop, then may he be a Temporall Prince. But by these meanes it commeth to passe, euen as Clemens saith, He deceiueth both himselfe, and also them that heare him.

(a) There is no ſmal number of men, which are mooued to ſuſpect, that this Apologie was deuiſed by ſome Catholike man intending to mocke this new Clergie of England, and to put them quite out of eſtimation and credit. (b) And to that very end this innumerable company of lies to them ſeemed of purpoſe to be ſet out. For no man hauing his fiue wits would thinke good, for maintenance of his owne part, to affirme ſo many things, the contrary whereof to his great diſcredit and ſhame, by ſearch is eaſily found. The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

I beſeech thée, gentle Reader, for ſhortneſſe ſake, and for thy better ſatisfaction herein, to conſider my anſwer made hereunto in my Former replie to M. Harding. Verily Leo ſpeaketh not one word either of Priuate Maſſe, or of Sole Receiuing, or of any other like ſuperſtitious and pœuiſh vanitie: but only of the Generall Communion of the whole Church. His counſell therefore vnto Dioſcorus is, that if vpon occaſion of reſort, the multitude of Communicants were ſo great, that they could not haue conuenient rome in the Church, to receiue all together at one Communion, then the Prieſt, after he had miniſtred vnto the firſt Company, and had willed them to depart forth, and giue place to others, and ſaw the Church replenished againe with a new Companie of aftercommers, ſhould without feare or remorſe of conſcience beginne the whole Communion againe, and ſo miniſter vnto them, as he had done vnto the former. More then this out of Leoes words cannot be gathered. Heere, M. Harding, haue you found a good warrant for the Holy Communion, and a plaine condemnation of your Priuate Maſſe.

The Apologie, Chap. 5. Diuiſion 1.

BVt if they will ſay, that all theſe things are worne now out of vſe and nigh dead, and pertaine nothing to theſe preſent times: Yet to the end al folke may vnderſtand what faith is to be giuen to theſe men, and vpon what hope they call together their Generall Councels, let vs ſee in few words what good heed they take to the ſelf ſame thing, which they theſelues, theſe very laſt yeeres, (and the remembrance thereof, is yet new and freſh) in their owne Generall Councell, that they had by order called, haue Decreed and commanded to be deuoutly kept. In the laſt Councel at Trident, ſcant foureteene yeeres paſt, it was ordained by the common conſent of all degrees, That one man ſhould not haue two Benefices at one time: What is become now of that ordinance? Is the ſame too ſoone worne out of minde, and cleane conſumed? For theſe men, ye ſee, giue to one man, not two Benefices only, but ſundry Abbies many times, ſometimes alſo two Biſhoprickes, ſometime three, ſometime foure, & that not only to an vnlearned man, but oftentimes alſo euen to a man of Warre.

In the ſaid Councel a Decree was made, that al Biſhops ſhould preach the Goſpell. Theſe men, neither preach, nor once go vp into the Pulpit, neither thinke they it any part of their Office. What great pompe and crake then is this they make of Antiquity? Why bragge they ſo of the names of the Ancient Fathers, & of the New and Old Councels? Why wil they ſeem to truſt to their authority, whom, when they liſt, they deſpiſe at their pleaſure?

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Hereto M. Harding anſwereth thus, With what face finde they fault? Ye beleeue none of the Councels: Sir Iohn Hooper, a Martyr of their owne canonization: your lying Booke: your vile ſtuffe: your new vpſtart Church: your Hereſies: your incredible lies: your malicious lies: your ſlanderous lies, &c. He is very hard harted, that will not be moued with ſo valiant proſes.

Heere pricketh forth this haſty Defender, as peart as a Pearemonger, and faine would he talke with the Pope himſelfe forſooth face to face. But Sir, I pray you, be not too haſtie in taking your iourney to Rome. Tel vs before ye go, may not a meaner man ſerue in ſtead of the Pope for your Maſtiship to talke withall? This fellow hath a ſpecial fancie and wil needs to the Pope himſelfe, and talke with him of his high matters, preſently to his owne face. I pray you, Sir, may not a poore man heare your talke before hand? By often telling of it, you ſhall haue it in better readineſſe when you come there.

M. Harding.

What the Pope himſelfe will ſay vnto you, when you come before him, I know not, becauſe you make no haſte (I ſuppoſe) as yet to go vnto his preſence, may it pleaſe you in the meane time to be anſwered by another man, thus now, til then? Touching the moſt part of your queſtion, (a) read S. Hierome ad Damaſum, & aduerſus Luciferianos, where he calleth the Pope (b) Summũ Sacerdotem. And if ye require a word of greater ſound, read S. Auguſtine, where he ſaith, In Romana Eccleſia ſemper viguit Apoſtolicæ Cathedræ Principatus: In the Roman Church, the Princedome of the Apoſtolike Chaire hath alwaies flouriſhed. For the ſecond part, looke in the (c) Counſel of Chalcedon. For the third, read Victor in his ſecond Booke De perſecutione Vandalorum. And for a full reſolution of this matter, read mine anſwer to M. Iewels challenge in the fourth Article, there ſhall you finde your demand fully anſwered: Beſide two and thirtie great Untruths in the ſame one Article.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Heere it liketh you, M. Harding, for the time, although vnworthy, to ſupply the Popes perſon. Howbeit, as doubting, either the ſufficency of your Commiſſion, or the diſcretion of your anſwer, ye ſay, Thus now, till then.

Where we demand of you, which of all the ancient Fathers and Doctors euer called the Pope Summum Sacerdotem, The Higheſt Prieſt: Ye anſwer vs, S. Hierome ſo called him in the Booke Contra Luciferianos. For his words be plaine: Summus Sacerdos: The Higheſt Prieſt. But what if it be found, that theſe words belong no more to the Pope, then to any other particular Biſhop? Will ye then confeſſe, that either ye were far ouerſeene, or elſe, that yee ſought vndue meanes, vnder the name of S. Hierome, to mocke your Reader? You ſay, S. Hierome by theſe words, Summus Sacerdos, meant onely the Pope. But, M. Harding ſaith, S. Hierome by the ſame words, meant any one Biſhop, whatſoeuer he were, and not only the Pope. If you be M. Harding, and if theſe things be true, then are you of late foulie fallen out with your ſelfe.

M. Har. 204. b. Hieron. contra Luciferianos.

M. Harding directly contrarie to himſelfe.

For triall heereof, call to your remembrance, M. Harding, your owne words, vttered, not elſe where, but euen in this ſelfe ſame Booke. The words of S. Hierome bee theſe: The ſafety of the Church hangeth vpon the Dignity of the Higheſt Prieſt. Heereupon M. Harding ſaith: This peereleſſe authority S. Hierome in that place doth attribute to the Biſhop of euery Dioceſſe.

And thus, by M. Hardings owne expoſition, not only the Pope, but alſo the Biſhop of any other Dioceſſe, is called by S. Hierome, The higheſt Prieſt. Thus one M. Harding ſaith: S. Hierome by theſe words meant onely the Pope: Another M. Harding ſaith: S. Hierome by the ſame words meant any one Biſhop, and not onely the Pope. It were a deed of Charity to reſolue your Reader, whether of theſe two contrary M. Hardings hee may beleeue. Verily, here ye allege S. Hierome for the Pope, whereas by M. Hardings confeſſion, S. Hierome ſpake nothing, no not one word of the Pope. Such is the weight and credit of your authorities.

But for thy better ſatiſfaction, good Chriſtian Reader, it is well knowne to any meane ſtudent in Diuinitie, that not onely the Biſhop of Rome, but alſo euery other Biſhop within his owne Dioceſſe was commonly called the Higheſt Prieſt, for that within his owne

Augustine saith: Quid est Episcopus, nisi Primus Presbyter, hoc est, Summus Sacerdos? What is a Bishop but the First Priest, that is to say, the Highest Priest.

Summus Sacerdos

Againe he saith, speaking likewise of any one Bishop: Vidisti Summum Sacerdotem Interrogantem & Consecrantem: Thou sawest the Highest Priest examining the people that was to be Baptized, and Consecrating the Water.

Ambros. De iis qui initiantur cap. 3. I leaue out sundry other like authorities of Origen, of Lactantius, of Athanasius, of Leo, of Victor, of Meltiades, and of others. Euagrius calleth Euphemius, and Gregorius the Bishops of Antioch: Summos Sacerdotes: The Highest Priests. Ruffinus calleth Athanasius the Bishop of Alexandria: Pontificem Maximum: The Greatest or Highest Bishop. By these, I trust it may appeare, that the Title or Dignity of the Highest Priesthood, was generall and common to all Bishops and not only closed vp and mortesed only in the Pope.

Euagrius lib. 3. *cap.*32. Ruffinus, lib. 2. cap. 28.

Besides all this, ye bring vs a word, ye say, of greater Sound: In Romana Ecclesia semper viguit Apostolicæ Cathedræ Principatus: In the Roman Church the Princehood of the Apostolike Chaire, hath alwaies flourished. Indeed Princehood and Apostolike, bee iolly large wordes, and carrie great sound, almost as great as the Bell of Frideswise, vnto the sound of which Bell, yee wished once in your Sermon in Oxford, that your voice had been comparable, that you might, as you said then, Ring out in the dull eares of these Papists. These were your words: Yee may not forget them.

Aug Epist. 162

But faine would yee haue, the Bishop of Rome should bee a Prince to make vp the sound. Notwithstanding in the Councell of Aphrica it was Decreed thus: Primæ Sedis Episcopus non appelletur Princeps Sacerdotum: Let not the Bishop of the First See, be called the Prince of Priests.

Dist. 99. Primæ Sedis.

But what if the sound of these words waigh no heauier then the former? Or, what if this word Princehood, be no more peculiar to the Pope, then is the other of Highest Priesthood? Paulinus writing vnto Alypius, not the Great Bishop of Rome, but the poore Bishop, as I remember, of Tagasta saith thus: Deus in Ciuibus Ciuitatis suæ Principalem re cum Principibus populi sui, Sede Apostolica collocauit: God hath placed the Prince among the Citizens of his Citie, in the Apostolike See, being a principall or a Chiefe with (other Bishops, that is to say, with) the Princes of his people. Heere haue you found the Princehood of the See Apostolike, not only in Rome, but also in the poore City of Tagasta. Likewise S. Chrysostome saith: Ad orandum nos assiduè prouocat (Paulus) Apostolorum Princeps: Paul the Prince of the Apostles calleth vpon vs to be alwaies praying. So saith S. Gregorie: Paulus obtinuit totius Ecclesiæ Principatum: Paul obtained the Princehood of the whole Church. So saith Leo: Iuuenalis Episcopus ad obtinendum Palestinæ Prouinciæ Principatum, &c. Bishop Iuuenal, that hee might obtaine the Princehood of the Prouince of Palestine, &c.

Briefly your owne singular Doctor Amphilochius, writeth thus not of the Pope, but of S. Basil, the Bishop of Cæsarea: Additus est principibus Sacerdotum, Magnus ipse Princeps Sacerdotum: Basil being dead, was laid with other Bishops the Princes of Priests, being himselfe the Great Prince of Priests. It was great follie therefore, M. Harding, these Titles thus lying in common, to encroch the same onely to the Pope. Notwithstanding, ye say, Thus now, till then. Verily, when the Pope himselfe shall beginne to consider and to weigh your pleading, then will he say, he had a very vnskilfull Proctour.

The very ſame thē alſo is thine to be drawen forth perhaps at thy becke, though not with thy hand. Elſe if the ſame belonged in no wiſe vnto thee, whereas the Apoſtle ſaid, Behold, there be two Swords here; our Lord would not haue anſwered, It is enough, but, It is too much. So both bee the Churches, the Spirituall Sword, and the Materiall. But this is to be exerciſed for the Church, and that of the Church: That by the hand of the Prieſt, this of the Souldier, but verily at the becke of the Prieſt, and commandement of the Emperour. Thus, touching the Popes both Swords, you are fully anſwered by S. Bernard.

Which of the Ancient Fathers euer ſaid, That you haue Authority and Right to call Councels?

Who hath Authority to commmand the parts of the Body, but the Head? (a) And that the Pope is Head, where it is amply declared, ye heard euen now. Where you aske, which euer ſaid that the Pope hath authority to call Councels? If you know not ſo much, (b) we tell you, that Socrates the Writer of the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory ſaith ſo, not ſpeaking in his owne perſon, but reporting an old rule of the Church in theſe words: Sed neque Iulius interfuit maximæ Romæ Præſul, neque in locum ſuum aliquem deſtinauit, cùm vtique regula Eccleſiaſtica iubeat, non oportere preter ſententiam Romani Pontificis (c) Concilia celebrari: But neither Iulius the Biſhop of great Rome was preſent (at the Councell of Antiochia) neither ſent he any man in his place, whereas the Eccleſiaſticall rule commandeth, that without the aduice & will of the Pope of Rome, no Councels be kept. And as Socrates witneſſeth of the calling of Councels, ſo doth Sozomenus witneſſe of the things done in them. Cùm Sacerdotali Lege conſtitutum ſit pro irritis haberi debere, quæ præter ſententiam Epiſcopi Romani gerantur: Whereas (ſaith he) it hath beene ordained by a Law of Biſhops, that what things be done (in any Councell) beſides the aduice and wil of the Biſhop of Rome, they ought to be taken for none, and void. To call Councels.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here hath M. Harding brought in a shew of great Authorities without sense. For answer whereof it may please thee, Gentle Reader, to consider the fourth Article of my Former Reply. Notwithstanding, amongst all these words of Pope Iulius, Socrates, Calliodorus, and forged Athanasius, there is not one word of Power and Authoritie to call Councels. Onely thus much they say: No Decree may passe in Councell without the agreement and consent of the Bishop of Rome: for that hee was one of the Foure Principall Patriarkes, and ought to haue his voice there as well as others. It is a Principle ruled in Law: Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet approbari: That toucheth all, must be allowed by all.

Art. 4. Diu. 26.

Μὴ δεῖν χαινίζειν τὰς Ἐκκλησίας.

Regula Iuris.

But lest you should thinke this was the Popes only prerogatiue, and belonged to none other besides him, the same Socrates writeth the very like words as well of the Bishop of Constantinople, as of the Pope. Thus he saith: Et hoc fecerunt, contemnentes Legem, qua cauetur, ne quis eligatur præter sententiam Episcopi Constantinopolitani: Thus did they, not regarding the Decree, whereby order was taken, that no Bishop should be chosen without the consent of the Bishop of Constantinople. Yet may not M. Harding conclude hereof, that therefore the Bishop of Constantinople had Authority to call Councels.

Socr. li. 7. c. 28.

Ἀμελήσαντες τοῦ νόμου κελεύοντος παρὰ γνώμην τοῦ Ἐπισκόπου Κωνσταντινουπόλεως χειροτονίαν μὴ γίνεσθαι.

Æneas Sylvius, that afterward himselfe was Pope, named Pius the Second, writeth thus: His Authoritatibus mirum in modum putant se armatos, qui negant Concilia fieri posse sine consensu Papæ. Quorum sententia, si, vt ipsi volunt, inuiolata persistat, ruinam secum Ecclesiæ trahit: They that say, no Councell may be kept without the consent of the Pope, thinke themselues marueilously fenced by these Authorities. But if their saying hold, and take place, as they would haue it, it will draw with it the decay and ruine of the Church.

The Foure first great Councels, of Nice, of Ephesus, of Chalcedon, of Constantinople, and the rest, as it shall afterward more largely appeare, were alwaies called by the Emperours, and not by the Pope. As for the Pope, hee had not yet the whole World at his commandement, nor any such Vniuersall Authoritie to call Councels; but rather was commanded himselfe, as other Bishops were, by the Emperors Authoritie, to come to Councels, as it shall appeare.

Therefore where you would conclude thus, The Pope was Head of the Church; Ergo hee had authority to call Councels: we may rather, and much better, turne your tale backward, and say thus: The Pope had no Authority to call Councels: Ergo, he was not Head of the Church.

The whole World is the Popes Dioceſſe.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

The Canonists, that is to say, the Popes Pages of Honour, haue not doubted to infeafe their Master with the possession of all the World. One saith thus: Dominus Papa est Ordinarius omnium hominum: Our Lord the Pope is the Ordinary or Bishop of all men. Another saith: Papa totius Mundi obtinet Principatum: The Pope hath the Princehood of all the world. Another saith: Papa est Episcopus totius Orbis: The Pope is the Bishop of the whole world. Another saith: Papa, etiam cessante negligentia Prælatorum, potest conferre beneficia totius Orbis: Quia ipse est Ordinarius totius mundi: Though there haue default or negligence in any Bishop, yet may the Pope bestow the benefices of all the World: For that he is the Bishop of all the World. Therefore when the Chiefe Deacon inuesteth, or enrobeth the Pope at his Consecration, he saith vnto him, Ego inuestio te de Papatu, vt præsis Vrbi & Orbi: I doe inuest thee with the Popedome, that thou maist rule both the City, and the World.

Of this infinite Ambition and inordinate Tyranny many good men haue often complained. Franciscus Zabarella, being himselfe a Cardinall of Rome, saith thus: Ex hoc infiniti sequuti sunt errores: Quia Papa occupauit omnia iura inferiorum Ecclesiarum: Et nisi Deus succurrat statui Ecclesiarum, Vniuersa Ecclesia periclitatur: Hereof haue ensued infinite errours: for that the Pope hath inuaded the right of all inferiour Churches. And vnlesse God helpe the state of the Churches, the Vniuersall Church is in ieopardie.

The Learned Lady Anna, daughter vnto the Emperour Alexius and Irene, in her Storic rie that shee wrote in Greeke, among many other things to like purpose, writeth thus: Papa est Dominus totius mundi, quemadmodum Latini quidem putant, & prædicant: Est enim etiam hæc pars quædam illorum insolentiæ: The Pope is the Lord of all the world, as the Latines thinke and speake of him. For this is one peece of their Ambition. Anna in Historia Græca: Ἐστὶ γὰρ καὶ τοῦτο τῆς ἀλαζονείας αὐτῶν.

This hath beene the late wanton claime of the Popes Canonists. Otherwise the Ancient Learned Fathers haue euermore bounded and limited the Pope within his own particular Iurisdiction. Ruffinus saith, the Fathers in the Councell of Nice appointed the Pope to ouersee the Churches of his owne Suburbes; Vt Romanus Episcopus Suburbicarum Ecclesiarum sollicitudinem gerat. Athanasius saith: Roma est Metropolis Romanæ ditionis: Rome is the Mother Church (not of all the vniuersall world, but) of the Roman (particular) Iurisdiction. The Bishops in the Councell of Rome write thus to the Bishops of Illyricum: Par est, omnes qui sunt in Orbe Romano Magistros conuenire: It is conuenient, that all the Bishops that be within the Iurisdiction of Rome should accord together. Flauianus the Archbishop of Constantinople writeth thus to Leo the Bishop of Rome: Dignetur Sanctitas vestra indicare impietatem Eutycheris omnibus Episcopis sub Beatitudine vestra degentibus: Let your holinesse vouchsafe to make knowen the wickednesse of Eutyches to all the Bishops that liue vnder you. To all the Bishops, he saith, that liue vnder you. Not vnto all Bishops thorow the world. S. Hierome speaking of the vsage and order of the Church of Rome, saith thus: Quid mihi profers vnius Vrbis Consuetudinem? What allegest thou me the Custome of one City? So much he abridgeth the Popes Iurisdiction, that he extendeth it, not vnto the Lists and ends of all the world, but restraineth it onely to the limits of one Citie. Likewise againe, speaking of the Bishop of Rome, he saith thus: Non solùm vnius Vrbis, sed etiam totius Orbis errant Episcopi: Then not onely the Bishop of One Towne, (which was the Bishop of Rome) but also the Bishops of all the world are deceiued. Hist. Eccles. lib. 1. cap. 6. Athanas. ad solitariam vitam agenter. Sozo. li. 6. c. 23. Πάντας τοὺς ἐν Ῥωμαίων κόσμῳ ἐπισκόπους. Hieronymus ad Euagrium. Inter. Epistolas Leon. Epist. 9. Hieronymus ad Euagrium. Hieron. aduersus Vigilantiũ.

Thus therefore writeth Gennadius, together with the Councell of Constantinople, vnto the Bishop of Rome: Curet Sanctitas tua Vniuersas tuas Custodias, tibique subiectos Episcopos: Let your Holinesse see vnto (not all the whole world, but) all your owne charge, and such Bishops as be subiect vnto you. Gennadius ad omnes Metropolitanos, & ad Papam Roman.

By these few we see the Bishop of Romes power was not Vniuersall, or Infinite, ouer al the Churches and Kingdomes of the world, but certaine, and limitted within his owne particular Iurisdiction.

As for the reasons ye vse for proofe hereof, I maruell ye would euer trouble the world with so Childish follies. Christ said vnto Peter, Feed my Sheepe: Ergo, say you, The whole world is the Popes Dioceise. A good Sheepe would haue made a better Argument.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision. 5.

All receiue of the Popes fulnesse.

Which of the Holy Ancient Fathers euer said, that all Bishops haue receiued of your fulnesse?

M. Harding.

Besides others, so hath S. Bernard said in his Booke, De considerationi ad Eugenium: where he saith, that he is called in plenitudinem potestatis, into the fulnesse of power.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

* A Simple Authority.

There is no folly so vaine, but by some shift may be maintained. In your Glosse, M. Harding, it is written thus: Omnes subiecti sunt motioni Papæ, & sunt in illo, quasi Membra de Membro: All men are subiect vnto the Popes will, and are in him as members of a member. Another saith: Ecclesia non habet potestatem aliquam Iurisdictionis, nisi à Petro: The Church hath no power of Iurisdiction, but only from Peter. And againe: A Petro post Christum, Spiritualis Gratia & Potestas deriuatur: Next after Christ, Spirituall Grace and Power is deriued from Peter. And therefore another of your Doctours saith: Omnes Episcopi descendunt à Papa, quasi Membra à Capite: & de eius plenitudine omnes accipiunt: All Bishops are deriued from the Pope, as Members from the Head: and all they receiue of his fulnesse. that is to say, Power of his Power, and Grace of his Grace. All these vanities M. Harding, thinketh may be wel borne out by two bare words of S. Bernard. Clemen. li. 5. de Haret. Ad vestrum. In Gloss. Petr. de Palud. de potesta. Pap. Petr. de Palud. callata Apostol. Durand. lib. 2. De Ministris & Ordinibus.

But S. Augustine, many hundred yeares before Bernard was borne, wrote thus: Nos quidem accipere possumus hoc donum pro modulo nostro: Fundere autem illud super alios non possumus. Sed vt hoc fiat, Deum super eos, à quo hoc efficitur, inuocamus: Indeed we may receiue the gift of God according to our portion: but to powre the same vpon others we are not able. Notwithstanding, in their behalfe we call vpon God that is the worker heereof, that hee will doe it. Aug de Trinit. lib. 15. cap. 26.

Howbeit, what maner of Power it is that the Pope claimeth, his owne Proctors and Counsellers can tell vs best. Cardinall Hostiensis saith: Excepto peccato, Papa potest quicquid Deus ipse potest: Sinne only excepted, the Pope hath power to doe whatsoeuer God himselfe can doe.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. This is false and slanderous. This is a most manifest, and out of all question, foule corruption. Certainely Hostiensis saith not so. But hauing reckoned certaine things wherein the Pope hath Authority vnder God, as Christs high Officer, he concludeth with these words: Breuiter, excepto peccato, quasi omnia de iure potest, vt Deus: Briefly, excepted sinne, he hath power, as a man would say, in all things of right, as God. Thus saith Hostiensis, and not as M. Iewell belieth him, &c. It is said by the Learned Canonists, that the Consistorie of God, and of the Pope, is one Consistorie; as a Bishops and his Chancellours Consistory is one and the same Consistorie. Now let vs consider the impudencie of this false Minister. First he auoucheth his shamelesse lie boldly, as though where truth faileth, for shew of truth, the matter might be stouted out. The words, saith he, be most manifest, & out of all question: Excepto peccato, Papa potest quicquid Deus ipse potest: That is to say, the Pope can do as much as God himselfe can doe, sinne excepted. But what if these words be not most manifest? Is it not then a most manifest impudencie so to affirme of them? Is not this Minister a Minister of Lies? &c. First he hath nipt away this word, Breuiter, then this word, Quasi, which mitigateth and qualifieth the saying: Then againe those other words of necessary importance, Omnia, de iure, and vt. Next he corrupted the sentence by putting to these words of his owne, Quidquid, and Ipse, &c. Who euer saw one little poore sentence so nipt, so hackt, so hewed and mangled, so turned, and cast in a new mould? The Answer. It fareth with you, M. Harding, as it did sometime with a good honest plaine man, that tolde his friend vpon a reckoning that he would not be answered with fiue pounds, but would haue fifteene good Nobles, euery penny: and that he would not be so mockt. For although there be some alteration in these words, yet in sense and meaning there is as great ods as is betweene fifteene Nobles, and fiue Pound. You say; I haue nipt, and hackt, and hewen these words, and haue left out this word, Breuiter. Now verily, M. Harding, any wise man may thinke, this is a very simple quarrell for a man of your Learning. For if I had nipt off this word, Breuiter, as indeed I haue not, yet what would that make to the hacking and hewing of the sense? But you say, I haue left out other words besides, as Omnia, De iure, and Vt, words, as you tell vs, of necessary importance. I beseech you, M. Harding, if you haue any such fansie to these words, put them all in againe, and much good may they doe you. So shall your sentence be this: Papa potest omnia de iure, vt Deus potest: The Pope may doe all things of right, as being God: or, as God can doe. Me thinketh hereby the matter is but coursely mended. It seemeth worse then it was before. For thus much you say: The Pope of Right may doe all things, as God may doe. So much haue you gained by adding of these necessary and speciall words, De iure, and Vt. Notwithstanding, in Abbas Panormitanus, out of whom I alleged these words of Hostiensis, ye shall finde neither Breuiter, nor De, nor Iure, nor Vt neither. So necessary is their importance. Thus haue you three of your greatest Canons easily discharged with little adoe: vnlesse you will likewise say, that Abbas Panormitanus is also a False Minister, and impudently beliefh Hostiensis. Wherein certainely, M. Harding, you haue a speciall grace to speake at pleasure.

Of the other side you say: I haue added vehement words of mine owne, to enforce the matter. For whereas Hostiensis saith only, Deus, God; I haue imagined him to say, Deus ipse, God himselfe. And I pray you, M. Harding, what difference finde you betweene God, and God himselfe? Is God himselfe one, and God another? I thanke God, I know none other God, but God himselfe. This then, I trow, must be your meaning: The Pope can doe all things (not that God himselfe can doe, for that you say were blasphemy, but) that God can doe.

Againe (you say) I haue left out this word, Omnia. But you might easily haue seene, that in stead thereof I placed, Quicquid. And I would thinke, that Quicquid were as much as Omnia quæ: vnlesse you can shew vs some prety new Louanian Grammar to the contrary.

Once

Once againe you say: I haue left out this word, Quasi, which word (you say) mitigateth and qualifieth the saying. Then I trow, this saying is such as hath need of some mitigation. Howbeit indeed this is but a Quasi quarrell, M. Harding. If your Pope may not be God himselfe, yet at the least ye would haue him to be a Quasi God. It shameth me thus to encumber the world with such vanities. But your importunity, M. Harding, enforceth me further than I would.

All Power giuen to the Pope.

The very words in Abbas Panormitanus, reported out of Hostiensis, are these: Papa & Christus faciunt vnum Consistorium: ita quòd, excepto peccato, potest Papa quasi omnia facere quæ potest Deus: The Pope and Christ make one Consistorie, or one Iudgement seat: so that, sinne excepted, the Pope in a maner may do all things that God may doe. These be the words, M. Harding. Let some Lawyer turne your Bookes. You shall find them so. And here once againe I tell you, you haue neither Breuiter, nor De, nor Iure, nor Vt, nor any other iust cause why ye should fare so terribly with your Ministers.

Whereas Hostiensis saith, The Pope and Christ make one Consistorie; This (you say) is well said by the learned Canonists: as a Bishope and his Chancellours Consistory is one and the same Consistory. Your meaning herein, I trow, is this; That God is the Bishop, and the Pope his Chancellour: and as there lieth no appeale from the Chancellour to the Bishop, so there lieth no appeale from the Pope to God, for that the Pope and God haue one only Consistory: And the Law saith; Ab vno ad seipsum non est appellatio.

Extr. in Sexto Lib. 1. de Consuetudine, Non putamus.

But why shew you your selfe so squamish, and so dangerous in these words, The Pope may doe whatsoeuer God may doe? You may remember, that your Canonists haue moued questions, Whether the Pope be God, or no. You may remember, that the Pope hath suffered himselfe to be called God. For thus one said vnto him presently before his face in the Councell of Laterane without rebuke: Tu es alter Deus in Terris: Thou art another God in the Earth. You may remember, that the Pope suffereth his Canonists thus to publish and to blaze his Godhead to the World in printed Bookes: Dominus Deus noster Papa: Our Lord God the Pope. Thus, and euen with these selfe same expresse words, hath it bẽn printed often, and in sundry places. Yet haue I not heard of any Pope that euer found fault with the printing. You may remember, that whereas S. Augustine saith, Quis audeat dicere Deo? Who dareth to say thus to God? your Canonists haue made vp, and bettered the matter in this sort: Quis audeat dicere Deo, vel Papæ? Who dareth to say thus to God or to the Pope? Thus they say, as if there were some equality betwẽn the Pope, and God. You may remember, it is written in the Ceremoniary of the Church of Rome: Moderatio Imperii Romani pertinet ad Papam, Dei Vices gerentem in Terris, tanquam ad eum, per quem Reges Regnant: The Gouernment of the Roman Empire belongeth to the Pope, being Gods Vicar in Earth, as vnto him by whom Kings Rule, and weare their Crownes. And what is he, M. Harding, by whom Kings be Kings, and haue their Authority, but onlie God? You may remember these words were spoken in a Councell holden in Rome, in the Popes owne Palace of Laterane euen in the presence and hearing of the Pope: In Papa est omnis potestas supra omnes potestates, tam Cœli, quàm Terræ: In the Pope is all maner of power aboue all powers, as well of Heauen, as of Earth. I beseech you, good M. Harding, what Power may this be, but onle the Power of God himselfe?

You may remember, Franciscus Zabarella saith: Papa facit quicquid libet, etiam illicita, & est plus quàm Deus: The Pope doth whatsoeuer he listeth, yea although it be vnlawfull, and is more than God. Thus you see, M. Harding, your Pope is a God of the Earth: Your Pope is Lord and God: Your Pope is he, by whom Kings are Kings: Your Pope hath power aboue all powers, either in Heauen, or in Earth: Your Pope is more than God. Giue these words what sense or incense may like you best: Embawme them with your most fauourable and sweetest Constructions, ye shall neuer be able to make them sauour: When all your Doctrine is sifted, the bottome thereof is this: Sinne only excepted, the Pope in a maner may doe all things that God may doe. Therefore, M. Harding, call not the Ministers of Gods Truth, the Ministers of Lies. He hath of long time Ministred Lies vnto the world, that being a wretched sinfull man, hath stalled himselfe in the place of God. And you, forcing all your wits and learning to vphold and soth him in his Blasphemie, must needs be a Minister of open Lies.

Fran. Zabarel.

Stephanus the Bishop of Patraca, in your late Councell at Laterane in Rome, saith thus: In Papa est omnis potestas supra omnes potestates, tam Cœli, quàm Terræ; All Power is in the Pope aboue all the Powers, as well of Heauen, as of Earth.

In Conc. Lateran. sub Leone 10. Session. 10. Citatur in eod. Conc. Lateran.

This is that Power that M. Harding here hath ſo cloſely conueied in vnder the cloud of his Diſtinction.

Baldus. But Baldus, that by experience ſaw the practiſe hereof, ſaith thus: Hæc Plenitudo Poteſtatis eſt Plenitudo Tempeſtatis: This Fulneſſe of Poner is a Fulneſſe of Tempeſt.

Notwithſtanding, he alloweth the greateſt* Power vnto the Pope. S. Bernard himſelfe ſaith to like purpoſe: Sic facitando, probatis vos habere Plenitudinem Poteſtatis: Sed Iuſtitiæ fortè non ita: Thus doing and dealing, yee ſhew your ſelfe to haue the Fulneſſe of Power: But perhaps not likewiſe the Fulneſſe of Iuſtice.

Which of the ancient Fathers euer ſaid, that neither King, nor Prince, nor the whole Clergie, nor all the people together are able to be Iudges ouer you?

M. Harding.

(a) Worthy reaſons.

(b) This Marcellinus being Pope had committed open Idolatry in making Sacrifice vnto Diuels.

(a) What Sheepe ſhall be Iudges ouer their Shepheard? For, as the Fathers of the moſt ancient Councel of Sinneſſa ſaid in the cauſe of (b) Marcellinus the Pope, Nemo vnquam iudicauit Pontificem: No man euer iudged the Pope, nor any Prelate his high Prieſt. Quoniam prima Sedes non iudicabitur à quoquam: Becauſe the firſt See ſhall not be iudged of any body.

One of your Doctors ſaith thus: Omne factum Sanctiſſimi Patris interpretari debemus in bonum. Et ſi quidem fuerit furtum, vel aliud ex ſe malum, interpretari debemus, quòd Diuino inſtinctu fiat: We muſt expound euery act of the Holy Father for the beſt. And if it be theft, or any other thing that of it ſelfe is euil, (as Aduouterie, or Fornication) we muſt thinke it is done by the ſecret inſpiration of God. Another ſaith: Si Papa innumerabiles populos cateruatim ſecum ducat mancipio Gehennæ, cum ipſo plagis multis in æternum vapulaturos, huius culpas arguere preſumat mortalium nullus: If the Pope draw infinite companies of people by heapes together with himſelfe into Hell, to be puniſhed with him with many ſtripes for euer, yet let no Mortall man preſume to reprooue his faults.

Thus may the Pope depoſe Kings and Princes, and trouble the whole ſtate of the world, world, and doe what he list, without controlement. Yet may no man dare say vnto him, Sir, why doe ye so? Therefore the accusers of Pope Symmachus said in the presence of King Theodoricus: Successores Petri vna cum Sedis priuilegijs peccandi quoque licentiam accepisse: The Pope maketh his boast, that together with the power of teaching, he hath retained free liberty to doe ill. Ennodius.

Pope Marcellinus, whose name ye haue alleged out of the Councel of Sinnessa, for defense heereof, was an Apostata, and had forsaken Christ, and being Pope in Rome, had made Sacrifice vnto Diuels. All this notwithstanding, ye say, No mortal man might accuse him. Thus hath the Pope a speciall Prerogatiue and premunire to forsake Christ, and to commit open Idolatrie, and to giue Honour and Sacrifice vnto Diuels, without controlement. Conc. Tomo 1. In Marcellino.

Yet S. Paul accused S. Peter, euen vnto his face, in the presence of many. And S. Cyprian saith: Petrus se non vindicauit, seu aliquid insolenter assumpsit, vt diceret, se Primatum tenere, & obtemperari sibi a nouellis, & posteris oportere: Peter (being thus checked openly by S. Paul) neither reuenged himselfe nor tooke any thing prondly vpon him, as to say, that hee had the Primacy, or that others, that were but Nouices and aftercommers, (as Paul was) ought to be obedient vnto him. Mena, the Bishop of Constantinople, iudged and excommunicated Pope Vigilius. The Bishops of the East Church, iudged and excommunicated and deposed Pope Iulius. One of your Doctors saith: Si Papa cõmittat crimen Depositione dignum, debet puniri, acsi esset vnus rusticus: If the Pope commit an offence wherefore he should iustly be deposed, he ought to be punished, as if he were a Clowne of the Countrey. Your Neighbours of Leodium, in their Epistle against Pope Paschalis, write thus: Remoto Romanæ Ambitionis typho, cur de grauibus, & manifestis, non reprehendantur, & corrigantur Romani Episcopi? qui reprehendi & corrigi non vult, pseudo est, siue Episcopus, siue Clericus: Setting apart the Pride of Romish Ambition, the crimes being great and manifest, why may not the Bishops of Rome *both be reproued, and also corrected? Which of the Ancient Fathers euer said, that Kings and Emperours, by Christs will and Commandement, receiue their authority at your hands?

M. Harding.

What is to be answered hereto, * you may gather of that is alleged before out of S. Bernard, speaking of both swords.

* There may you finde nothing to proue nothing.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It is euident by the record and generall consent of all ancient Writers, that the Pope hath neither possession, nor foot of Lands, nor House to dwell in, nor the name of Vniuersall Bishop, nor Chartar, nor Liberty, nor Iurisdiction, but that hee hath receiued, either of the French Kings, or of the Emperours. Yet would he now beare the World in hand, that the Emperour hath nothing, neither Lands, nor Honour, nor Power, nor Right, nor Sword, nor Iurisdiction, but only from him. If any man doubt heereof, besides other testimonies of Antiquity, let him read that most vaine and Childish Donation, that the Pope himselfe hath forged vnder the name of the Emperour Constantine. S. Ambrose saith: Si non vis esse obnoxius Cæsari, noli habere quæ sunt Mundi. Si habes diuitias, obnoxius es Cæsari: If thou wilt not be subiect to the Prince, then possesse not the things that be of the world. If thou haue worldly riches, then art thou subiect vnto the Prince. Likewise S. Augustine: Dices, Quid mihi, & Regi? Quid tibi ergo, & possessioni? per Iura Regum possessiones possidentur: Thou wilt say (as the Pope saith) what haue I to doe with the Prince? What then hast thou to doe with Lands? For possessions are holden (not by the Popes right, but) by the right of Kings and Princes. Niceph. lib. 7. cap. 46. Carion. in Bonif. 3. Sabel. in Phoca. Ambro. in Lucam. lib. 9. c. 20. Aug. in Iohan. Citatur in epist. Leodien. contra Paschalem. Concil. tom. 2.

Charles the French King, Nephew to Charles the Great, wrot thus vnto Pope Adrian: Imperatores Ius distinguendorum negotiorũ Episcopis Sanctis iuxta Diualia Constituta permiserunt: non autem Episoporum Villici extiterunt: Emperours by their Commissions vnder their great Seales, haue granted vnto Bishops authority to heare causes, but they themselues were neuer Stewards or Basliffes vnto Bishops. One of your owne late Doctors saith: Papa habet gladium (Ciuilem) ex Commissione & permissione Principis: The Pope hath the Temporall Sword or Ciuill iurisdiction, by the Commission and Sufferance of the Prince. Therefore it seemeth great folly to say, The Prince hath his Sword or Iurisdiction only by the Commission of the Pope. *Citatur ab Illyrico inter testes veritat. pa. 102 Ioh. de Parisijs. What shall wee nede moe witnesses? Your very Ceremoniary of Rome saith thus: Hoc affirmamus, ante Carolum Magnum, neminem Imperij Romani Coronam ex Manu Romani Pontificis Romæ suscepisse: Thus we say, that before the Emperor Charles the Great (that is, for the space of eight hundred yeeres after Christ) no man euer receiued the Crowne of the Roman Empire at Rome, by the hands of the Bishop of Rome. S. Bernard hereof thus writeth vnto the Pope: Esto, vt alia quacunque ratione hoc tibi vendices: non tamen Apostolico iure: Nec illud tibi dare, quod non habuit, Petrus potuit: Be it, that ye claime this right by some other meanes: yet by the Apostles right ye cannot claime it: neither could Peter giue you that right, that he himselfe neuer had.

The Emperour by his Decrees saith: Mea Potestas non pendet à Papa, sed à Deo immediatè. Et vanum est, quod dici solet, Papam non habere Superiorem: My Power hangeth not of the Pope, but immediatly of God alone. And it is but a peeuish vaine tale that they say, the Pope hath no Superior. Iohannes Maior saith: Bonifacius Octauus multum apparenter definiuit, quòd Romanus Pontifex est supra Reges in Temporalibus: quod tamen oculatissimi Theologi dicunt esse falsum: Pope Bonifacius the eigth, hath concluded with great shew of reason, that euen in Temporall causes, the Pope is aboue Kings. But I may tell you, the Wisest diuines say, it is but a false tale. Iohannes de Parisijs saith: In Temporalibus, potestas Sæcularis maior est potestate Spirituali, nec, quoad ista, est ei subiecta in aliquo: In Temporall causes, the Temporall power is greater then the Spirituall power, and touching the same, is not subiect to it in any point. Againe he saith: Si Imperator habet potestatem suam immediatè à Papa, Ergo, Imperator est Minister Papæ: If the Emperour receiue his power immediatly from the Pope, then is the Emperour the Popes Seruant.

All these authorities notwithstanding, the Pope himselfe saith of himselfe, The Emperour hath no Right nor Authority, but only of me. And touching the last Obiection of Parisiensis, that the Emperour should be the Popes Seruant, he thinketh it may be well admitted without any great inconuenience. For thus saith one of his Priuie Councell: Iste Romanus Imperator, est Procurator & Defensor Romanæ Ecclesiæ: *This Romane Emperour is (nothing else, but) the Proctour and Steward of the Church of Rome.* Cardinall Hostiensis saith: Imperator est Feudatarius Romanæ Ecclesiæ: The Emperour is a Vassall or a Feeldman of the Church of Rome. And Pope Innocentius saith: Imperator tenet Imperium à Papa. Vnde tenetur præstare Papæ iuramentum Homagij, scilicet, quod Vasallus præstare solet Domino suo: The Emperour holdeth his Empire of the Pope. And therefore he is bound to sweare Homage and Fealty to the Pope, as the Vassall is bound to his Lord. I thinke, the Pope will desire to haue no more. The Emperour is brought to bee his man.

Likewise saith Iohannes de Parisijs: Dicunt, quòd Solus Papa est Verus Dominus Temporalium: Ita vt possit auferre ab alio, quod aliâs suum est: & tenet factum eius, licèt peccet. Sed Prælati cæteri, & Principes, non sunt Domini, sed Tutores, Procuratores, & Dispensatores: They say, that only the Pope is the right Lord of Temporall possessions: so, that hee may put any man from his owne. And although he offend in so doing, yet his doing taketh place. As for other Bishops and Princes they be not Lords, but Ouerseers, Bayliffes, and Stewards.

Auentinus, lib. 6. pag. 636.

Therefore Pope Adrian namely thus aduanced himselfe aboue the Emperour Fredericus 1. Imperator per nos imperat: Vnde habet Imperium, nisi a nobis? Ecce in potestate nostra est, vt demus illud cui volumus: propterea constituti sumus à Deo super Gentes, & Regna: vt destruamus, & euellamus, & ædificemus, & plantemus: By meane of vs the Emperour is Emperour: For whence hath he his Empire, but of vs? Behold it is in our hand to bestow the Empire vpon whom wee list. And to that end are we placed by God, ouer Nations and Kingdomes: that we should destroy and plucke vp, and build, and plant. Such proud vants the Pope maketh of himselfe, without either shame of the World, or feare of God.

The Pope aboue the Emperor.

Ioh. de Parisijs, cap. 11.

Howbeit, that it may appeare, what prety Mirth ye haue made therewith, one of your owne fellowes saith thus: Ecclesiastici debent iudicare per contemptibiles, id est, per Laicos, Secundùm tenorem, & debitum Terreni Iuris: The Ecclesiasticall Officers or Bishops ought to iudge by them that be vile and contemptible, that is to say, by the Lay Magistrates, according to the tenour and order of the Temporall Law. Heere in your Mirth and pleasance, in comparison of your selues, ye call Princes and Temporall Magistrates, Vile and Contemptible, and so would ye haue them regarded among the people.

Ioh. de Parisijs, cap. 11.

Againe, ye say, Patet Regnum, siue Regimen Regale non esse acceptum à Deo. Sed ipsum solum permisit indignatus. Et magis esset acceptum Deo, quòd per solum Papam Mundus in omnibus regeretur: It is plaine, that the state of kingdome or kingly gouernment came not from God, for God only suffered it in his anger. And it were more acceptable vnto God, that the whole World were in all things gouerned by the Pope alone. It were good, yee should tell vs, whether ye speake this onely in Mirth and Game, or else in earnest and good sadnesse.

Isidorus in Glos. in Genesim.

Ioh. de Parisijs, cap. 4.

Verily, when ye so proudly compare the Pope to the Sunne, and the Emperour to the Moone, your meaning is, that as the Moone hath no light, but only from the Sunne, so the Emperour hath no authority, but only, that he receiueth from the Pope. Notwithstanding, in this comparison, Isidorus, your owne Doctour saith, ye are foulely ouerséene. For thus he writeth: Per Solem intelligitur Regnum, & per Lunam intelligitur Sacerdotium: By the Sunne, is meant Kingly Dignity, and by the Moone, is meant Priesthood. Now therefore Iacke Andrew, your merry man, by this reckoning may cast your accounts backward, and say, The Emperor is seuenty and seuen times greater then the Pope.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision. 10.

Which of the Ancient Fathers euer said, that more ample authority is giuen to you, then to the residue of the Patriarkes?

M. Harding.

* The Fathers of the Nicene Councell, by witnesse of S. Iulius the first, who then liued, and those of the Councel of Sardica, * Athanasius, and the Bishops of Ægypt, Thebaida, and Lybia, and the Fathers of certaine other Councels.

Aboue al other most specially the first Christian Emperour (a) Constantine the Great. Who being fully instructed of the most godly and learned Bishops of his time, (a) what authoritie the Successour of Peter, had by (a) commission of our Sauiour Christ, thought good by his (a) Emperiall Commandement and Decree, to confirme, ratifie, and for his owne person to yeeld vnto (b) blessed Sylvester then Pope, and to his Successours Bishops of Rome, the same authority and Superiority, not only ouer Bishoppes, and Patriarkes, but also Power and Honour, higher and greater, then that of Kings and Emperours. The words of (c) his solemne decree in that behalfe made, are these, which as they are found in sundry other Greeke writers, so most plainely in (d) Matthæus Hieromonachus: Θεσπίζομεν σύμπαντα τοῖς σατεφάπαις καὶ τῇ συγκλήτῳ τῆς ἡμῶν βασιλείας τὸν Ῥώμης ἐπίσκοπον, καὶ διάδηλον τοῦ κορυφαίου τῆδ᾽ ἀποστόλου, καὶ κυρίου μου πέτρου, πλείονα τὴν βασιλείας ἴσχειν ἐξουσίαν κατὰ πάσων τῶν διεκυμάνων, καὶ παρὰ πάντων πολλῷ πλέον ἢ τὸν βασιλέα τιμᾶσθαι καὶ σέβεσθαι, κεκελεύκατ᾽ εἶναι τῶν πεσόντων παντελῆ ἀφεσιν, κείνδαίνα πορεύεσθαι καὶ ψηφίζεσθαι τὸν τῆ ὀρθοδόξῳ συμβαίνοντα πίστει. Which in our mother tongue is this much to say. We giue in decree and commandement to all Lords, and to the Senate of our Empire, that the Bishop of Rome, & the Successor of S. Peter chief of the Apostles, haue authority & power in al the World more than that of the Empire is, & that he be honoured & worshipped more then the Emperor, and

(a) Vntruths, without any word or shew of truth.

(b) Vntruth. For Sylvester was dead long before these matters are imagined to be done.

(c) This solemne Decree is nothing else, but a solemne follie.

(d) For shame: hath the Pope none other Record to proue his Charter by, but only one poore, hungrie, forged Grecian, that neuer saw Rome?

and that he be Head of the foure Patriarchal Seates, and that things apperraining to the right Faith bee of him iudged & determined. Iustinian the Emperour likewise made an expresse decree, that the most Holy Pope of the elder Rome or these be his very words) be taken according to the determination of the Holy Councels, to be the (e) first and principall of all Bishops. It were not hard to alleg̃e much more for proofe heereof, of good and sufficient authority, but in a matter not doubtfull this may suffice.

(e) First, and principall in Councels, wee confesse: but Lord and Master of all other Patriarkes, that would bee proued.

Constantines Donation.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This is a follie of all follies. Yet is there no folly so great, but by words, and countenance it may be maintained. It shameth me to bestow words herein: and so much the more, for that you say, the case is so cleere, and out of doubt. I assure you, M. Harding, of al other your innumerable Louanian Vanities, concerning the practise of the Church, and story of time, this one Vanity is the Vainest.

But lest any man by simplicity or ignorance should be deceiued, not vnderstanding the Mysteries of this Donation or Chartar, by the iudgement of your owne Doctours, the meaning thereof is this: Volunt aliqui, quòd ratione huius Doni, Papa est Imperator, & dominus Mundi: & quòd potest Reges instituere, & destituere, sicut Imperator: Some thinke, that by force and vertue of this Donation, the Pope is the Emperor, and the Lord of the world. And that heereby he hath Power both to set vp, and also to put downe Kings as an Emperour. Therefore I cannot blame you, M. Harding, for that you stand so stiffely to this Donation. For if ye lose this, ye lose the Empire of the World.

Ioh. de Parisijs de Potestate Regia. cap. 22.

The fable hereof is so puerish, that the wisest and best learned of your very friends, Platina, Cardinall Cusanus, Marsilius Patauinus, Laurentius Valla, Antoninus Florentinus, Otho Frisingensis, Hieronymus, Paulus Catalanus, Volaterranus, Nauclerus, Capnion, Mullinæus, and others, haue openly reproued it vnto the World, and haue written against it, and are much ashamed of your follies.

Nicolaus Cusan. de Concordantia Cathol. lib. 3. cap. 2.

And to allege one in stead of many, Cardinall Cusanus hereof hath written thus: Donationem Constantini diligenter expendens, reperi ex ipsamet Scriptura manifesta argumenta Confictionis & Falsitatis: Aduisedly weighing this Donation, or Grant of Constantine, (whereby the Pope claimeth all his Temporall Power) euen in the penning thereof, I finde manifest tokens of Falshood and Forgery.

Nicol. Cusan. eodem loco.

Againe he saith: Sunt, meo iudicio, illa de Constantino, Apocrypha: Sicut etiam fortassis quædam alia longa, & magna Scripta Sanctis, Clementi & Anacleto Papæ ascripta. Ipsæ enim Epistolæ, applicatæ ad tempus illorum Sanctorum, seipsas produnt: By my iudgement these Charters of Constantine are forged: as perhaps are also other long and great Letters, that beare the name of S. Clement, and Pope Anacletus. For the Letters themselues applied vnto the time of these Holy Fathers, betray themselues.

Dist. 98. Constantinus.

Againe the same Grant of Constantine, euen in Gratian the Popes owne Register, is found only in the Palea, and not in the Originall allowed Text. And in many old bookes that haue no Glosse it is not found. And in the Glosse vpon the same it is noted thus: Palea ista non legitur in Scholis: in qua continetur Priuilegium, quod Constantinus concessit Romanæ Ecclesiæ: Scilicet, vt Primatum inter omnes Ecclesias obtineret: This patch is not read in the Schooles: wherein is contained the priuiledge, that Constantinus the Emperor granted to the Church of Rome, that is to say, that the said Church should haue the Soueraignty ouer all Churches.

Gloss. eod. loco

Pius 2. in Dial.

And to put the matter out of doubt, euen Pope Pius himselfe thereof saith thus: Dicta palea Constantinus, falsa est: The said patch, that so beginneth Constantinus, is starke false. Heere, M. Harding, the Pope himselfe telleth you, that your Donation, whereby the Pope holdeth his Kingdome, and Triple Crowne, is nothing else but a false forgery, craftily clowted vp by some of your Parasites, for the purpose. Whereunto Felinus your Canonist addeth these words: Et inuehit contra miseros Legistas, qui laborant in disputando an valuerit id, quod nunquam fuit: And the same Pope Pius rageth earnestly against the poore Lawyers, for that they take such paines to reason, whether that thing may be good, and auailable in Law, that neuer was made.

Felin. de Maiorit. & Obed. Solit. Colum. 3.

And againe, the same Doctours, that would seeme most friendly and honourably to speake of this Donation, by their owne iudgement, do quite condemne it. For thus they say: In Donatione illa audita est Vox Angelorum in aëre dicentium, Hodie Venenum effusum est in Ecclesiam: At the time of the Confirming and passing of this Donation, there was a voice of Angels heard in the aire, saying, This day poison is powred into the Church. Thus you see, notwithstanding your Donation were good and true, yet by the testimony of the Angels of Heauen, it were nothing else, but the poison and destruction of the Church of God. Briefly to touch some part of the Contents and Substance of the same, the foolish Body that forged it, was so simple and void of wit, that he knew not whether Constantinople stood in the East from Rome, or in the North: Whether Byzance, were a Citie

or a Countrie: Whether the Emperiall Diademe, were made of Silke or of Gold. Hee telleth a tale of the Patriarke of Constantinople, that he should be boner and buxum to the Bishop of Rome, and yet at that time, when, as he imagineth, the Grant was made, the City of Constantinople, was not builded, nor any such name as yet knowen in the world. Now consider also what a speciall grace this Clerke hath in the Latine tongue. These be his flowers: Signa & Banna: Decernere disponenda: Concedere permanenda: Licentiam dare: Equos equitare, &c. And Clericare in his language, is good Latine to make Priests. This is such Latine, as, I will not say, Constantine himselfe, but Constantines Cooke would neuer haue spoken.

Constantines Donation.

And yet is the Marginall Glosse hereupon, as good, and as substantiall as the Text. For whereas the text saith: Contradimus Beato Syluestro phrygium nostrum, id est, mitram: We deliuer vnto Blessed Syluester our phrygium, that is to say, our miter, there shall you finde this piety note in the Margin: Nota quòd Phrygium factum est ex pennis pauonum: Marke well, that this Phrygium, or Miter, was made of a Peacockes taile. No doubt a worthy gift for an Emperour: and a meet Miter for a Pope. All these things, M. Harding, you know to be true: and yet haue you a pen and a mouth to defend them. But, as I said before, it shameth me in so childish a fable to stand so long.

Concil. Tom. 1. pag. 227. Phrygium.

As for your Greeke Doctour Hieromonachus, he shall bee stalled together with your Clemens, Leontius, Amphilochius, and otherlike your worthy and weighty Doctours. For shame, what should ye bring vs this one seely poore Greeke witnesse, whose name ye neuer heard before, to testifie of Grants and Conueiances made in Rome? Can your Pope finde out neither Councell, nor Doctour, nor Father, nor any other Writer of likely record, to helpe him in so great a case, but onely one poore rascall Grecian, that knew no more of the matter, then you your selues? It bewraieth the nakednesse of your cause. He that durst so leaudly to falsifie such a Grant, thereby to intrude himselfe into the possession of the Empire, would not blush to falsifie some beggarly Witnesse, to auouch the same.

Now where ye would seeme to say, The other foure Patriarkes stood euermore at the Commandement of the Bishop of Rome: not only the said three Patriarkes which neuer neither yeelded, nor knew any such obedience, but also the generall practise of the World will soone reproue you.

Nilus a Greeke Writer saith: Vt liquidiùs appareat, Papam non imperare alijs omnibus Episcopis, legatur Sextus Canon Synodi Nicenæ, quo diserte præcipitur, vt alijs Ecclesijs Alexandrinus, alijs Romanus, alijs Antiochenus præsit: Vt non liceat alteri, alterius prouinciam inuadere: That it may well and plainely appeare, that the Pope hath no power or gouernment ouer all other Bishops, read the Sixth Canon of the Nicene Councell. There it is expresly commanded that the Bishop of Alexandria, shall haue the rule ouer certaine Churches, and the Bishop of Rome ouer certaine, and the Bishop of Antioch likewise ouer certaine: And that it shall not be lawfull for any one of them to inuade the Iurisdiction of another.

Nilus. De Primatu Romani Pontificis. καὶ ἀτ ἐκ τῶν ἱερῶν κανόνων δῆλον.

The Emperour Iustinian saith: Ecclesia Vrbis Constantinopolitanæ Romæ Veteris Prærogatiua lætatur: The Church of the City of Constantinople enioyeth now the Prerogatiue of Rome the elder. Nicephorus saith: Romano & Constantinopolitano Episcopo ex æquo paria sunt & dignitatis præmia & honorum iura: The title of dignity and right of honour giuen to the Bishop of Rome, and the Bishop of Constantinople, are one and equall. So likewise it was determined by Decree in the Councell of Constantinople: Definimus Sedi Constantinopolitanæ paria Iura, & Priuilegia cum Sede Veteris Romæ: We Decree that the See of Constantinople shall haue rights and priuileges equal with the See of Old Rome. Now consider well this matter, M. Harding. If the Patriarke of Constantinople were the Popes Equall, how was he his Subiect? If he were his Subiect, how was he his Equall? Ye shall hardly force these things to frame together. Therefore, as it is said before, Gennadius, together with the Councell of Constantinople, wrote thus vnto the Bishop of Rome: Curet Sanctitas tua Vniuersas tuas Custodias, vbique Subiectos Episcopos: Let your Holinesse see vnto all your owne Cures, and to the Bishops that be subiect vnto you.

S. Cyprian, Cyrillus, Athanasius, and others, writing either of, or vnto the Bishop of Rome, cal him, not their Lord and Master, vnto whom of duty they ought Obedience, but their Brother, and their Fellow Seruant. Yea the Pope himselfe, in some cases hath rather offered his Obedience vnto other Bishops. For thus writeth Pope Liberius vnto Athanasius the Bishop of Alexandria: Quæso vt huic Confessioni subscribas, vt ego securior efficiar, & tua mandata inhæsitanter obeam: I beseech thee to subscrib to this Confession that I may be out of doubt, and may doe your Commandements without grudging. Yet now the Bishop of Rome, to maintaine his Title by a Writ of Right, forasmuch as the foure Principall Patriarkes of the World haue forsaken him, appointeth out foure of his ordinarie ordinary Chaplaines, and giueth them the names of foure Patriarkes: The first for Constantinople: the second for Alexandria: the third for Antioch: the fourth for Hierusalem. And thus hauing these foure at commandement, in his pleasant fansie, hee ruleth and gouerneth the whole world. In such a solemne brauerie, the great Cham of Tartary at this day, after he hath dined himselfe, soundeth out a Trumpet, and giueth all the Kings and Emperours of the World leaue to goe to dinner: and in this imagination and follity, he continueth his claime to the possession of all the World, euen by as good right and title, as doth the Pope. And whensoeuer the Pope himselfe, in his owne person, openly and solemnly saith his Masse, he commandeth the Gospell and Epistle to be read in Greeke. Whereupon his owne Master of Ceremonies, saith thus: Hanc Consuetudinem hinc ortam puto, vt appareat Romanam Ecclesiam in se continere vtramque Gentem: Heereof, I thinke, this Custome first proceeded, that heereby it may appeare, that the Church of Rome containeth in it both Nations, as well Greekes as Latines.

All this notwithstanding, Antoninus saith, Hoc Græci non credunt: For all this, the Greekes beleeue it not.

M. Harding.

None that wise is, so speaketh absolutely: neuertheless in some certaine sense, * S. Clement calleth euery Bishop, Terrenum quendam Deum, a certaine earthly God, as it is written, *I haue said, ye are Gods, &c.

* A vaine forgery.

* These words are spoken of Princes and Magistrates.

Hieron. in Daniel. cap. 3.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

So that ye make not the Pope an Absolute God, ye thinke, ye may otherwise call him God safely and without preiudice. A proper shift to maintaine a vaine man in the possession of his Godhead. In such a pleasant imagination Antiochus sometime the King of Syria, entituled himselfe by the name of God. So the Emperour Domitian vsed to assigne his Proclamations: Dominus Deus vester Domitianus: Our Lord God Domitian. So the Emperour Caligula called himselfe, Deum Optimum Maximum, & Iouem Latialem: The best, and most mighty God, and the great God Iuppiter of Italy: So Sapores the great King of Persia, called himselfe Fratrem Solis & Lunæ: The Brother of the Sunne, and the Moone: So the peuish Physician Menecrates called himselfe Iupiter: So Nicostratus called himselfe Hercules: So Nicagoras made himselfe a paire of wings, and would needs be called the God Mercurius: So Manichæus the heretike called himselfe the Holy Ghost: So the Romans in old times erected vp an Image in the honour of Simon Magus the Sorcerer, with this Inscription or Posie: Simoni Sancto Deo: In the honour of Simon the holy God. By this your so handsome Distinction, M. Harding, of God Absolute, and God not Absolute, I see not, but euery of these might wel and safely haue maintained his title without blame.

Certainely in this arrogant vanity, scarcely any of al these was euer comparable to the Pope. Pope Nicolas saith: Constat Summum Pontificem, à pio Principe Constantino Deum appellatum: It is well knowen that the Pope, of the godly Prince Constantine, was called God. Likewise the Pope was wel content to suffer one of his Parasites to say vnto him in the late Councell of Lateran: Tu es alter Deus in Terris: Thou art another God in Earth. Likewise Cardillus the Spaniard in Defense of the Popes late Chapter at Trident, oftentimes calleth the Pope, Terrenum Deum: An earthly God. By the same stile and right, whereby Holophernes sometime said: Nabuchodonosor est Deus Terræ: Nabuchodonosor is the God of the Earth.

Christop. Marcell. in Concil. Latera. Sess. 4. Cardillus pro Concil. Trid. Iudith. 5.

Upon the Popes owne Clementines, ye shal find the matter thus taken vp, and qualified with great indifferencie and modesty, and thus specially noted in the Margin: * Papa nec Deus est, nec Homo. And to leaue other his like blasphemous and fond stiles, in another like Glosse, ye shall finde it written thus: Credere Dominum Deum nostrum Papam non potuisse statuere, prout statuit, Hæreticum censeretur: To beleeue that Our Lord God the Pope might not decree, as he decreed, it were a matter of Heresie. Heere haue we found by expresse and plaine words, euen in the Popes owne authenticall and allowed Booke, Our Lord God the Pope.

* The Pope is neither God nor man. Our Lord God the Pope.

ritus, Deum se esse mentitur: Whereas he is a damned man and not a Spirit, by lying he faineth himselfe to be God. Anselmus saith: Simulabit se Religiosum, vt subspecie decipiat Pietatis: Imò, se Deum esse dicet: & se Adorari faciet: atque Regna Cœlorum promittet: Antichrist shall faine himself to be Holy, that he may deceiue men vnder the Colour of Holinesse, Yea and he shall call himselfe God: and shall cause himselfe to be worshipped: and shall promise the Kingdome of Heauen. Now tell vs, M. Harding, who euer did, or attempted to doe these things, but onely the Pope? Anselmus in 2. Thessalon. 1.

Eusebius saith: Hoc est Argumentum, eos odisse Deum, quòd velint seipsos appellari Deos: This is a token that they hate God, for they will that haue themselues called by the name of God. Euseb. de Præparation. lib. 7.

Likewise saith the Ancient Father Irenæus: Antichristus existens Apostata & Latro, quasi Deus vult adorari: & cùm sit Seruus, Regem se vult præconiari: Antichrist being a Renegate, and a Theefe, yet will bee Worshipped as a God: and being but a Slaue, yet hee will bee Proclaimed and Published as a King. Therefore although the Pope bee not, as you say, an Absolute God, or an Absolute Christ, yet without any great inconuenience I trow, he may well be an Absolute Antichrist. The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision 12.

Which of the Ancient Holy Fathers euer said, that you are not a meere Naturall Man, but a certaine Substance made, and growne together of God and Man?

M. Harding.

Can you bring him before his face that shal say so vnto him: I warrant you (Master Defender) he shal either be reproued for his flattering, or proued to vnderstand no more by it then a *certaine diuine power aboue the naturall state of men, * or warned that he be more circumspect in his Glossing, when Heretikes are ready to slander the whole Church, because of one priuate mans affection.

A faint excuse.
* A certaine Diuine power in the Pope.
* A sore punishment for open Blasphemie.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

He that may call himselfe Lord and God, may easily Claime himselfe to be more then a Man. In the Popes owne Decretals it is noted thus in the Margin: Papa non est Homo: The Pope is not a Man. Your Glosse vpon the Popes owne Clementines allegeth these words out of one of your allowed Poets: Papa stupor Mundi: The Pope is the wonder of the World. And againe: Nec Deus es, nec Homo: quasi neuter es inter vtrunque: Thou art neither God, nor Man: In a maner thou art neither of both, but rather a meane betweene both. In Sext. de Electione, & Electi. Fundamenta. In Glossa. Clemen. in Proœmio. In Gloss.

By the Authority of this Doctour it appeareth, that the Pope is neither God, nor Man. Angel, I trow, he is not. What other Creature yee may make of him, I leaue to you, further to consider. But bring him foorth (ye say) that thus hath spoken. Bring him before the Popes face, that he may be punished. For he shall be warned, as he is, to be more circumspect in his Glossing. So cruelly, M. Harding, ye punish, and torment, and crucifie them that enleaffe a poore miserable sinfull creature with the glorious name of God Immortall.

The Apology, Chap. 6. Diuision 13.

M. Harding.

Whosoeuer saith it, speaketh not without euident reason, considering that of the principall of euery gouernment all lawes belonging to the same be deducted and deriued.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here haue you brought vs a ful simple reason, as God knoweth. But to haue brought vs some Authority of Doctor, or Councell it had bene better. We haue no doubt of your pretty reasons. We demanded only, Which of the Ancient Fathers euer said so?

The Apologie, Chap. 6. diuision, 14.

Which of the Ancient Fathers euer said, that you haue Power ouer Purgatory.

M. Harding.

* No doubt it were a worthy matter. Wisely.

* O that ye would first beleeue a Purgatorie, & then should ye vnderstand what dispensation of loosing and binding is committed to the Vicar of Christ. For, as Elay saith, Except ye beleeue, ye shall not vnderstand: and the consequent Doctrine must needs bee obscure, as long as the principall ground thereof is wickedly denied.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Of your Purgatory fantasies wee haue sufficiently said before. Where yee wish wee would beleeue there is a Purgatorie, verily we beleeue constantly whatsoeuer God hath willed vs to beleeue. S. Paul saith: Faith commeth by hearing: Hearing commeth by the Word of God: and thereby onely is Faith directed. As for your Follies and Mockeries, they are subiect to Fansie, and not to Faith. S. Augustine saith: Nemo de Christo credat, nisi quòd de se credi voluit Christus: Let no man beleeue of Christ, but that that Christ hath commanded him to beleeue of Christ. Againe he saith: Constat Fidem stultam non prodesse, sed potiùs obesse: It is certaine that Foolish Faith doth no good, but rather hurteth. Notwithstanding, though all your Lists and gainefull Territories of Purgatorie were fully granted, yet should it be very hard for you to proue, either by Scripture, or by Doctour, that the Pope beareth any greater Authority or Sway there, to command in or out at his pleasure, then any other simple Priest. Albeit one of your allowed Doctors saith: Purgatorium est peculium Papæ: Purgatorie is the peculiar possession of the Pope. I trow, as being a College onely of his owne Foundation.

Nor old Father, * nor new Doctour. And whatsoeuer he be that shall so tell you, beleeue him not. He speaketh not Catholikely: and you must make no scruple in such matters.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Heere at last, M. Harding, for shame ye are faine to yéeld. No Doctor (ye say) euer thus said, neither Old, nor New. Howbeit, hereto ye haue laid a very good exception, with a speciall sauing: If any man haue so said (say ye) whatsoeuer he were, he spake not Catholikely. And yet againe ye tell vs further, Howsoeuer it be, we should neuer be scrupulous in such Matters.

But what if the Pope himselfe the Father of all Fathers, and Doctor of al Doctors, both New and Old, haue not blushed to say the same? May we say as you say, The Pope himselfe was not Catholike? Or if we so say, will you beleeue it?

Herodotus.

Indeed King Xerxes, the great King of Persia, when hee had brought ouer his huge Armie into Græcia, sent out his letters of defiance vnto the great Mount Athos, that is in Macedonia, and commanded him to stand still, and not to stirre a foot, nor to worke any displeasure, either to himselfe, or to his Armie, vpon paine of his high indignation. Euen by like Authoritie, and with as good discretion, the Pope hath vsed to send out his Precepts and Princely Summons, and to command Angels, Archangels, and all the Powers of Heauen to come, to goe, to fetch, to carrie, and to be ready to doe his will. Therefore is he the better content to heare his frends tell him thus: Tibi data est omnis Potestas super omnes Potestates, tam Cœli, quam Terræ: Qui totum dicit, nihil excludit: *To thee is giuen all manner of Power, aboue all Powers, as well of Heauen, as of Earth. The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuiſion 16.

Which of the Ancient Fathers euer ſaid, that you are the Lord of Lords, and King of Kings ?

The Pope King of Kings.

M. Harding.

He vſeth the cleane contrary Title, calling himſelfe, Seruum Seruorum Dei, the Seruant of the Seruants of God. Yet if he, for the largeneſſe of his Iuriſdiction, haue a number of Lords and Kings within his fold, although he himſelfe doth not boaſt of it, yet in a right good ſenſe that Title may be giuen to him.

In a right good ſenſe.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Notwithſtanding the Pope call himſelfe the King of Kings, and the Lord of Lords: Notwithſtanding he ſay, The Emperour is ſo farre inferiour vnto him, as the Moone is inferiour vnto the Sunne : Notwithſtanding he ſay, The Emperour is but his Bayliffe, his Steward, and his Man: Notwithſtanding he ſay, He hath power to ſet vp, and to put downe Kings and Emperours at his pleaſure: Yet ſaith M. Harding, All this may be ſpoken in right good ſenſe : for the Pope vſeth a cleane contrary Title, and calleth himſelfe, Seruum Seruorum Dei, The Seruant of Gods Seruants. Thus he thinketh it ſufficient to weigh matters only by Title, and not by Truth.

Howbeit, all this is but playing vnder a Viſard. The Diuell ſeldome sheweth his hornes, but rather changeth himſelfe into an Angell of Light. Touching this Title, as the Pope calleth himſelfe a Seruant, euen ſo doth the Emperour likewiſe abaſe himſelfe to the name of a Seruant. If ye doubt heereof, read your owne Gloſſe vpon your Decretals. The words there be theſe: Etiam Imperator ſeipſum appellat Seruum : Likewiſe againe the ſame Gloſſe ſaith : Papa ſe Seruum appellat, & Imperator vocat ſe Seruum Vltimum Eccleſiæ : The Pope calleth himſelfe a Seruant, and the Emperour calleth himſelfe the Vileſt Seruant of the Church

All this is nothing elſe, but a politicke kind of diſſimulation and Hypocriſie. For if theſe be Seruants indeed, I pray you then who be the Lords?

Heruæus, one of your owne Doctors, heereof ſaith thus: Dicere, quòd talia dicunt Summi Pontifices ex Humilitate, eſt omninò pernicioſum. Et hoc eſt ponere os in Cœlum. Philoſophus dicit hoc eſſe peccatum Ironiæ, quod opponitur virtuti. Et addit, tales humiles non eſſe virtuoſos, ſed timidos, & blanditores. Et Auguſtinus ait, Cùm Humilitatis cauſa mentiris, ſi non eras Peccator antequam mentireris, mentiendo Peccator efficeris: To ſay that the Pope ſpake theſe words of Humility, it were very hurtfull. And this is, To ſet the face againſt the Heauens. Ariſtotle ſaith, This is the ſinne of Diſſimulation, or Hypocriſie, which is contrary vnto vertue. And ſaith further, that ſuch humble men are not vertuous, but fearefull, and flattering. And S. Iohan de Pariſijs. Cap 13. Augu. de Verbis Apoſtoli.

Good Reader, put off this painted Viſard : and vnder this vaine Title of Seruant of Seruants thou ſhalt find a Lord of Lords: and ſuch a Lord, ſo Lordlike, and ſo princely, as ſeldome thou ſhalt finde among the Heathens. For proofe heereof, thus the Pope himſelfe ſaith : Neither Emperour, nor King may iudge the Pope. And his reaſon is this: Non eſt Seruus ſupra Dominum : For the (Emperour being a) Seruant is not aboue (the Pope, that is) his Lord.

anger him, will suddenly change himselfe into the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. For in these words he plainely and expresly calleth the Emperour the Seruant, and himselfe the Lord. And whatsoeuer be said to the contrary, verily the Popes Exposition must nedes be more Authenticall then M. Hardings.

He maketh the Emperour to hold his Stirrup: He maketh the Emperour to lead his Bridle: He maketh the Emperour to kisse his Fot: He maketh the Emperour to lie downe groueling, and setteth his fot on his Necke: And yet still calleth himselfe, The Seruant of Seruants. Few good Seruants will be so homely with their Masters. Doctour Bonner saith thus: Notwithstanding the Pope be a very Rauening Wolfe, dressed in Sheepes clothing, yet he calleth himselfe, The Seruant of Seruants.

VVE can also goe further with you in like sort. What one amongst the whole number of the Old Bishops and Fathers euer taught you, either to say Priuate Masse, whiles the people stared on, or to lift vp the Sacrament ouer your head, in which points consisteth now al your Religion? Or elsse to mangle Christs Sacraments, & to bereaue the people of the one part therof, contrary to Christs Institution, & plain expresse words? But that we may once come to an end, what one is there of all the Fathers which hath taught you to distribute Christs Blood, & the holy Martyrs Merits, & to sel openly your pardons, and al the roomes & lodgings of purgatorie, as a gainefull kind of merchandize.

The Popes Pardons.

M. Harding.

Your obiections of Priuate Masse, of lifting vp the blessed Sacrament, of ministring the Communion vnder one Kinde, be as common with you as Lice be with Beggars, & Lies with Heretikes. For indeed your questions be but beggarly and hereticall. Touching the same, I haue said(a) to much in my answer to M. Iewel your neerest friend, his Challenge, as heere to rehearse it again it is needlesse. You may seek it there. The Doctrine of Pardons I iudge verily you vnderstand not. Here is no oportunity to discusse it. The full treatise of the same requiring a long processe, may well to another time be differred. Of Purgatorie I haue said some deale heere before. These be the matters wherin you and your ignorant fellow Ministers gladly shew your vile railing, & scoffing eloquence. Yet concerning the Doctrine of Pardons, (b) lest I seeme to say nothing, thus much I haue thought good to say heere.

(a) Note that M. Harding in his said three Articles of answer to M. Iewell hath published three-score and nine great Vntruths.

Artic. 1. 7.

Fol. 117.

In the Sacrament, as wel of Baptisme, as of Penance, al the bands of sinne are loosed, and the whole euerlasting paine due to sinne is forgiuen. At Baptisme no temporal paine is enioined to vs, because Christ most freely bestoweth the benefit of his death vpon vs at our first entry into the Church. (c) But if afterward we abuse his mercy, returning againe to filthy sin, Christ would our second, third, & al other reconciliations from thenceforth, to be with due satisfaction, not of his dreadfull anger, (which onely his Blood & the Sacrament of Penance, by due contrition & confession, in deed or in Vow receiued, is able to remooue) but with satisfaction of such temporal paine, as his merciful iustice required both of all others from the beginning, and (d) namely of King Dauid: To whom confessing his fault Nathan said, Our Lord hath put away thy sinne, thou shalt not die. Behold the forgiuenesse of the mortall sinne, and of the euerlasting paine due to the same. But yet so is it forgiuen, that wheal it is transferred into a temporal satisfaction. What was that? It followeth in the storie, that because Dauid through his aduoutrie and murder had caused the enemies of God to blaspheme his holy name, the childe borne of the wife of Vrias should surely die. And so it came to passe. If the death of a sonne be so grieuous a punishment to a good Father, that King Dauid was content to pray, to fast, to lie on the ground, afflicting him selfe seuen daies, only to trie whether he might, as it were by exchange, buy out this death of his sonne and yet so could not obtaine his desire: wee may be most certaine, that the very best friends of God, sinning after Baptisme (or Circumcision, which in the old Law stood in place thereof) must by ordinarie course satisfie with some temporall affliction that iust iudgement of our mercifull Maker and Redeemer, if farther grace be not found by some other way. This satisfaction hath bene therefore iustly called the third and last part of penance. Which if it be not fulfilled in this life, vndoubtedly it shall be straitly exacted in the world to come in the fire of Purgatory. For that sins may be in another world forgiuen to those who die not in the deadly bonds of them, (e) our Sauiour hath giuen vs to vnderstand, saying, That the sin against the Holy Ghost shal not be forgiuen, neither in this world, nor in the world to come: whereof it appeareth, that some other sins may be forgiuen in the world to come.

(c) A Doctrine full of sundry Blasphemies.

Matth. 12.

Well, this satisfaction may notwithstanding be fulfilled more then one way. For a man being once by the Sacrament of Penance iustly reconciled to the mystical Body of Christ, which is his Church, wherin (as the Prophet saith) a faithful man is made partaker of al that feare God, & keepe his Commandements: we haue in that band of peace such an vnity of spirit communicated to vs al, that the defect of one may be in spiritual causes (f) supplied out of the plenty of al others his fellow members, according as the Apostle saith, (g) Beare eye one anothers burthens. And because the Head (which is Christ) is the chief member of all, & far more then al the rest, such influence is from him deriued thorowout his mystical Body, that euen his death may aswel inwardly by Charity, as outwardly by another way also be applied to vs for the pardoning of that temporal satisfaction, which after the Sacrament of Penance is left vnforgiuen. And that is by such Authority as Christ gaue to Peter, saying, To thee I wil giue the Keies of the kingdome of Heauen, & whatsoeuer thou bindest in Earth, it shal be bound also in Heauen, and soeuer thou (h)looseſt in Earth, it ſhall be looſed in Heauen. Lo, whatſoeuer Peter looſeth in Earth, it ſhall be looſed in the ſight of God. If therefore the Pope, who ſucceedeth Peter, do by iuſt cauſe looſe, not only the mortall ſin by the Sacrament of Penance, but alſo the band of Temporall paine, which remaineth yet due to the ſin; it is vndoubted, that ſuch paine is looſed in the ſight of God. The cauſe of looſing muſt be not only the will of the Pope (who is put in authority to build, & not to deſtroy: to diſpenſe, & not to lauiſh) but a reaſonable change of recompence ſubſtituted in that behalfe, ſuch as appertaineth to the honor of God, or to the profit of ſoules: As maintaining war, & fighting againſt infidels for the defenſe of Chriſtendome, recouery of the Sepulchre of Chriſt, ſuccouring widowes, Orphanes, & other poore perſons, the building or maintaining of holy places, the viſiting of Priſons and Martyrs toombes, or any like deuout & charitable deeds: which whiles the Faithfull Chriſtian doth obediently performe (although otherwiſe the thing enioined be not great) he may obtaine remiſſion alſo of that temporall ſatisfaction which was left in penance vnremitted. This kinde of pardon S. Paul gaue to that notorious ſinner, who at Corinth had his fathers wife, & was for that fault ſeparated from the Church of God, to bee afflicted temporally in his fleſh. But when the Corinthians had informed S. Paul of his earneſt and true repentance, & had ſhewed their owne fauour & good will toward him, the Apoſtle anſwereth, Whom ye forgiue ought, I alſo (forgiue,) For I alſo in that I haue forgiuen, if I haue forgiuen ought, for your ſakes in the perſon of Chriſt I haue forgiuen it. Well, wee are aſſured the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of forgiuing ſuch afflictions as the party was in, by reaſon he was deliuered out of the defenſe of Holy Church, to that ſtate, where the Diuel, as S. Chryſoſtome vpon that place noteth, proſolutione peccatorum, for paiment of his ſins, might vexe him: and wherein ſuch perſons, being put to their penance, vſed to remaine for a certaine ſpace of moneths, or yeeres, vntill their penance were done and expired. Now the reconciling of the man, not yet hauing done due ſatisfaction, before his ordinarie time, is a Pardon: which the Apoſtle ſaith, he doth giue in the perſon of Chriſt, as hauing authority of him to do it: and for the Corinthians ſakes, as who were able by their holy prayers and common ſorrow (whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) to make recompence for that which lacked on the behalfe of his owne ſatisfaction. If this much doe not ſatisfie any man deſiring to be fully reſolued heerein, let him reſort to the Latine Works of that holy and learned Biſhop of Rocheſter.

Therefore, M. Harding, by this Doctors iudgement, it was great follie to alledge ſo many Scriptures for proofe of your Pardons. For here ye are taught in good ſadneſſe, that your Pardons can neuer be proued by any Scriptures. It had beene much better for you, to haue alledged onely the Popes Authority. For that, as your Sylueſter teacheth you, farre paſſeth all the Authority of the Scriptures.

Roffenſis ſaith: Ego reſpondeo, Non ſatis certò conſtare, à quo primum indulgentiæ tradi cœperint. Apud priſcos vel nulla, vel certè quam rariſſima fiebat mentio de Purgatorio. Quamdiu autem nulla eſſet cura de Purgatorio, nemo quæſiuit indulgentias. Nam ex illo pendet omnis Indulgentiarum æſtimatio. Si tollas Purgatorium, quorſum Indulgentijs opus erit? Heere, M. Harding, you ſée the Antiquitie, Authoritie, and beſt countenance of your Pardons: that they flowed firſt out of the ſinks of your Purgatory, as one Vanity floweth out of another: You ſee, that your Pardons ſometimes may be Superſtitious, and full of folly: you ſée that the Sale of your Pardons is a godly guile, and a deuout kinde of error, to lead the people. This is the faireſt colour ye can deuiſe to lay vpon it. But miſerable is that people that thus muſt be led by guile and error.

The Apologie, Chap. 8. Diuision 1.

THese men are wont to speake much of a certaine secret Doctrine of theirs, and of their manifold and sundry readings. Let them therfore bring forth somewhat now if they can, that it may appeare, they haue at least read, or do know somwhat. They haue oftē stoutly noised in al corners where they went, that all the parts of their Religion bee very old, & haue bin approued, not only of the multitude, but also by the consent and continual obseruation of al Nations and times. Let them therefore once in their life shew this their Antiquity: Let them make appeare to the eie, that the things, whereof they make such ado, haue taken so long, & large increase: Let them declare, that all Christian Nations haue agreed by consent to this their Religion.

Nay, nay, they turne their backs, as we haue said already, and flee from their owne Decrees, and haue cut off & abolished againe within a short space the same things, which but a few yeers before, thēselues had established, for euermore, forsooth, to continue. How should one then trust them in the Fathers, in the Old Councels, and in the Words spoken by God? They haue not, good Lord, they haue not (I say) those things which they boast they haue: they haue not that Antiquity, they haue not that Vniuersality, they haue not that Consent, neither of all places, nor of all times. And though they haue a desire rather to dissemble, yet they themselues are not ignorant hereof: yea and sometime also they let not to confesse it openly. And for this cause they say, that the Ordinances of the Old Councels & Fathers be such, as may now & then be altered, and that sundry and diuers Decrees serue for sundry & diuers times of the Church. Thus lurke they vnder the name of the Church, and begule silly creatures with their vaine glosing. It is to be maruelled, that either men be so blinde, that they cannot see this, or if they see it, that they can be so patient, so lightly and so quietly to beare it.

M. Harding.

Heere is much adoe, and as some say, great boast and small roast: many words, little matter. The sense of these words (if I be not deceiued) resembleth M. Iewels challenging spirit, as like as an Ewe resembleth a sheepe. What we can bring foorth, we say not. * Neither thinke we it necessarie at your request, to shew what we haue read, and what we know. Boasting and bragging shewes, we leaue to you: that you require, hath been sufficiently declared otherwheres. All things are not to be said at all times. Yet two of your loud lies beside other that you make here, I will be so bold, as to discouer. The Decrees of the late Tridentine Councell (for that is it that you meane) although they bee not yet in all places most exactly obserued, yet be they not repealed, cut off, and abolished againe, as you say.

*And what a foule lie is that other, where you say, that our selues acknowledge and confesse openly, that the Faith & Doctrine which we hold is not Ancient & Vniuersall, for times, places & consent of al. What else meane we when we challenge vnto vs & claime the Catholike Faith? But this is your accustomed slender Rhetorick, when proofes and arguments of truth faile you, to vse the figure of impudent lying, & say, that we our selues confesse it to be true, which you impute vnto vs. Whatsoeuer you say in this place, we may of right returne it euer to you. So we do, and so take you it, &c. And for ought that I can see yet, as your Synagogue had of late the beginning, so it is like shortly to make an ending.

* It is good policie for him that hath nothing to shew, to hold his peace.

* For triall hereof, consider only the words of Roffensis Maior, and Alphonsus, alleged in the former Diuision.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Of all these words, and others moe, so vaine as many, there is not one word worth the answering. What affiance M. Harding and his friends haue in their Antiquitie, it may appeare by the last Diuision.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. diuision 1.

BVT, whereas they haue commanded, that those Decrees should be void, as things now waxen too old, and that haue lost their grace, perhaps they haue prouided, in their stead, certaine other better things, & more profitable for the people. For it is a common saying with them, that that, If Christ himselfe, or the Apostles were aliue againe, they could neither better, nor more godly gouerne Gods Church, then it is at this present gouerned by thē. They haue put somwhat in their stead indeed: but it is chaffe in stead of wheat, as Hierem. 23. Esay 1. Hieremy saith, & such things, as according to Esay the Prophets words, God neuer required at their handes. They haue stopped vp (saith he) al the veines of the cleere springing water, and haue digged vp for the people deceiueable and puddle like pits, full of mire & filth, which neither haue, nor are able to hold pure water. They haue plucked away from the people the Holy Communion, the word of God, from whence all comfort should be taken, the true Worshipping of God also, and the right vse of Sacraments and Praier: and haue guen vs of their owne to play withal in the meane while, Salt, Water, Oile, Boxes, Spitle, Palmes, Bulles, Iubilees, Pardons, Crosses, Sensinges, and an endlesse rabble of Ceremonies, and (as a man might terme them with Plautus) pretie games to make sport withall.

Hierem. 23. Esay 1.

Christs gouernment no better then the Popes.

Ludos Indificabiles.

M. Harding.

Raile and reuel whiles ye wil, the Church is gouerned by (a) word and by (a) discipline. If Christ himselfe or his Apostles were aliue againe, the word, that is to say, (b) the Doctrine of our beleefe, now preached & receiued in the Catholik Church, (b) neither should be altered, (b) nor could be bettered. (b) For it is the same he taught himselfe. And that we doubt not of it, according to his promise, he hath sent the Holy Ghost, to enforme the Church of all truth. Remember you not who said, I am God, (c) I am not changed? Againe that the word of God remaineth for euer?

Malach. 3. Psalm. 118.

(a) But the Pope vseth neither of them both.

(b) Vntruthes without either measure or regard of shame.

(c) O folly! The change is in you and not in God.

This being true, it is euident, that we haue the sound and weighty wheat which no persecution of tyrants, no blasts of Heretiks, no contagion of euil maners, for these fifteene hundred yeeres could either blow from the floore of our Lords barne, the Church, or corrupt. Wee haue, according to the Apostles counsell, kept that hath been committed vnto vs. We haue enioied the fountaine of the water of life.

Deposi- tum 1. Tim. 6.

Yee charge vs fore, that we haue plucked away from the people the holy Communion, the Word of God, the true worshipping of God, the right vse of the Sacraments and Praier. Whosoeuer taketh these fiue away, wherein chiefly standeth our Saluation, the same (d) is Antichrist. Were not that ye haue already done so much for vs, as the world may take you for impudent liers, we would not quietly beare so grieuous a matter. But now, that ye haue tried your selues so false of your word, we little esteeme its your railing is no slander. Lastly concerning Praier, what hath been ordained by our holy forefathers (e) of all ages, directed with the Spirit of God, for the maintenance and increase of it to Gods honour, all that in few yeeres by the instinct of Satan, to promote his kingdome, ye haue vtterly abolished, and by wicked violence brought the people from (f) deuotion to a careleese idlnesse, from speaking to God with hearts and lips, to (f) a spiritual dumbnesse, from praiers (f) to chapters, from holy thinking to (f) vnprofitable hearkning.

(d) The Gospel in your mouth. For al these fiue things the Pope hath quite taken away.

(e) Vntruth. For your barbarous vnknown praiers, in the time of the Ancient learned Fathers were neuer knowen.

(f) Vntruthes ioined with open Blasphemy.

Ye cannot abide Salt, Water, Oile, Palme, the Crosse, Incense, &c. no maruel. No more cannot the Diuel who possesseth you, and rideth you, and after his owne wil driueth you from truth, from Christian Religion, and from al godlinesse. Were it so that your spirit could away with those things, then were it not agreeing with his spirit. Vntil ye giue place to the spirit of God, who may driue out of you the spirit of Satan, we looke to heare no better tidings of you.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Ye were somewhat angry, M. Harding, when ye thus bestirred your selfe. It pitieth me in your behalfe. Christ and his Apostles (ye say) neuer ruled the Church in better order then it is now ruled by the Pope and his Cardinals. Euen so might they haue said, that had turned, The House of God into a Caue of Theeues. One of your friends saith: Apostolorum temporibus rudis adhuc erat Ecclesia: In the time of the Apostles the Church as yet was rude and barbarous and out of order. And, being afterward reproued for his blasphemous speech, he answered leandly in his pleasance:

Matth. 21. Latomus de Vtraque Specie.

Rudis, indigestaque moles.

Iacob. Andreæ aduersus Hosium, pag. 70.

Others of you say: Christus in Cœlo præsidet: Papa in Terris residet: Christ ruleth in Heauen: the Pope in Earth. Another saith: Omnes Sanctiones Sedis Apostolicæ sic accipiendæ sunt, tanquam ipsius Diuina voce Petri firmatæ: All the Lawes of the Apostolike See of Rome must so bee taken, as if they were confirmed by the Diuine voice of Peter himselfe. Another saith: Sicut ostium regitur Cardine, ita Ecclesia Romana regitur Consilio Cardinalium: As the doore is ruled by the hooke, so is the Church of Rome ruled by the Counsell of Cardinals.

Dist. 19. Sic omnes.

Andræas Barbatius Siculus ad Bessarionem

Polydor. Virgil. de Inuentorib. lib. 4. cap. 9.

Ceremon. lib. 1. Sect. 8. cap. 6.

Therefore the Pope himselfe saith thus vnto them: Vos eritis Senatores Vrbis & Regum similes, veri Mundi Cardines, super quos militantis ostium Ecclesiæ voluendum, & regendum est: Ye shall be the Senatours of my City, and like vnto Kings, the very hookes and staies of the World, vpon whom the very dore of the Church Militant must be turned and ruled.

Such

Such are they, whom S. Hierome imagineth thus to say: Non est vir in domo. Non est Christus Corporaliter in Ecclesia. Surgens enim à mortuis, Ascendit in Cælum: nobisq; Ministerium gubernandæ Ecclesiæ, suam videlicet Domum, reliquit: My Husband is not at home. (That is to say) Christ is not now corporally in the Church. For, being risen from the dead, he is Ascended into Heauen: and hath left vnto vs the gouernment of his Church, that is, the whole ordering of his House. Hieron. in Proœmio 7.

Reading of Chapters.

True it is as you say, God is one and is not changed. And his word endureth for euer. But the change is in you, M. Harding, and not in God. Gods Word is the Word of Life: your Word is the Word of Vanity. God the Father hath not planted it: therefore it shall be plucked vp by the rots. God saith by the Prophet Malachie: The lips of the Priest shall keepe knowledge: and the people shall require the Law at his mouth. For he is the Angell of the Lord of Hosts. Vos autem recessistis de Via, &c. But you are gone backe from the way; you haue offended many a one in the Law: you haue broken the couenant of Leui, saith the Lord of Hosts. And therefore haue I made you to be despised. Malach. 3. Psal. 110. Matth. 15. Malach. 2.

Ye haue changed the most part of the Apostles Doctrine: and of all that euer they ordained, ye haue in a maner left nothing standing. S. Bernard saith of your owne Church of Rome: A planta pedis vsque ad verticem capitis, non est sanitas vlla: From the sole of the foot vnto the crowne of the head, there is not one whole place. And yet ye beare vs strongly in hand, that Christ and his Apostles neuer ruled the Church in better order, then it is now ruled by the Pope and his Cardinals. Bern. in Conuersione Pauli, Serm. 1.

All the rest of your emptie talke is answered sufficiently before. Yet one pangue of your eloquence, I may not in any wise leaue vntouched. Thus ye say: By the instinct of Satan ye haue brought the people from deuotion to careles idlenesse: from speaking to God with hearts and lips to a spirituall dumbenes: from Praiers to Chapters: from Holy thinking to vnprofitable heatkning. If I were not well acquainted with your speech, M. Harding, I could not thinke, yee would so vnaduisedly bestow your words. I doubt not, but euen hereby it shal soone appeare, whether of vs hath wilfully broken the Apostles Orders, and refused the godly examples of the Holy Primitiue Church of God. Ye tell vs that the Reading of the Scriptures vnto the people, in the Church of God, is a Spirituall dumbenesse, and a thing vnprofitable, as onely deuised of our selues, and that, as you say, by the instinct of Satan, and neuer before either knowen or vsed by any Catholike learned Father.

So little regard you what you say. Any man that hath bene conuersant in the ancient Fathers, may easily reproue your follie.

Origen saith: Iudaicarum Historiarum Libri traditi sunt ab Apostolis, Legendi in Ecclesijs: The Bookes of (the Old Testament, which are called) the stories of the Iewes, were deliuered by the Apostles, to be read in the Churches. Dionysius saith: Deinde ordine habetur Sacrorum Librorum Lectio: Afterward follow in order the Lessons of the holy Bookes. Iustinus Martyr saith: Die Solis omnes, qui in oppidis vel in agris morantur, vnum in locum conueniunt: Commentariaque Apostolorum, vel Prophetarum Scripta leguntur. Deinde is, qui præest, admonet omnes, & hortatur, vt ea, quæ lecta sunt, bona imitentur. Deinde surgimus omnes & comprecamur: Vpon the Sunday, the Christian people that dwell in Towne or Countrie, meet together in one place. There the Epistles of the Apostles or the Prophets Writings are pronounced vnto vs. Afterward, he that is the Chiefe or Minister, warneth, and exhorteth all the rest, that they will follow those good things, that they haue heard read. That done, we rise vp all, and pray together. S Cyprian saith: Lector personat verba sublimia: Euangelium Christi legit: A Fratribus conspicitur: Cum gaudio Fraternitatis auditur: The Reader soundeth out the high and heauenly words: He readeth out the Gospell of Christ: he is seene of the Brethren, he is heard with ioy of (all) the Brotherhood. Orig. in Iosua homil. 15. Dionysius Eccl. Hierar. cap. 3. ἀναγνώσεως. Iustin. Martyr Apologia. 2. Cyprian. lib. 2. epist. 5.

The Fathers in the Councell of Constantinople say thus: Tempore Diptychorum cucurrit omnis multitudo cum magno silentio circumcirca Altare & audiebant: At the time of Reading (of the Chapter) all the multitude of the people with great silence drew round about the Altar or Communion Table, and gaue eare. Conc. Constantinop. 5. Act. 1. Concil. Laodic.

In the Councell of Laodicea it is written thus: In Sabbatis Euangelia cum alijs Scripturis legi conuenit: Vpon the Sabbath day it is conuenient, that the Gospels and other Scripture be read (in the Church vnto the people.) Leo saith: Solennitati Sacratissimæ Lectionis subiungatur exhortatio Sacerdotis: After the solemne Reading of the most holy Lesson, let there follow the Sermon or Exhortation of the Priest. Can. 16. Leo, de Resurrectione Domini, Serm. 2.

S. Chrysostome saith: Stat Minister, & communis Minister, & alta voce clamat. Post illam vocem Lector incipit Propheriam Esaiæ. The Minister and Common Minister standeth vp and crieth out with loud voice (saying, keepe silence and giue eare.) After that, the Reader beginneth the Prophesie of Esay. S. Ambrose saith: Non possum ego à me facere quicquam sicut audio, & iudico. Audistis Lectum: Ego non accuso vos: Moses vos accusat: Audistis Lectum Chrys. in Acta, homil. 19. Ambros. lib. 5. epist. 20. Iohn. 5.

Lectum: (Chriſt ſaith) I cannot doe any thing of my ſelfe: as I heare, ſo I iudge. Ye haue heard it read: I accuſe you not, it is Moſes that accuſeth you. Ye haue heard it read.

Aug. Pſa. 36. Anguſt. in 50. Homil. hom 49. Aug. de Tempore, Serm. 2.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Audiſtis, cùm Euangelium legeretur: Modò cùm legeretur, ſi intenti fuiſtis Lectioni, Audiſtis: Audiuimus in Lectione, quæ lecta eſt, Fratres dilectiſſimi: Ye heard, when the Goſpell was read: Ye heard erewhile when it was read, if ye gaue eare to the Reading: Dearely beloued, wee haue heard in the Leſſon, that hath beene read.

Reading of Chapters.

Heereby, I thinke, it may appeare, that the Reading of Leſſons and Chapters, is no new deuice in the Church of God.

And yet will you tell vs, M. Harding, that al this is only a Spirituall dumbeneſſe, and an vnprofitable hearkning, brought in by the inſtinct of Satan, to promote his Kingdome? Or if you dare ſo to tell vs, muſt we beleeue you?

Iſidor. de Eccl. Offic. lib. 1. cap. 10.

Verily Iſidorus ſaith: Lectio eſt non parua audientium ædificatio. Vnde oportet, vt quando Pſallitur, Pſallatur ab omnibus: quando Oratur, Oretur ab omnibus: quando Lectio legitur, facto ſilentio, æquè audiatur à cunctis: The Leſſon (in the Church) bringeth great profit to the hearers. Therefore when Singing is, let all Sing together: when Prayer is, let all Pray together: And when the Leſſon or Chapter is read, let ſilence be made, and let al heare together. Tertullian ſaith: Coimus ad literarum Diuinarum Commemorationem: Fidem Sanctis Vocibus paſcimus: Spem erigimus: Fiduciam figimus: We come together to the reading of the Holy Scriptures: we feed our Faith with thoſe Heauenly voices: wee raiſe vp our affiance: we faſten our hope. Againe he ſaith: Vbi fomenta Fidei de Scripturarum Lectione? Where is the feeding of Faith, that commeth by the open pronouncing and Reading of the Scriptures?

Tertullian. in Apologetico.

Tertullian. ad Vxorem. lib. 2.

Orig. in Leuit. cum, homil. 5.

Origen ſaith: Non fuiſſet neceſſarium, Legi hæc in Eccleſia, niſi ex his ædificatio aliqua audientibus præberetur: It had not been Neceſſary to haue theſe things read in the Church, vnleſſe thereof might grow ſome profit to the hearers.

Leo de Paſſione Dom. Serm. 19.

Leo ſaith: Sacram Dominicæ Paſſionis Hiſtoriam Euangelica, vt moris eſt, narratione decurſam, ita omnium veſtrum arbitror inhæſiſſe pectoribus, vt vnicuique audientium ipſa Lectio quædam facta ſit viſio: I thinke, that the holy ſtory of our Lords Paſſion, which we, as the maner is, haue read vnto you, is ſo faſtened vnto al your hearts, that the very hearing it ſelf vnto euery of the hearers is a kinde of ſeeing. Chryſoſtome ſaith: The maner was, that before euery ſuch Leſſon or Chapter, the Miniſter ſhould ſay vnto the people with a loud voice, Attendamus: Let vs Marke.

Chryſ. in Acta, homil. 19.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Epiſtolæ Apoſtolicæ, non tantùm illis Scriptæ ſunt, qui tempore illo, quo ſcribebantur, audiebant, ſed etiam nobis. Non enim ob aliud in Eccleſia recitantur: The Apoſtles Epiſtles were not written only to them, that heard them at the ſame time when they were written, but alſo to vs. For to none other purpoſe are they read openly in the Church.

Auguſt. contra Creſconium, li. 1. cap. 9.

This therefore is no Spirituall dumbeneſſe, M. Harding: This is no Vnprofitable hearkning: This is no Inſtinct or Worke of Satan. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Vide Formicam Dei: Surgit quotidiè: Currit ad Eccleſiam Dei: Orat: Audit Lectionem: Hymnum cantat: ruminat quod audit: Apud ſe cogitat: Recondit intùs grana electa de Area: Behold Gods Emote: Shee riſeth daily: Shee runneth to the Church of God: Shee praieth: Shee heareth the Leſſon or Chapter: Shee ſingeth the Pſalme: Shee cheweth or remembreth, that ſhee hath heard: Shee muſeth vpon it within her ſelf: And within Shee laieth vp the Cornes choſen from the ſtoare.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 66.

Now may you bethinke your ſelfe, M. Harding. How can you ſo vainely ſay, that the Reading of the Holy Scriptures or Chapters is a new deuice in the Church of God? You ſee all the Ancient learned Fathers with one conſent beare witneſſe againſt you. What ſhall we thinke is the Worke of God, if the hearing of Gods Word be the Worke of Satan? What will you call Spirituall ſpeaking in the Church, if the publiſhing of Gods holy will be Spirituall dumbneſſe? Acknowledge your error. Giue glory to God. What wiſe man will beleeue you further?

Durand. lib. 6. Sabbato Sanct.

But heere may you call to mind the Spirituall ſpeeches and Heauenly ſounds of your Churches. There may you heare, Aue Mater Anna, plena melle Canna: Dic nobis Maria, quid vidiſti in via? And at the hallowing of your Agnos Dei, in commeth a Poſſe in haſte and ſweating, and telleth the Pope, Domine, Domine, Domine: Iſti ſunt Agni nouelli, qui annuntiauerunt Allelua. Modò venerunt ad fontes &c. Heere is piety geare to comfort the conſcience, as good, as a ſong of Robbin hood. Better were it for you to ſit dumbe in the Church of God, then thus to ſpeake.

Your Churches, your Churches, M. Harding, are full, not only of Spirituall, but alſo of Corporall, and Horrible dumbeneſſe. Of al that is ſaid or done there, be it neuer ſo fond, the poore godly people knoweth nothing. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Si intellectum mentis remoueas, nemo ædificatur audiendo quod non intelligit: If ye remoone the vnderſtanding of the minde, minde, no man is edified or taketh profit by hearing that he cannot vnderſtand. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Perdiderunt audiendi laborem, & tempus. Nam qui non intelligit quod audit, perdit quod audit: They haue loſt both their labour in hearing, and alſo the time. For he that vnderſtandeth not that he heareth, loſeth the thing that he heareth. Chryſ. in Mat. homil. 131.

Aug. de Gen. ad Liter. li. 12. c. 8.

Therefore the Pope himſelfe in his Pontifical, giueth this ſpeciall charge vnto the Reader: Stude Lectiones Sacras diſtincte, & aperte proferre ad Intelligentiam & ædificationem fidelium: Endeauour thy ſelfe to pronounce the Holy Leſſons (or Chapters) diſtinctly and plainely (not to a Spirituall dumbneſſe, but) to the vnderſtanding and profit of the Faithfull. In Pontifical.

Reading of Chapters.

Touching the Prayers that the ſimple people maketh in a tongue vnknowne, Chriſt ſaith: This people honoureth me with their lips: but their hearts are far from me. Matth. 15.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuiſion 2.

In theſe things haue they ſet all their Religion, teaching the people, that by the ſame, God may be duly pacified, Spirits bee driuen away, and mens conſciences well quieted.

M. Harding.

What ſhall I ſay to all this, but that ye lie? I would ſay, as the maner is, Sauing your worſhips: but that your often & vnſhamefaſt lying hath quite taken away from you al opinion of honeſty. Al Chriſts Religion which we profeſſe, conſiſteth not in theſe things, neither by theſe be mens conſciences quieted. By certaine of theſe euil & impure ſpirits be driuen away indeed. Which heere by ſundry Ancient records & teſtimonies I would declare to be moſt true, were it not wel enough known by daily experience. But as for you, whereas neither Bread, nor Water, nor Croſſe driueth you away, it ſeemeth ye are worſe to be coniured then the Diuel himſelfe. Many of your Sect, Catholike Princes haue found ſo ſtubburne, as they could neuer yet rid their Countries of them, but by coniuration of fire.

° Vntruth. For hereby ye profeſſe to quiet mens conſciences. Read the Anſwer.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Ye ſay, ye neuer ſought to quiet mens conſciences by Oile, Water, Palmes, &c. And therefore ye ſtand vp a tippe toe, and in your familiar maner, cry out, ye lie. For ſhort triall hereof, one example may ſuffice in ſtead of many. Auguſtine Steuchus, one of your ſpeciall and worthy Doctors, ſaith: Aquas Sale & Orationibus Sanctificamus, vt ad earum Aſperſum noſtra deleantur delicta: We hallow Water with Salt and Praiers, that by the Sprinkling thereof our ſinnes may be forgiuen. Read your owne Pontificall, and ye ſhall finde in the hallowing of your Water, your Aſhes, your Palmes, your Candles, &c. this clauſe euermore in the end: Vt ſint nobis ad Salutem Animæ & Corporis: That they may be to vs to the Saluation of Body and Soule. Aug. Steuchus in Librum Numeror. cap. 19. Sinnes forgiuen by holy Water. In Pontifical.

Whereas in the end ye vaunt your ſelfe of your Cruelty, and ſo pleaſantly make ſport with the Blod of your Brethren, take it not for ill, if I anſwer you with the words of Salomon: Viſcera impiorum crudelia: The bowels of the Wicked be alwaies cruell. Therein M. Harding, ſtandeth your greateſt puiſſance. If yee were no better armed with Fire and Sword, then ye be with Scriptures and Doctors, no wiſe man would greatly feare your force. Prouerb. 11.

We may ſay of you, as Cardinall Cuſanus ſaith of the Turke: Omnium, quæ in Alchorano continentur, vltima reſolutio eſt Gladius: The laſt reſolution and triall of all things, that are contained in the Alchoran, is the Sword. Nicol. Cuſanus Cribrationis. lib. 3. cap. 3.

As for vs, we may anſwer you now, as S. Cyprian ſometime anſwered the Heathens: Nobis ignominia non eſt, pati a Fratribus, quod paſſus eſt Chriſtus: neque vobis gloria eſt, facere quod fecit Iudas: It is no ſhame for vs to ſuffer of our Brethren the ſame violence, that Chriſt ſuffered: neither is it any praiſe for you, to do the ſame thing that Iudas did. Cyprian. lib. 1. epiſt. 3.

Tertullian ſaith vnto your Fathers: Crudelitas veſtra, gloria noſtra eſt: Semen eſt Sanguis Chriſtianorum: Your cruelty is our glory: The blood of Chriſtians is the ſeed of the Goſpel. I pray God, all that innocent blod, that hath bẽn ſhed in this cauſe, be not required at your hands in the day of Wrath, and at the declaration of the iuſt iudgement of God. Tertullian. in Apologetico. Roman. 2.

The Apology, Chap. 10. Diuiſion 1.

For theſe, loe, be the orient colours and pretious fauors of Chriſtian Religion: theſe things doth God looke vpon, and accepteth them thankfully: theſe muſt come in place to be honoured, and muſt put quite away the Inſtitutions of Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles. And like as in times paſt, when wicked King Ieroboam had taken from the people the right right ſeruing of God, and had brought them to worſhip the Golden Calues, leſt perchance they might afterward change their mind, & ſlip away, getting them againe to Ieruſalem to the Temple of God; there he exhorted them with a long tale, to be ſtedfaſt, ſaying thus vnto them: O Iſrael, theſe Calues be thy Gods. In this ſort commanded your God you ſhould worſhip him. For it ſhould be wearieſome & troublous for you to take vpon you a iourney ſo far off, and yeerly to go vp to Ieruſalem, ther to ſerue and honor your God: Euen after the very ſame ſort, when theſe men had once made the Law of God of none effect, through their owne Traditions, fearing that the people ſhould afterward open their eies, & tall another way, and ſhould ſomewhence elſe ſeek a surer mean of their Saluation; Ieſu, how often haue they cried out, This is the ſame worſhipping that pleaſeth God, and which he ſtraitly requireth of vs, and wherewith he wil be turned from his wrath: that by theſe things is conſerued the Vnity of the Church: that by theſe all ſinnes be cleanſed, and conſciences quieted: and that, who ſo departeth from theſe, hath left vnto himſelfe no hope of Euerlaſting Saluation. For it were wearieſome & troublous (ſay they) for the people to reſort to Chriſt, to the Apoſtles, and to the Ancient Fathers, and to obſerue continually, what their will and commandement ſhould be. This, ye may ſay, is to withdraw the people of God from the weake Elements of the world, from the leauen of the Scribes and Phariſeis, and from the Traditions of men. It were reaſon, no doubt, that Chriſts Commandements, and the Apoſtles were remoued, that theſe their heſts & deuices may come in place. O, iuſt cauſe, I promiſe you. why that Ancient, and ſo long allowed Doctrine ſhould be now abolished, and a new Forme of Religion be brought into the Church of God.

M. Harding.

It ſhould haue becomme Scoggin, Patch, Iolle, Harry Pattenſon, or Will Sommer, to haue told this tale much better, then your ſuperintendentſhips. And if ye would needs haue plaid the part your ſelues it had bin more conuenient to haue done it on the ſtage, vnder a vices coat, then in a booke ſet abroad to the world in defence of al your new Engliſh Church, ye ſhal neuer make any reaſonable man beleeue your ſcoffing tale. We eſteeme little your railing compariſon, with your ſpightful words, and ſo much diuelliſh villanie.

The Apologie, Chap. 10. Diuiſion 2.

And yet, whatſoeuer it be, theſe men crie ſtill, that nothing ought to be changed: that mens minds are well ſatisfied herewithal: that the Church of Rome, the Church which cãnot er, hath decreed theſe things. For Syluester Prierias ſaith, that the Romiſh Church is the Squire, & Rule of Truth. and that the Holy Scripture hath receiued from thence Authority, & Credit. The Doctrine, ſaith he, of the Roman Church, is the infallible Rule of Faith, from the which the Holy Scripture taketh her force. And indulgences & Pardõs (ſaith he) are not made known to vs by the Authority of the Scriptures, but they are made known to vs by the Authority of the Roman Church, and of the Biſhops of Rome, which is greater then the Scriptures. Pigghius alſo letteth not to ſay, that without the licence of the Roman Church, we ought not to beleeue the very Plaine Scriptures. Much like as if any of thoſe, that cannot ſpeak pure and cleane Latine, and yet can babble out quickly and readily a little ſome ſuch Law Latin, as ſerueth the Court, would needs hold, that all others ought alſo to ſpeake after the ſame way, that Mammetrectus and Catholicon ſpake many yeeres ago, and which themſelues do yet vſe in pleading in Court: for ſo may it bee vnderſtood ſufficiently what is ſaid, and mens deſires may be ſatisfied: and that it is a fondneſſe, now in the latter end, to trouble the world with a new kind of ſpeaking, and to cal again the old fineneſſe & eloquence that Cicero & Cæſar vſed in their daies in the Latine tong. So much are theſe men beholden to the folly

folly and darkneſſe of the former times. Many things, as one writeth, are had in eſtimation oftentimes, becauſe they haue been once dedicate to the Temples of the Heathen Gods: Euen ſo we ſee at this day many things allowed and highly ſet by of theſe men, not becauſe they iudge them ſo much worth, but only becauſe they haue been receiued into a cuſtome, and after a ſort dedicate to the Temple of God.

The Church aboue Gods word.

M. Harding.

Ye haue neuer done with the Church of Rome, I cannot blame you. For ſo long as that ſtandeth, without ye repent and turne, (a) ye ſhal neuer be taken but for ſuch as ye be, Schiſmatikes and Heretikes. But alas poore ſoules, what, thinke ye to ouerthrow that Church builded vpon the Rocke (b) Peter, againſt which hitherto neither Tyrants, nor Heretikes, far paſſing you in learning & honeſty of common life, could euer preuaile? Trow ye to extinguiſh that Faith of the Romane Church, (c) which is the ſame that was the Faith of Peter, for which Chriſt praied that it ſhould neuer faile? Ye labour in vaine. Well may Satan win you: the Church which our Lord praied for, by you ſhal he neuer win. Giue ouer therfore your vaine & wicked attempts. Truſt not in the patches that falſly ye allege out of Canoniſts, Gloſſes, Schoolemen, riming Poets, Heretikes, and whatſoeuer, be they neuer ſo bad. Some ignorant perſons may ye deceiue, whoſe ſinnes deſerue the ſame.

Luc. 22.

What Sylueſter Prieriás ſaith, I minde not heer to diſcuſſe. (d) Neither where he ſaith that you allege, haue you thought good to tel vs, leſt by peruſing the place we ſhould take you in a lie, as we haue almoſt in al your other allegations. The like ſincerity you vſe in alleging Pigghius. We binde our ſelues neither to the words of Syluester, nor of Pigghius. If they erre, what is that to vs? Let them beare their own burden. If they tel truth, we beleeue them for truths ſake. If otherwiſe, we leaue that part for you to carpe. If Syluester Prieriás ſaid that for points of beleef the Doctrine of the Roman Church is a ſquire to try their truth by; the ſame (e) being wel vnderſtanded, it is right true. Likewiſe if Pigghius ſay that the Roman Church ſheweth vnto vs which be the approued and vndoubted Scriptures, & which be not; this is ſo true, as your ſelfe (I ſuppoſe) wil yeeld thereunto. As for that the Scripture receiued from the Church of Rome, Authority, Credit, and force, (f) if in your meaning you exclude God, that is your lie, not Syluesters ſentence. If relation be made to vs, that we ought not giue credit vnto it, (g) vnleſſe it had been ſhewed to be holy Scripture by the Roman Church, which is the true Church of Chriſt, in this ſenſe be it Syluester, or who elſe ſoeuer ſaith it, it is a true ſaying, & agreeable to S. Auguſtine, who ſaid, Ego Euangelio non crederem, niſi me Catholicæ Eccleſiæ commoueret Authoritas: I would not beleeue the Goſpel, except the Authority of the Catholike Church mooued me. And for that ye allege out of him touching Indulgences, truth it is, the ful and whole knowledge of them is not plainely opened vnto vs by expreſſe and euident words of Scripture, no more then the myſtery of the Bleſſed Trinity, Baptizing of Infants, and many other truths: but rather by the Doctrine of the Roman Church.

Contra Epiſtol. Fundam. cap. 5

Where you tel vs of Pigghius, that he letteth not to ſay, that without the licence of the Romiſh Church (for in that word you pleaſe your ſelfe wel) we ought not to beleeue the very plaine Scriptures; (h) wee wil proclaime you a lier, vntil you ſhew vs where he ſpake ſo far beſide reaſon and learning. The Holie Church doth not wil vs to ſtay from beleefe of the Scriptures vntil we haue licence, but by al waies and meanes inuiteth and ſtirreth vs to beleeue the truth in the Scriptures vttered.

Therefore, M. Harding, it may pleaſe you now a little to ſpare your voice, and to ſtay your Proclamation.

The Church aboue Gods Word.

But forasmuch as ye ſeeme ſo little to eſteeme theſe two Doctours, Prieriàs and Pighius, being otherwiſe, not long ſithence, the chiefe Leaders and Captaines of all your Bands, ye may therefore ioine others to them, to better their credit, and to encreaſe the Companie. And forasmuch as we ſpeake of the Church of Rome, let vs heare the Iudgement of a Cardinal of the Church of Rome, notwithſtanding otherwiſe alleged before.

Auguſt. contra Epiſt. Fundam. Ca. 5.

S. Auguſtine, ye ſay, holdeth hard of your ſide. He ſaith: Non crederem Euangelio, niſi me Eccleſiæ Catholicæ Authoritas commoueret: I would not beleeue the Goſpel, except the Authority of the Catholike Church mooued mee. Theſe few poore words haue béene toſſed of your part, and wrung, & preſſed to the vttermoſt, to yeeld out that was neuer in them. For heereby ye would faine proue that the Authority of the Church, wherby ye euermore vnderſtand your Church of Rome, and none other, is aboue the Authority of Gods word: that is to ſay, that the Creature is aboue the Creator that made Heauen and Earth.

Aug in Pſ. 57. Aug de Vnitat. Eccleſ. cap. 2. Auguſt. contra. Creſcon. Grammat. li. 1. ca 23. Aug. de Vnitat. Eccleſ. cap. 16. Aug. eod. loco.

But what if S. Auguſtine, as he ſaith, I beleeue the Goſpel becauſe of the Church, haue likewiſe ſaid, I beleeue the Church becauſe of the Goſpell? Then, I trow, ye muſt turne your tale, and ſay, The Goſpell is aboue the Church. His words be plaine: Ex ore Veritatis Eccleſiam agnoſco participem Veritatis: By the Mouth of (God, that is) the Truth, I know the Church that is partaker of the Truth. Againe he ſaith: Nolo Humanis Documentis, ſed Diuinis Oraculis Eccleſiam Sanctam demonſtrari: Eccleſiam quærere debemus in Verbis Chriſti, qui eſt Veritas, & optimè nouit Corpus ſuum: Eccleſiam ſine vlla ambiguitate Sancta Scriptura demonſtrat: In Scripturis Sanctis Eccleſia manifeſtè cognoſcitur: Eccleſiam, ſicut ipſum Caput, in Scripturis Sanctis Canonicis debemus agnoſcere: I would the Church ſhould be ſhewed, not by the Decrees of Men, but by the Heauenly Oracles, or Words of God: We muſt ſeeke the Church in the Words of Chriſt, which is the Truth, and beſt knoweth his owne Body: The Holy Scripture ſheweth vs the Church without doubting: In the Holie Scriptures the Church is plainely knowen: We muſt know the Church by the Holy Canonicall Scriptures as we know (Chriſt, that is) the Head.

Chryſ in Mat. the. Hom. 49.

Likewiſe ſaith Chryſoſtome: Nullo modo cognoſcitur quæ ſit Vera Eccleſia, niſi Tantummodò tummodò per Scripturas: It is not any waies knowen which is the True Church of Christ, but Only by the Scriptures.

The Church aboue Gods Word.

And thus forasmuch as we know both Christ by the Church, and the Church by Christ, the one giuing euidence to the other, by this reckoning, M. Harding, and by your shifting of turnes, wee must sometimes place Christ aboue the Church, and somtimes the Church aboue Christ.

Howbeit, S. Augustines minde was not to commence an Action betweene Christ and his Church, in Comparison of their Dignities, or for triall and keping of their bounds, or to teach vs, that the Truth of God taketh Authority of the Church: but only to shew vs that the Church is a Witnesse to Gods Truth. And certainely it hath great weight of perswasion to moue the Conscience of any man, to see so many Kingdomes and Countries to ioine together in the profession and obedience of one Truth. And I doubt not, but euen this day many thousands are the sooner led to humble themselues vnto the Gospell of Christ, for that they see the whole world, that is to say, the whole Church of God, is contented so willingly and so humbly to embrace the same. Dauid, to testifie the Truth and certainty of the Gospell, saith thus: The sound of the Apostles went out into all the Earth: and the words of them into the ends of all the World. This is the turning of the right hand of God. Psalm. 18. .Rom 10. Psalm. 76.

Therefore S. Augustine saith vnto Faustus the Heretike: Cur non potiùs Euangelicæ Authoritati, tam fundatæ, tam stabilitæ, tanta gloria diffamatæ, atque ab apostolorum temporibus, vsque ad nostra tempora, per Successiones certissimas commendatæ, te non subdis? Why doest thou not rather submit thy selfe vnto the Authority of the Gospell, being so grounded, so stablished, preached and published with so great glory, commended and deliuered vnto vs by most certaine Successions from the time of the Apostles vntill our time. Aug. cont Fau. lib. 32. cap. 19.

Likewise in this same place by you alleged S. Augustine saith: Ego non crederem Euangelio, nisi me Catholicæ Ecclesiæ commoueret Authoritas. Quibus ergo obtemperaui dicentibus. Credite Euangelio, cur eis non obtemperem dicentibus, Noli credere Manichæo? I would not beleeue the Gospell, vnlesse the Authority of the Catholike Church moued me. Seeing therefore I haue obeied them saying to me, Beleeue the Gospell, why should I not also obey them saying vnto me, Beleeue not Manichee? Auguſt. contra Epiſt. Fundam. Ca. 5.

Thus the consent of the Church beareth witnesse to the Gospell; without which witnesse notwithstanding, the Gospel neuertheless were the Gospell still. Therefore Chrysostome saith; Si dixerint in ipsis Veris Ecclesijs Christum apparuisse, nolite eis credere dicentibus ista de me: Quia non est digna Diuinitatis meæ notitia hæc: If they shall tell you that Christ hath appeared, yea euen in the very True Churches, yet beleeue them not saying thus of me: For this is no meet knowledge for my Godhead. Chryſ. in Mat. the. Hom. 49. in Oper. Imper.

To conclude, M. Harding, we will say to you as S. Augustine sometime said to the Donatian Heretikes, aduancing their only Church in Aphrica, euen as you now aduance only your Church of Rome: Nos post vocem Pastoris nostri, per ora Prophetarum, per os proprium, per ora Euangelistarum nobis apertissimè declaratam, voces vestras non admittimus, non credimus, non accipimus: After the voice of our Shepheard, vttered most plainely vnto vs by the mouthes of the Prophets, by his owne mouth, and by the mouthes of the Euangelists, if ye bring vs your owne voices, we allow them not, we beleeue them not, we receiue them not. Aug. de Vnitat. Eccleſ. cap. 11.

The Apology, Chap. 11. Diuision 1.

OUr Church, say they, cannot er. They speake that (I thinke) as the Lacedæmonians long sithence vsed to say, that it was not possible to find any Adulterer in al their Common Wealth: Whereas indeed they were rather al Adulterers, and had no certainty in their Marriages, but had their wiues in common amongst them al: Or, as the Canonists at this day, for their bellies sake, vse to say of the Pope, that forsomuch as he is Lord of al Benefices, though he sel for mony Bishoprickes, Monasteries, Priesthood, Spiritual Promotions, & part with nothing freely, yet because he counteth al his owne, he cannot commit Simony, though he would neuer so faine. But how strongly & agreeably to reason these things bee spoken, we are not as yet able to perceiue, except perchance these men haue plucked off the wings from the Truth, as the Romans in old time did prome & pinion their Goddesse Victoria, after they had once gotten her home, to the end that with the same wings she should neuer be able to flee away from them againe. Summa Angel. in diction. Papa. Theodoricus de Schiſmate. Plutarchus.

M. Harding.

Toward the end of your Apologie, Sir Defender, whoſoeuer you be that peeced it together, you doe but trifle. Of like your ſtuffe is ſpent For heere little ſay you that you haue not ſaid already. Wherefore I craue pardon of the Reader, if according to the ſlenderneſſe of matters obiected, my (a) confutation ſeeme altogether ſlender. Sir you doe now but patch peeces together, which you haue gathered out of your note bookes, into the ſame inforced, ſome out of the Canoniſts, ſome out of the Schoolmen, & them not of the greateſt eſtimation, moſt of all out of Humanity Bookes, wherein you be pretily ſeene. And that ſeemeth to be your chiefe profeſſion. As for Diuinity, there appeareth no great knowledge in you. What ye rehearſe of the Lacædemonians, it perteineth to your owne companies no leſſe then to them, I meane only your Apoſtates, Monkes, Friers, Prieſts, and Nunnes.

(a) This is good plaine dealing. For indeed this Anſwer is very ſlender.

You find great fault in the Canoniſts that be at this day, and name in your Margent Summa Angelica, the Author whereof died many yeers paſt. If he, Theodoricus, whatſoeuer he was, or any other Canoniſt offend you, as for his bellies ſake, ſpeaking of the Pope, that ſhould ſet your teeth an edge; what perteineth that to vs, who defend the Catholike Faith, not the ſaying of euery Canoniſt? You were beſt, ſeeing you make ſo much adoe with them to Article their errours, and either write a railing Booke againſt them, which ye (b) can eaſily doe, or ſend one of your beſt learned ſuperintendents to Bononia, there in open ſchoole with diſputations to confute them. And ſo doubtleſſe ye ſhal either conuert them, which were a worthy act; or prooue your ſelues fooles, which were great pity.

(b) With M. Hardings good inſtructions.

But to anſwer your obiection, we ſay firſt, that you allege Summa Angelica falſly. Nothing is found ſounding to that ye burden the Pope withall, in the place by you quoted, in dict. Papa. Next, whereas it is written in Summa Angelica, In Curia Romana titulus de Simonia non habet locum; you, Sir Defender, either not knowing what followed, or of malice abuſing the place, haue reported the ſame as if it were preciſely ſaid without any diſtinction. Whereas indeed the ſelfe ſame Summe vſeth this Diſtinction, ſaying, Verum eſt in iis quæ ſunt Simoniaca de iure poſitiuo ſolum: Sed non in iis quæ ſunt Simoniaca de iure Diuino: Whereby he meaneth, that the Pope is not vnder the rules of Simonie, concerning (c) ſuch lawes and paines as himſelfe or his predeceſſours haue made in that behalfe. For they haue made many things belonging thereto, as you may wel know your ſelfe, who are ſo pretily ſeen in the Canon Law, as it may appeare by the often and cunning allegations which you bring out of the Gloſſes. But concerning (d) that Simonie which properly is ſo called, the Pope is no leſſe ſubiect thereto by the true iudgement of Summa Angelica, (e) which you haue ſhamefully belied, then any other man.

In diſt. Simo. Verum. Antonius.

(c) A worthy diſtinction. Whereby the Pope may ſell Biſhoprickes, and Benefices without Simonie.

You ieſt at Gods bleſſed Truth alwaies remaining in his Holy Church, and prophanely reſemble it to a bird proined and pinioned, that it flie not away. As though the Church kept truth with ſuch policie as the old Romans are fained to haue kept their Goddeſſe Victorie. Wel Sir, we tell you in ſadneſſe, we are aſſured of the Truth, that it is in the Church, and that it ſhal neuer depart from thence. And if yet al this cutting away of her wings, that it neuer flie from the Church, we grant they be cut in ſuch ſort as ſhe ſhal keepe the Church for euer, as her owne neſt. And wil you know who telleth vs this? Euen God himſelfe, ſaying in his Prophet Eſay to Chriſt of his Church: I wil make this couenant with them, ſaith our Lord: My ſpirit which is in thee, and my words which I haue put in thy mouth, (f) ſhall not depart from thy mouth, and from the mouth of thy ſeed, and from the mouth of thy ſeeds ſeed, ſaith our Lord, from this time forth for euermore.

(d) This kind of Simony ſtandeth only in ſelling of Orders and Sacraments, &c.

(e) Vntruth, ſhameleſſe, as ſhall appeare.

(f) Ful diſcreetly and wel applied, as if theſe words had been meant of the Pope and his ſucceſſours.

Againe this truth, whoſoeuer ye bring in reproofe of Popes liues, whom notwithſtanding moſt impudently ye bely, what vndiſcreet ſayings or flatteries ſoeuer ye burden the Canoniſts with, al turneth to no thing. The Truth remaineth vnſhaken: your ſpirit of lying, ſcoffing and malice, thereby is diſciphered.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Heere ye ſay, Sir Defender is pretily ſeene in Humanity: For that (ye ſay) ſeemeth to be his chiefe profeſſion. Verily M. Harding, we are well pleaſed to take ſuch, and ſo much learning as you may ſpare vs. We contend onely for Truth, and not for Learning. Whatſoeuer our Learning be, if it may pleaſe God to vſe it to his glory, it ſhall be ſufficient, be it neuer ſo little. Howbeit, had you not had ſome good liking in your owne Learning, ye would not vpon ſo ſimple occaſions haue vpbraided others.

The Pope cannot commit Simonie.

Touching that ſundry of your Doctors haue ſaid, the Pope cannot commit Simonie, firſt it ſhall be neceſſary in that behalfe to conſider the eſtate and practiſe of the Church of Rome. S. Bernard writing vnto Pope Eugenius, ſaith: Limina Apoſtolorum Ambitio iam plùs terit, quàm Deuotio. Vocibus Ambitionis veſtrum toto die reſultat Palatium Ambitio in Eccleſia per te regnare molitur: The Apoſtles Entries or Gates in Rome are now more worne with Ambition, then with Deuotion. All the day long your Palace ringeth with the ſound of Ambition. By thy meanes Ambition ſeeketh to raigne in the Church of God. Againe he ſaith: Sacri gradus dati ſunt in occaſionem turpis Lucri: & quæſtum æſtimant Pietatem: The holy degrees, or Eccleſiaſticall roomes, are giuen ouer to occaſion of filthy gaine: and the ſame gaine they count Holineſſe. Ludouicus Viues ſaith: Romæ cùm omnia propè vendantur & emantur, nihil tamen agas ſine Lege, ac Formula, atque etiam Sanctiſſimi Iuris: At Rome, notwithſtanding all things be bought and ſold, yet may ye doe nothing there without Forme and Order, and that of moſt Holy Religion.

Pope Alexander maketh ſale of his Keies, of his Altars, and of Chriſt himſelfe,
Well may he ſell theſe things: For he himſelfe paid wel for them.

Notwithſtanding, ye doubt not but al this by a prety ſory diſtinction may ſone be excuſed. For thus ye ſay: Verum eſt in iis quæ ſūt Simoniaca de Iure Poſitiuo ſolùm ſed non in iis quæ ſunt Simoniaca de Iure Diuino. Wherby (ye ſay) the Authour meaneth that the Pope is not vnder the Rules of Simonie, concerning ſuch Lawes and paines as he himſelf or his Predeceſſors haue made & prouided in that behalfe. And therefore, as your modeſt maner is, ye ſay, wee haue falſely alleged, and ſhamefully belied Summa Angelica. But why do you not better open the ſeueral parts of your Diſtinction, M. Harding? Why doe ye not better teach vs to vnderſtand what is Simonie by Law Poſitiue, and what is Simony by the Law of God? And why doe ye not declare each part by plaine Examples? Seeing you thus to ſteale away in the darke, wee haue ſome cauſe to doubt your dealing.

Summa Angel. In Simonia.

The Pope cannot commit Simonie.

Howbeit, to make the matter plaine, your owne Gloſſe ſaith thus: Simoniaca de ſui natura ſunt, quæ Nouo aut Veteri Teſtamento prohibita ſunt: vt, Emere vel Vendere Sacramenta. Simoniaca de Iure Poſitiuo ſunt, quæ ſolùm ſunt Spiritualia ex Conſtitutione Eccleſiæ: Vt ſunt Tituli Beneficiorum Eccleſiaſticorum, &c. Theſe bings are Simoniacall of their owne Nature, that are forbidden in the Old and New Teſtament; as to buy or ſell Sacraments. Theſe things are Simoniacall by Law Poſitiue, which are Spirituall only by the ordinance of the Church. Such are the Titles of all Eccleſiaſticall Benefices and Dignities: As be Biſhopricks, Deanries, Abbies, Archdeaconries, &c. Thus M. Harding, if your Pope ſell Sacraments, which will yeld him but little money, he may be charged with Simonie. But if he ſell Biſhopricks, Deanries, Abbies, Archdeaconries, Prebends, Perſonages, neuer ſo many, yet by the ſhift of your prety Diſtinction, no man may charge him. For all theſe things are Spirituall only by the Popes owne Poſitiue Law, that is to ſay, by the ordinance of the Church. And thinke you not ſo good a Diſtinction was well worth the finding out? One of your owne Companie ſpeaking heereof, ſaith thus: O Petre, quantam animarum multitudinem cateruatim tranſmiſit & tranſmittit ad Infernum hæc Superſtitialis & Damnanda Diſtinctio? Multis eſt occaſio, & viam aperit ad ruinam Damnationis æternæ: O Peter, Peter, how many Soules hath this Superſtitious and Damnable Diſtinction ſent by heapes, and yet doth daily ſend into Hell? It is an occaſion vnto many, and openeth the way vnto the fall of Euerlaſting Damnation.

thority it appeareth, the Pope is not able to maintaine his Estate and Countenance, nor to saue all things vpright without Simony.

Extr. de Simonia, ca. 1. numero 5. fo 18. Ab. Archidiac. in Tract. de. Hæresi. ver. Et quia tanta est. The Diuels words alleged vnder the name of S. Peter.

Panormitane saith: Etsi Papa accipiat pecuniam pro collatione alicuius Prælaturæ, aut Beneficij, tamen Dominus Cardinalis ait, Non committitur Simonia: Notwithstanding the Pope take money for the bestowing of a Bishopricke, or of a Benefice, yet my Lord Cardinal saith, in there is committed no Simony. Archidiaconus Florentinus saith: Papa recipiendo pecuniam, non præsumitur animo vendendi recipere; sed vt illa pecunia ad vsum suum conuertatur: cùm Papa sit Dominus rerum Temporalium, per illud dictum Petri, Dabo tibi omnia Regna Mundi: The Pope receiuing mony (for Bishopricks or Benefices) is not thought to take it by way of sale; but onely to turne the same mony to his owne vse. For the Pope is Lord of all worldly goods, as it appeareth by the words of Peter, (which words notwithstanding Peter neuer spake, for they were spoken by Satan.) Vnto thee will I giue all the Kingdomes of the World.

Felin. de Offic. Iudicis delega. Ex parte. N. The Pope changeth vice into Vertue, Againe Felinus saith: Quod datur Papæ, datur Sacrario Petri: nec est proprium Papæ: Sed prodest danti, tanquam facienti opus pijssimum: Whatsoeuer is giuen to the Pope (for Bishopricke or Benefice, by way of Simony) it is giuen to S. Peters Treasurie. Neither is it the Popes owne seuerall goods. But it is auaileable to the giuer, as vnto one that doth a most godly deed. Such a speciall grace hath the Pope. Of most Diuelish Vice he is able to make most Godly Vertue. And for the better furtherance of the matter, S. Peter must be made accessory to the Simony.

Extr. de Simon. cap. 1. Hostien.

Hostiensis saith: Papa potest vendere Titulum Ecclesiasticum, vt Episcopatum, Abbatiam, &c. The Pope may sell any Ecclesiasticall Title or Dignity, as a Bishopricke or an Abbie, without danger of Simony:

Extr. de Simon. Et si quæstiones.

But what speake we of the Pope? Your Cardinals themselues, by your fauourable constructions, and godly orders, are likewise priuileged to commit Simony safely, and freely, and without blame. Panormitane saith: Cardinalis pro Palafreno à nobili viro recepto, non præsumitur committere Simoniam: A Cardinall, for receiuing a Palfrey of a Noble man, (for a Benefice, or a Bishoprike) is not thought to commit Simony.

Hieronymus. 1. Quæst. 1. Eos qui.

Thus whereas Christ drawe Buyers and Sellers out of the Church, you by your proper distinctions haue receiued in Buyers and Sellers, and thrust out Christ. S. Hierome saith: Per nummularios significantur Beneficij Ecclesiastici venditores, qui Domum Dei faciunt Speluncam Latronum: By the Exchangers are signified the Sellers of Ecclesiastical Benefices, which make the House of God a Den of Theeues. In your owne Decrees it is written thus: Tolerabilior est Macedonij Hæresis, qui asserit Spiritum Sanctum esse Seruum Patris & Filij. Nam isti faciunt Spiritum Sanctum Seruum suum: The Heresie of Macedonius, that said the Holy Ghost is Seruant and Slaue to the Father and to the Sonne, is more tolerable then is the Heresie of these Simonists. For these men make the Holy Ghost their owne Seruant.

The Pope cannot commit Simonie.

Esay 59.

Aug. de Natura Boni. ca. 46.

Yet ye say ye are well assured, that the Truth is in the Church of Rome, and shal neuer depart from thence, notwithstanding any disorder or fault whatsoeuer there committed. And for proofe thereof ye allege, as ye say, the words of God himselfe in the Prophet Esay. Albeit, in that whole Prophet there is not one word expressly mentioned of the Church of Rome. Such a fantasie, as it appeareth, was somtimes in the Heretikes called the Manicheis. For thus they said: A Principibus Gentis Tenebrarum Lumen, ne ab ijs auferetur, tenebatur: The Princes of the Nation of Darkenesse held fast the Light, lest it should flee from them. For euen so doth the Pope and his Cardinals hold the Truth, as the Princes or Powers of Darkenesse held the Light. And what are the Popes and their Cardinals, but onely the Powers and Princes of Darkenesse? It was hard dealing for you to binde Christ in Recognisance, not to depart from the Pope. Ye should rather haue bound the Pope not to depart from Christ.

Hieronymus in Michæ. cap. 3.

S. Hierome saith: Prophetæ Hierusalem non habent in ore Propheriam: & in Domino requiescunt, & dicunt, Non venient super nos mala. Quorum causa Speculatorium Dei hostili aratro diuiditur: Et locus, quondam pacis, ruinis plenus sit: Et Templum Domini in vepres spinasque conuertitur, & est habitaculum bestiarum: The Prophets of Hierusalem haue neuer a word of Prophesie in their mouthes. Yet they rest themselues vpon the Lord, and say, There shall no euill come vpon vs. For their sakes the Watch Tower of the Lord is turned vp with the enemies Plow: The place of peace is full of ruine: The Temple of the Lord is turned into Briers and Thornes, and is become a stable of wilde beasts.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision 2.

But what if Ieremie tel them, as is afore rehersed, that these be Lies? What if the same Prophet say in another place, that the selfe same men who who ought to be Keepers of the Vineyard, haue brought to nought and destroied the Lords Vineyard? How if Christ say, that the same persons, who chiefly ought to haue care ouer the Temple, haue made the Lords Temple a denne of Theeues. Hier. 12. Matth. 21.

M. Harding.

Here come you in with your what ifs, which commonly you vse, when other Rhetorike faileth you. We tell you plainely without any ifs, that * Ieremy meant of you and such as you bee, and calleth your whole new fangled Doctrine, Verbum mendacij, the words of lying, earnestly giuing warning, that men giue no credit to them. His other rebuke pertaineth also to you. When were euer such Theeues in the Church of God, as ye are. * Learnedly prooued.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. diuision 1.

If it be so, that the Church of Rome cannot erre, it must needes follow, that the good lucke thereof is far greater, then all these mens policie. For such is their Life, their Doctrine, and their Diligence, that for all them, the Church may not only erre, but also vtterly be spoiled & perish. No doubt, if that Church may erre, which hath departed from Gods Words, from Christs Commandements, from the Apostles Ordinances, from the Primitiue Churches examples, from the Old Fathers and Councels Orders, and from their own Decrees, & which wil be bound within the compasse of none, neither Old or New, nor their own, nor of others, nor Mans Law, nor Gods Law, then it is out of all question, that the Romish Church hath not only had power to erre, but also that it hath shamefully and most wickedly erred in very deed.

M. Harding.

A man would haue thought you would haue brought some substantial Argument, wherby to proue, that the Church erreth. Neither make you excuse, in that you speake of the Romain Church. In this account we make no difference betweene the Roman Church, and the Church. But all your proofes depend vpon your ifs, which being denied, you haue no more to say. No doubt (say you) if that Church may erre which hath departed from Gods Word, from Christs Commandements, &c. then it hath erred in very deed. But Sir, what if a man denie your suppofall, and stay you in your first if? What haue you to proue it? All that you haue said hitherto we know, and of little force it is. But no doubt, say you, if that Church may erre, which hath departed from Gods word, &c. Yea forsooth if all ifs were true, then if Heauen fell, we should catch Larkes. And if a Bridge were made betweene Douer and Calis, we might goe to Bullein a foot, as William Somer once told King Henrie, if it be true that I haue heard say. The Church of Rome is the whole Catholike Church.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here is nothing else, but only the Canonization of poore William Somer. While your Bookes, M. Harding, shall liue, all his sage sawes shall neuer die.

The Apology, Chap. 12. Diuision 2.

But say they, ye haue beene of our fellowship, but now ye are become forsakers of your profession, and haue departed from vs. It is true: Wee haue departed from them, and for so doing, we both giue thanks to Almighty God, and greatly reioice in our own behalfe. But yet for all this from the Primitiue Church, from the Apostles, & from Christ we haue not departed. True it is, we were brought vp with these men in darkenesse, and in the lacke of the knowledge of God, as Moses was brought vp in Learning, and in the bosome of the Egyptians. We haue been of your Company, saith Tertullian, I confesse it, and no maruell at all: For, saith he, men be made, and not borne Christians. Tertullian. in Apologetico.

M. Harding.

We say (as ye report) that yee haue beene once of our Fellowship, but now ye are become Apostates and forsakers of your profession, and haue wickedly departed from vs. By the name of vs, we mean not some one particular company, but Christs Catholik Church. We say of you, as S. Iohn said of the like who he calleth Antichrists: Ex nobis exierunt, sed non erant ex nobis. Nam si fuissent ex nobis permansissent vtique nobiscum: They are departed from out of vs, but they were not of vs. For if they had beene of vs, they had doubtlesse remained still with vs. By this whole discourse, Christ & his Apostles may be condemned.

1. Ioh. 2.

But what is your anſwer hereunto? It is deſperate, fooliſh and lying. Firſt, yee confeſſe the thing, and not only that, but alſo thanke God for it, and greatly reioyce in it. And therein yee follow the worſt ſort of ſinners, of whom Salomon ſaith: Lætantur cùm malè fecerint & exultant in rebus peſſimis. They be glad when they haue done euil, and reioice in the worſt things that are. Ye haue diuided the Church of God, ye haue rent our Lords net, ye haue cut his whole wouen coat, which the wicked ſouldiers that crucified him, could not finde in their hearts to doe. Dionyſius Alexandrinus writing to Nouatus the great Heretike, who did as ye haue done, ſaith thus vnto him, as Euſebius recyteth, whereby ye may eſteeme the greatneſſe of your crie: Thou ſhouldeſt haue ſuffered whatſoeuer it were, that the Church of God might not be diuided. And martirdome ſuffered for that the Church ſhould not be diuided, is no leſſe glorious, then that which is ſuffered for not doing idolatry. Yea, in mine opinion it is greater. For there one is martyred for his owne onely ſoule, and here for the whole Church. Thus it followeth, that by your Apoſtaſie, and by you diuiding of Gods Church, yee haue done more wickedly, (a) then if yee committed Idolatrie.

Prouerb. 2.

Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 44. Greek.

(a) A good excuſe of Idolatry.

But yet for al this (ſay they) from the Primitiue Church, from the Apoſtles, and from Chriſt we haue not departed. What can be ſaid more fooliſhly? Why Sirs, (b) is not the Primitiue Church and this of our time one Church? Doth it not hold together by continual ſucceſſion til the worlds end? What, hath Chriſt moe Churches then one? Is the Primitiue Church quite done, and now muſt there begin a new? Is not Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and all true beleeuers, in what time or place ſoeuer they liue, his one Myſtical Body, whereof he is the Head, all other the members? As Chriſt is one, the Holy Ghoſt one, one Faith, one Baptiſme, one Vocation, one God: ſo is the Church one, which began at the firſt man, and ſhal endure to the laſt: whereof the liuing part one earth before the comming of Chriſt into Fleſh, was ſometime brought to ſmal number: after his comming, after that the Apoſtles had preached & ſpread the Goſpel abroad, the number neither was euer, nor ſhall be other then great (though ſometime accounted ſmal in reſpect of the vnbeleeuers) vntill the comming againe of the Sonne of Man, what time he ſhal ſcantly find Faith, ſpecially that which worketh by charity in the earth. Againſt which time buſily yee make preparation.

(b) Yes verily: Euen as the houſe of God and the caue of Theeues were all one Temple. Matthæ. 21.

Luke 18.

For ſome part of excuſe of your forſaking the Church, ye ſay, yee were brought vp with vs in darkneſſe, & in the lack of knowledge of God, as Moſes was among the Egyptians: for that ye bring out of Tertullian, helpeth you nothing at al. I pray you Sirs, what darkneſſe meane ye? Speake ye of ſin? We excuſe not our ſelues. But when tooke ye out the beame of your owne eies, that ye eſpie the more of our eie? It were wel ye proued your ſelues honeſt men, before ye required vs to be Angels. If ye meane the darkneſſe of ignorance, as peraduenture ye do, & the lack of knowledge of God: now that ye are departed from vs, & haue ſet chaire againſt chaire, (I ſee no cauſe why to ſay, Altar againſt Altar) what more & better knowledge of God haue ye, then we haue, and euer haue had? Doe we not know the Articles of our Beleefe? Tel vs, which do we lack? This is life euerlaſting (ſaith our Sauiour in the Goſpel) to know thee God alone, and whom thou haſt ſent Ieſus Chriſt. So far as God lightneth our vnderſtanding with the ſupernatural light of his grace, thus much wee know. For which Peter the ſonne of Jona was accounted bleſſed of Chriſt, the ſame we ſinful Papiſts through Gods grace, alſo know and confeſſe. The Commandements of God we know: what is good, what is euil: which be ſins, which be vertues, what is to be followed, what is to be ſhunned: ſo far as is behoueful, we be not ignorant.

Here M. Hard. laith out his heaps of learning.

Iohn 17. Matth. 16

What is the darkneſſe then, for which yee would needs be gone from vs? And what is that worthy knowledge ye haue woone by your departure? Tel vs, that we may buy the Bookes, and goe to ſchoole with you. Truly without yee haue ſome hidden and ſecret knowledge, which ye haue not vttered to the world hitherto, as we beleeue ye haue not, being ſuch boaſters as ye are: we ſee little cauſe, ye ſhould twit vs of ignorance, and brag of your owne knowledge. This we ſee ful wel, they that run away from vs to your ſide, be they Monkes or Friers, Tinkers or Tapſters, Coblers or Bodgers, white or blacke, by and by in your Synagogues they bee great Rabbins. And yee the ſuperintendents admit them to bee your Miniſters and Preachers of the word, and tel them they can doe well, and they beleeue no leſſe themſelues. But the people take them for ſuch, as they knew them before they tooke ſuch degree, and many times for their good behauiour, they forget their Holy Miniſtery, and Chriſten them by their common name which was not giuen them at the Font. Yet all this proueth not either our ignorance or your maruellous and rare knowledge. Neither ſhal ye euer be able to proue to any man of learning and iudgement, that in any liberal ſciences or right knowledge of the ſcriptures, ye are comparable to the learned men of the Catholike Church. Though aboue fifty yeeres paſt and vpward for a ſpace, the ſtudies of Eloquence and of tongues were intermitted, yet then and before thoſe times was there no ſmall number of men, who had profound knowledge of all good Arts, and ſpecially of the Holy Letters. I report me to Thomas Walden, who very learnedly confuted the Hereſies of your great Grandfather Iohn Wickleffe: to Alcuinus in the great Charles time: to Beda before that, all three Engliſhmen: to Anſelme and Lanckfranke Biſhops of England, though ſtrangers borne: to S. Thomas of Aquine, S. Bernard, Rupertus & hundreds moe, which here is no place to reckon. Were not they by confeſſion of al, great Clerkes? doe not the beſt learned of our time, in obſcure matters, fetch light of thē? To ſay the truth, in compariſon of their cleare light, your ill ſauouring ſnuffes may ſcantly ſeeme to yeeld a darke ſmoake. Many talke of your painted ſheath, who, were they learned indeed, would ſoone perceiue neither that to be very freſh and gay: for as for your ſword, what ruſty and beggarly mettal it is, the wiſer part of the world ſeeth.* Therefore ye ſhal doe wel, Sirs, to ſpeake no more of the darkneſſe and ignorance of the Catholike Church, and to boaſt leſſe of your great cunning and knowledge.

*A very learned and a worthy concluſion. But woe be to them that cal Light Darkneſſe, & Darkneſſe Light: Eſay 5.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Your head was very idle, M. Harding, when it could ſo eaſily yéld vs ſuch idle talke. If ye think it in no caſe to be lawful to depart from them, whatſoeuer they be, that beare the ſhew and countenance of the Church, then muſt ye néeds condemne the Apoſtles and Prophets, and moſt ſpecially Chriſt himſelfe. But let vs conſider, from what company we are departed. So may the cauſes of our departure the better appeare. For the Pope himſelfe ſaith not nay, but vpon iuſt conſiderations, any Church may leaue the Church of Rome. His owne wordes be these: Nulli agere licet, sine discretione Iustitiæ, contra Disciplinam Romanæ Ecclesiæ: Without discretion of Iustice, it is lawfull for no man, to doe any thing contrary to the Order of the Church of Rome. By this the Popes owne Decree, with discretion of Iustice, it is lawfull to doe contrary to the Orders of the Church of Rome. Dist. 12. Non decet. in Rubr.

Departing from the Church of Rome.

But for a short and generall view of that whole Church, in this behalfe, S. Bernard saith thus: Parum est nostris Pastoribus, quòd non seruant nos, nisi & perdant. Non parcunt suis, qui non parcunt sibi, Perimentes pariter, & Pereuntes: It is not sufficient for our Bishops that they saue vs not, vnlesse they also doe destroy vs: sparing not themselues, they spare not their people. They doe both perish themselues, and kill others. Againe he saith: Non custodiunt hoc tempore Sponsam, sed perdunt: Non custodiunt Gregem Domini, sed mactant & deuorant: They keepe not this day the Spouse of God, that is, his Church, but they destroy her: They keepe not the Flocke, but they kill and deuoure. He that writes Paralipomena Vrspergensis, in the story of the Councel of Constance, saith thus: Spiritum extinguebant: Prophetias aspernabantur: Christum in Membris suis persequebantur: Eratq; planè persequutrix Ecclesia: They oppressed the Spirit of God: they defied the voices of the Prophets: they persecuted Christ in his members. And indeed the Church was giuen to worke persecution. Bernard. in Synodo Remensi. In ead. Synod. Paralipom. Vrsperg pag. 396.

Æneas Syluius that afterward was Pope Pius 2. saith: Refriguit Charitas, & Fides omnis interijt: Charity is waxen cold, and all Faith is dead. Æneas Syl. in epist. ad Casparem Schlickium.

In the life of Pope Clemens 5. it is written thus: Hic fuit Publicus Fornicator. Ab eo tempore defecit omnis Disciplina & Religio in Cardinalibus, & tres Radices vitiorum, Superbia, Auaritia, Luxuria, validissimè dominantur: The Pope was an open Whooremaster. From that time forward, all kinde of Discipline and Religion decaied in the Cardinals: and three roots of vices, Pride, Auarice, and Lechery, mightily bare the sway. Paralipom. Vrsper. in Clem. 5.

Antonius Marinarius at your late Chapter at Trident, saith thus of the Church of Rome: Si Euangelica Fides nostræ vitæ Regula esset, re ipsa Christiani essemus. Nunc Titulo & Ceremonijs Vocamur Christiani: If the Faith of the Gospell were a Rule vnto our Life, then should we be Christians in very deed. As now, by Titles and Ceremonies we beare only the name of Christians. To like purpose saith Nicolaus Cusanus a Cardinall of Rome: Si rectè respicimus, omnis Religio Christiana, paucis demptis, degenerauit in apparentiam: If we marke it well, all our Christian Religion, a few excepted, is growen out of kinde vnto a shew. In Conc. Trid. Antonius Marinarius. Nicol. Cusanus Excitat. lib. 9. Conc. Trident.

At the said Chapter, the Bishop of Bitonto said thus, as I haue reported before: Quibus turpitudinum Monstris, qua sordium Colluuie, qua Peste non sunt fœdati, non corrupti in Ecclesia Sancta, & populus, & Sacerdos? A Sanctuario Dei incipite: Si vllas iam pudor, si vlla pudicitia, si vllà supersit bene viuendi vel spes, vel ratio: With what Monsters of Filthinesse, with what Villany, with what Pestilence be they not corrupted, and defiled in the Holy Church (of Rome) as well the Priest as the People? Begin euen with the Sanctuary of God, if there be any shame, if there be any regard of Honesty, if there be any Hope, or way to liue well. epist. Bitont.

Another saith: O nos miseros, qui Christiani dicimur! Gentes agimus sub nomine Christi: Miserable are we that are called Christians. We liue as Heathens vnder the name of Christ. Frane. Zephyrus in Apologeticum Tertull.

Another saith: O lugenda Roma, quæ nostris Maioribus clara Patrum Lumina protulisti: nostris temporibus, monstrosas tenebras, futuro sæculo famosas, offudisti! O miserable Rome, which in the time of our Elders hast brought forth the lights of worthy Fathers, but in our daies, hast brought forth monstrous Darkenesse, shamefull and slanderous to the time to come! Petrarcha calleth Rome a Schoole of Errour, and a Temple of Heresie. Arnulphus, aut Bernardus in Concil. Remen. Petrar. in Rythmis Italicis: Schola di Errori: è Tempio de Eresia.

Brigitta, whose wordes and Prophesies ye haue in reuerence, saith in her Reuelations: Christus sumet Benedictionem à Clero Romano, & dabit eam alteri Genti facienti voluntatem Domini: Christ shall take his Blessing from the Clergy of Rome: and shall giue the same vnto a people that shall doe his will. Hermannus Riddus.

By these few, we may conceiue the whole state of the Church of Rome, which onely Church, aboue all others, M. Harding telleth vs, is so founded in the Truth, that it neuer can haue power to be deceiued.

We haue departed therefore from Shepheards that spoiled the Flocke: from Bishops that destroied the Church: that oppressed the Spirit of God: that defied the voice of the Prophets: that persecuted Christ in his Members: that both perished themselues, and killed others: that wallowed in monsters of filthinesse: that liued as Heathens, vnder the name of Christ: that were void of Charity: void of Faith: void of Discipline: void of Religion: that were Christians onely in Titles and Ceremonies: from whom Christ had withdrawen his Blessing: To be short, we haue departed from the Temple of Heresie, and from the Schoole of Error.

This, M. Harding, is the beauty and face of your Roman Clergy: this is that blessed company that we haue forsaken.

Yet

Departing from the Church of Rome.

Yet, ſay you, It had beene better to haue died then to haue broken the Vnity of ſuch a Church. For your friends tel you, that without the Obedience of the Biſhop of Rome, there is no Hope of Saluation. Notwithſtanding, your owne Clemens, whom ye commonly call the Apoſtles fellow, ſaith thus: Schiſma efficit, non qui ab Impijs ſeceſſionem facit, ſed qui à Pijs: He maketh no Schiſme or Diuiſion in the Church, that departeth from the wicked: but he that departeth from the godly. And therefore he addeth further: Laici, cum ijs qui contraria ſententiæ Dei, dogmata defendunt, nolite ſocietatem habere, neque participes illorum Impietatis fieri. Ait enim Dominus, Recedite de medio horum hominum, ne cum eis pereatis: Ye Lay men, haue ye no fellowſhip with them, nor be you Partakers of their Wickednesse, that defend Doctrines contrary to the Doctrine of God. For our Lord ſaith, Depart from the middeſt of this people, leſt ye periſh together with them.

De Maiorit. & Obedient. Vnam Sanctam. Subeſſe Romano Pontifici, eſt de neceſſitate Salutis.

Clemens. Apoſtolicar. conſtit. lib 6. cap 4.

Pope Pius 2. ſaith: Reſiſtendum eſt quibuſcunque in faciem, ſiue Paulus ſiue Petrus ſit, qui ad Veritatem non ambulat Euangelij: We muſt withſtand any man vnto the face, be it Peter, be it Paul, if he walke not after the truth of the Goſpell.

Æneas Sylnius ad Rector. & Vniuerſitatem Colonien. Paralipom. Vrſpergenſ. pag. 435.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ne Catholicis quidem Epiſcopis conſentiendum eſt, ſicubi forte falluntur, & contra Canonicas Scripturas aliquid ſentiant: We may not agree, no not with the Catholike Biſhops, if they happen to be deceiued and thinke any thing contrary to the Canonicall Scriptures.

Aug. de Vnitate Eccl. cap. 10.

Therefore Cardinall Cuſanus aduiſe by the Councel at S. Gregory, whom he allegeth, is: If Vices haue growen in the Church, through ouermuch obedience towards the Prelates, that we fauour them not, but withſtand them: Vt ſi qua vitia ex nimia obedientia exorta ſint, non foueantur ſed eis reſiſtatur: In which words it is to be noted, that the people may yeld too much obedience and reuerence towards their Prelates.

Nicol. Cuſan. de Concordant. Lib. 2. Cap 25.

S Chryſoſtome ſaith: Ex ipſis Veris Eccleſijs frequenter exeunt ſeductores. Propterea nec ipſis omninò credendum eſt, niſi ea dicant, vel faciant, quæ conuenientia ſint Scripturis: Euen out of the very true Churches oftentimes there come deceiuers. Therefore we may not in any wiſe beleeue, no not them (notwithſtanding they be the true Churches of God) vnleſſe they ſpeake or doe ſuch things as be agreeable to the Scriptures.

Chryſ. in Mat. homil. 49.

Anſelmus a late Writer, expounding theſe words of S. Paul, Tunc reuelabitur ille iniquus, ſaith thus: Romanus Pontifex, qui tenet nunc Eccleſias, teneat illas, donec de medio fiat: id eſt, donec ab ipſa Romana Eccleſia, quæ eſt Medium & Cor Eccleſiarum, fiat iniquitas, ob quam ab ea multæ diſcedant Eccleſiæ: Let the Biſhop of Rome that now holdeth the Churches, hold them ſtill, vntill it be taken away from the midſt: that is to ſay, vntill wickedneſſe be wrought of the Church of Rome, that is the middeſt and heart of Churches: for which wickednesſe many Churches ſhall depart from her.

S. Ambroſe ſaith: Nullus pudor eſt, ad meliora tranſire: It is no ſhame to goe to the better.

Ambr. in Epiſt. ad Theodoſ. & Valent.

S. Auguſtine ſaith vnto Fauſtus the Heretike: Ille me quondam de gremio tuo Error excuſſerat. Expertus fugi, quod experiri non debui: That Error ſhooke me once out of thy boſome. Being taught by proofe, I haue fled that thing that I ſhould not haue proued.

Auguſt. contra. Fauſt. li. 15. ca. 3.

Ambroſius Ansbertus one of your owne Doctors ſaith: Per Hieremiam Prophetam dicitur, Exite de medio eius populus meus, & ſaluet vnuſquiſque animam ſuam ab ira furoris Domini. Nequaquam enim in hac vita de medio ciuitatis reprobæ, id eſt, de medio malorum, quos Babylon illa ſignificat, electorum aliquis valet exire, niſi deteſtando, quod ab ipſis agitur, & agendo, quod ab ipſis deteſtatur: The Prophet Hieremy, ſaith, O my people go forth from the midſt of them, and ſaue euery man his owne ſoule from the rage of our Lords furie. For none of the Elect of God can in this life goe forth from the midſt of that wicked City, that is to ſay, from the midſt of the euill, which that Babylon ſignifieth, but by defying that they doe: and by doing that they deſie. And whereas ye would ſo faine dazel our eies, and couer your deformities with the name of the Church, S. Cyprian ſaith: Non eſt Pax ſed Bellum: nec Eccleſiæ iungitur, qui ab Euangelio ſeparatur: It is no Peace but Warre: neither is he ioined to the Church, that is diuided from the Goſpell.

Ambr. Anſber. in Apocal. lib. 2. cap. 2.

Cyprian de Lapſis. Serm. 5.

S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Mihi Ciuitas non habens pios Ciues, Omni Villa vilior, eſt & quacunque Spelunca ignobilior: A City that hath not godly Citizens is vnto me viler then any Vilage, and more lothſome then any Caue. And this he ſaith of the City of Antioch, which by expreſſe words, he more eſteemeth, then the City of Rome.

Chryſ. ad populum Antiochen. hom. 17.

We grant, we haue departed from you, vpon ſuch occaſion, and in ſuch ſort, as Moſes ſometime departed from out of Egypt: or, as S. Auguſtine departed from the Manichees. Howbeit, in very deed, you haue rather departed from out of vs. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Sic de iſta Noua Hieruſalem, id eſt, de Eccleſia, qui Spirituales Chriſtiani fuerunt, relicta Corporali Eccleſia, quam perfidi occupauerant violentia, exierunt ab illis. Magis autem illi exierunt à nobis, ſicut Iohannes exponit. Non enim illi de Eccleſia exire videtur qui corporaliter exit, ſed qui Spiritualiter Veritatis Eccleſiaſticæ Fundamenta reliquit.

Chryſ. in Mat. homil. 49.

Nos

Nos enim ab illis exiuimus Corpore: illi à nobis animo. Nos enim ab illis exiuimus Loco: Illi à nobis Fide. Nos apud illos reliquimus Fundamenta parietum: Illi apud nos reliquerunt Fundamenta Scripturarum. Nos ab illis egressi sumus secundùm aspectum hominum: Illi autem à nobis secundùm Iudicium Dei. Relicta est autem deserta, ex quo de illa Corporali Ecclesia Spiritualis exiuit: Id est, de populo suo, qui videbatur Christianus, & non erat, Populus iste exiuit qui non videbatur, & erat. Magis autem, secundùm quod diximus, illi à nobis exierunt, quàm nos ab illis: Euen so, touching this New Hierusalem, which is the Church, they that were Spirituall Christian men, leauing the Bodily Church, which the wicked by violence had inuaded, departed out from them: or as S. Iohn expoundeth it, they rather departed out from vs. For he seemeth not indeed to depart from the Church, that Bodily departeth: but he, that Spiritually leaueth the Foundations of the Ecclesiastical Truth. Wee haue departed from them in Body: they haue departed from vs in Minde. We from them, by Place: they from vs, by Faith. We haue left with them the Foundations of the walles: They haue left with vs the Foundations of the Scriptures. We are departed forth from them, in the sight of Men: They are departed from vs, in the iudgement of God. But now, after that the Spirituall Church is gone forth, the Bodily Church is left forsaken: That is to say, from that people, that seemed to be a Christian people and was not, this people is gone forth, that seemed not outwardly, but was so indeed. Notwithstanding, as we haue said before, they haue rather departed from vs, then we from them.

Ye say, your Church of Rome, that now is, and the Primitiue Church, is al one Church. Euen so the Moone both in the full, and in the wane, is al One Moone. Euen so Hierusalem, as well vnder Dauid, as vnder Manasses, was al One City. The Holy place, whether the Maiesty of God, or the Abomination of Desolation stand in it, is all one place. The Primitiue Church, say you, and the Church of Rome, that now is, is all one Church. Therfore we say, the Church of Rome that now is, in Truth and Religion, ought to agree with the Primitiue Church.

The Church in few.

Whether the Church may be brought to a few number, or no, we had occasion somewhat to say before. The Ancient Father Irenæus saith: Quemadmodum ibi in plurimis eorum, qui peccauerunt, non bene sensit Deus: Sic & hic multi sunt vocati: pauci vero electi: As in the Old Testament, in many of them, that offended, God was not pleased: Euen so now in the New Testament many are called, and few are chosen. In consideration whereof, S. Hierome crieth out in an Agony within himselfe: Tanta erit Sanctorum paucitas: So small shall be the number of holy men. One of your owne Doctors saith, as it is alleged once before: Licèt in hoc bello Dæmonum cadant Religiosi Principes, & Milites, & Prælati Ecclesiastici, & Subditi, semper tamen manent aliqui, in quibus seruatur Veritas Fidei, & Iustificatio bonæ conscientiæ. Et si non nisi duo viri Fideles remanerent in mundo, tamen in illis saluaretur Ecclesia, quæ est Vnitas Fidelium. Notwithstanding in this warre of Diuels, both the godly Princes, and Souldiers, and Ecclesiasticall Prelates and Subiects be ouerthrowen, yet euermore there remaine some, in whom the Truth of Faith, and the Righteousnesse of good conscience is preserued. And notwithstanding there were but two Faithfull Men remaining in the World, yet euen in them, the Church of God, which is the Vnitie of the Faithfull, should be saued.

But, for that we say, we were brought vp among you in Darknesse and Ignorance. Ye enter out of season into a needlesse discourse of comparison of Learning. In the Liberall Sciences (ye say) we are not comparable to the Learned men of your side. It was not our meaning, M. Howbeit, touching any kinde of the Liberall and Learned Sciences, there was no great cause why ye should either so highly rowse your selfe in your owne opinion, or so greatly disdaine others. But wherefore I pray you, haue they themselues, the Citizens & dwellers of Rome, remooued & come downe from those Seuen Hilles, whereupon Rome sometime stood, to dwel rather in the Plaine, called the field of Mars? They wil say peraduenture, because the conduits of Water, wherewithout men cannot commodiously liue, haue now failed, & are dried vp in those Hilles. Wel then, let them giue vs like leaue in seeking the Water of Eternal Life, that then giue themselues in seeking the Water of the Well. For that Water verily failed amongst them. The Elders of the Iewes, saith Ieremie, sent their little ones to the Waterings: and they, finding no Water being in miserable case, and vtterly lost for thirst, brought home againe their vessels empty. The needy and poore folk, saith Esay, sought about for Water, but no where found they any: their tongue was euen withered for thirst. Euen so these men haue broken in peeces al the pips & conduits: they haue stopped vp al the springs & choked vp the fountaine of Liuing Water with dirt & mire. And as Caligula, many yeers past, locked vp fast al the garnards & storehouses of corne in Rome, & therby brought a generall dearth & famine amongst the people; euen so these men, by damming vp al the Fountaines of Gods VVord, haue brought the people into a pitifull thirst. some sparke of heauenly light to refresh their consciences withal: but that light was already thorowly quenched out, so that they could finde none. This was a ruful state: This was a lamentable forme of Gods Church. It was a misery to liue therein, without the Gospel, without Light, and without al Comfort.

M. Harding.

Wel and wittily reasoned forsooth. No, no, Sirs, if it were that holesome Water of eternal life which ye thirst after, * ye would neuer haue departed from the high hill, the Catholike Church, and come downe into the vallies, where ye finde the durty puddles of fleshly pleasures, where the Diuel Behemoth, as Iob saith, Dormit in locis humentibus, sleepeth in moist places. Iob 14. All were not statued for hunger and thirst of that water of Gods Word. Therefore ye speake both slanderously, and ignorantly for Diuines, where ye say, that we had broken in peeces al the pipes and conduits, that we had stopped vp all the springs, and choked and damned vp all the Fountaines of Liuing Water with durt and mire.

* Vntruth. For we are not departed from the Catholike Church.

Yet vnwares or ignorantly they call that faithlesse and pagane state a lamentable forme of Gods Church, whereas they should haue accounted it no Church at al. For where is no word of God, no Light, no Gospel at all, how can there be any Church? Without these, any multitude is no more a Church, then without Christ a man is a Christian, then a dead man is a man. And thus with malicious slandering, not with learned reasons, with their owne affirmations, not with apt allegations haue they gone about to proue, that these many hundred yeeres the Church hath erred. But thankes be to God, al this winde shaketh no corne. When al these hasty blasts be blowne ouer, the Church of God shall stand still vnmooued, vpon the Rocke Christ builded it on, and appeare glorious in her stedfastnesse and truth, maugre the gainsaying of all Heretikes, and shall appeare to them terrible, as a strong army set in battel aray. Cantic 6.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here, M. Harding, ye begin out of season to play with your Allegories, and Mystical Fantasies. Your Catholike Church of Rome, you say, is the Mount: worldly pleasure is the Vale. By which comparison we must beleeue, that the Pope and his Cardinals, sitting on high vpon the Mount, passe their time there only in Fasting, and Prayer, and in all manner pouerty, and penury, and straitnesse of life, and haue vtterly abandoned all worldly pleasures. Notwithstanding some haue said: In Cardinalibus Superbia, Auaritia, Luxuria validissimè dominantur: In the Cardinals of Rome, Pride, Auarice, and Lechery are in their greatest Courage. Paralip. Vrspar. in Clement. 5. Howbeit, touching as well this, as other your like Follies concerning the Church, I wil not say, Ye kepe your wont: But I must needs say, Ye do but trifle.

The Apologie, Chap. 13. Diuision. 2.

Departing from the Church of Rome.

Wherefore, though our Departing were a trouble to them, yet ought they to consider withal how iust cause we had of our Departure.

M. Harding.

Indeed our charity is such, as we confesse it to be a griefe vnto vs to see you play the part of rebellious children, to vse presumption for submission, contempt for obedience, spight for loue: yet sith that ye are desperate and incorrigible, as by your departing from vs the Church felt some anguish & trouble, so now that ye are gone, it is releeued as the Body is eased, when after a purgation it hath auoided euil humors. Now say your best.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

We are not gone from the Church of God, M. Harding: we are gone only from you that haue so vnreuerently abused the Church. But ye feele good ease (ye say) and are well releeued by our departure, as (to vse your homely comparisons) a sicke body is releeued by a purgation. God of his mercy grant, that ye may likewise be purged of all the rest of our brethren in other Countries. So shal ye feele more ease, and be better releeued.

S. Hierome saith: Hebræi dicunt, quòd ea nocte qua egressus est Israel ex Ægypto, omnia in Ægypto Templa destructa sunt, siue terræ motu, siue ictu fulminum. Spiritualiter autem dicimus, quòd egredientibus nobis ex Ægypto, errorum Idola corruant, & omnis peruersarum Doctrinarum cultura quatiatur: The Rabines or Hebrew Doctors say, that the same night that Israel departed out of Egypt, all the Idolatrous Temples in Egypt were destroied, either by Earthquake, or by Lightning. But hereof we learne in a Spiritual sense, that when we depart out of Egypt (that is to say, from the company of Idolaters) the Idols of error fal to the ground, and al the honor of false Doctrine is shaken downe. Such releefe, M. Harding, we trust ye shal finde by our departure. Hieron. ad Fabiolum, de 42. Mansionibus, Mansione 1.

Beda expounding these words of the Apocalyps, Come foorth from her, my people, and bee not partakers of her sins, saith thus: Inducit discessionem, quæ est ruina Babylonis: Beda in Apoc. Lib. 3. Cap 18.

lonis: Cùm enim Loth discesserit à Sodomis, Sodomæ fundùs rollentur: S. Iohn speaketh of the departure, which is the ruine and fall of Babylon. For when Loth shall depart out of Sodome, then shall Sodome viterly be ouerthrowne.

Beda in Apoc. Lib. 3. Cap. 19.

Againe hæ saith: Post hæc audiui vocem, Alleluia: Laus, & Gloria, & Virtus Deo nostro: Hæc nunc ex parte dicit Ecclesia. Tunc autem perfectè dicet, cùm discessio facta fuerit: After this I heard a voice, Alleluia: Praise, and Glory, and Power be to our God. This song the Church in part singeth already But then shall she in deed and perfectly sing it, when departure shall be made (from Antichrist, or Babylon.)

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuision 1.

For if they say, It is in no wise lawful for one to leaue the fellowship wherein he hath beene brought vp, they may as well in our names, and vpon our heads, likewise condemne the Prophets, the Apostles, and Christ himselfe. For why complaine they not also of this, that Loth went quite his way out of Sodome, Abraham out of Chaldee, the Israelites out of Egypt, Christ from the Iewes, and Paul from the Pharisеis? For except it be possible there may be a lawful cause of departing, we see no reason why Loth, Abraham, the Israelites, Christ, and Paul, may not be accused of Sects and Seditions as well as others.

M. Harding.

Yet bring yee nothing to the purpose. Your proofes be so weake, and hang so euill together, that we may wel tel you (which Irenæus obiected to Heretikes) that ye make a rope of sand. We say not, it is in no wise lawful for one to leaue the fellowship wherein he hath beene brought vp: But contrariwise, (a) if the fellowship be naught and wicked, euery one is bound to eschew it. Depart from Babylon my people, and be not ye partakers of her sinnes, saith the heauenly voice to S. Iohn. (b) Therefore the examples ye bring, helpe nothing your cause. Apoc. 18.

(a) Thus much confessed is sufficient.

(b) A sudden conclusion.

(c) A vaine folly. For a good man may follow Christ, without presumptuous comparison.

Loth went out of Sodome, Abraham of Chaldea, the Israelites of Egypt, Paul from the Pharisеis, by Gods speciall warning. Where ye say, Christ went from the Iewes, vnlesse ye referre it to his stepping aside from them for a while, ye should rather haue said, the Iewes went from Christ. But whereto pertaineth this? Though yee were so malicious, as to compare the Catholike Church to Sodome, to Chaldea, to Egypt, to the Iewes and Pharisеis; yet, I weene, yee are not so proud, as (c) to compare your selues to Loth, to Abraham to Gods peculiar people, to Paul, to Christ himselfe. These departings we allow, and God required them: yours we blame, and God detesteth.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Example of Christ.

We compare not our selues, M. Harding, neither with Loth, nor with Abraham, nor with Paul; least of all with Christ himselfe. But we humbly submit our selues both in life, and in Doctrine, to be guided by their Examples. And thus, I trust, we may lawfully doe, without iust note of presumption. S. Chrysostome saith: Data est tibi potestas diuinùs imitandi Christum, vt possis illi similis fieri. Noli expauescere hoc audiens. Timendum enim tibi potiùs est, si similis illi fieri negligas: Thou hast power giuen thee from God to follow Christ, that thou maist bee like vnto him. Bee thou not afraid to heare this thing. Thou hast more cause to feare, if thou refuse to be like vnto him. Likewise saith the Ancient Father Origen: Si quem imitari volumus, propositus est nobis Christus ad imitandum: If we desire to follow any man, Christ is set before vs, that we should follow him.

Chrys. in Matth. Homil. 79.

Origen. in Ezechiel. Homil. 7.

But if it be so Proud a part as you say, in Religion and Life to follow Christ, what is hee then that claimeth to himselfe Christs Authority, and calleth himselfe euen by the name of Christ? We know who is wel contented to heare himselfe thus saluted: Touching Primacy, thou art Abel: touching Gouernment, thou art Noe: touching the Patriarkeship, thou art Abraham: touching Order, thou art Melchisedech: touching Dignity, thou art Aaron: touching Authority, thou art Moses: touching Iudgement, thou art Samuel: touching Power, thou art Peter: touching Anointing, thou art Christ. These words, I trow, M. Harding, may somewhat seeme to sauour of Pride. Your Pope is well contented to take the name, not only of Peter, but also of Christ.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuision 2.

And if these men will needs condemne vs for Heretikes, because we doe not all things at their commandement, whom (in Gods Name) or what kinde of men ought they themselues to be taken for, which despise the Commandement of Christ, and of the Apostles?

M. Harding.

M. Harding.

Our frailty concerning life we accuse and lament, and commend our selues to Gods infinite mercy. Touching beleefe and necessary doctrine of Faith, raile ye at vs neuer so much, we neither despise the * Commandements of Christ, nor the * traditions of the Apostles.

Vntruths, notorious and manifest vnto the world.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuision. 3.

If we be Schismaticks because we haue left them, by what name then shal they be called themselues, which haue forsaken the Greekes, from whom they first receiued their Faith, forsaken the Primitiue Church, forsaken Christ himselfe, and the Apostles, euen as if children should forsake their parents:

The Faith broght to Rome out of Græcia.

M. Harding.

Whosoeuer depart from the Catholike Church, they be Schismaticks: ye haue departed from the Catholike Church of (a) these nine hundred yeers: Ergo, ye be Schismaticks. The first proposition ye wil not denie; the second your selues confesse: the conclusion then must needs be true. If we say the same, blame vs not. Neither say we that only, but also that ye are Heretikes. Whereby the measure of your iniquity is encreased. The same crime ye would impute vnto vs, if ye wist how. If ye haue no more to lay to our charge, but that we haue forsaken the Greekes, ye shal not be offended with the world, if it giue vs the title, name and estimation of Catholikes, as heretofore. For (remember your selues) we haue not forsaken the Greekes, but the Greekes in some points haue forsaken vs. By the name of vs alwaies I vnderstand the Catholike Church, euen the Holy Roman Church, whose Faith we professe, & with whom we communicate.

(a) Here M. Har. freely yeeldeth vs the first six hundred & three score yeers, that is to say, the whole time of the Apostles and Holy Fathers of the Church.

(b) And how standeth it with your learning, that we receiued the Faith first from the Greekes? For where ye say, we haue forsaken the Primitiue Church, yea Christ himselfe, and the Apostles ye haue told vs this so often, that now we take them to be but words of course, and a common blast of your raising spirit. The Roman Church receiued the Faith from Ierusalem, (c) and not from Greece, as the rest of the world did, according to the Prophecy, De Sion exibit lex, &c. As for the Land of Britaine, our natiue Country, if the Faith were first brought hither by Ioseph of Arimathæa, and his fellowes, as by old tradition we are told, (d) then was the Church here first planted by faithful Iewes, and not by Greekes. This being true, we maruel what ye meane to charge vs with forsaking the Greekes, specially where ye say, we first receiued the Faith from them. Which is no truer then that we receiued our English Language from them.

Esa. 2.

(b) Read the answer.

(c) Vntruth, as shall soone appeare.

(d) Certainly we receiued not our Faith first from the church of Rome.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

It were no shame for you, M. Harding, to confesse that the Church of Rome first receiued her Faith from the Churches of Græcia. Neither are they so vtterly void of Learning, that haue said the same. Rather I maruel what Learning can lead you so vnlearnedly to say the contrary. S. S. These things, M. Harding, being true, we maruel what should moue you to denie that ye first receiued the Faith from the Church of Græcia. Touching the matter it selfe, it is written thus in your owne Councels: Si Græci per quandam Scissuram diuiduntur à Latinis, ita Latini à Græcis. Et ideo videtur, quòd si Græci debent dici Schismatici propter huiusmodi Diuisionem, eadem ratione & Latini: præterea Græci magis seruant Antiquas Consuetudines Apostolorum, & Discipulorum Christi, in Barbis, &c. If the Greekes by a certaine Diuision be sundred from the Latines, euen so bee the Latines sundred from the Greekes. And therefore it seemeth, if the Greekes in respect of this Diuision ought to be called Schismatikes, that the Latines *also ought so to be called in like case. The Greek Church.

FOr though those Greekes, who this day professe Religion, & the name of Christ, haue many things corrupted amongst them, yet hold they stil a great number of those things which they receiued from the Apostles. They haue neither Priuate Masses, nor mangled Sacraments, nor Purgatories, nor Pardons. And as for the Titles of High Bishops, and those glorious names, they esteeme them so, as whosoeuer he were that would take vpon him the same, and would be called either Vniuersal Bishop, or the Head of the Vniuersal Church, they make no doubt to cal such a one both a passing proud man, and a man that worketh despight against al the other Bishops his Brethren, and a plaine Heretike.

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth. As it shal plainely appeare.

(b) Vntruth, as large as manifest.

(c) Vntruth. For the Grecians neuer receiued these fantasies of Purgatory. O so merily this man plaieth with his fansie!

As ye haue often times belied vs, (a) so now ye belie the poore Greekes. So little are ye able to say some what, and therein to say truth. For they haue Masse commonly without company to communicate with the Priest, which ye cal Priuate Masse So (b) it is al Greece ouer, so is it in Asia, in Syria, in Assyria, in Armenia, & whersoeuer the Religion of Christ is professed: as among the Greekes in Venice I my selfe and diuers of our countrymen haue seene it commonly practised. Likewise pray they all for the dead, & thinke them to be relieued by the praiers, oblations, almes, and deedes of charity done for the by the liuing. Which minde and opinion implieth the Faith (c) which the Church holdeth of Purgatory.

But though (say ye) those Greekes haue many things corrupted, yet hold they stil a great number of those things which they receiued of the Apostles. And wilt thou know, Reader, what they be? Forsooth they haue neither Priuate Masses, nor mangled Sacraments, nor Purgatories, nor Pardones. Is not the wit of this Defender to be commended, that maketh a man to hold that which he hath not? Those Greekes hold stil, saith he. What hold they? Marry they haue not this and that. This is a new kinde of holding, for a man to hold that he hath not. If they hold stil, then haue they stil. But they haue not, saith he. Then how hold they? A man may by the rules of this new Logicke thus reason: The Turkes, Saracens, Iewes, Infidels, Idolaters, yea the sheepe of Cotswold also, if ye will, haue neither Priuate Masses, nor Communion vnder one kinde, nor Purgatories, nor Pardons. Ergo, they hold a number of things which they receiued from the Apostles. The Antecedent is true. Whosoeuer denieth the consequent, must count this Defenders Logicke very simple. What if one should make this Argument; This Defender hath neither good Logicke, nor very fine Rhetoricke, nor profound Philosophy, nor the right knowledge of Diuinity: Ergo, he holdeth many Heresies? Though both the Antecedent and Consequent be true, yet is the argument naught. For by like reason on might conclude an honest valearned Catholike man to be an Heretike, which were false and iniurious. Such is the Logicke, such are the topicks of this new negatiue, and ablatiue Diuinity, for so may we worthily cal it Negatiue, in respect of their blasphemous tongues, denying sundry weighty points of our Faith: Ablatiue, in respect of their wicked hands, casting away, throwing downe, and taking away many good things, pertaining to the maintenance of Christian Religion and Gods honour. Put them from their Negatiues, and from their Ablatiues, then in what case shal they stand?

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

I am ashamed the world should be combred with so childish follies. The Defenders wit (ye say) is to be commended. He maketh a man to hold that he neuer had. And what hold they? (say you) Marry they haue not this and that. This is a new kinde of holding, for a man to hold that he hath not. If they hold stil, then haue they stil. But they haue not: then how hold they? Now surely, M. Harding, I trow, we shal Haue and Hold a mery man. So prety sport ye can make your selfe with Hauing and Holding. It were great pity ye should euer be otherwise occupied. Annibal of Carthage when he had heard Phormio the Orator talke pleasantly a long while together, being afterward demanded what he thought of his Eloquence, made answer in this homely sort: Multos se vidisse deliros senes: sed qui magis quam Phormio deliraret, vidisse neminem.

Cicer de Oratore 2.

But somewhat to yeld vnto your pleasance, why may not a man Hold that he neuer Had, as wel as Lose that he neuer Had? In the Learned Glosses vpon your Decrees ye may may finde this note amongſt others: Nota, quòd aliquis dicitur perdere quod nunquam habuit: Marke well this: A man may be ſaid to Loſe that he neuer Had. And yet yee ſay commonly in the Schooles: Priuatio ſemper præſupponit habitum: The Loſing of a thing alwaies preſuppoſeth the Hauing of the ſame. Or to anſwer you in plainer wiſe, why may not a man as wel Hold nothing, as you may talke ſo much, and yet ſaid nothing? Galene ſaid ſometime to one that ſpake then in ſuch ſubſtantial maner as you ſpeake now, Accipe nihil, & tene fideliter: Take nothing, and keepe it ſafely, and hold it faſt. Dist. 17. Conſil. in Gloſſa. Galenus.

But to leaue your follies and ſilly toies, M. Harding, with your Turkes and Saracens, and Sheepe of Cotſwold; we ſay not, The Grækes Hold ſtill that they neuer Had: but we ſay, They Hold ſtil that they euer Had. Your Priuate Maſſes, and your Dimi Communions they Hold not: for they Had them neuer. The Holy and Whole Communion in Both kindes they Hold ſtill: and ſithence the Apoſtles time they haue had them euer. The Greek Church.

They pray alſo for the dead. and therein (ye ſay) is implied your Faith of purgatorie. I will not here touch the ſimplicitie of your Rhetorike, or Logicke, M. Harding: but onely wish you to haue better regard to your Diuinity. For ought that I can ſee, Praier for the dead, and your fantaſie of Purgatorie, were neuer ſo ſtraitly coupled together, but that they might well and eaſily goe aſunder. The Grecians, as they Pray for the dead, ſo doe they Pray for the Apoſtles, for the Patriarkes, for the Prophets, and for the Bleſſed Virgin our Lady: as you may ſone perceiue by S Baſils and by S. Chryſoſtomes Liturgy. Yet I thinke ye would not haue your Reader beleeue, as an Article of your Faith, that the Apoſtles of Chriſt, the Patriarkes, the Prophets, and the Bleſſed Virgin Chriſts Mother are ſtil in Pugatory. Whatſoeuer other opinion the Grecians haue of the Dead, certaine it is, they could neuer yet be brought to beleeue your Purgatory. Liturgia Baſil. Liturg. Chryſo.

Roſſenſis, one of your greateſt Doctours, as I haue ſaid before, ſaith thus: Purgatorium Græcis vſque ad hunc diem non eſt creditum: The Grecians vntill this day beleeue not Purgatorie. Thus, M. Harding, I know not whether by your Logicke, or by your Diuinity, (for both are maruellous) ye would faine forte your poore Greekes to Hold that thing that they neuer Had. Polydor. de Inuentoribus, lib. 8. cap. 1.

Another proper paſtime ye make your ſelfe with your Negatiues and Ablatiues. And wherefore, it were hard to tell, ſauing that, I ſee, ye were well diſpoſed, and well it became you to be merry. The ancient learned Fathers hauing to deale with impudent Heretikes, that in defenſe of their Errours anouched the Iudgement of all the Old Biſhops and Doctors that had bene before them, and the generall conſent of the Primitiue and whole Vniuerſall Church, and that with as good regard of Truth, and as faithfully, as you doe now, the better to diſcouer the ſhameleſſe boldneſſe and nakedneſſe of their Doctrine, were often times likewiſe forced to vſe the Negatiue, and ſo to driue the ſame Heretikes, as we doe you, to proue their Affirmatiues: which thing to doe it was neuer poſſible. The ancient Father Irenæus thus ſtaied himſelfe, as we doe, by the Negatiue: Hoc neque Propheræ prædicauerunt, neque Dominus docuit, neque Apoſtoli tradiderunt: This thing neither did the Prophets publiſh, nor our Lord teach, nor the Apoſtles deliuer. Iren. lib. 1. ca. 1

By a like Negatiue Chryſoſtome ſaith: Hanc Arborem non Paulus plantauit, non Apollo rigauit, non Deus auxit: This tree (of Errour) neither Paul planted, nor Apollo watred, nor God encreaſed. In like ſort Leo ſaith: Quid opus eſt in cor admittere quod Lex non docuit, quod Prophetia non cecinit, quod Euangelij Veritas non prædicauit, quod Apoſtolica doctrina non tradidit? What needeth it to beleeue that thing that neither the Law hath taught, nor the Prophets haue ſpoken, nor the Goſpell hath preached, nor the Apoſtles haue deliuered? And againe: Quomodo noua inducuntur, quæ nunquam noſtri ſenſere Maiores? How are theſe new deuices brought in that our Fathers neuer knewe? Chryſ. de Incõprehenſ. Dei natura, hom. 3. Leo, Epiſt. 93. Cap. 12. Leo, Epiſt.

S. Auguſtine hauing reckoned vp a great number of the Biſhops of Rome, by a generall Negatiue ſaith thus: In hoc ordine Succeſſionis nullus Donatiſta Epiſcopus inuenitur: In all this order of Succeſſion of Biſhops, there is not one Biſhop found that was a Donatiſt. S. Gregorie being himſelfe a Biſhop of Rome, and writing againſt the Title of Vniuerſal Biſhop, ſaith thus: Nemo Deceſſorum meorum hoc tam prophano vocabulo vti conſenſit: Nullus Romanorum Pontificum hoc ſingularitatis nomen aſſumpſit: None of al my Predeceſſors euer conſented to vſe this vngodly Title: No Biſhop of Rome euer tooke vpõ him this name of Singularity. By ſuch Negatiues, M. Harding, we reproue the Vanitie and Nouelty of your Religion. We tell you, none of the Ancient Catholike learned Fathers, either Greeke, or Latine, euer vſed either your Priuate Maſſe, or your Halfe Communion, or your barbarous Vnknowne praiers. Paul neuer planted them: Apollo neuer watered them: God neuer increaſed them. They are of your ſelues: They are not of God. Aug. epiſt. 165. Gregor. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 76. & 80.

Theſe & other like Negatiues the Holy Fathers in Old times might ſafely vſe without controlement: for that there was no Doctour of Louaine as yet vp ſtart to carpe and quarrel at their Diuinity. Leaue this childish and vnsauoury sporting and trifling with your Negatiues, M. Harding. It were a great deale more seemely for a man of Learning and Grauity, and more to your purpose to proue your Affirmatiues.

Priuate Masse in the Greeke Church.

They haue Priuate Masse (ye say) in all Græcia, Asia, Syria, Assyria, Armenia, and whersoeuer the Religion of Christ is professed. All this we must needs beleeue vpon your word: for other proofe ye offer to make none. Notwithstanding, if they haue such Priuate Masses in all those Countries, tell vs, I beseech you, who were the Authours and Makers of these Masses? Ye will say, S. Iames, S. Chrysostome, or S. Basil. For of these Names and Masses yee haue told vs many a tale. yet if yee consider the matter well, ye shall finde that these selfe same Masses were our Communions, and nothing like to your Masses: and that the Holy Sacraments at the same, contrary to your new deuices, were deliuered generally in Both kindes to all the people.

Liturgia Iacobi. S. Iames in his Masse saith thus: Diaconi tollunt Discos & Calices, ad impertiendum populo: The Deacons take vp the Dishes and the Cups, to minister the Sacrament vnto the people.

Liturgia Chrysostom. S. Chrysostome in his Masse saith thus: Pòst Mysteria feruntur ad locum, vbi populus debet communicare: Afterward the Holy Misteries or Sacraments be brought vnto the place where the people must receiue together.

Liturgia Basilij. S. Basil in his Masse saith thus: Nos omnes de vno Pane & de vno Calice participantes, &c. Cantores cantant Communionem: & sic Communicant Omnes: All we receiuing of One Bread, and One Cup, &c. The Quire singeth the Communion: and so they Communicate All together. Therefore, M. Harding, ye must needs confesse, either that the Grecians this day vse none of these Masses, or that their Masses are not your Masses, but our Communions: which both are contrarie to your selfe.

Georgius Cassander in Liturgijs. In the Armenians Liturgy it is written thus: Qui non sunt digni Communicare hanc Oblationem Dei, exeant foras antè fores Ecclesiæ, & ibi Orent: They that are not worthy to receiue this Oblation of God, let them goe foorth before the Church doore; and there let them pray.

Bessarion, De Sacramen. Eucharistiæ. Circa annum Domini 1450. Of the Grecians order in this behalfe your great and speciall Doctour Cardinall Bessarion, being himselfe a Greeke borne, saith thus: Hoc ipse ordo rerum poscebat: Primùm, Consecrare: Deinde, Frangere: Postea, Distribuere: Quod nos in præsenti facimus: This the very order of the things required: First, that wee should Consecrate or Bhsse the Bread: Next that we should Breake it: Last of all, that we should Diuide it, (or deliuer it to the people.) Which thing we (Grecians) doe at this present day. Thus yousee, M. Harding, that the Grecians this day Consecrate, Breake, and Diuide the Sacrament vnto the people as wee doe. They receiue it not Priuatly to themselues alone, the people standing by, and gazing on them as you doe. Therefore it is vntrue that you say, They haue this day your Priuate Masse.

Touching the Grecians that liue now in Venice, what order they vse there, I cannot tell. Notwithstanding, as I haue heard say, Priuate Masse they haue not. But if they haue, liuing vnder the Popes iurisdiction, it is no maruel. Certaine it is, that Venice is no part of Græcia.

Matt. Illyricus. in Testibus veritatis. pag. 5. Matthias Illyricus, being himselfe borne in Dalmatia, not farre from the Confines or Borders of Græcia, and therefore, as it may be thought, the better acquainted with their Orders, saith thus: Ecclesia Græca, cíque coniunctæ, Asiatica, Macedonica, Mysica, Valachica, Rutenica, Moschouitica, & Aphricana, id est, totus Mundus, vel certè eius maxima pars, nunquam Primatum Papæ communi consensu concesserunt: nunquam Purgatorium probauerunt: nunquam Priuatas Missas: nunquam Communionem sub vna specie: The Church of Græcia, and the Churches of Asia, Macedonia, Mysia, Valachia, Russia, Moschouia, and Aphrica, ioyned thereunto, that is to say, in a maner the whole world, or at least the greatest part thereof, neuer granted the Pope his Supremacy: neuer allowed either Purgatory, or Priuate Masses or the Communion vnder one kinde.

Con Ferrarien. in Præmio. In the Proeme or Entrie of the Councell of Ferraria it is written thus: Proxima Dominica quindecim Græci Sacerdotes, Domi Imperatoris, Iussu eius, Missam solennitèr celebrarunt. Vbi etiam Marchio cum suis Ciuibus adfuit, & Panem Benedictum, per Patriarchæ dextram, more Græcorum, accepit, atque libauit: The next Sunday fifteene Greeke Priests, within the Emperours Palace, by his Commandement, said a Solemne Masse, (or Communion) whereas the Marquis was present with his Citizens, and, as the maner of the Grecians is, receiued and tasted the Bread Consecrate at the hand of the Patriarke. Heere it is to be noted by the way, that these fifteene Priests said not fifteene seuerall Masses, as the maner is in the Church of Rome, but all together one only Masse: and that the same one Masse was no Priuate Ministration, but a Communion. Wherefore Petrus Vrbeueranus saith thus: Tum ad instar Græcorum non cantabatur in vna Ecclesia, nisi forsan vna Missa: Then there was sung in one Church, no more, sauing perchance one only Masse, as the maner of the Grecians is. Petrus Vrbetanus in Vita Dens dedit Papæ.

Likewise saith Durandus. Offerebant magnum Panem & omnibus sufficientem: Quod adhuc Græci seruare dicuntur: They offered vp one great loafe that might suffice al the Church: Which order they say, the Grecians keepe vntill this day. Durand. in Rational. lib. 4.

By these few, I trust M. Harding, it may soone appeare, whether of vs haue belied your poore Grecians.

The Apologie, Chap. 15. Diuision 2.

Now then, since it is manifest, and out of al peraduenture, that these men are fallen from the Greekes, of whom they receiued the Gospell, of whom they receiued the Faith, the True Religion & their Church it self; what is the matter, why they wil not now be called home againe to the same men, as it were, to their Originals & first Founders? And why bee they afraid to take a paterne of the Apostles and Old Fathers times, as though they al had been void of vnderstanding? Do these men, ween ye, see more, or set more by the Church of God then they did, who first deliuered vs these things?

M. Harding.

Soft and faire, Sir Defender, you haue not yet proued that you say is manifest & out of all peraduenture. Remember you not the old homely verse of your Sophistrie: Neque negat minus recte concludere sivis: Speake to the purpose, or else I would you would make an end of your silly follies. For indeed you trifle & say nothing worth to be answered. And here little cause do you minister vnto me, to vtter substantial stuffe. Which I desire the discreet Reader to consider, for mine excuse, that with a trifler I do a so but trifle.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here, M. Harding, by your owne confession, ye doe but trifle with your Filly Follies: for that, I trow, your substantiall and better stuffe was not ready.

The Apology, Chap. 15. Diuision 3.

Indeed, we haue renounced that Church, wherein wee could neither haue the word of God sincerely taught, nor the Sacraments rightly administred, nor the name of God duly called vpon: Which Church also themselues cõfesse to be faulty in many points: and wherin was nothing able to stay any wise man, or one that hath consideration of his own safety.

M. Harding.

And why haue ye renounced this Church, but for that yee might not bee suffered to set forth to the losse of Christian soules the detestable Heresies of Wickleffe, Luther, Zuinglius, Caluine, & other your false Masters, which ye call your sincere word of God, after your Schismaticall and Hereticall maner: That ye say, there was nothing in the Catholike Church able to stay any wise man, or any that hath consideration of his safety, it is one of your impudent lies.

There were both wise men in the Church, and great multitudes of such as had good regard of their soules health, alwaies before the Diuel had such a hand vpon Luther & the rest of your new Apostles and Apostates.

The Apologie, Chap. 15. Diuision. 4.

To conclude, we haue forsaken the Church as it is now, not as it was in Old times past, and haue so gone from it, as Daniel went out of the Lions Den, and the three Children out of the Furnace: and to say the truth, we haue beene cast out by these men, (being curssed of them, as they vse to say, with Booke, Bell & Candle) rather then haue gone away from them of our selues.

M. Harding.

The Church that now is, and the Church that was in old time is one Church, as a man in his old age is the same man he was in his youth. *From the which Church no faults or imperfections can excuse you for your departing. Neither haue ye gone from it as Daniel was deliuered out of the Lions Den, nor as the three Children out of the Furnace: but ye haue departed wilfully from the house of God, where touching Faith, all be of one accord, vnto the Synagogue of Antichrist, vnto Babylon of Sects, where is no order,

* Vntruth. For God himselfe saith: Come foorth from the mids of them, O my people. Apocal 18.

order, but confusion vnto the Kingdome of Satan, and there ye remaine as it were in a den of Lions, where that roaring Lion with his fellowes, lieth in wait seeking whom he may deuoure. Yee haue stopped from the place of Spiritual refrigery, into the frying pan of Schismes & Heresies, & from thence, after that ye haue now boiled and fried in malice and rancour against the Church, except ye repent, ye are like to leape into the Furnace of Hell that for euer shal torment you and neuer consume you. Complaine not of your casting out of the Church. To be excommunicate ye haue deserued. And that kinde of punishment is by a merciful discipline, extended vpon you, partly for your amendment, partly to conserue the rest of the body whole from your pestiferous contagion.

A hot kinde of Diuinity.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Now ye be in to kéepe hot Schooles, M. Harding. Your frying-pans and Furnaces, with your like Kitchin implements of Frying and Boiling, are hot and dangerous to deale withall.

The causes of our departure from you, are answered before.

The Church (ye say) that now is, and the Church that was in Old times, is one Church. Euen so, as I shewed you before, the Moone being full, and the same Moone eclipsed, is one Moone: euen so, a Man wel aduised, and the same Man starke mad, is one Man: euen so the House of God and a Caue of theeues is one house.

Ye haue Excommunicate vs and put vs from you. So did certaine of your Predecessours and Fathers, Excommunicate Christ and his Apostles. So did Diotrephes that first claimed your Papal Primacy, Excommunicate the Faithfull of Christ, that were the First planters of the Gospel. So it is written in the Apocalyps, that Antichrist shall Excommunicate al them that wil not adore the Image of the Beast.

The Apologie, Chap. 15. diuision 5.

And we are come to that Church, wherein they themselus cannot deny (if they wil say truly, and as they thinke in their owne conscience) but al things be gouerned purely and reuerently, & as much as we possibly could, very nere to the order vsed in Old times.

M. Harding.

Ye are come vnto the malignant Church, to the Congregation of Reprobates, whither as into a sinke in maner all the Heresies that Satan euer raised vp from the beginning be auoided.

The Apology, Chap. 16. Diuision 1.

LET them compare our Churches and theirs together, and they shal see, that themselues haue most shamefully gone from the Apostles, & we most iustly haue gone from them. For we, following the Example of Christ, of the Apostles, and the Holy Fathers, giue the people the Holy Communion, whole and perfect: but these men contrary to al the Fathers, to al the Apostles, and contrary to Christ himselfe, doe seuer the Sacraments and pluck away the one part from the people, and that with most notorious Sacrilege, as Gelasius termeth it.

We haue brought againe the Lords Supper vnto Christs Institution, & haue made it a Communion in very deed, cõmon & indifferent to a great number, according to the name. For of that it is called a Communion. But these men haue changed al things, contrary to Christs Institution, and haue made a Priuate Masse of the Holy Communion: And so it commeth to passe, that we giue the Lords Supper vnto the people, and they giue them a vaine Pagent to gaze vpon.

We

We affirme together with the Ancient Fathers, that the Body of Christ is not eaten but of the good & faithful, & of those that are endued with the Spirit of Christ. Their Doctrine is, that Christs very Body Effectually, and as they speake, Really and Substantially, may not only be eaten of the wicked and vnfaithful men, but also (which is monstrous & horrible to be spoken) of Mise and Dogges.

We vse to pray in our Churches, after that fashion, as according to Pauls Lesson, the people may know what we pray, and may answer Amen, with a general consent. These men, like sounding Mettal, yel out in the Churches vnknowne and strange words without vnderstanding, without knowledge, and without deuotion: yea, and doe it of purpose, because the people should vnderstand nothing at al. 1. Cor. 14.

M. Harding.

(a) As comparison cannot duly be made betweene Light and Darkenesse, betweene Truth and Lying, betweene Christ and Belial: so neither betweene the Catholike Church and starting holes of Heretikes. You say much and proone nothing, The most ye haue to crake of, which ye haue neuer done with-al is your ministring of both kindes vnto the people, your new found holy-day, the English Communion, your seruice in the vulgar tongue, and your vile obiection of Mise and Dogs. This is the store-box of M. Iewels high Diuinity, which he maketh no great store of, but shaketh it abroad euery where. To euery point I haue said so much, as is (b) enough to slay the hearts of those that feare God, in mine answer to M. Iewels challenge. To the matter of both kindes, and the obiection made out of Gelasius, in the second Article. To that of Priuate Masse, in the first Article. To al that is said for the Church seruice in the vulgar tongue, in the third Article. To the obiection of Mise, Dogs, and Wormes, in the 23. Article. The same here to rehearse againe; I thinke it needlesse.

But where ye affirme the Body of Christ not to be eaten, but of the good & faithful only, if ye meane the Sacramental eating, so as it is eaten vnder the Sacrament, in the visible forme of Bread and Wine, and not of the (c) spiritual eating only, that is false. In that ye say the Fathers be on your side, meaning the (c) Sacramental eating, ye belie them And so likewise reporting our Doctrine to be, that wicked & vnfaithful men may eat the Body of (c) Christ effectually, ye belie vs. We teach that the euil may eat the Body of Christ Really, that is, indeed, but not effectually. They only eat effectually, who eating it worthily obtaine the effect of Christs Body. Which is the vnity of the mystical Body of Christ & increase of grace. (d) There is verily (saith S. Gregory) in sinners, and in them which receiue vnworthily the true Flesh of Christ and his true Blood, sed essentia, non salubri efficientia, but in substance, not in holesome effect.

Greg. Dialog. lib. 4.

That euil men receiue the true Body of Christ Sacramentally no lesse then good, where I might alege in maner all the Old Fathers, (e) S. Augustine onely may suffice, who affirmeth the same, speaking thus of Iudas: Tolerat ipse Dominus Iudam, Diabolum, Furem, & venditorem suum finit accipere inter innocentes Discipulos, quod norunt fideles, pretium nostrum. Our Lord himselfe doth tolerate Iudas and suffereth a Diuel, a Theefe, and him that sold him, to receiue amongst his innocent Disciples (f) our price which the Faithful do know. But what need any man to require the testimonies of Fathers, sith Paul teacheth vs so to beleeue? Whosoeuer (saith he) eateth this Bread and drinketh of the Cup of our Lord vnworthily, he shal be guilty of the Body and Blood of our Lord.

1. Cor. 11.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

There is no better comparison to be made, M. Harding, then betweene Light and Darkenesse: Truth and Falshood: Christ and Belial. For one of these contraries doth euermore bewray the other. And therefore Christ saith: He that doth ill hateth the Light, and commeth not to it, lest his euil doings should be espied. And this is it, M. Harding, that you so carefully kéepe the people from the Light of Gods Word, lest by comparison thereof, they should begin to loath your Darkenesse. Pliny saith: Tritico reperto, continuò damnatum est Hordeum, & quadrupedum refectibus traditum: As soone as Wheat was once found (by comparison thereof) straightway Barly was refused and giuen to cattel to feed vpon.

Tertullian saith: Ipsa Doctrina Hæreticorum cum Apostolica comparata, ex diuersitate & contrarietate sua pronuntiabit, neque Apostoli alicuius Authoris esse, neque Apostolici Viri: The very Doctrine of Heretikes compared together with the Apostles Doctrine, euen by the diuersity and contrariety that is in it, beareth witnesse of it selfe, that it neuer came, neither from any Apostle of Christ, nor from any Apostolike man.

(f) Our price, he meaneth the Sacrament of our price.

For

Ælius Lampridius. For that they ſaid, if the Chriſtians might haue but one Church within the City, the whole people would all become Chriſtians: and by compariſon thereof, their Idols Churches ſhould be forſaken. Reſtore you the Holy Communion, M. Harding, and ye ſhal ſee your Maſſes and

1. Regum 5. Hier. ad Algaſiam Quæ. 11. Mockeries ſone fal to ground, as did the Idol Dagon at the preſence of the Arke of God. S. Hierome ſaith: Mendacium Antichriſti, Chriſti veritas deuorabit: The Truth of Chriſt ſhal deuour and conſume the lying of Antichriſt.

Touching the Shaking out of Store-boxes, ye had no great cauſe to complaine. For there is not one of al theſe matters not only of Priuate Maſſe excepted, that hitherto thorowout this Apologie, hath, to my remembrance, bene touched or mentioned many times once. But it is a ſmal matter, M. Harding, that may ſuffice you to make a quarel.

Infidels, Dogs, Miſe.

That Miſe and Dogs may eat the very Natural Body of Chriſt, and that Really, Subſtantially, and indeed: it is your Doctrine, it is not ours. For we vtterly abhorre it and deſie it, as moſt deteſtable and lothſome villany.

I maruel not to heare you ſay, that wicked Creatures and Faithleſſe Infidels may eat Chriſts Body, ſeing ye doubt not to auouch the ſame of Bruit Beaſts and Dumbe Cattel.

Auguſt. in Iob. Tract. 26. Yet S. Auguſtine ſaith: Hoc eſt Manducare illam Eſcam, & illum Potum Bibere, in Chriſto manere, & illum manentem in ſe habere: This is the Eating of that Meat, & the Drinking of that Drinke, for a man to dwel in Chriſt, and to haue Chriſt dwelling within him. Euen ſo Iohan 6. ſaith Chriſt himſelfe: He that Eateth my Fleſh and Drinketh my Blood (is neither wicked Creature nor Faithleſſe Infidel, nor Dogge, nor Mouſe, but) dwelleth in me, and I in him.

Aug. epiſt. 162 But S Auguſtine ſaith: Iudas accepit pretium noſtrum: Iudas receiued our price, which, by your expoſition, can be none other, but the Body of Chriſt. M. Harding, ye ſhould not thus haue mocked the world with this authority of S. Auguſtine. You your ſelfe know, ye deale not plainely: you your ſelfe know, that S. Auguſtine by theſe words (Our Price)

Chryſ. ad Hebræ. homil. 16. meant only the Sacrament of our Price. So Chryſoſtome ſaith: Baptiſma Chriſti, Sanguis Chriſti eſt: The Baptiſme of Chriſt, is the Blood of Chriſt. Not for that it is ſo indeed, but for that it is a Sacrament of the Blood of Chriſt. Euen ſo is it noted, in your owne Decrees:

De Conſ. diſt. 2. Hoc eſt. Ipſa immolatio Carnis Chriſti, quæ Sacerdotis manibus fit, Vocatur Chriſti Paſſio, Mors, Crucifixio: Non Rei Veritate ſed Significante Myſterio: The Oblation of the Fleſh of Chriſt, that is wrought with the Prieſts handes, is called the Paſſion, the Death, and the Crucifying of Chriſt: not in Truth of matter, but in a Myſtery ſignifying. This expoſition ye may not wel refuſe: It is S. Auguſtines, it is your owne. Hereof we haue ſpoken otherwheres more at large. But to put the matter out of doubt, that it may appeare in what ſenſe Iudas receiued the price of Chriſts Death, S. Auguſtine himſelfe thereof ſaith thus:

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 3. Chriſtus adhibuit Iudam ad conuiuium, in quo Corporis & Sanguinis ſui Figuram Diſcipulis ſuis commendauit & tradidit: Chriſt receiued Iudas vnto his banket, whereat he gaue to his Diſciples the Figure of his Body and Blood.

The Booke, that ye allege in the name of S. Gregory, is vaine and Childiſh, as you know, and full of fables, and not S. Gregories.

1. Cor. 11. But S Paul ſaith: Whoſoeuer Eateth of this Bread, and Drinketh of the Cup of our Lord vnworthily, he ſhal be guilty of the Body and Blood of our Lord. And what wil you conclude

Auguſt. contra Creſconium, li. 1 cap. 23. hereof, M. Harding? Euen ſo S. Auguſtine writeth of the Water of Baptiſme: Baptiſmus valet, alijs ad Regnum: alijs ad Iudicium: Baptiſme is auaileable to ſome vnto the Kingdome of God: to ſome vnto Iudgement Againe he ſaith: Baptiſmum multi habent, non Auguſt. contra Creſconium, li. 2. cap. 13. ad Vitam Æternam, ſed ad Pœnam Æternam, non bene vtentes tanto bono: Some haue Baptiſme, not to Life Euerlaſting, but to Paine Euerlaſting, not wel vſing ſo good a thing.

Tertull. de Baptiſma. Likewiſe ſaith Tertullian: Si qui pondus intelligant Baptiſmi, magis timebunt conſecutionem, quam dilationem: They that vnderſtand the weight of Baptiſme, will feare more the getting of it, then the delaying.

Yet ye erpreſſe the matter further: S. Paul ſaith: Who ſo eateth vnworthily of this Bread, is guilty of the Body & Blood of Chriſt: Ergo (ſay you) Chriſts Body and Blood muſt needs be Really Preſent. Here, M. Harding, it were a worthy matter, to ſee, by what engins ye would proue theſe haſty concluſions, or how ye would force this Guilt and this Preſence to goe together. For thinke you, that no man can be guilty of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, but he that hath Chriſts Body and Blood Reallie preſent in his hand? Verily, S. Auguſtine

Aug. de Tempore, Serm. 20. ſaith: Reus erit, non parui pretij, ſed Sanguinis Chriſti, qui violat, & commaculat Animam, Chriſti Sanguine, & Paſſione mundatam: Hee is Guilty of no ſmall price, but euen of the Blood of Chriſt, that (by Fornication or Aduoutery) defileth his owne Soule that was made cleane by the Paſſion and Blood of Chriſt. Yet hath he not therefore Chriſts Athanaſ. de Paſſione, & Cruce Domini. Blood Really Preſent.

Athanaſius ſaith: Adorantes Dominum, neque ita, vt dignum eſt eo viuentes, non ſentiunt ſe reos fieri Dominicæ Mortis: Worſhipping our Lord, and not liuing ſo as is meet for our

Lord,

Lord, they feele not, that thereby they are made Guilty of our Lords death. So saith God by the Prophet Ezechiel, I will require the Blood of the people at thy hand. Ezech. 33.

Christ saith: God shall require of you the Blood of the Prophets, that hath beene shed from the beginning of the World. Luke 11.

This Guilt, M. Harding, may wel stand without any Real Presence of the Blood either of Christ, or of the Prophets. Ye may wel be Guilty of Christs, and the Prophets Blood, notwithstanding yee haue neither the one, or the other Really Present in your hand.

Guilty of the Body and Blood &c.

This therefore is S. Pauls meaning, that the wicked resorting unworthily to the Holy Mysteries, and hauing no regard what is meant thereby, despise the Death and Crosse of Christ, and therefore are Guilty of the Lords Body & Blood, that are represented in the Sacrament.

Chrysostome saith, as he is alleged in the second Councel of Nice: Is qui Imaginem Imperatoris violat, in prototypum Dignitatis iniustus est: He that defileth the Emperors Image, is iniurious to the Maiesty of the Emperours person, that is portraied in the Image. Concil. Nicen. 2. Act. 6.

S. Cyprian saith: Impijs in Morte Christi nullus superest quæstus: sed iustissimè eos beneficia neglecta condemnant: The wicked haue no gaine by the death of Christ, but the benefits that they haue despised, do most iustly condemne them. Cypr. de Ablutione pedum.

To come nere to the purpose, S. Augustine saith: Habent Foris Sacramentum Corporis Christi: sed Rem ipsam non tenent intus, cuius est illud Sacramentum. Et ideò sibi iudicium manducant & bibunt: Outwardly they haue the Sacrament of Christs Body: but the thing it self (which is Christs Body represented by the Sacrament) inwardly in their hearts they haue not. And therefore they Eat and Drinke their owne iudgement. Here S. Augustine saith, they are Guilty not because they receiue, but because they receiue not the Body of Christ. Marke well these words, M. Harding: They are effectual. The wicked by S. Augustines iudgement are Guilty, Not because they receiue, but because they receiue not the Body of Christ. Aug. ad Bonif. epist. 50.

Againe he saith: Qui non manet in Christo, & in quo non manet Christus, procul dubio non Manducat Spiritualiter Carnem eius, nec Bibit eius Sanguinem: licèt Carnaliter & Visibiliter premat dentibus Sacramentum Corporis & Sanguinis Christi: Sed magis tantæ rei Sacramentum ad Iudicium sibi Manducat & Bibit: Who so abideth not in Christ, nor Christ in him, out of doubt he eateth not Spiritually his Flesh, nor Drinketh his Blood: notwithstanding Carnally (that is to say, with the Bodily Mouth) and Visibly he doe presse with his teeth the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ: And rather eateth and drinketh (not Christs very Body and Blood, but) the Sacrament of so great a thing vnto his iudgment. These words M. Harding, be so plaine, that I cannot imagine what we should more desire. They are Guilty of the Blood of Christ, for that they despise the price, wherewith they were saued, not for that they receiue it Really into their mouthes. Augustin. in Ioh. Tract. 26.

So S. Augustine saith againe: Reus erit Æternæ Mortis, quia vilem in se habuit Sanguinem Redemptoris: The Aduouterer is Guilty of Euerlasting Death, because he despised in himselfe the Blood of our Sauiour. Aug. De Tempore, Serm. 120

The Distinction, that you imagine betweene Real Receiuing in the wicked, and Effectual Receiuing in the godly, as it is onely of your selfe, without the authority of any Doctour Greeke or Latine, so is it nothing else, but a very Effectual and Real folly. For the very Body of Christ, if it be not Effectually receiued, is not receiued. Christ himselfe saith: He that eateth me, shal liue by me: S. Ambrose saith: Hic panis est remissio peccatorum, Qui accipit non moritur morte peccatoris: This Bread is the Remission of Sins. He that receiueth it, shal not die the death of a Sinner. Ambros. de Benedict. Patriarch cap. 6.

S. Augustine saith: Qui non sumit hanc Escam, non habet Vitam: & qui eam sumit, habet vitam, & hanc vtique Æternam: He that receiueth not this Meat hath no Life: and he that receiueth the same, hath Life, and that Euerlasting. Augustin. in Ioh. Tract. 26.

Likewise againe he saith: Huius rei Sacramentum in Mensa Dominica præparatur & de Mensa Dominica sumitur: quibusdam ad vitam, quibusdam ad exitium: Res verò ipsa, cuius est Sacramentum, omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium, quicunque eius particeps fuerit: The Sacrament hereof is prepared vpon the Lords Table, and from the Lords Table is receiued: to some vnto Life, to some vnto destruction. But the thing it selfe (that is, the Body of Christ) whereof it is a Sacrament, is receiued of all men to life, and of no man to destruction, whosoeuer shal be partaker of it. You may not negligently passe ouer these words, M. Harding. S. Augustine saith plainely: The thing it selfe that is presented by the Sacrament (that is to say, the very body of Christ) is receiued of al men to Life, and of no man to destruction, whosoeuer shalbe partaker of it. Wherof you must nedes conclude against your selfe, That the wicked receiue not the Body of Christ. Augustin. eodem loco.

The

The Scriptures in the vulgar tongues.

The Apologie, Chap. 16. diuision, 2.

But, not to tarry about rehearsing all points, wherein we and they differ, for they haue wel nigh no end, we turne the Scriptures into all tongues: they scant suffer them to be had abroad in any tongue.

M. Harding.

(a) This is nothing, but open mockery. (b) Vntruth, too fond for a child. For there was neuer such order taken by the gouernours of the Church.

We (a) gladly suffer them to be had in euery place of Christendome in the learned tongues, Hebrew, Greeke and Latine (to be read of the vulgar Vnlearned people.) Neither were they altogether forbidden to be had in some vulgar tongues, before the saucy malapertnesse of Heretikes forced the gouernours of the Church, for sauegard of the people (b) to take other orders.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Ye can vouchsafe to allow the Scriptures in the three Learned Tongues, Greeke, Hebrew, and Latine: that is to say, in such sort as the simple people may in no wise touch them. But where did God euer sanctifie these three tongues and call them Learned: Or where were they euer so specially Canonized and allowed, aboue all other tongues, to the custody of the Scriptures?

Aug. epist. 48. S. Augustine saith: Scriptura Canonica tot Linguarum Literis, & Ordine, & Successione Celebrationis Ecclesiasticæ custoditur. The Canonical Scriptures is kept in the Letters of so many tongues, and by the order and succession of Ecclesiastical publishing. Againe he saith: Aug de doctrina Christiani. lib. 2. cap. 5. Scriptura Diuina ab vna Lingua profecta, per varias interpretum Linguas, longè latéque diffusa, innotuit Gentibus ad Salutem: The holy Scriptures, passing from one tongue, & being published abroad, far and wide, (not onely by three Learned tongues, but also) by sundry Tongues of Interpreters, haue come to the knowledge of Nations & People to their Saluation. Againe he saith: August. in Psal. 105. Habemus Dei beneficium, qui Scripturas suas in multis Linguis esse voluit: We haue the benefit of God that would haue his Scriptures to be (not only in Three, but) in many Tongues. Chrys. in Iob. homil. 1. S. Chrysostome saith: Syri, Ægyptij, Indi, Persæ, Æthiopes, & innumeræ aliæ Gentes, Dogmata ab hoc introducta, in suam transferentes Linguam hominis Barbari, Philosophari didicerunt: The Syrians, the Ægyptians, the Indians, the Persians, the Æthiopians, and other Nations innumerable, translating into their owne Tongues the Doctrin that they had receiued of S. Iohn, being barbarous people, endeuored themselues to learne wisdome. S. Hierome saith: Hieronym in Psalm. 86. Scriptura Sancta populis omnibus legitur, vt omnes intelligant: The Holy Scripture is read to al Nations, that al may vnderstand it. It were hard to say, that al the Nations of the World read, or heard the Scriptures in Greeke, Hebrew, or Latine, to the intent they might the better vnderstand it. If these authorities séeme not plaine and sufficient, Theodoretus saith further: Theod. De corrigend. Græcorum affect. li. 5. Hebraici Libri, non modò in Græcum idioma conuersi sunt, sed in Romanam quoque Linguam, Ægyptiam, Persicam, Indicam, Armenicam, & Schythicam, atque ad ò Sauromaticam: semelque vt dicam, in Linguas omnes, quibus ad hanc diem Nationes vtuntur: The Hebrew Bookes of the Scriptures are translated, not only into the Greeke or Latine Tongue, but also into the tongues of Ægypt, Persia, India, Armenia, Scythia and Sarmatia: and, to be short, into al the tongues, that vntil this day are vsed in the world. This, I trow, is somewhat more then Greeke, Hebrew, and Latine.

The Apologie, Chap. 16. Diuision 3.

We allure the people to read, and to heare Gods word, they driue the people from it.

M Harding.

*A mockery. For many heare not one sermon in twenty yeeres.

Ye allure the people busily to heare and read the Scriptures for euill purpose. And thereby ye haue filled their hearts, whom ye haue deceiued with pride, so as they think themselues able to iudge of the highest questions that be in Diuinity. We keepe the people so far as we can for you from heresies and require them rather to be hearers, then iudges, and to learne necessary knowledge of Gods Word at holesome and godly Sermons.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

We teach not the people to presume of Knowledge, as you teach them to presume of Ignorance: But only we exhort them for the better satisfaction of their consciences, to read the Scriptures, and therein to learne the good will of God. And notwithstanding ye may not allow them to be Iudges, that is to say, to discerne betweene the Light of God, and your Darknesse, yet ye might suffer them to picke out some small crummes that fall from the Lords Table. Howbeit Socrates saith: Apol. Socrat. The simple vnlearned people, in cases of Truth,

Truth, indeth oftentimes more vprightly then the deepeſt Philoſophers. Likewiſe Chriſt ſaith: I thanke thee, O Father, for that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and politicke, and haſt opened the ſame to little babes. Matthæ. 11.

But ye will ſay: The Scriptures are hard, and aboue the reach of the people. Euen ſo ſaid the Pelagian Heretike Iulianus. And therefore S. Auguſtine thus reproueth him for the ſame: Exaggeras quàm ſit difficilis, pauciſque conueniens eruditis, Sanctarum cognitio Literarum: Ye exlarge and lay out with many words, how hard a matter the knowledge of the Scripture is, and meet only for a few learned men. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Scripturæ & Seruo, & Ruſtico, & Viduæ, & Puero, & illi qui valdè imprudens eſſe videatur, faciles ſunt ad intelligendum: The Scriptures are eaſie to the Slaue, to the Husbandman, to the Widow, to the Child: and to him that may ſeeme to be very ſimple of vnderſtanding. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Modus ipſe dicendi quo Sacra Scriptura contexitur, &c. quaſi amicus familiaris, ſine fuco ad cor loquitur indoctorum, atque doctorum: The phraſe or maner of ſpeech wherein the Scriptures are written, &c. ſpeaketh without colour, as a familiar friend, vnto the heart, as well of the Vnlearned, as of the Learned. S. Cyril ſaith: Scripturæ, vt omnibus eſſent notæ, paruis & magnis vtiliter familiari ſermone commendatæ ſunt, ita vt nullius captum tranſcendant: The Scriptures, that they might be eaſie to all men, as well ſmall as great, are profitably ſet abroad in familiar ſpeech, ſo that they ouer-reach no mans capacitie. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Sunt quidam homines, qui cùm audierint, quòd debent eſſe humiles, nihil volunt diſcere: putantes, quòd ſi aliquid didicerint, ſuperbi erunt, &c. Hos reprehendit Scriptura: Some men, when they heare ſay they muſt be lowly, will learne nothing: thinking that if they learne any thing they ſhall be proud. But theſe are reproued by the Scriptures. Likewiſe againe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ipſa ignorantia in illis qui intelligere noluerunt, ſine dubitatione peccatum eſt: In eis autem qui non potuerunt, eſt pœna peccati. Ergo in vtriſque non eſt excuſatio: ſed iuſta damnatio: *Ignorance in them that would not vnderſtand, without doubt is ſinne: But in them that could not vnderſtand, it is the puniſhment of ſinne. The Apologie, Chap. 16. Diuiſion. 4.

We deſire to haue our cauſe knowen to all the world: they flee to come to any triall.

M. Harding.

Then why came ye not to the *chiefe and moſt lawful Conſiſtory of the world, the late generall Councel at Trent? What trial ſhould we come vnto. Our Doctrine hath had too high a Teacher, to be tried by men now. It hath beene approoued too long, to be put in daying in theſe daies, at the latter end of the World.

*A worthy Councell of forty Biſhops, ſuch as they were, in the time of Paulus the Third.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

That we made not our appearance at your late Chapter at Trident, ye haue alreadie made our excuſe. The iourney was too long to be taken in vaine. Ye ſay: your Doctrine, be it right, be it wrong, may not now be tried, nor put in daying. So ſaid ſometime the old Donatian Heretikes vnto S. Auguſtine: Diſputare nolumus; & Baptizare volumus: Diſpute we will not: but (continue in our error, and) Baptize we will. Aug. epiſt. 169.

The Apology, Chap. 16. Diuiſion 5.

We leane vnto Knowledge: they vnto Ignorance: We truſt vnto Light: they vnto Darkeneſſe:

M. Harding.

Ye leane to the fauour of ſeculiar Princes, whom by flatterie and Hereſie ye may deceiue. Crake not of your great knowledge, nor of your light. Woe be to them, crieth our Lord in Eſay, that ſay good is euill, and euill is good; that put light for darkneſſe, and darknes for light. Your demeanor is ſo euill, your Doctrine ſo falſe, your tongue ſo railing, that we take your word for no ſlander.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

We flatter our Princes, M. Harding, as Nathan flattered King David: as Iohn Baptiſt flattered Herod: as S. with you, and with your Religion. We yeeld to the King that is due to the King. We yæld to God that is due to God. Wæ say to the Prince as S. Ambrose sometime said to the Emperour Valentinian: Noli te grauare, Imperator, vt putes te in ea quæ diuina sunt Imperiale aliquod ius habere: Trouble not your selfe, my Lord, to thinke that you haue any Princely Power ouer those things that pertaine to God.

But if they be flatterers, that humbly aduertise and direct their Liege Princes by the Word of God, what are they then that say as you say, Totus Mundus non potest accusare Papam: Nemo potest dicere Papæ, Domine, cur ita facis: Sacrilegij instar esset, disputare de facto Papæ: Dominus Deus noster Papa: Papa potest quasi omnia facere quæ potest Deus? The whole world may not accuse the Pope: No man may say to the Pope, Sir, why doe ye thus: It were a sinne as bad as Sacrilege, to dispute of any the Popes doings: Our Lord God the Pope: The Pope may doe in a maner what soeuer God may doe? These, these, M. Harding, and a thousand other your like speeches, may seeme somewhat to smell of flatteries.

The Apologie, Chap. 16. Diuision. 6. and 7.

We reuerence, as it becommeth vs, the Writings of the Apostles and Prophets: and they burnt them.

Finally, we in Gods cause desire to stand to Gods onely iudgement: They will stand onely to their owne.

M. Harding

Whatsoeuer ye pretend, the cause ye haue taken in hand to defend, is not Gods cause, neither is this stirre which ye make in the world, for Christs sake. Luther himselfe, when at a disputation with Doctor Eckius, inflamed with anger, & passing the bounds of modestie, was admonished of certaine, forasmuch as it was Gods cause that was treated, to handle the matter more soberly, & with the spirit of softnesse. he brake out into these words, Non propter Deum hæc res cæpta est, nec propter Deum finietur: This matter is not begun for Gods sake, neither for Gods sake shal it be ended. Therefore speake no more to vs of Gods cause. There be other causes that moue you to doe as ye doe.

Vntruth, stãding in open and wilfull corruption.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Luther (ye say) in disputation was inflamed with anger, and passed the bounds of modestie. No doubt, M. Harding, if he had had some part of your sobriety and modesty, he might haue done a great deale better. Touching the matter, being zealously moued with the iniquity and wicked wilfulnesse of his Aduersaries, he vttered these words, not of himselfe but of Eckius, that disputed against him: Eckius and his fellowes neuer began this matter for Gods sake, nor for Gods sake will they end it. For he saw they had begun, and were bent to end it against God, as being inflamed with ambition and malice, and procured and hired by the Pope. These words Luther spake of Eckius his Aduersary, and not of himselfe. Euen so, M. Harding, may we also truely say, You and your fellowes haue not begun these your Contentious Vanities for Gods sake: nor for Gods sake will you end them.

Iacob Andreæ contra Hosium, Pag. 352.

The Apologie, Chap. 16. Diuision. 8.

Wherefore, if they wil weigh all these things with a quiet minde, and fully bent to heare, and to learne, they will not only allow this Determination of ours, who haue forsaken Errours, and followed Christ and his Apostles, but themselues also will forsake their owne selues, and ioine of their owne accord to our side, to goe with vs.

Here endeth the Fifth Part.

THE

THE SIXTH PART.

The Apology, Chap. 1. Diuision 1.

BVT peraduenture they will say it was Treason to attempt these matters without a sacred Generall Councell: for that therein consisteth the whole force of the Church: there Christ hath promised he will euer be a present Assistant. Yet they themselues, without tarrying for any Generall Councell, haue broken the Commandements of God, and the Decrees of the Apostles and, as we said a little aboue, they haue spoiled & disanulled almost al, not only the Ordinances, but euen the Doctrine of the Primitiue Church. And where they say, It is not lawful to make a change without a Councell, what was he that gaue vs these Lawes, or from whence had they this Iniunction?

To take Counsell of men.

M. Harding

If generall Councels continue in that estimation & Authority they haue euer had, their priuate conspiracies & false conueiances in corners be like to be dashed. Now mickesh forth their Secretary, who thinketh himself a freth souldier in Rhetorick, & giueth the onset vpon vs with a blind peraduenture. But sir, whatsoeuer you imagine vs to say, touching a Generall Councell, wee are not so simple, as to grant (which you peraduenture seeme to surmise of vs) that your Heretical & most vngodly matters, which you speak of, might without blame be attempted by licence of any Councell. Such wicked changes in Religion as ye haue made, neither is it lawful to make with a Councell, nor without a Councell.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuision 2.

Indeed king Agesilaus did but fondly in this behalf, who when he had a determinate answer made him of the opinion & will of mighty Iupiter, would afterward bring the whole matter before Apollo, to know whether he would allow thereof, as his Father Iupiter had done, or no. But yet should we do much more fondly, when we heare God himselfe plainly speake to vs in his most holy Scriptures, & may vnderstand by them his will and meaning, if we would afterward (as though this were of none effect) bring our whole cause to be tried by a Councell: which were nothing else, but to aske whether men would allow as God did, and whether men would confirme Gods Commandement by their Authority.

M. Harding.

Forasmuch as the Scriptures, wherein God speaketh vnto vs, be in sundry places not most open and plaine to (a) humane sences, and many by mistaking them be deceiued, were it not well done of you, for the more surety and better vnderstanding of that ye goe about, I meane in matters concerning Religion, to follow the iudgement of the Catholike Church represented in Generall Councels? Yet wee say boldly, that surer it is in points of Faith to leane to the (b) exposition of the Fathers agreeing together, and to follow the tradition of the Church, then to trust to your selues, or to the letter of the Scriptures scanned only by our owne wits. For the Church is promised to be led into all Truth by the Holy Ghost. Ye cannot say any such promise hath been made to your particular company. Therefore it were not fondly done, as ye say, but wisely, say we, if ye tried and examined your Doctrine, which ye pretend to be according vnto the Scriptures, by the (c) rule of Ecclesiasticall Tradition, which is the chiefe rule to try euery doctrine by.

(a) vaine follie. For what haue humane or naturall senses to doe with the sense of God?

(b) The Expositions of the Fathers very seldome agree together: yet are they for the most part contrary to the Church of Rome.

(c) The Traditions now vsed in the Roman Church are commonlie contrarie to the Traditiõs of the ancient learned Fathers. Therefore this Rule is deceitfull.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

We neuer despised the iudgement of the Learned and Holy Fathers, but rather take them, and embrace them, as the Witnesses of Gods Truth. And therein we finde you the more blame worthy, M. Harding, for that, hauing without cause renounced the iudge-ment and orders of the Primitiue Church, and Ancient Fathers, as to the wise and learned it may some appeare, yet nevertheless ye evermore make vaunt of your Antiquitie, and fray the world with a visard of the Church, and a shew of Old Fathers: as if a poore Sommoner, that had lost his Commission, would serue Citations by the vertue of his empty bor. And thus haue ye set all your vaine fantasies in place of Gods Church, and your Church in place of God; as by the words and witnesse of your owne fellowes I haue before shewed more at large. For example, Cardinall Cusanus saith: Nulla sunt Christi Præcepta, nisi quæ per Ecclesiam pro talibus accepta sunt: The Commandements of Christ are no Commandements, vnlesse they be so allowed by the Church.

Part. 5. Cap. 10. Diuis. 2. Nicol. Cusan. ad Bohemos, Epist. 2.

Thus ye leaue Iuppiter, and run to Apollo: or rather, ye forsake God, and seeke to Man: and as it is written in the Prophet Ieremie, Ye leaue the Fountaine of the Water of Life, and rip vp broken and filthy Cesterns, that can hold no Water. Tertullian thus vpbraideth the Heathens: Apud vos de humano arbitratu Diuinitas pensitatur: Among you the right of God is weighed by the iudgement of men.

Ieremie. 2.

Tertul. in Apologetico.

But Clemens Alexandrinus saith: Quoniam ipsum Verbum ad nos venit de Cœlo, non est nobis ampliùs eundum ad Humanam Doctrinam: Forsomuch as the Word it selfe (that is, Christ) is come to vs from Heauen, we may not now any more seeke vnto the Doctrine of Man. Likewise S. Chrysostome saith: Fuisset extremæ absurditatis eum qui edoctus fuerat à Deo, postea cum hominibus communicare: It had been great folly for S. Paul, hauing receiued his Doctrine from God himselfe, afterward to conferre thereof with men, that is to say, with Peter, or Iames, or with any others.

Clemens Alexandr. in Oration. ad Gentes. Chrys. in Epist. ad Galat. ca. 1.

The Apologie, Chap. 1. Diuision, 3.

Why, I beseech you, except a Councell wil & command, shal not Truth be Truth, or God be God? If Christ had meant to doe so from the beginning, as that he would preach or teach nothing without the Bishops consent, but referr al his Doctrine ouer to Annas and Caiaphas, where should now haue bin the Christian Faith? Or, who at any time should haue heard the Gospel taught: Peter verily, whom the Pope hath oftener in his mouth and more reuerently vseth to speake of, then he doth of Iesus Christ, did boldly stand against the Holy Councel, saying, It is better to obey God, then Men. And after that Paul had once entirely imbraced the Gospell, & had receiued it, not from men, nor by man, but by the only Will of God, he did not take aduice therein of Flesh and Blood, nor brought his case before his kinsmen and brethren, but went forthwith into Arabia, to preach Gods Diuine Mysteries by Gods only Authority.

M. Harding.

We preach against your follies and fantasies, & not against the Doctrine of the Church.

If you occupie a flute no better, by my read you shal giue ouer your piping & flouting. Truth is truth, & God is God, whether any Councel wil or nil. Marry as for the Truth, and for God, euery Councel lawfully assembled hath will, so against the Truth, and against God, it hath no nil. When ye proue vnto vs, that ye are speciallie called, as Paul was, and haue a special Commission * to preach against the Doctrine of the Church, as he had against the wicked Iewes, then a Gods name take no aduice of any man, but forthwith preach and crie out so loud as ye list, so that ye goe into Arabia, as S. Paul did, or where else soeuer ye wil. For euetie good man would be loth England should be troubled with you.

The Apologie, Chap. 2. Diuision 1.

YEt truly we doe not despise Councels, Assemblies, and conferences of Bishops, and learned men: neither haue we done that we haue done altogether without Bishops, or without a Councell. The matter hath beene treated in open Parliament, with long consultation, and before a notable Synod and Conuocation.

M. Harding.

Either your tongue agreeth not with your heart, or else I wil proue the contratie by your own arguments, which in the next Paragraph before this ye haue hudled vp. For wheras your matters are (as ye ordinarily say) euident by plaine Scripture, & the Word of God is readen of euery man, (without distinction and limitation) therefore ye doe first of al play as fond a part, as King Agesilaus did, who receiuing an answer of mightie Iupiter, would afterward bring the matter before Apollo: yea furthermore, ye do much more fondlie then he, if when ye may heare God himselfe speak plainlie to you in the most holie Scriptures, ye would bring the whole cause to be tried by a Councell.

How

How ſay ye then now, are not theſe your owne proper reaſons, &c. your foreſaid worſhipful reaſons, &c. ? If ye meane (as by reaſon ye muſt) the Parliaments of theſe latter daies, the firſt of al did make moſt of you: and yet how open was it for you? Had ye any place at all in it? Were ye admitted within the doores? Or had ye any thing to do in that aſſemblie? Conſider thē with what conſultation your purpoſes were concluded. Did they tarry many moneths about it? Had they Biſhops? * Had they Diuines and the moſt learned, to reaſon to and fro with al libertie? Was the Authoritie of the Vniuerſall Church of Chriſt, and the Doctrin of the Ancient Fathers conſidered? Yee ſay in Latine, Plenus comitijs, that is, in the ful and whole aſſemblie, as though none at al had there reſiſted, but euery man had yeelded to your matters. What ſay ye then of the ſpiritual Lords, a great part of the Parliament, and without al doubt the part which muſt be chiefliе & onlie regarded, when the queſtion is of Religion? How many of them gaue you their voice to your Goſpel? Yea, which of them al did not reſiſt it? One alone, I muſt confeſſe, was afterward made to breake Vnitie, of whom a right good and Catholike Biſhop ſaid to a noble man, We had but one foole among vs, and him ye haue gotten vnto you. But as of the ſpiritual Lords ye had none at al, except that one, little worthie of the name of a Biſhop and Lord, whoſe learning was ſmal, and honor thereby much ſteined, ſo of the temporal ye had not al: and ſo had ye alſo in the lower houſe very many, and wel learned, that ſpake againſt you.

Parlament.

* Vntruth, enclоſed. For they had Diuines, and a ſol. mn Diſputatiō was appointed at Weſtminſter, in the preſence of the States of the Realm. But your fellowes fled frō it.

But let vs conſider the notable conuocation in which your matter hath beene treated. If ye meane the Clergie comming together at that firſt Parliament time, of which we ſpeake, it was of Catholikes, not of Sacramentaries, & it put vp a bil againſt your proceedings; ſo far it was off from confirming thē. If ye meane any ſince that time, in which your Superintendentſhips met together, for what cauſe was it a notable Synode, and a notable conuocation?

Ye be deſperate in your lying, and crake of a ful Parliament, and a notable Synod, not regarding by what meanes ye promote your cauſe to the multitude, and ſaue your ſelues from reproch of extreme follie. For otherwiſe ye which can ſo amplifie the ſmal and obſcure meetings of a few Caluiniſts of one little Iſland, what would ye not ſay of the laſt general Councel, to which more Nations were aſſembled together then are Shires in England; more yeers were beſtowed in conſultation, then weekes in your ful Parliament; * more Biſhops deſined and ſubſcribed, then were Miniſters of al ſorts in your notable Synod, by manie parts?

* Anotable great company. There were only fortie poore Biſhops, & yet ſome of the ſame were no Biſhops at al.

Laſtly, if they wil needs haue their matters ſeeme to depend of their Parliament, let vs not be blamed if we cal it Parliament Religion, Parliament Goſpel, Parliament Faith.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

We wil not diſcuſſe the Right and Intereſt of the Parliaments of England. As much as concerneth Gods Euerlaſting Truth, we hold not by Parliament, but by God. Parliaments are vncertaine, and often contrarie, as we haue ſeene: but Gods Truth is one, and certaine, and neuer changeth. The things that were ſo ſuddenly and ſo violently ſhaken downe in the late time of Queene Mary, are now of Gods great mercy, by our moſt Noble and Gracious Lady Queene Elizabeth, aduiſedly and ſoberly reared vp againe, that they may the more firmly continue, and ſtand the better. Whatſoeuer want ye imagine was in that Parliament, forasmuch as we were no part thereof, I truſt we may the more eaſily be excuſed. Howbeit, ſo ſcornfully diſdaining the whole State of ſo Noble a Realme, ye ſhal hardly win the opinion either of Sobriety, or of great Wiſdome. The Parliament was ſummoned by Royal Authority, and was continued and concluded in Order, as heretofore it hath beene vſed.

But your Biſhops (ye ſay) withſtood vs: and your Brethren in the Conuocation promoted a bil againſt our Doctrine. I know, M. Harding, they ſubſcribed then againſt vs with the very ſame hands, with which, not long before, they had openly proteſted and ſolemnly ſworne againſt the Pope: and with which they haue ſithence receiued and embraced our whole Religion, to the vtter condemnation of al your follies. Theſe were they that promoted bils againſt vs, and withſtood our Doctrine.

Only one foole (yee ſay) ye had amongſt al your Biſhops, and he was ſoone gotten to come to vs. Happy were they, M. Harding, that had but one foole in ſo great a company. If ſome of your Louanian Clergie had then beene Biſhops, I thinke they might haue beene ſomewhat better ſtored. Notwithſtanding, it was not wel done of your part, ſo vnciuilly to call your Brother foole. All the reſt of your Brethren, very few excepted, haue done the like. Yet fooles, I trow, ye wil not cal them, leſt happily your owne wits be called in queſtion.

Where yee would ſeeme to ſay, that the Parliament holden in the firſt yeare of the Queenes Maieſties Reigne was no Parliament, for that your Biſhops refuſed wilfully to agree vnto the godly Lawes there concluded, ye ſeeme therein to bewray in your ſelfe ſome want of skil. The wiſe and learned could ſoone haue told you, that in the Parliaments of England, matters haue euermore vſed to paſſe, not of neceſſity by the ſpecial conſent of the Archbiſhops & Biſhops, as if without them no Statute might lawfully be enacted; but only by the more part of the voices, yea although al the Archbiſhops and Biſhops were neuer ſo earneſtly bent againſt it. And Statutes ſo paſſing in Parliament, only by the voices of the Lords temporal, without the conſent and agreement of the Lords Spiritual, haue neuertheleſſe alwaies beene confirmed and ratified by the Real aſſent of the Prince, and haue beene enacted and publiſhed vnder the names of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal.

Parlament.

Read the Statutes of King Edward the First. There shall ye finde, that in a Parliament solemnly holden by him at S. Edmunds Burie, the Archbishops and Bishops were quite shut forth. And yet the Parliament held on, and good and wholesome Lawes were there enacted, the departing, or absence, or malice of the Lords Spiritual notwithstanding. In the Records thereof it is written thus: Habito Rex cum suis Baronibus Parliamento, & Clero excluso, Statutum est, &c. The King keeping the Parliament with his Barons, the Clergie (that is to say, the Archbishops and Bishops) being shut forth, it was enacted, &c.

An. Do. 1296.

Likewise: In Prouisione de Martona, in the time of King Henry the Third, whereas matter was moued of Bastardy, touching the Legitimatiõ of Bastards borne before Marriage, the Statute past wholy with the Lords Temporal, whether the Lords Spiritual would or no: yea and that contrary to the expresse Decrees and Canons of the Church of Rome. The like hereof, as I am enformed, may be found, Richardi 2. Ann. 11. Ca. 3. Howbeit, in these cases, I must confesse, I walke somewhat without my compasse. Touching the Iudgement hereof, I refer my selfe wholy vnto the Learned.

Anno. 1273. In Prouisione Marton. cap. 9.

Extr. Qui filij sunt Legitimi.

Further, whereas ye call the Doctrine of Christ, that now by Gods great mercie, and to your great griefe, is Vniuersally and freely Preached, a Parliament Religion, and a Parliament Gospel, (for such sobriety becommeth you wel, and may stand you in stead when learning faileth) ye might haue remembred that Christ himselfe at the beginning was Vniuersally receiued and honoured throw this Realme by assent of Parliament: & further, that without Parliament your Pope himselfe was neuer receiued, no not in the late time of Queene Mary. Yea and euen then his Holinesse was clogged with Parliament Conditions, that whatsoeuer had beene determined in Parliament, and was not repealed, were it neuer so contrary to his wil and Canons, should remaine stil inuiolable, & stand in force. Otherwise his Holinesse had gone home againe. Such, M. Harding, is the Authority of a Parliament. Verily if Parliaments of Realmes be no Parliaments, then wil your Pope be no Pope. Therefore as you now call the Truth of God that we professe, a Parliament Religion, and a Parliament Gospel, euen so with like sobriety and gravity of speech ye might haue said, Our Fathers in old times had a Parliament Christ: And your late Fathers and Brethren had of late, in the time of Queene Mary, a Parliament Faith, a Parliament Masse, and a Parliament Pope.

Neither is it so strange a matter to see Ecclesiastical Causes debated in Parliament. Read the Lawes of King Inas, King Elfrede, King Edward, King Ethelstane, King Edmund, King Edgar, King Canute; and ye shal finde that our godly Forefathers, the Princes and Peeres of this Realme, neuer vouchsafed to intreat of matters of Peace, or Warre, or otherwise touching the Common State, before all controuersies of Religion, and Causes Ecclesiastical had beene concluded. King Canute in his Parliament holden at Winchester vpon Christmasse day, after sundry Lawes and Orders made, touching the Faith, the keping of Holy Daies, Publike Praiers, learning of the Lords Praier, Receiuing of the Communion thrice in the yeere, the maner and forme of Baptisme, Fasting, and other like matters of Religion, in the end thereof saith thus: Iam sequitur Institutio Legum Sæcularium: Now followeth an order for Temporal Lawes.

Leges Canuti.

Thus we see that the godly Catholike Princes in old times thought it their dutie, before al other affaires of the Common Weale, first to determine matters of Religion, and that euen by the Parliaments of this Realme.

In a Parliament holden by King Willam the Conquerour it is written thus: Rex, quia Vicarius Summi Regis est, ad hoc constituitur, vt Regnum & populum Domini, & supra omnia Sanctam Ecclesiam regat & defendat, &c. The King, forasmuch as he is the Vicar of the Highest King, is therefore appointed to this purpose, that hee should Rule and defend the Kingdome and People of the Lord, and aboue al things the Holy Church, &c. Hereby it appeareth that Kings and Princes are specially and of purpose appointed by God, not only to defend, but also to Gouerne and Rule the Holy Church.

Howbeit, if any imperfection shal appeare in the former Parliaments, we giue God thankes for the same that is: and trust, that for his owne Names sake he wil confirme that he hath begun. The hearts of Princes and Determinations of Parliaments are in his hand. If any thing want, the Arme of the Lord is not shortened: Hee is able to supplie the same.

Ye magnifie much your late Chapter of Trident, which you would so faine haue to be called a General Councel, with so many Nations, so many Bishops, and so many yeeres of Consultation. Yet notwithstanding, of all these so many, and so many Nations, and Countries, if it may please you to sit downe, and to take the account, ye shal finde there were only powre forty Bishops, and certaine of the same (as Richards Pates the Bishop of Worcester, Concil. Triden. sub Carolo Quinto.

Worceſter, and blinde Sir Robert, the Archbiſhop of Armach) that only had the bare Titles of Biſhopricks, and indeed were no Biſhops at all. Two others of your ſaid ſo many and ſo notable Learned and Holy Biſhops, being at your ſaid worthy Councel, were euen there killed in Aduoutery: the one ſtricken downe with a Club: the other taken in the maner by the Husband, and hanged by the necke, out of a great Lutane window into the ſtreet. For theſe and other cauſes, Henry the French King, openly by his Ambaſſadors, proteſted againſt the ſame Councel in the preſence of al your ſo many, and ſo many Biſhops there, and ſaid: It was not a Councel General, but a Priuate Conuent or Aſſembly of a few certaine people ſummoned together for gaines ſake.

Now whereas it hath pleaſed you, aſwel here, as elſewhere, to ſport your ſelfe with Superintendents and Superintendentſhips, and to refreſh your wits with ſo haine a fantaſie of your owne, if ye had bene ſo deeply trauelled in the Doctors, New or Old, as ye beare vs in hand, ye might eaſily haue knowne, that a Superintendent is an ancient name and ſignifieth none other but a Biſhop. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Vocabulum Epiſcopatus inde ductum eſt, quòd ille, qui præficitur, eis, quibus præficitur, Superintendit. Ergo, ἐπισκοπεῖν, Latinè dicere poſſumus Superintendere. Againe he ſaith: Quod Græcè dicitur Epiſcopus, hoc Latinè, Superintentor, interpretatur. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Epiſcopus, ex eo dictus, quòd omnes inſpiciat. S. Hierome ſaith: ἐπισκοποῦντες, id eſt, Superintendentes. Anſelmus ſaith: Epiſcopus Latine Superintendens dicitur. Beda likewiſe ſaith: Epiſcopus Latine Superintendens dicitur. Petrus de Palude ſaith: Epiſcopus dicitur Superintendens: Et Petrus fuit Superintendens toti Mundo: Peter was the Superintendent of the whole world. Your owne Thomas of Aquine ſaith: Epiſcopi dicuntur, ex eo, quòd Superintendunt. Therefore, M. Harding, if modeſty moue you not, yet at leaſt for your grauities ſake, leaue playing with theſe vaine and childiſh follies. The Biſhops of England haue this day, not only the ſame name, but alſo the ſame rome and authority, and iuriſdiction, that other Biſhops haue euer had before.

BVT touching this Councel, which is now ſummoned by Pope Pius, wherein men ſo lightly are condemned, being neither called, nor heard, nor ſeene, it is eaſie to gheſſe, what we may looke for, or hope of it.

M. Harding.

The Generall Councel of Trent is now at length by Gods ſpecial fauour concluded and ended. What haue ye to ſay to it? Forbeare your accuſtomed lying, what haue ye to ſay to it? For * matters of Faith, what is not ſound and true? For * maners, what ſore lacketh due ſalue? For * diſcipline, what diſorder hath not wholeſome reſtraints & puniſhments? What defects be not prouidently conſidered, how to be ſupplied? What abuſes be not required to be taken away, as far as mans wit could deuiſe, and the weakneſſe of the preſent age can beare?

* Vntruths, open & without ſhame. For exãple, your Stewes, your Courtheghians, and Fornications, and Concubins were neuer touched.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

All this matter is fully anſwered by What, and by What. What matter of Faith? What maners? What diſorder? What defects? What Abuſes? But al theſe whats notwithſtanding, what if your Pope, your Cardinals, and your Clergy, with the whole diſorder of your Roman Church, with ſo many Prieſts keeping Concubines, with ſo many Non-Reſidents, with ſo many Dumbe Biſhops, and with ſo many thouſands of common Harlots be in caſe now, euen as they were before? Will ye tel vs neuertheleſſe, that al your ſores be ſufficiently ſalued? Or muſt we beleeue that your keeping of Concubines, your open Stewes, and Fornications &c. be no ſores? Verily S. Bernard ſaith, as it is alleged before: Inteſtina & inſanabilis eſt plaga Eccleſiæ: The wound of the Church bleedeth inwardly, and is paſt Cure. And againe: A planta pedis, vſque ad verticem Capitis non eſt in ea ſanitas: There is no whole part in the Church from the ſole of the foot to the top of the head. Baptiſta Mantuanus ſaith: Ægrotatque Fides iam proxima morti: The Faith of the Roman Church is ſicke, and almoſt dead.

In your Old Latine Tranſlation of the Bible, there be ſundry errours, ſo open and ſo groſſe, that a very Babe may ſone eſpie them: as it may more plainly appeare by Budæus, Eraſmus, Valla, Faber, Lindanus, and others. Yet that notwithſtanding, your Councel ſaith preciſely thus: Ne quis Veterem vulgatam Editionem reijcere quouis prætextu audeat, vel præſumat: Let no man dare or preſume by any maner of colour to refuſe the Old Common Tranſlation of the Bible: As if your Councels were purpoſely ſummoned to maintaine errours. If ye wil ſo wilfully deceiue vs in ſenſible matters, how may we then truſt you in matters of Faith?

The Apologie, Chap. 3. Diuision. 2.

Nazianzen. ad Procopium.

In times past, when Nazianzene saw in his daies how men in such Assemblies were so blinde and wilful, that they were carried with affections, and laboured more to get the victory, then the truth, he pronounced openly, that he neuer had seene any good end of any Councel. What would he say now, if he were aliue at this day, & vnderstood the beating and shouing of these men? For at that time, though the matter were laboured on al sides, yet the controuersies were wel heard, & open errors were put cleane away by the generall voice of all parts. But these men wil neither haue the case to be freely disputed, nor yet, how many errors soeuer there be, suffer they any to be changed. For it is a cõmon custome of theirs, oftẽ & shamelesly to boast, that their Church cãnot er, that in it there is no fault, & that they must giue place to vs in nothing. Or if there be any fault, yet must it be tried by their Bishops & Abbats only, because they be the Directors & Rulers of matters: for that they be the Church of God. Aristotle saith, that a City cannot consist of Bastards: Now whether the Church of God may consist of these men, let themselues consider. For doubtlesse, neither be their Abbats, Abbats indeed, nor their Bishops such natural right Bishops as they ought to be.

M. Harding.

Gregory Nazianzene in his Epistle to Procopius saith thus: I refuse to come to whatsoeuer Councel of Bishops. Because I could neuer yet to this day see the end of any Councel endued with any profit, & after which, things amisse were not rather made more greeuous then healed. Nazianzene in that Epistle spake of (a) prouincial Councels, speciallie those that were holden in his troublesome times, where most commonly Heretikes through fauour of their deceiued Princes bare the sway. Which in matters of Faith could hardly then obtaine any credit among the Catholikes, vnlesse they had beene confirmed by the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, of which sort at that age were few. Those other Nazianzene had experience of, of these he had not. Albeit indeed the vtilitie of the Nicene Councel in his time, that is to say, within so few yeers after the same was holdẽ, was not yet thorowly espied & fully knowne abroad. Neither would he, if he were aliue at this daie, reproue the holy General Councel of Trent, as ye do. For why should he? * And how shameless be ye, to require vs, to yeeld and giue place vnto you? Who made you Iudges ouer vs? Who gaue you Commission: Where is your warrant?

What need ye to shew your malice so much at Bishops and Abbats? Which of them hurteth you? Haue ye not in prison or in custodie (b) at your appointment al the Bishops of England, one Apostata yet liuing excepted, which after sundrie flights and changing of coats, is fled from the tents of the Church to your scattered troupes? The Abbats, haue ye not driuen them away? Be ye yet afraid of their shadowes? As by Aristotle a Citie cannot consist of Bastards, no more can the Church of England consist of such Bastard Bishops as ye be: what number of Abbats ye haue left in Cloisters, such number of true Bishops haue ye left in Churches. One must I stil except, who is a true Bishop by Consecration (as I vnderstand) though a false man by Apostasie, and going from his Faith, and from his Religion.

(a) Vntruth. For he speaketh of al maner of Councels, aswel General as Prouincial. His words be: Prorsus decreui fugere Omnem Conuentum Episcoporũ. * This is a lustie kind of Diuinity.

(b) Vntruth. For they are committed only by the appointmẽt of the Prince.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Greg Nazian. ad Procopium.

Touching the vnlucky successe of Councels, the ancient Father Nazianzene saith thus: Equidem, vt verè, quod res est, scribam, prorsus decreui fugere omnem Conuentum Episcoporum. Nullius enim Concilij bonum exitum vnquam vidi. Concilia enim non minuunt mala, sed augent potiùs: To say the truth, I am vtterly determined neuer to come to any Councel of Bishops. For I neuer yet saw good end of any Councel. For Councels abate not ill things, but rather increase them. These words thus vttered, whether they be vniuersally true or otherwise, I wil not reason. It may seeme hereby, this learned Father, for his time by experience found them true. And for ought that may appeare to the contrary, notwithstanding any thing contained in your Gloise, he seemeth to vtter the same, aswel of General Councels, as of Prouincial.

ὅτι μηδεμιᾶς συνόδου τέλος εἶδον ἀρίστου μηδὲ λύσιν κακῶν, μᾶλλον δὲ γενομένας, ἢ σφοδρὰν ἐπιθεῖσαν σφᾶς. Sozomenus. Hier. aduersus Luciferianos.

Certainely after the great General Councel of Nice, the Arian heretikes wared more, & more mighty then euer they had beene before. The Emperours Constantius, and Valens, with their Wiues and Courts became Arians. Constantinus the Great himselfe was also doubted to be an Arian. Liberius the Bishop of Rome, & Hosius that famous learned Bishop of Spaine gaue their hands vnto the Arians. Ten seuerall sundry Prouincial Councels gaue their voices with the Arians. S. Hierome saith: Ingemuit totus Orbis, & Arianum se esse miratus est: The whole world began to groane, and maruelled that it had taken part with the Arians. Therefore Nazianzene saith, Hee neuer saw Councel, nor Prouinciall, not Generall that ended well. For that as one saith: The greater side oftentimes ouerweigheth the better. Euen so said the French Kings Ambassadour, in the behalfe of his Prince, in your late Chapter at Trident: Nostra, Patrumque nostrorum & Auorum memoria, Synodos indictas fuisse, Episcopos conuenisse, maximos in Germania, atque Italia Conuentus peractos esse scimus. Vix tamen vllus, aut perexiguus inde fructus Christianitati constitit: We know that both in our Grandfathers and Fathers daies, and in our own time, Councels haue beene summoned, Bishops haue met together, great and solemn Assemblies haue beene kept, aswell in Germany, as in Italie, yet scarsely any good at all, or very little good came thereof to the State of Christendome.

nor

Concerning Abbats and Monasteries we haue said before. We haue as many Abbots in England this day, as either Christ euer had or his Apostles. Notwithstanding one of your learned fellowes of Louaine, for the good will hee beareth to that Religion telleth vs, that the Apostles were Monkes, and Christ himselfe was the Abbot. The Abbots and Monkes that were in old times, were men giuen to studie and learning. And out of Monasteries learned men were then taken, as out of Schools and Vniuersities to the rule and gouernment of the Church. But your Abbots now are as much like those Abbots as your Church is like the Primitiue Church of Christ.

The Apology, Chap. 3. Diuision 3.

BVT grant, they be the Church: let them be heard speake in Councels: let them alone haue authority to giue consent: yet in old time when the Church of God, (if ye will compare it with their Church) was very well gouerned, both Elders and Deacons, as saith Cyprian, and certain also of the Common people were called thereunto, and made acquainted with Ecclesiasticall matters.

M. Harding.

Ah Sirs, would ye haue the common people come to the Generall Councell? Whom meane you, I pray you? Tinkers and Tapsters, Fidlers and Pipers, such as your Ministers be? Alas poore soules what should they doe there? For there is no tinking, nor tipling, no fidling, nor piping. There may they shut vp both budgets and mouthes. For neither can they speake in such an audience to be vnderstanded, nor can they vnderstand what is spoken. Looke in your Bookes better, and you shall find Cyprian to make little for your purpose.

Had your matter beene good, it might haue beene defended without lies. Being as it is, altogether beside truth and reason, for some colour of the maintenance of the same, ye passe all measure in lying. Where saith S. Cyprian, that certain of the common people were called to Ecclesiasticall Councels? Yea specially where (saith he (a) that the common people were made Iudges of Ecclesiasticall matters, for so hath your Latine, which not without guile your Lady Interpreter commonly turneth, were made acquainted with Ecclesiasticall matters? If you had meant true dealing, Defender, you would haue quoted the place: but you knew thereby your falshood should haue beene espied. (b) The place which you meane doubtlesse is in the second tome of S. Cyprians works, where we finde the sentences of the Bishops of Aphricke, De Hæreticis Baptizandis: Which proue th your strange saying, by you fathered vpon that holy Martyr, nothing at all. The words be these: Cum in vnum Carthagini conuenissent, &c. When many Bishops in the first day of September were assembled together at Carthage, out of the Prouince of Affrick Numidia, Mauritania, with their Priests and Deacons, the most part of the people also being present, &c.

(a) S. Cyprians words be plaine. Nihil sine consensu plebis, &c. lib. 3. epist. 10.

(b) Your ghesse deceiueth you, it is not there.

Now what can you gather out of them for your purpose more, but that a great number of the people were present one lie in the Church or other place where the Bishops were assembled. That certaine of the common people were called to this Councell, there is no such word mentioned, nor by Cyprian, nor by anie else. *Neither were the Priests themselues (which this youthfull Gentlewoman interpreteth Elders) and Deacons called thither, but they attended vpon the Bishops, as in such case it hath been accustomed, for sentence none might giue in anie Councell, but *onelie Bishops. Then how much lesse were the common people called to that Councell, specially to sit as iudges in Ecclesiasticall matters? Marry, that you would so haue it, I thinke well. For such confusion might best serue you to procure the ouerthrow of good order, in which the Church is gouerned, which if it be maintained dulie, your disordered and rebellious state will soone be confounded.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Your Tinkers and Tapsters, M. Harding, are ashamed in your behalfe to see your follie. A poore silly iester to winne his dinner, would be loth to scoffe so coldly. Certaine of our Clergy want the knowledge of Rhetoricke, Logike, Philosophie, the Hebrew, the Greek and the Latine tongues. Therefore ye call them Tinkers and Tapsters. Such is the sobriety and modesty of your talke. Of what Schoole or tongue then are your Priests, M. Harding, Priests vnlearned.

Harding, that for the more part can neither Speake Latine, nor read English, nor vnderstand the Articles of their Faith, nor any portion of the Scriptures: Clouds without raine: Lanterns without light: Salt without sauour: Blind Guides, Dumbe Dogges: that, as one saith, seeme to haue their soules giuen them in stead of salt, to keepe them from stinking? Of what Art or Occupation was he, that baptized a Child in Latine, in this sort, In nomine Patria & Filia, & Spirita Sancta? What a skilfull Clerke was your Pope Iulius 2. that assigning a warrant, in stead of Fiat, wrote Fiatur? Your owne Doctor Alphonsus de Castro saith: Constat plures Papas adeo illiteratos esse, vt Grammaticam penitus ignorent: It is most certaine, that many Popes be so vnlearned, that they be vtterly ignorant of their Grammer. And being vtterly ignorant of their Grammar rules, I beseech you, say what other profound Science of Logicke or Philosophie, can ye praise them? Another of your Doctours saith: Papa propter defectum literaturæ non potest deponi: The Pope may not be deposed for lacke of learning. That is to say, the Pope, though he be neuer so ignorant, or void of knowledge, yet is as good a Pope as the best.

Another of your Doctours saith: Venalitate Curiæ Romanæ, inaniter præficiuntur Leuones, Coqui, Stabularij equorum, & Pueri: Through the bribery of the Court of Rome, Baudes, Cookes, Hostlers and Children, bee placed in Offices to gouerne the Church. Shal we therefore say, as you say, that all your Priests bee Fidlers and Pipers, Tinkers and Tapsters.

Aureum Speculum. In Antilogia.

Some certaine of our Clergie be ignorant in the tongues, as yours be: but not ignorant in knowledge as yours be. The worst of them seeth and lamenteth your wilfull ignorance. Saint Augustine saith: Multo minus malum est, indoctum esse, quam indocilem: Lesse hurt is it to be vnlearned, than to be wilfull, and vnapt to learne: Irenæus saith, Melius est & vtilius, idiotas & parum scientes existere, & per Charitatem proximos Deo fieri, quam putare se multum scire, & multa expertos in suum Deum blasphemos inueniri: Better it is a great deale for men to be ignorant, & to know but little, and by loue to draweere to God, than to thinke themselues to know much, and to haue great experience, and yet to be found blasphemous against God.

S. Ambrose saith, Non in Dialectica complacuit Deo, saluum facere populum suum: Regnum enim Dei in simplicitate Fidei est, non in contentione sermonis: It pleased not God by Logicke to saue his people. For the Kingdome of God standeth not in contention of talke but in simplicity of Faith. Likewise he saith, Verba Philosophorum excludit simplex veritas Piscatorum: The simple plaine Faith of Fishers confoundeth the words of the learned Philosophers. The ancient Father Origen saith, Sapientes huius seculi, videntes absque Arte Grammatica, & peritia Philosophica consurgere muros Euangelij, velut cum irrisione quadam dicunt, perfacile hoc posse destrui calliditate Sermonum, per astutias, fallacias, & Argumenta Dialectica: The Wise men of this world, seeing the walles of the Gospell to rise vp without Grammar, and profound knowledge in Philosophie, say scornfully amongst themselues, that all this by subtilety of speech, and crafty shifts, and Logicall Arguments, may full easilie be shaken downe.

It appeareth by the Councels of Carthage, and Hippo Regius, that in old times children vnder foureteene yeeres of age, were admitted to be Readers in the Church, and notwithstanding either their age or want of learning, the people was well contented with silence, and reuerence to giue eare vnto them. S. Chrysostome saith: In humanis negotijs, quando Rex Diademate coronatus, &c. Euen in worldly affaires, when the King sendeth forth his Proclamations, the Currer or Pursuant is oftentimes a man of small accounte, and sometime so base, that he neuer knew his own Father or Grandfather. But they that receiue the Proclamation, haue no regard vnto him that brought it: notwithstanding, in respect of the Kings Letters, that he brought, they yeeld him honour, and with silence and reuerence giue attendance to the Proclamation.

These simple vnlearned ones, whom you so disdainefully despise, shall rise vp in the day of our Lord, & condemn you with all your knowledge. Ambrose saith: Non quero, quid loquantur Philosophi: requiro quid faciant. Soli in suis Gymnasijs remanserunt. Vide, quam Fides Argumentis præponderet. Illi quotidiè à suis consortibus deseruntur, qui copiosè disputant: isti quotidiè crescunt, qui simpliciter credunt. VVELL yet then, they will bring all matters before the Pope, who cannot erre. To this, I ſay, firſt, it is a madneſſe to thinke, that the Holy Ghoſt taketh his flight from a Generall Councell, to run to Rome, to the end if he doubt, or ſticke in any matter, and cannot expound it of himſelfe, he may take counſell of ſome other ſpirit, I wot not what, that is better learned then himſelfe. For if this be true, what needed ſo many Biſhops, with ſo great charges, and ſo far iournies, to haue aſſembled their Conuocation at this preſent at Trident? It had been more wiſdome and better, at leſt it had been a much neerer and handſomer way to haue brought al things rather before the Pope, & to haue come ſtraight forth, and haue aſked counſell at his Diuine Breſt. Secondly, it is alſo an vnlawfull dealing, to toſſe our matter from ſo many Biſhops and Abbats, and to bring it at laſt to the triall of one only man, ſpecially of him, who himſelfe is appeached by vs of hainous and foule enormities, & hath not yet put in his anſwer: who hath alſo afore hand condemned vs without iudgement by order pronounced, ere euer we were called to be iudged.

M. Harding.

We may leſſe wonder at your ieſting in other things, ſith now we ſee you ſcoffe & ieſt in things touching God himſelfe. Sir, ſet you ſo light by the Holy Ghoſt, *as thus vnreuerently to talke of his flight and running to Rome, of his doubting and ſticking, of his vnableneſſe to declare doubtful caſes, of aking counſel of another ſpirit? Who euer vttered ſuch vile talk of the Holy Ghoſt, but ſome vile caitiffe, quite voide of his grace? Cannot you conceiue that reaſonably, the determinations of Councels be referred to the Pope, Chriſts Vicar in Earth, vnleſſe ye vtter ſuch vnreuerent and profaine ſcoffes? It had become a wicked Celſus, a Porphyrius, a Iulian, thus to talke, rather then any Chriſtian Hiſcorner. You ſhould at leſt haue looked on your ſquare Cap, and your white rochet, if you haue any: if nothing elſe, they would haue told you, that ſuch prophane lightneſſe became not your perſon.

*We honor and adore the Holy Ghoſt as very God: but you ſhamefully abuſe the name of God *Vntruths, huddled together without ſhame.

Concerning the point it ſelfe you touch, * although the Pope haue that priuiledge which Chriſt *praied to his Father for to be giuen vnto Peter, as being Peters Succeſſor, that his *Faith faile not, & that he confirme his Brethren, & therefore be an *aſſured iudge in matters of Faith, yet this notwithſtanding, Councels be not aſſembled together in vaine. For the Fathers of the Councel doe (a) helpe the Faith & Doctrine of the higheſt Paſtor. Wherefore in the firſt Councel at Ieruſalem, when as a great queſtion roſe, & Peter had ſaid his iudgement, nor propped with any teſtimony of the Holy Scriptures; Iames approoued it, adding thereto the teſtimonie of the Prophets. For Gods prouidence ſo tendereth the Church, that the *chief members, though they depend of the *Head, yet defend & helpe the Head. Wherefore Beda admoniſheth diſcreetly, that Paul conferred the Goſpel, which he had Preached amōgſt the Gentils, with the other Apoſtles, ſeeking warily to be reſolued, whether he preached rightly of

Act. 15.

Lib. 1. cap. 1. Act. Apoſtol.

(a) A ſage kind of mockery. For then doth not the Pope confirme his Brethren but rather is confirmed by his Brethren.

of the ceasing of the obseruances of the Law. Not that he doubted ought thereof himself (saith he) but that the mindes of them that were in doubt might be confirmed by the Authority of that Apostolike Councell.

To that you allege secondly, as a great inconuenience, we tel you, that forasmuch as the Pope is at euerie General Councel, lawfully assembled, either in person, as sundrie Popes haue beene, or by his Legates: (b) neither is it an vnlawful dealing, nor such tossing as you terme it, matters maturely debated in the Councel, to be referred to the Pope, head of the Councel, not so much for a new trial, as for final confirmation. The Fathers of the Nicene Councel besought S. Sylueſter, that what they had ordeined, he would confirme and ratifie. And Leo, what things the Councel of Chalcedon had decreed touching matters of Faith, saith that he approueth them. And the Coūcel it self, speaking to Leo, saith thus. Decreta tua nostrum honorauit iudicium: With thy Decrees honor our iudgment. Likewise the Fathers of other Coūcels required their constitutiō to be strengthned by cōfirmation of the Popes Authority.

(b) Wisely. The Holy Ghost that is present at the Councel, for better aduice, taketh counsell of the Pope.

And Sir, find you fault with the Pope, because he hath not yet put in his answer: I pray you, (c) who accused him? Where, when, and whereof? In what lawful Court? Before what lawful Iudge O you say, he hath not yet put in his answer. Be it that Hicke, Hob, and Hans, of your Sects haue impudentlie accused him. How would ye haue him bring in his answer? To what seat of Iudgement, to what Consistory can ye cite him, that is by Christ appointed (d) to be the supreme Iudge of al his Church, the Shepheard of al his Flocke? It is not for him, you know, to bring in his answer in Westminster Hal, nor in Star Chamber. Wil ye haue him appeare before your high Commissioners in the long Chapel at Paules, or in M. Grindals Chamber thereby, where ye haue said and done your pleasure, and depriued many honest men of their Benefices? Or wil ye rather haue him come to Geneua, to Zurich, to Frankford, to Strasburg, to Wittenberg, or to some other corner, where ye haue your congregations, there to be iudged by Iacke and Gil? I pity you, poore soules, that ye talke thus so farre out of square, and would the Pope to bring in his answer, ye know not where, hauing neither iust Court, or Consistory to cal him vnto, nor lawful Iudge, nor law to passe vpon him. For through your Schismes and Heresies, as ye haue made your selues Churchlesse, Christlesse, and Godlesse; so also Courtlesse, Iudgelesse, and Lawlesse. I cannot compare you better then to the Rebels of Northfolke vnder Captaine Kete, amongst whom Mount Surrey was their London, and an Oke, or an Elme, commonly called the tree of Reformation, was their Westminster Hal. Such Prince, such Dominion, such Iudge, such Consistory.

(c) The whole World accuseth him.

(d) A foule vntruth. For Christ neuer gaue the Pope any such Commission.

Ye complaine, the Pope hath condemned you without iudgement by order pronounced, & before ye were euer called to be iudged. This is as true as that the Murderer, or Theefe, answereth the Iudge at the barre, saying, Not guiltie my Lord. Ye haue beene sundry times called to lawful Consistories, to Synods, to Councels. Alwaies either ye made not your appearance, or by right of safe conduct conueied your selues away, without any shew of obedience: or vpon promise of amendment, you were dismissed. How many Legates and Nuncios haue sundry Popes sent into Germany, and other Prouinces, to conuent you, to heare you, to moue you to a better minde, and cal you home, and with al mercifull meanes to gather you againe into the lap of the Church? He may say, to your condemnation, that was said of the Iewes: What is that I ought to haue done to (e) my Vineyard, which I haue not done? But al was in vaine, such hath beene your stubbornesse.

(e) Open Blasphemy: The Church is the Popes Vineyard.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

We iest not at Gods Holy Spirit, M. Harding. We know it is the same Spirit of Wisdome that hath renued the face of the world, & discouered the multitude of your follies. But wel may we iest at your vnhandsome and open legierdumaine, that so vainly seeke to blinde vs with a painted shadow of the Spirit of God. Ye pretend long Prayers, much Fasting, great conference of Doctors and Scriptures, and the vndoubted presence and assistance of Gods Holy Spirit in al your doings, and yet openly striue against the manifest Word and Spirit of God, and follow only your owne Spirit, which we may truly call the Spirit of Vanity. The Spirit that you meane, is nothing else, but the Spirit of Rome, which you say is the Spirit of Truth, and cannot erre. In one of your late Councels, holden in Rome, as ye were singing and roaring out, Veni Creator Spiritus, a poore old owle amazed with the noise, leapt out of the hole where she sate, and pitched downe in the mids, and sate amongst you. Thus it pleased God to discouer your Hypocrisie, and your folly, that the world might know in what Spirit ye were assembled.

The Spirit of Coūcel.

Nicolaus de Clauengijs.

Elias the Prophet of God iested thus at the Priests of Baal: Cry out aloud: It is your God. Either he is occupied in some talke, or he is in his Inne, or he is trauelling vpon the way, or else perhaps he is a sleepe. Yet neither was Elias an Vicke Scorner, nor iested he at Gods Holy Spirit, nor did he any thing that was vnseemly for his person.

For Nicolaus Cusanus, being himselfe a Cardinal of the Church of Rome, thus iesteth at Pope Eugenius his Lord and Master: Quomodo potest Papa Eugenius dicere hoc verum esse, si ipse velit, & non aliter? Acsi inspiratio ipsius Sancti Spiritus foret in potestate Romani Pontificis, vt tunc inspiret, quando ipse velit: How can Pope Eugenius say, This is true, if it please him to haue it so, and none otherwise? As though the inspiration of the Holy Ghost were wholy at the Popes commandement, to breath only when he wil haue him. Terasius the Patriark of Constantinople writeth thus to Adrianus the Bishop of Rome: Tolerabilior est Hæresis Macedonij, qui asserit Spiritum Sanctum esse seruum Patris & Filij. Nam isti faciunt Spiritum Sanctum seruum suum: The Heresie of Macedonius, that held that the Holy Ghost is a slaue to the Father and to the Sonne, is more tolerable then the Heresie of Simonists.

For they make the Holy Ghoſt their owne ſlaue. I wil ſay nothing of Laurentius Valla, Canon of the Church of Rome, for that he ſo many yeres ago, ſo ſharply found fault with ſundry errours in the Church, and therefore was thought ouer partial in his ſpeeches. Notwithſtanding his words be theſe: Papa etiam rem Eccleſiaſticam, & Spiritum Sanctum quæſtui habet, quod Simon ille Magus deteſtatur: The Pope maketh merchandize of Church goods, and raiſeth gaine of the Holy Ghoſt, and ſetteth him to ſale. This ieſting is broad and bitter, M. Harding, and yet nothing preiudicial to the Spirit of God.

The Spirit of Coũcel.

As for your Councels, whether they be al and euermore ſummoned by the Spirit of God or no, it may wel be doubted. The Vniuerſity of Paris thus proteſted by way of appeale, againſt Pope Leo 10. and his Councel of Rome: Dominus Leo Papa Decimus, in quodam Cœtu in Ciuitate Romana, neſcimus qualiter, non tamen in Spiritu Domini, congregato: Our Lord Pope Leo 10. in a certaine Councel gathered in the City of Rome, by what meane we know not, but ſurely not by the Spirit of God. And touching your Late Chapter, or Conuenticle, which ye cal the Councel of Trent, the French Kings Ambaſſadour being there in preſence, ſaid thus: Minùs legitimæ, minúſue liberæ fuiſſe dicuntur illa Concilia Qui aderant, ad voluntatem alterius ſemper loquebantur: The ſaying is, that theſe were neither lawful, nor free Councels. The Biſhops that were there, ſpake (not alwaies of the Spirit of God, but) euermore to pleaſe ſome other: By which Other he meant the Pope.

Appellatio. Vniuerſ. Pariſ. Anno 1517.

Orat. Synodica. Anno 1562.

Chriſt ſaith vnto Peter, I haue praied for thee: And Paul went vp to Hieruſalem to viſite Peter: Ergo (ye ſay) The Pope hath Authority to confirme Councels. O, M. Harding, your Logicke of Louaine is maruellous haſty. Ye force your Concluſions to run in poſt. For what maketh either Chriſts praier for Peter, or Pauls iourney from Arabia to Hieruſalem, for the Confirmation of your Councels? Verily here is no manner mention neither of Confirmation, nor of Councel, nor of Pope. You might as handſomely haue concluded thus: Peter tooke his boat, and went a fiſhing: Ergo, The Pope hath ful Authority to confirme Councels. And whether ye wil make this ſame to ſerue you for an Argument, or no, it were hard to tel.

Luc. 22.

Whereas Chriſt praied namely for Peter, S. Auguſtine ſaith, as he hath bene alleged before: Nunquid pro Petro rogabat, pro Iacobo & Iohanne non rogabat? Did Chriſt pray only for Peter, and did he not pray for Iames and Iohn?

Aug. de Quæ. Noui Teſtam. Quæſt. 75.

Againe he ſaith: Hac nocte poſtulauit Satanas vexare vos, ſicut triticum: ſed ego rogaui Patrem pro vobis, ne deficiat Fides veſtra: This night hath Satan deſired to threſh you, as if yee were wheat. But I haue praied to my Father (not only for Peter, but) for you, that your Faith may not faile.

Aug. de verbis Dom. In Euangel. ſecundùm Luc. Serm. 36.

Touching that Paul went vp to Hieruſalem of Courteſie to ſee Peter, he ſought not thereby the certainty of his owne Doctrine, as a man that otherwiſe ſtood in doubt whether he had ſo long, for the ſpace of foureteene yeeres, preached Truth, or Falſhood; but rather found fault with Peters diſſimulation in Doctrine, and reproued him openly euen vnto the face. S. Hierome ſaith: Petrexit Hieruſalem, non tam vt diſceret aliquid ab Apoſtolis, quàm cum eis Euangelium, quod docuerat, collaturus: Paul went vp to Hieruſalem, not ſo much to learne any thing of the Apoſtles, as to confer with them touching the Goſpel that he had preached.

S. Chryſoſtome ſaith further: Paulus nihil opus habebat Petro, nec illius egebat voce, ſed honore par erat illi: Nihil enim hic dicam amplius: Paul had no need of Peter, nor had any cauſe to crane his voice, but in honor and worthineſſe was his equal: As for more, I will not ſay.

In the former Reply, Artic. 4. Diuiſ. 26.

Concerning the Confirmation of Councels, we haue ſpoken otherwhere more at large. Councels were Confirmed, not only by the Biſhop of Rome, but alſo by other Biſhops & Patriarks: and not only by other Biſhops, but alſo by Kings and Emperours. The Emperour Martianus ſaith: Sacro noſtræ Serenitatis edicto venerandam Synodum Confirmamus: By the Holy Edict of our Maieſty we Confirme this Reuerend Councel. Likewiſe the Biſhops in the Councel of Conſtantinople beſought the Emperour Theodoſius: Rogamus Clementiam tuam, vt per literas tuæ pietatis ratum eſſe iubeas, Confirmatiſq; Concilij Decretum: We beſeech your fauour, that by your Maieſties Letters ye wil ratifie and Confirme the Decree of the Councel.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio 3.

Concil. Cõſtantinopol. 1.

Touching the Councel of the Apoſtles at Hieruſalem, your owne Doctour ſaith, Poſtquam Petrus dixiſſet, Iacobus, Authoritate Pontificali, protulit Definitiuam Sententiam: When Peter had ſaid his minde, Iames, by his Epiſcopal Authority pronounced the Definitiue Sentence: that is to ſay, gaue his Confirmation to the whole. By which ſaying it may appeare, that Iames was in Authority aboue Peter. For he that pronounceth Definitiue Sentence, in all aſſemblies is euer the greateſt.

Ioan. de Pariſiis. Cap. 14.

To conclude, Councels haue beene allowed, and holden for good, whether the Biſhop of of Rome would or no. Liberatus saith, when Anatolius, by consent of the Councell of Chalcedon, had obteined the Primacie, and the Bishop of Romes Legates stood against it, their gainsaying of the Iudges and Bishops there, was not receiued. And notwithstanding the Apostolike See of Rome euen hitherto stand against it yet the Decree of the Councel, by the Authority and maintenance of the Emperor, after a sort, standeth stil in force. Liberat. ca.13.

Quodāmodò.

Much pleasant sport ye make vs, M. Harding, with putting in the Popes Answer. Be it (say you) that Hicke, Hob, & Hans haue accused the Pope. Would ye haue him appeare in this Court, or in that to be iudged by Iacke and Gill? The whole world, M. Harding, hath of long time charged the Pope with Ambition, Bribery, Simony, Superstition, Idolatry, and open Corruption of the ordinances and will of God. If he disdaine the iudgement of so manie, and call the whole world Hicke and Hob, let him not maruell if the whole world disdaine him. If he may be both Iudge and Partie, and may make answer only before himselfe, I doubt not but he shall haue a good fauourable hearing.

Conseruation of Councels.

I beseech thee, good Christian Reader, for shortnesse sake, consider that I haue written before, touching the Accusing and Iudging of the Pope. There shalt thou see, as Ennodius saith, That the Pope, together with the Power of Teaching, hath receiued free liberty to doe ill, without controlement. Therefore he saith: Neque ab Augusto, neque ab omni Clero, neque à Regibus, neque à populo, Iudex iudicabitur: The Pope, that is the Iudge, shall be iudged neither by the Emperor, nor by the whole Clergy, nor by Kings, nor by the people. Such a Prerogatiue, saith Athanasius, was sometime claimed by the Arian Heretikes: Cùm ipsi sint rei, ac Iudicio obnoxij, veluti Caiaphas, iudicandi munus inuadunt: Whereas they themselues be guilty, and in danger of Iudgement, they play the part of Caiaphas, and take vpon them to be Iudges themselues. In like maner Chrysostome saith: Figura ibi duntaxat Iudicij erat, re autem ipsa erat Latronum impetus: There was only a face of Iudgement: but in deed it was a brunt or violence of Theeues. Part. 5. Ca. 6. Dimis. 7. Ennodius, 9. quæst. 3. Nemo. Athanas. cōtra Arian. Orat. 1. Chrys. in Matthæ. Homil. 85.

Ye say further, The Pope may say, to our condemnation, that God saith vnto the Iewes: What is it that I ought to haue done to my Vineyard, but I haue done it? And thus ye gine the Pope power to challenge the Church of God, to be his owne. Euen so Nero, that wicked Tyran, when he had wasted and consumed the City of Rome, and burnt it with fire, he called the same neuertheless by his own name, Neronopolis, Neroes Towne. One of your Doctors saith: Huius Communitatis non est Dominus, nisi Christus, vel Papa: There is no Lord of this common state, (that is to say, of the Church) but either Christ, or the Pope: As if Christ and the Pope were ioint Purchasers. Esai. 5. Sueton. in Nerone. Hæruæ. de Potestate Papæ, in Prologo.

But indeed Christ only is the Prince of Pastors. And the Church is his only Spouse, and not the Popes. S. Augustine saith vnto Christ: Tu Petro non dixisti, Pasce Oues tuas, sed, Pasce Oues meas: Thou saidst not vnto Peter, Feed thy Sheepe, but Feed mine. Peter belongeth vnto the Church: but the Church belongeth not vnto Peter. 1. Petri. 5. Aug. de Verbis Domini, In Euangelio secundùm Iohannem Sermone 50.

The Church is not the Popes Vine: It is the Vine of the Lord of Saboath. Therefore M. Harding, aduise your selfe better. Your words are guilty of great blasphemie. It shal be sufficient for the Pope, if he may be only a branch in this Vine: if he be not withered: if he be not cut off, and throwen into the fire. Esai. 5.

S. Augustine saith: Qui hoc animo pascunt Oues Christi, vt suas velint esse, non Christi, se conuincuntur amare, non Christum: vel gloriandi, vel dominandi, vel acquirendi cupiditate: They that feed the Sheepe of Christ, to that end that they would haue them to be their sheep, and not Christs, are found to loue themselues, and not Christ; for desire, either of Glory, or of Gouernment, or of Gaine. Aug. in Iohan. Tractat. 123.

The Apologie, Chap. 4. Diuision. 2.

How say yee, doe wee deuise these tales? Is not this the very course of the Councels in these daies? Are not al things remoued from the whole holy Councel and brought before the Pope alone: that as though nothing had beene done to purpose, by the iudgments and consents of such a number, he alone may adde, alter, diminish, disanull, allow, remit, & qualify whatsoeuer he list? Whose words be these thē? And why haue the Bishops & Abbats, in the late Councel at Trident, concluded thus in the end: Sauing alwaies the Authority of the See Apostolike in all things. Or why doth Pope Paschall write so proudly of himselfe? As though, saith he, there were any Generall Councell able to prescribe a Law to the Church of Rome: whereas all Councels both haue beene made, and haue receiued their force and strength by the Authority of the Church of Rome: and in ordinances made by De Election. & Electi. potest at. Significasti.

Councels, is euer plainely excepted the Authority of the Roman Biſhop. If they will haue theſe things allowed for good, why be Councels called? But if they cõmand them to be void, why are they left in their Bookes, as things allowable?

M. Harding.

(a) Who made all the Faithfull of Chriſt the Popes Mẽbers?

Sir, what need you beſtow ſo much talke in vaine? Is it not reaſon the (a) members acknowledge the head? Would you the members to worke their actions without the head? Is Pope Paſchalis to be called proud for preferring the Church of Rome before a Councell? Haue not Councels euer been thought to lacke their full Authority, (b) which were not called and confirmed by the Biſhop of Rome?

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

(b) Vntruth, plain & manifeſt

The Modeſty and Sobriety of Pope Paſchalis claime ſhall better appeare in the nert Diuiſion. Verily the Church of Rome theſe many yeeres may ſeem to haue been nothing elſe, but a Mother of Falſhood, and a Schole of Pride. Pope Nicolas ſaith: De Sedis Apoſtolicæ iudicio nemini licet iudicare: It is lawfull for no man to iudge of the Popes iudgment. And of late yeeres Pope Leo ſaid; Papa habet Authoritatem ſuper omnia Concilia: The Pope hath Authority ouer all Councels. That all lawfull Councels haue euermore been ſummoned and confirmed by the Pope, it is a manifeſt and groſſe Vntruth, as heereafter it ſhall be opened more at large.

For the Pope had no Authority to call Councels: as it ſhal appeare.

Nicol. Pap. 1. ad Imp. Michaelem.

Concil. Later. ſub Leone 10. Seſſione. 10.

Where ye ſay, It is reaſon the Members ſhould acknowledge their Head; that is the Pope: For ſhame, M. Harding, and for your credits ſake, once leaue theſe vanities. If the Pope be any part of Gods Church, he is a member, and not the Head: and the Faithfull of the Church of God are Chriſts members, and not the Popes. Indeed Pope Athanaſius ſaith thus of himſelfe: Mihi cura erit, Euangelij Fidem circa meos populos cuſtodire, parilq; Corporis mei per ſpatia diuerſa terrarum, quantum poſſum, literis conuenire: I will bee carefull to keepe the Faith of the Goſpell amongſt my people, and by letters to deale with the parts of my Body, lying ouer the ſundrie Coaſts of the World. Thus he imagineth in his dreame, that all the Princes and States of the World be nothing elſe, but the Parts and Members of his Body.

The Apologie, Chap. 5. Diuiſion 1.

BVT be it ſo: Let the Biſhop of Rome alone be aboue al Councels, that is to ſay, let ſome one part be greater then the whole: let him be of greater Power, let him be of more Wiſdome then all his; and in ſpight of Hieromes head let the Authority of one Citie be greater then the Authority of the whole World.

Hieronymus ad Euagrium.

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth. Otherwiſe ſhew vs by what Authority he is ſo.

(b) Full wiſely. As if the Pope were the Head, and the whole Church were his Body: Or as if the Pope were the Maſter, and the Church his Familie.

(c) The Councel hath more Wiſdome and Learning then the Pope, yet the Pope is in Wiſdome and Learning aboue the Councel.

It is a commõ maner of this Defender, what he muſt needs grant, to make a ſhew in words, as though it were free gift. So many times beggars will ſeeme gentlemen, and paiers of debt will ſeeme giuers. Let the Biſhop of Rome (ſaith he) alone be aboue all Councels. (a) Sir, he is ſo, no thanke to you. Yet ſpeake you like a liberall gentleman, That is to ſay, let ſome one part be greater then the whole. No Sir, maugre your ſcoffing head, part ſhal not be greater then the whole, but part ſhal be greater then part: (b) in a right ſenſe, is not the head greater then the body, the Biſhop the his Clergy, the (b) maſter of a houſe more then his familie? Neither is the Councel the whole pardy, except your merry wit can deuiſe vs a whole body without a head. Let him be of greater power, ſay you. And ſo he is. Let him be of more wiſdome then al his. We ſay not ſo. It may be that his Councel hath more learning, (c) more knowledge, & more wiſdome then his only perſon. Albeit, when we ſpeake of that wiſdome of the See Apoſtolike, which is ſure, infallible, and cannot erre, we meane not only the Popes ſinguler perſon, but head Paſtor and Biſhop, as he doth thoſe things which pertaine to that Chaire, that is to ſay, in as much as he proceedeth not vpon his owne priuate iudgment, (d) but by the inſtinct of the holy Ghoſt, promiſed by Chriſt to his Vicar. Where you ſay, And in ſpight of Hieromes head, let the authority of one City be greater then the authority of the whole world; we tel you, that this you ſpeake more ſpightfully then learnedly. For S. Hierome in his Epiſtle to Euagrius ſpeaketh (e) only of a particular matter, blaming the cuſtome of Rome, where contrary to the cuſtome of the whole world, Deacons in certaine caſes were preferred before Prieſts, whereof we haue ſpoken before.

(d) O fond follie! For ſo any ſimple creature, ſo long as he is led by the Holy Ghoſt, can neuer erre. (e) Vntruth, vain & childiſh. For S. Hierome ſpeaketh plainly of authority: Si Authoritas quæritur, Maior eſt Orbis Vrbe.

The Biſhop of Saritburie.

Sir Defender (ye ſay) ſpeaketh like a liberal gentleman. Againe ye ſay, No ſir, maugre your ſcoffing head. Theſe and other like words, M. Harding, are fitting and ſeemely for your perſon, and may wel become your merry wit.

Where we ſay, Let the Biſhop of Rome be of greater power then any General Councel; ye anſwer vs readily, And ſo he is. Where we ſay, Let him be of more Wiſdome then all other Biſhops; ye anſwer againe, We ſay not ſo. As if yee would allow the Pope

Authoritie

Authority and Power without Wisdome. Yet wise men haue said, that Power without Wisdome is the Kingdome of Folly.

The Pope aboue Generall Councels.

The Pope (you say) maugre your scoffing head, shalbe greater then the Church. And yet shal not the part be greater then the whole. Awake a little, M. Harding, & expound vs your dreame. The whole we speake of, is the whole Church of Christ. And, I trow, by your learning the Pope is a Part or Member of the same. Otherwise ye must tell vs, that the Pope is no part of the Church of Christ. Which thing, all circumstances considered, were not hard to be granted.

But the Pope (say you) beeing but a part, is greater then the whole Church. Ergo, say I, it must nœds follow, that the part is greater, then the whole. Neither was it my scoffing head, as it pleaseth you to say, that framed this reason. Your owne Doctor Gerson, the Director of the Councel of Constance, saw it, and vttered it aboue a hundred and fifty yeres agoe. Yet was he not therefore thought to be a Scoffer. These be his words: Quærere vtrùm Papalis Authoritas sit maior quam Ecclesia, redit in idem, acsi quæreretur, vtrùm totum sit maius sua parte: To demand whether the Authority of the Pope be greater then the Authority of the Church, is as much as if a man would demand whether the whole bee greater then the part. You see, M. Harding, these be Gersons words, and not mine. Therefore ye might with more sobriety haue spared your scoffing at scoffing heads. Io. Gerson. De potestat Ecclesiast. Consid. 7.

Some of your friends haue said, Si totus mundus sententiaret in aliquo negotio contra Papam, videtur quòd standum esset Sententiæ Papæ: If the whole world should giue sentence in any matter against the Pope, it seemeth we ought rather to stand to the Popes iudgement, then to the iudgement of all the world. Albertus Pighius saith: Certius est iudicium Papæ, quàm iudicium Generalis Concilij, aut totius Orbis terrarum: The iudgement of the Pope is more certaine, then is the iudgement of a General Councel, or else of all the whole World. Another saith: Papa virtualiter est tota Ecclesia: The Pope by power is the whole Vniuersal Church. Another saith: Potestas solius Papæ excedit potestatem residuæ Ecclesiæ: The Popes only power exceedeth the power of al the Church beside. Another saith: Papa non potest subijcere se Concilio Generali: The Pope cannot submit himself to a General Councel. Vpon these worthy foundations ye haue built vp the Popes Infinite and Vniuersall power: And therefore ye say, Sir Defender would seeme to grant you of free gift, that hee must needs grant perforce, whether he wil or no. 9. quæst. 3. Nemo. In Glossa. Alber. Pigghius Eccles. Hierar. Lib. 6. Ca. 13. Hermans, De Potestat. Pap. His præmissis. Petr. de Paud. De Potestate Papæ, Art. 4. Ext. de Indiciis. Cùm venissent. Ioã. Andr. Bernar. Citatur à Pico Mirandul. In quæst. An Papa sit supra Concil. Picus Mirandul. eodem loco.

At this notwithstanding, M. Harding, others of your more indifferent Doctors would haue told you another tale. S. Bernard saith: Quæ maior superbia esse potest, quam vt vnus homo toti Congregationi iudicium suum præferat, tanquam solus habeat Spiritum sanctum: What greater pride can there be then that One man should esteeme his owne iudgment more then the iudgement of al the Church as if he only had the Spirit of God? Whereunto Picus Mirandula addeth these words: Imò simplici potiùs Rustico, & Infanti, & Aniculæ, magis quàm Pontifici Maximo, & mille Episcopis, credendum est, si isti contra Euangelium, illi pro Euangelio faciant: Nay, wee ought to beleeue a simple plaine Husbandman, or a Child, or an Old Woman, rather then the Pope and a thousand Bishops, if the Pope and the Bishops speake against the Gospel, and the others speake with the Gospel.

The Bishops in the Councel of Ferraria say thus: Quacunq; facultate Romana Ecclesia prædita sit, Vniuersali tamen Ecclesiæ, quam Generalis Synodus præsentat, inferior est: With whatsoeuer power the Church of Rome be endued, yet is it inferiour to the Vniuersall Church, that is represented by the General Councel. But perhaps ye wil say, This was a Councel of Rebels and Schismaticks, for that the Bishops assembled there were not so appliable vnto the Pope. Concil. Ferrar. Sessione 10. Conc. Basil. Inter Epist. Synodales.

The Bishops in the Councel of Basil say thus: Etsi Papa sit Caput Ministeriale Ecclesiæ, non tamen est maior tota Ecclesia. Alioqui, errante Pontifice quod sæpe contingit & contingere potest, tota erraret Ecclesia: Although the Pope be the Ministerial head of the Church, yet is he not greater thē al the Church. Otherwise whensoeuer the Pope erreth which thing hapneth oftentimes, and may wel happen, the whole Church should likewise erre. Againe they say: Nonnulli os suum ponentes in Cœlum, potestatē Romani Pontificis supra potestatem Sacrorum Generalium Conciliorum, contra Iuris diuini & humani Veritatē, à sanctis Patribus aliàs declaratam, exaltare nituntur: Many men setting their face against the heauen go about to exalt the power of the Bishop of Rome aboue the power of holy generall Councels, cōtrary to the Truth of the Law both of God & Man, declared vntoo vs by the Holy Fathers. In appendice Conc. Basil. Sacrosanct. Generals. In ead. appendice. Et primo.

Againe they say: Ecclesia Romana non est Vniuersa, sed est de Vniuersitate Corporis Mystici, id est, Ecclesiæ: Et sic est Membrum dicti Corporis Mystici, vt patet per Beatum Gregorium. Igitur ex quo est membrum dicti Corporis, non est, nec esse potest Caput illius. Cùm differentia sit inter Caput & Membra: The Church of Rome is not Vniuersall, but a part of the Vniuersal Mystical Body of Christ, which is the Church: and so is it a member In ead. appendice. Eod. Cap.

of Christs said Body Mystically, as it appeareth by S. Gregory. Therefore forasmuch as it is a Member of the said Body, it is not, neither can it be the Head of the same Body. For there is a difference betweene the Head and the Body.

The Pope is not Pastour of the Vniuersal Church.

Likewise againe they say: Allegant, Papam impunè posse tollere Constitutionem Concilij Generalis, contra prohibitionem ipsius Concilij Generalis: supponentes Papam esse Pastorem Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ. Sed ipsorum suppositum est falsum: & consequenter ipsorum assertio super eo fundata est falsa: They say, The Pope may safely abolish the Decree of a General Councel, notwithstanding the same General Councel haue decreed the contrarie: supposing that the Pope is the Bishop of the Vniuersal Church. But their supposall is false: and so consequently false is their Doctrine that they haue built thereupon.

Nicol. Cusan. de concord. lib. 2. Cap. 17.

But lest you should say that al these Bishops and Fathers in the Councels of Ferraria, and Basil, were inflamed with Schismatical Spirits, or possessed with Diuels, Nicolaus Cusanus, being himselfe a Cardinal, and a Child of the Church of Rome, hath by expresse words auouched the same. Thus he saith: Quia sedentes in ipsa Sede ab hominibus assumuntur, deuiabiles, & peccabiles, & nunc maximè, mundo ad finem tendente, & malitia excrescente, sua potestate ad ædificationem data, ad destructionem abuntur, quis dubitare potest, sanæ mentis, Vniuersale Concilium tam in abusum, quàm in abutentem, potestatem habere, &c. Vniuersaliter dici potest, Vniuersale Concilium esse omni respectu tam supra Papam, quàm supra Sedem Apostolicam: Forasmuch as the Popes sitting in the Apostolike Sea of Rome, be chosen of men, and bee such as may erre, and sinne, and now specially, the world drawing towards an end, and wickednesse increasing, abuse their Power to the destruction of the Church, that was giuen them for the rearing vp, & furnishing of the Church, what mã, hauing his right wits, can doubt but a General Councel hath Authority, as wel ouer the abuse, as also ouer the Pope that hath made the abuse? Vniuersally it may be said, that the Vniuersal Councel is in euery respect as wel aboue the Pope, as also aboue his Apostolike Sea.

The Pope aboue Generall Councels.

Heere is specially to be noted, that Cardinal Cusanus saith, The Pope sitting in his Apostolike Sea, abuseth his Vniuersal power, and that to the destruction of the Church.

D. Cole.

Therefore, M. Harding, this part of your Booke, among the rest, would more aduisedly haue been considered. D. Cole himselfe, notwithstanding otherwise wel enclined vnto your faction, yet in this point is wel content to giue you ouer. Thus he saith of himselfe: I hold herein rather with Gerson, that the Councel is aboue the Pope. The Pope (ye say) in one respect, as he is a man, in his owne singuler person may happen to erre: But in another respect, as he is Head Pastor, and Chiefe Bishop, and is placed in Peters Chaire, he cannot erre.

Appellatio Vniuers. Paris. à Leone 10. An. 1517.

And thus as the Heathens in old times imagined their Centaurus to be halfe a Man, and halfe a Horse; or their Ianus to haue two faces, the one behinde, and the other before; euen so haue you imagined two Popes in one Body, the one going backward, the other forward: the one bearing Light, the other Darknesse: the one deceiued, the other not deceiued: the one speaking Truth, the other Falshood: and yet both these Popes incorporate together in one Person. Giue vs leaue therefore, M. Harding, to say now as the whole Vniuersity of Paris said, not long sithence, vnto Pope Leo: A Domino nostro Papa, iam non bene consulto, appellamus: Wee appeale from our Lord the Pope, being as now not well aduised. We appeale from the Pope that hath erred so shamefully, vnto that Pope that cannot erre.

Hier. ad Heliodorum, de laude vitæ solitariæ.

How thē, if the Pope haue seene none of these things, & haue neuer read either the Scriptures, or the Old Fathers, or yet his own Councels? How if he fauor the Arians, as once Pope Liberius did? Or, haue a wicked, and a detestable opinion of the life to come, & of the immortality of the Soule, as Pope Iohn had but few yeers sithence? Or, to encrease his own Dignity, do now corrupt other Councels, as Pope Zosimus corrupted the Councel holden at Nice in times past; & do say, that those things were deuised & appointed by the Holy Fathers, which neuer once came into their thought: &, to haue the full sway of Authority, do wrest the Scripturs, which thing, as Camotēsis saith, is an vsual custom with the Popes?

How

How if he haue renounced the Faith of Christ, & become an Apostata, as Lyranus saith, many Popes haue bin? Yet for al this, shal the Holy Ghost with turning of a hand, knocke at his brest, and euen whether he wil or no, yea, & wholy against his wil, kindle him a light, so as he may not erre? Shal he straightway be the Headspring of al Right, & shall al the treasures of wisdome and Understanding, be found in him, as it were laid vp in store? Or, if these things be not in him, can he giue a right, and apt iudgement of so weighty matters? Or, if he be not able to iudge would he haue, that those matters should be brought before him alone?

The Pope aboue Generall Councels.

M. Harding.

To your how ifs and what ifs, I could soone make an answer by the contrarie. (a) And Sir, how if the Pope haue seene al these things, the Scriptures, Fathers, and Councels? What haue ye then to say? is not your tale then at an end? Were your matter good, and your self wise, you would not so commonly vse that weake kinde of reasoning. But to a number of your how ifs, and what ifs, for the Readers sake, to put away al scruple, I giue you this answer.

Sapient. 8. Rom. 8. Math. 16. Luke 22.

Gods wisdome (as the Scripture saith) disposeth al things sweetly, and in one instant foreseeth the end, and meanes that be necessary to the end. If he promise any man life euerlasting, withall he giueth him grace also to do good deeds, whereby to obtaine the same. Whom he hath glorified (saith S. Paul) them he hath iustified and called. So where as he hath by force of his Praier made to the Father promised to Peter, and for the safety of the Church (b) to euery Peters Successour, that his faith shal not faile, and therefore hath willed him to confirme his Brethren, that is, to remoone al doubts and errors from them: we are assured, he wil giue him such wit, diligence, learning & vnderstanding, as this firmnesse and infallibitie of Faith, and confirming of brethren requireth. Shal we stand in doubt whether that happeneth in things supernatural, which we see to be in things natural, that who giueth the end, he giueth also things that pertaine to the attaining of the end? If God would promise vs abundance of corne for the next yeere to come, what were more foolish then to doubt and say like to this Defender, how if, and what if men wil not til the ground nor sow any seed? Doubtlesse if they sow, they shall reape: if they sow not, neither shal they reape. But what? We may gather of the promise of God, that we shal haue not only faire & seasonable weather, whereby the fruits of the earth may proue plentiful, but also that the husbandmen shal imploy their endeuour, paines, and labour. For the abundance of corne so promised shal not be giuen but to such, as til, sow, and trauel. Euen so where as Christ hath promised to the (c) Successours of Peter firmnesse of Faith, to the Apostles and their Successours the Spirit of Truth, and likewise to Councels gathered in his name, we must perswade our selues, that nothing shal want necessary for the controuersies touching Faith, to be decided.

That you say of Liberius the Pope is starke false (d). He neuer fauoured the Arians. The most ye can find against him, is, that he was cõpelled by the greater persecution of Constantius the Emperor, to subscribe to the Arians. Neither is that by the ancient Writers of the Ecclesiastical stories constantly affirmed. but of the chiefe of them not spoken of, where most occasion was to signifie it, if it had so beene: of some denied, of some mentioned not as true, but as a false rumor bruted abroad of him. By which rumor it seemeth (e) S. Hierome was deceiued, remaining in the East, far from the places where the Truth might more certainly be knowne. But were it true, that he subscribed, as Peter denied Christ, yet being done (f) for lacke of Charity, and not by error in Faith, wel might that fact be slanderous to the Church, but it was not a decree made in fauour of the Arians, neither to confirme that heresie.

Socrat. lib. 4. cap. 15. Lo. de viris il. Iustribus in Chronicis.

That you report of Pope Iohn the 22. is likewise most false. The worst that Marsilius of Padua, and William Ockam Heretikes wrote of him to flatter the Emperour Ludouicus of Bauaria, is, that he had taught openly (g) (which also is referred to the time before he was Pope) that the soules of the iust see not God vntill the day of iudgement. That he had a wicked and a detestable opinion of the immortality of the soule, there was no such his opinion, but it is your false slander, by which your wicked and detestable malice imagined to deface the Church, and specially the authority of the holy Sea Apostolike. No story of any estimation mentioneth, that he was of that first opinion after he came to be Pope, much lesse that he gaue any Definitiue sentence of any such matter. But contrariwise (h) when as he prepared himselfe to go to the Definition of that question concerning the seeing of God. which iust soules haue before the day of Iudgement, as Benedictus the eleuenth in sua extrauagante saith, he was preuented by death, so as he might not do it.

You belie Zosimus: (i) he corrupted not the Councel of Nice: but signified to the Bishops of Aphricke assembled in Councel at Carthage, the truth concerning the Canons of the Nicene Coūcel. The same may be proued by Iulius the first, by the Epistle of (k) Athanasius and other Bishops of Egypt, Thebais and Libya, written to Marcus the Pope of the original of the 72. Canons of the Nicene Councel, that remained in safe custody in the Church of Rome, subscribed with the hands of the Fathers that at the same Councel were present. And what credit was to bee giuen to the contrary information of only twenty Canons that was returned from the Bishops of Constantinople and Alexandria (l) when Heretikes before had burned the Bookes, where the whole number was contained, and left but those twenty, that al Bookes now commonly haue?

If we should allege Camotensis & Lyra, you would cal them the blacke guard and set little by them. First shew vs where they haue that you allege out of them. M. Iewel allegeth that of Camotensis in another place. But where it is, he keepeth it to himselfe, and of himselfe it is likely it proceeded. For his dealing is such, as any false practise in respect of him may seeme credible. Albeit what worshipful Doctor ye meane by Camotensis (m) I know not. Peraduenture ye meane Camotensis, otherwise called Iuo. I haue cause to gheese, that so it should be. And yet foure Bookes of sundry Prints both English & Latin so haue. If there be any such, as I suppose there is not, he is very obscure not worth the naming.

(a) What then? Should he therfore be aboue General Councels? Sadly and sagely, and much to the purpose.

(b) Vntruth fõd & childish. For Christ praied no more for Peter then for others; nor euer made mention of Peters Successors. O worthy and graue reasons!

(c) Vntruth. For Christ neuer entred into such couenant with Peters Successours.

(d) Vntruth, plainly reproued by S. Hierome.

(e) S. Hieromes authority refused as a man writing rashly he knew not what.

(f) The Pope denieth Christ, for lack of Charity, but not for lack of Faith.

(g) Vntruth manifest. See the Answer.

(h) Vntruth, cõtrary to that M. Harding said immediately before For he held this error in the time of his Popedom.

(i) Vntruth manifestly reproued by the Councel of Aphrica.

(k) These be very vaine & childish forgeries.

(l) Vntruth without any fauor of wit or learning. Why should M. Harding allege so foolish Fables?

(m) If ye know him not, then may you best blame your ignorance.

The

Whether the Pope may erre or no.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here ye say, And Sir, how if the Pope haue seene all these things, the Scriptures, the Fathers, the Councels? What haue you then to say? Is not your tale then at an end? No verily, M. Harding. I would further desire God to giue him grace, to vse them well, and to his glory. Notwithstanding your owne Doctours wil soone put al these your whats and what ifs, out of question. For concerning the Popes great and high learning, Alphonsus de Castro saith, as he hath beene alleged before: Constat, plures Papas adeò illiteratos fuisse, vt Grammaticam penitùs ignorarent: It is certainely known, that sundrie Popes haue been so vnskilful in learning, that they neuer vnderstood their Grammar. And this he speaketh, not of one Pope only, but of sundry. But (you say) Christ hath praid for Peter, and made sure promise that his faith should neuer faile. Therefore the Pope is wise: the Pope is learned: the Pope is Catholike: the Pope cannot er. Al this, and a great deale more, the Pope may claime only by vertue of Christs praier. Now therefore if the Pope should er or be in Heresie, he might sue Christ in an Action of Couenant, and require him to performe his promise. So saith the Prophet Micheas: Sacerdotes in mercede docebant, & Prophetæ in pecunia diuinabant: & super Dominum requiescebant, dicentes, Nonne est Dominus in medio nostrum? The Priests taught the people for hire, and the Prophets prophesied for money: and yet they rested themselues vpon Gods promise, saying, And is not the Lord in the mids amongst vs? So the Valentinian Heretikes said sometime of themselues: Nos salutem de Priuilegio status possidemus: We haue our safety by the Priuiledge of our state. We cannot miscarry: we cannot er: But the Prophet saith: Euery man is a liar: Accursed be he that trusteth in Man. Your owne Doctour Alphonsus saith: Omnis homo errare potest in Fide, etiamsi Papa sit: Euery man may erre in Faith: yea, although he be the Pope.

Howbeit, that your vnlearned Reader may the better consider, how safely he may giue credit to your bare word, whether the Pope may be deceiued in Faith or no, it may easily appeare by these few examples. Who so listeth to seeke may finde moe. Pope Marcellinus offered vp Incense, and made Sacrifice vnto Diuels. Tertullian saith: Episcopum Romanum agnoscentem iam Prophetias Montani, Priscæ, Maximillæ, &c. The Bishop of Rome, wel liking now the Propheties (or Heresies) of Montanus, Prisca, and Maximilla, &c. Vpon which words Beatus Rhenanus noteth thus: Episcopus Romanus Montanizat: The Bishop of Rome fauoureth the Heresie of Montanus. Pope Liberius was an Arian Heretike, as hereafter it shal better appeare. Pope Honorius was condemned for an Heretike in two General Councils. In the Councel of Constantinople, the words of his condemnation be alleged thus: Anathematizari curauimus Honorium, qui fuerat Papa Antiquæ Romæ: quia in omnibus mentem Sergij sequutus est, & impia dogmata confirmauit: We haue caused Honorius, the late Pope of old Rome, to be accursed: for that in all things he followed the minde of Sergius the Heretike, and confirmed his wicked Doctrines. Alphonsus de Castro saith: Anastasium Papam fauisse Nestorianis, qui Historias legerit, non dubitat: Whosoeuer hath read the stories or course of time, cannot doubt, but Pope Anastasius fauoured the Nestorian Heretikes. In the very Legend of Hilarius it is mentioned, that Pope Leo was an Arian Heretike. In a Synod holden at Rome against Pope Hildebrand, it is written thus: Incendio tradidimus Decreta eorum Hæretica: We haue burnt their Heretical Decrees. Pope Sylvester 2. was made Pope by Necromancy, and in recompence thereof, promised himselfe both Body and Soule vnto the Diuel.

Epist. Hulderici ad Nicolaũ Papam.

Notwithstanding, I haue seene the same Epistle vnto P. Nicolas together with another Epistle to like purpose, written in old Volume of very ancient Record, vnder the name of Volusianus the Bishop of Carthage. But, what need we to touch all the particulars? The Doctors of the Great Schoole of Sorbona in Paris, haue determined in their Articles, that S Peter himselfe erred in the Faith. The Councel of Basil condemneth Pope Eugenius by these words: Eugenium contemptorem Sacrorum Canonum: Pacis, & Veritatis Ecclesiæ Dei perturbatorem notorium: Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ Scandalizatorem: Simoniacum: Periurum: Incorrigibilem. Schismaticum: à Fide Deuium: pertinacem Hæreticum, &c. We condemne and depose Pope Eugenius a despiser of the holy Canons, a disturber of the Peace & Vnity of the Church of God: a notorius offender of the whole Vniuersal Church: a Simoniste: A forsworne man: a man Vncorrigible: a Schismatike: a man false from the faith, and a wilfull Heretike.

Eras. in Annot. in epist. ad Gal. ca. 2. In faciem illi restiti. Conc. Basil. Sess. 34 24. Quæst. 3. Hæresis. In Conc. Constantiæ Appendice, c. Inprimis Quinimò idem Iohan. Pap. 22. dixit, & pertinaciter asserit.

Of Pope Iohns Heresie, touching the immortality of the soule, we shall speake more hereafter. S. Hierome saith: Qui Scripturam intelligit aliter, quàm sensus Spiritus Sancti flagitat, quo scripta est, licèt ab Ecclesia non recesserit, tamen Hæreticus appellari potest:

Whosoeuer

Whosoeuer otherwise vnderstandeth the Scriptures, then the sense of the Holy Ghost requireth, by whom they were written (as it is most certaine, the Pope in infinit places both hath done and doth) although he be not departed from the Church, yet he may well be called an Heretike.

Now, if Idolaters, Montanists, Arians, Monothelites, Nestorians, Deniers of the Immortality, Simonists, Sorcerers, Maintainers of Filthinesse, and other obstinate and wilful Heretikes may erre, then, whatsoeuer M. Harding and his Fellowes shall say to the contrary, it is easily seene, that the Pope may erre.

Verily, the Councell of Basil saith thus: Multi ex summis Pontificibus in Hæreses & Errores lapsi esse dicuntur, & leguntur: Certum est, Papam Errare posse: Concilium sæpè condemnauit atque deposuit Papam, tam ratione Fidei, quàm Morum: It is reported and read, that many Popes haue fallen into Erroures and Heresies: It is certaine, that the Pope may Erre: The Councell hath oftentimes condemned and remooued the Pope, in respect as well of his heresie in Faith, as of his leaudnesse in life. Visellus saith: Summorum Pontificum quidam pestilenter errauerunt: Certaine of the Bishops of Rome haue beene in pestilent Heresies. Your owne Glosse saith: Certum est, quòd Papa errare potest: It is certaine that the Pope may erre. Another of your Doctors saith: Interdum possit aliquis esse, qui esset à Sede remouendus: vt si esset Fœmina, vel Hæreticus: sicut fuerunt aliqui: & ob hoc non numerantur in Catalogo Paparum: The Pope may sometimes be such a one, as may seeme worthy to be remooued: as if he were a Woman or an Heretike. And certaine such there haue been: and therefore they be not reckoned in the Calendar of the Popes. Another saith: Aliqui Papæ inuenti sunt flagitiosi & Hæretici: Some Popes haue beene found wicked men and Heretikes. Another saith: Et Papa, & Episcopi sunt deuiabiles à Fide: Both Popes and Bishops may wander from the Faith. Another saith: Papa mandans aliquid fieri, quod sonet in Hæresim, turbat statum Ecclesiæ, & non est ei parendum: The Pope commanding anything to be done, that soundeth of Heresie, troubleth the state of the Church, and wee may not obey him. Another saith: Papa potest esse Hæreticus, & de Hæresi iudicari: The Pope may be an Heretike, and of Heresie may be iudged.

All these were the Popes vndoubted friends. But now let vs heare the Pope himselfe. Pope Pius 2. otherwise called Æneas Syluius, saith thus: Quid si criminosus Papa contraria Fidei prædicet, Hereticisque Dogmatibus imbuat Subditos? What if a notorious wicked Pope teach things contrary to the Faith, and with Hereticall Doctrine peruert his Subiects? He could neuer haue moued this question if he had thought it a matter impossible, that euer the Pope should be an Heretike.

I would not stand so long in so cleere a case, were it not, that M. Harding, all this notwithstanding, telleth vs so sadly, and biddeth vs beleeue it vpon his warrant, that the Pope vndoubtedly can neuer erre. Stanislaus Hosius the greatest tickler of that side, blusheth not to say thus: Numerentur omnes, &c. Reckon all the Popes that euer were from Peter, vntill this Iulius, that now is: there neuer sate in this chaire any Arian, any Donatist, any Pelagian, or any other, that professed any maner Heresie. Yet neuertheless your owne Doctor Alphonsus saith: Non credo aliquem esse adeò Impudentem Papæ assentatorem vt ei tribuere hoc velit, vt nec errare, nec in Interpretatione Sacrarum literarum hallucinari possit: I beleeue, there is no so shameless a flatterer of the Pope, that will grant him this Prerogatiue, that he can neuer erre, nor be deceiued in the expounding of the Scriptures. Heer, M. Harding, your owne principal Doctor Alphonsus calleth al them that maintaine your Doctrine, and say as you say, The shameless flatterers of the Pope. Certainly, I thinke, it may safely be said: If a man wil take the view of all Christendome, he shal not find so many Heretikes in any one See whatsoeuer, as may be found in the See of Rome. And for that cause perhaps Franciscus Petrarcha calleth Rome, Asylum Hæresium, & Errorum: The Sanctuary of Errours and Heresies: And in his Italian Sonets, he calleth it, The Schoole of Error, and the Temple of Heresie.

As for Nicolas Lyra, ye doubt of our dealing, for that the Printer hath not quoted the place. It may please you therefore to peruse his Notes vpon the sixteenth Chapter of S. Matthew. There among others, ye shal find these words: Ex hoc patet, quod Ecclesia non consistit in hominibus, ratione Potestatis, vel Dignitatis Ecclesiasticæ, vel Secularis: Quia multi Principes, & Summi Pontifices inuenti sunt apostatasse à Fide: Hereby it appeareth, that the Church standeth not vpon men, in consideration, either of their Power, or of their Dignity, either Ecclesiasticall or Temporall. For many Princes and Popes haue been found to haue straied from the Faith. Therefore Baldus saith, Cautela est, quòd quis dicat, Credo quod credit Sancta Mater Ecclesia: non quod credit Papa: It is to be marked, that a man may say, I beleeue, that the Church beleeueth: but he may not say, I beleeue, that the Pope beleeueth. His meaning is, that the Pope may be deceiued, and beleeue amisse. Yee say, Christ, naciter credidit animam hominis cum corpore humano mori, & extingui, ad instar animalium brutorum.

Whether the Pope may erre or no.

Christ praied for Peter, Ergo the Pope cannot erre. But where was Christs Praier then, when so many Heretikes were Popes in Rome? Will ye say, that Christ praid for Arians, for Nestorians, for Montanists, for Monothelites, for Simonists, for Idolaters, for Necromancers, for Poisoners, for Murtherers, and for Dame Ioane too? Or that by the vertue of Christs Praier, none of these could euer Erre: or that the Popes errours must go for Truth, or his Heresies be holden as Right Religion, only because you tell vs, that whatsoeuer ye say, he cannot erre? Of M. Harding, I shewed you before, that Christ praied not only for Peter, but also for all the rest of his Disciples. Origen saith, as he is before alleged: Orig in Matt. Tract. 1. Num audebimus dicere, quòd aduersus vnum Petrum non prævalituræ sint Portæ Inferorum: aduersus cæteros Apostolos prevalituræ sint? Shall we dare to say, that the Gates of Hell shall not prevaile against Onely Peter? and that the same Gates shall prevaile against all other the Apostles? S. Cyprian saith: Cypr in Oratione Dominicâ Rogabat pro delictis nostris, sicut ipse declarat, cùm dicit ad Petrum: Ego rogaui pro te, ne deficiat Fides tua: Christ praied (not for Peter only, but) for our sinnes, as he himselfe declareth, saying vnto Peter, I haue praied for thee, that thy Faith should not faile. S. Augustine Aug. de verbis Domin. secund. Luc. Serm. 36. expounding the same words, saith thus: Ego rogaui Patrem pro vobis, ne deficiat Fides vestra: I haue praied (not only for Peter, but also) for you, that your Faith should not faile. Chrysostome Chrys. in Mat. hom 33. in opere imperf. saith: Omnis Christianus, qui suscipit Verbum Petri, Thronus fit Petri: & Petrus sedet in eo: Euery Christian man, that receiueth the word of Peter, is made Peters Chaire, and Peter himselfe sitteth in him.

Otherwise, M. Harding, they are not all Peters that sit in place of Peter. S. Ambrose Ambr. de Pœnit. lib. 1. ca 6. saith: Non habent hæreditatem Petri, qui fidem Petri non habent: They haue not Peters inheritance, that haue not the Faith of Peter.

Hier. in Sophoniam cap. 1. S. Hierome saith: Auferet Dominus nomina vanæ gloriæ, & admirationis falsæ, quæ versantur in Ecclesia: God will take away these names of vaine glory and false ostentation, that are vsed in the Church. Wher we say, Pope Liberius fauoured the Arians, that (ye say) is stark falle. And yet, ye know, S. Hierome is the reporter of that falshood. But S. Hierome (ye say) was deceiued. In such Reuerence and Regard ye haue the Doctors and learned Fathers of the Church. Ye beleeue them no farther then ye list. I doubt not, but S. Hierome might better say, M. Harding is deceiued. If S. Hieromes authority suffice you not, you may take also the authority of S. Augustine. For S. Augustine saith, as he is alleged by Cardinall Cusanus, that Pope Liberius gaue his hand and consent vnto the Arians. Certainly Alphonsus your owne Doctor saith: De Liberio Papa, constat fuisse Arianum: Touching Pope Liberius, it is well knowne he was an Arian. Platina saith: Liberius vt quidam volunt, in rebus omnibus sensit cum Hæreticis: Pope Liberius, as some say, was in all points of one iudgement with the Arian Heretikes.

Pope Liberius Hieron. de Ecc. Scriptorib. In Fortunatiano.

Antoninus the Archbishop of Florence saith: Liberius Papa consensit præceptis Augusti (Ariani) vt vnà cum Hæreticis communicaret: Pope Liberius so consented to the commandements of the Arian Emperor, that he communicated with the Heretikes. So saith Iouerius in the Abridgement of Councels. So saith Hermannus Gigas. So saith your verie Legend commonly called Historia Longobardica. Among others Erasmus saith: Ariana Hæresis, & Romanum Pontificem inuoluit, & ipsos Imperatores: The Arians Heresie intangled and wrapt both Pope and Emperor. By the Pope namely he meaneth Pope Liberius.

Cardinall Cusanus saith: Liberius, & Honorius, & alij in Cathedra Petri aliquandiu sedentes in errorem Schismaticum seducti ceciderunt: Pope Liberius and Honorius, and others sitting in Peters Chaire, haue fallen into Schismaticall error, and haue been deceiued.

Yet you doubt not to say, S. Hierome was shamefully deceiued, and wrote of ignorance, he knew not what, and all is false.

Pope Iohn.

Likewise ye say, That we report of Pope Iohn is most false and impudent. Our report is, That Pope Iohn denied the immortality of the soule: not thoroughly and altogether, but only in that he said, Vntil the time of the Last iudgement, the Soule lieth still, as in a trance, as doth the Body, without sense of ioy or paine. Wherein he not only withstood the Expresse Word of God, but also vnwares quite ouerthrew his owne whole Kingdome of Purgatory, which is the greatest and fairest of all his three Crownes. For what anaile his Pardons and Trentals, if the soule lie still asleepe vntill the day of Iudgement, and feele no paine? Verily after the last Iudgement, by common consent, there shall be no Purgatory, no Trentall, no Masse, no Pope, no Pardon. Now if there be no place of Purgatory, neither before, nor after the last iudgement, then may we wel conclude, that absolutely and without doubt, there is no Purgatory. The first authors of this errour, as S. Augustine saith, were the Heretikes called Arabici.

Aug ad Quod vult deum, hæres 83.

Gerson Serm. 1 in Fest. Paschal.

Touching Pope Iohns errour, Gerson saith thus: Iohannes Papa 22. decreuit, &c. Pope Iohn 22. decreed, that the Soules of the wicked should not be punished before the day of the last Iudgement: which error the Vniuersitie of Paris condemned for Heresie, and caused the Pope to recant, recant. One of your owne companions of Louaine saith: Pope Iohn kept this errour secretly to himselfe, and neuer had the open consent of the Church of Rome. And for better excuse hereof he saith: Petrus non Fidem Christi, sed Christum, salua Fide, negauit: Peter denied not the Faith of Christ, but his Faith saued, he denied no more but only Christ. And so by this pretty shift of your Louanian Diuinity, ye haue both Christ without Faith, and also Faith without Christ. Thus M. Harding, it is plaine by your owne Doctours and Fellows, that our report of Pope Iohn, is neither a false slander, as you say, nor proceedeth of detestable and wicked malice. Copus Dial. 1. pag. 50. pag. 51.

Monkes, Nunnes, Friars.

Addition. ☞ M. Harding. What shall I say, but al is false? It is a foule thing, M. Iewel, & a wicked impudencie thus to belie the Doctours. Certaine it is, Gerson neuer said it, nor in Sermone Paschali, as you report, nor any where else, that this Pope Iohn made any such decree. Neither was his error as you vntruly burden him, &c. That ye write touching this Pope either proceedeth of malice, or of ignorance, &c. The errour of Pope Iohn 22. was not, that the soules of the wicked be not punished before the day of the last Iudgement, but that the soules of the good see not the face of God before the last daie. His position was conceiued with these termes, as we finde it in Adrianus that learned Pope, and in the Extrauagant of Pope Benedictus vndecimus who succeeded him next: Anima purgatæ ante finale Iudicium non habent Stolam, quæ est clara, & facialis visio Dei. M. Harding fol. 64. a. M. Harding fol. 65. a.

Of this question some Doctours then held the Affirmatiue, some the Negatiue. Amongst them that held the Negatiue, this Pope Iohn 22. was one before he was Pope, and perhaps also afterward. But he held it only as his priuate opinion. M. Harding fol. 65. b.

Now this was an error in Pope Iohn, I denie not: yet for the same is not he to be counted an Heretike: as neither S. Irenæus, Theophylactus & S. Bernard are, who seeme to haue beene of the same opinion. Gerson saith: Propter, quod apparet Falsitas Doctrinæ Papæ Iohannis 22 quæ damnata fuit cū sono Buccinarū, vel Tubarum cora Rege Philippo Auunculo tuo per Theologos Parisienses. Remember, good Reader, this error of Pope Iohn 22. was not condemned by the Diuines of Paris, when he was Pope, but before, whē he was a priuate Doctor, and liued in the Realm of France &c. And so by this Purgatory is not taken away at all, as your scoffing tale that liketh you so wel, pretendeth it to be: Neither were the Heretikes, that of S. Augustine are called Arabici, the first authors of this error, as you say, but the Armenians and Grecians, if we may beleeue Guido. Now touching that you haue alleged out of the Councel of Constance, I maruel with what face you bring it in: & what a great falshood is it to put in your Booke the name of Pope Iohn 22. for Pope Iohn 23. The name of this Iohn 23. was before he took vpō him to be Pope, Balthazar de Cassa, as there ye haue it declared, &c. Neither was he a true Pope, lawfully elect, but an Vsurper, as two others were with him at the same time. So by this place ye haue proued no Heresie against Pope Iohn 22. nor against any tru Pope at al, but only haue shewed your self a shamelesse shifter, and one that hath a more malicious mind to hurt the authority of the Pope, thē matter of iust accusatiō against him. Fol. 66. b. Fol. 66. a. 67. a.

The Answer. Al this is true, no doubt. For M. Hardings sawes must go for Gospel. First, good Reader, I wil tel thee, what man this Pope Iohn was, & then make answer to euery peece hereof in order. The next Pope before him was Clemens the fifth, that caused Franciscus Dandalus the Ambassador of Venice, to come before him tied in an iron chaine and to wallow vnder his Table, as a Dogge, while his Holinesse sate at Supper. Otherwise the indignation he had conceiued against the Venetians, could neuer be swaged. The fourth Pope after him was Vrbanus the fourth, that toke fiue of his Cardinals vpon displeasure, & tied them vp in Sackes, and threw them out into the Sea. As for this Pope Iohn himselfe, he turned Bishoprickes into Abbies, and Abbies into Bishoprickes, Bishoprickes into Archbishoprickes, and Archbishoprikes into Bishoprickes: one Bishoprick into two, and two into one: Cities into Townes, and Townes into Cities: And thus was euermore altering and neuer contented. Pope Clement his predecessour being dead, the Cardinals, after they had long contended among themselues about the election of a Pope, and could not agree, they committed the whole matter in trust vnto this Iohn, being then also himselfe a Cardinal, that he should chuse whom he best liked, and end the strife, nothing doubting, but he would haue chosen one of the same Cardinals that they had named. But he hauing the whole power in his owne hand, like a man of trust, forgat al others, and chose himselfe, and so was Pope by his owne election. Being Pope, he excommunicated Lodouicus the Emperour, for that he had attempted to execute some part of his Emperial office without his Licence. By meane whereof he inflamed al Christendome with such discord and hatred, and deadly warres, as could not afterward be quenched in thirty yeares. He said, he had power to raise vp Emperors and to depose them at his pleasure: and that, whensoeuer the Empire is void, the Pope is Emperor: and that there is no power aboue the Pope. Sabell. Ennead. 9. lib. 7. Sabell. Ennead. 9. lib 9. Nancl. Gerera. 44. Nancl. Gerera. 44. Naucler. Carion. pro sua voluntate. Paralipomen. Vrspergensis.

And whereas certaine Preachers, loathing the intollerable ambition, and lozolinesse of the Clergy that then was, had told the people openly in their Sermons, that Christ and his Apostles were simple and poore, and possessours of nothing, he caused them to be taken and condemned, and burnt as Heretikes. Which thing, saith one, he did, the better to iustifie his owne greedinesse. For at the time of his death he left in his Treasury fiue and twenty thousand thousand Crownes in ready gold: which thing was the more to be wondred at, for that not long before the same, Pope Iohn had ioined in war with Robert the King of Apulia, in defense of the State of Genua: in which warre, as Antoninus Florentinus Anselmus Rid. millies viginti quinque millia.

Anton part. 3. Ti. 21. cap. 4. rentinus ſaith, ſuch abundance of gold and treaſure was ſpent on both ſides, as might haue bought a good kingdome. Such a one, M. Harding, was Pope Iohn: whoſe Doctrin you may not in any wiſe ſuffer to be ſtained. And therefore, touching the matter it ſelfe, you haue minced it prettily. It was no Hereſie, you ſay, but onely an Errour. And why ſo? I trow, becauſe this Iohn was no inferiour Biſhop, nor priuate man, but a Biſhop of Biſhops and a Pope. For in any other poore man it had beene an Hereſie. The Arabians and Armenians many hundred yeares before were condemned and holden as Heretikes for the ſame. So bleſſed a thing is it to be a Pope.

M. Har. 65. b.

Pope Iohn 22.

But if this Errour were no Hereſie in Pope Iohn, then a great many, that ſo charged him, did him great wrong, and were much to blame. Antoninus ſaith, Iohannes, 22. Sermonem faciens in publico Conſiſtorio, dixit quædam hæreſim ſapientia: Pope Iohn, ſpeaking openly in the Conſiſtory, vttered certaine words ſauoring of Hereſie: and therefore he ſaith, that of many he was iudged an Heretike. Chriſtianus Maſſæus ſaith: Iohannes Papa 22. miſit Pariſios duos, qui hanc hæreſim prædicarent: Pope Iohn ſent two Preachers to Paris, to ſet forth this Hereſie. Nauclerus ſaith: Imo Iohannem Papam 22. magni & multi Theologi, ſcientia, & vita probati dogmatizabant eſſe hæreticum: Nay, many great and famous Doctours of Diuinity, notable, aſwel for their learning, as for their Life, publiſhed Pope Iohn to be an Heretike. So many Hiſtoriographers, and ſo many, and ſo notable Doctors of Diuinity may be witneſſes ſufficient to proue one Heretike, if he were not a Pope.

Gerſon ſaith not, Iohannes Papa decreuit: Pope Iohn decreed. This (you ſay) is a fonle thing, and a wicked impudency. The Anſwer. It is no manly part, M. Harding, to ſtriue and wrangle about words when the matter is plain. If Gerſon ſaid not, Pope Iohn decreed theſe things, yet he ſaid, Pope Iohn publiſhed and taught theſe things. And a man would thinke, that Teaching and Publiſhing were not much leſſe, then Decreeing. Gerſons words be plaine, euen as you your ſelfe haue alleged them: Propterea apparet falſitas Decretæ Papæ Iohannis 22. Hereby appeareth the falſhood of the Doctrin of Pope Iohn. Chriſtianus Maſſæus ſaith: Papa Iohannes prædicauit errorem: Pope Iohn preached or ſet foorth this errour. And it is ſaid, the Popes Will muſt needs ſtand for a Law.

Quanto. Before he was Pope.

You ſay, Remember good Reader, this errour of Pope Iohn 22. was not condemned by the Diuines of Paris when he was Pope, but before when he was a priuat Doctor, and liued in the Realm of France. The Anſwer. Thou muſt beleeue M. Harding, good Reader, be his tale neuer ſo vnlikely, yea though he ſpeak impoſſibilities. This errour of Pope Iohn (ſaith he) was condemned in the preſence of Philip the French King, not whē Iohn was Pope, but before, when he was a priuat man. Now, I beſeech thee, good Reader, for thy better ſatisfaction, conſider wel the yeares and ages, aſwel of this King Philip the firſt, as alſo of this Pope Iohn the two and twentith. It appeareth by al Writers whatſoeuer, that this Iohn was conſecrated Pope at Auenion anno 1316 and that Philippus Valeſius was crowned King in France, anno 1328. By which Computation it is plaine that this Iohn was Pope thirteene yeares before this Philip was King. This Storie is euident and agreeably confeſſed by al that haue written: yet it pleaſeth M. Harding, to take it by the top, and to turne it backward: and to tell vs of himſelfe only, without further authority, that Philip Valeſius was King, and ſate in place of Iudgement, to heare cauſes of Religion, thirteene yeares at the leaſt, before this Iohn was Pope. Thus by M. Hardings handling, Pope Iohn when he was Pope, yet was no Pope: and Philip was a King thirteene yeares at the leaſt, before he was King. Such pretty verities M. Harding can ſhape vs for his aduantage.

Whē he liued in France.

Yet, M. Harding, you tell vs, That this Iohn was condemned by the Diuines of Paris, not when he was Pope (God forbid: for then muſt we confeſſe that the Pope was an Heretike) but before when he was a priuate Doctor, and liued in the Realme of France. Here is a marueilous caſe, M. Harding. An Heretike by your confeſſion may be a Pope. But a Pope in no wiſe may be an Heretike. This Iohn (you ſay) was hereof condemned, when he was a priuate man and liued in France. I pray you M. Harding, and where liued he afterward being Pope? Loke vp your Chronicles. Where was Pope Iohns abode? Where was his Conſiſtory? Where was his Court during al that whole time, while he was Pope? Perhaps you thinke, it was at Rome. For there ſate S. Peter: There is the continuance of his Succeſſion: and thereof the Popes are called the Biſhops of Rome. If you ſo thinke, M. Harding, your thought deceiueth you. For indeed it is wel knowne, that Pope Clemens the fifth, that was the next Predeceſſour before Pope Iohn 22. remoued himſelf, & al his traine from Rome to Auenion in France, in the yeere of our Lord 1302. From which time, during the ſpace of threeſcore and foureteene yeeres following, the Popes continued ſtil at Auenion and neuer returned backe to Rome. It was in vaine therefore for you to ſay, Pope Iohn at the time of his Condemnation, was no Pope, but only a priuat man and liued in France. For during the whole time of his Popedome, he continued ſtil in France at Auenion. And being foure ſcore and ten yeres of age, he died at Auenion, and at Auenion was buried in the Cathedral Church, where his body reſteth vntill this day, and not in Rome. Pope Iohn 22.

France

Say no more therefore, M. Harding, that Pope Iohns errour was condemned in Paris, and blowne out with Trumpets in the preſence of the King, not when he was Pope, but only when he liued in Priuate Eſtate. For all the Hiſtoriographers that haue written hereof will ſone controle you. Antoninus ſaith: Pope Iohn held this error in the time of his Popedome, and pronounced words ſauouring of Hereſie openly in the Conſiſtory (being Pope.) Nauclerus ſaith: Imò Papam Iohannem magni & multi Theologi, Scientia & vita probati, Dogmatizabant eſſe Hæreticum propter errores certos: Quos tamen die obitus ſui dicitur tepidè reuocaſſe: Et eius Succeſſor Benedictus eos errores fertur publicè damnaſſe. Nay many great and famous Diuines, of great Learning and good Life, proclaimed (not one or other by the name of Iohn, but) Pope Iohn, by the name of Pope, to bee an Heretike for certaine errours: Which errours notwithſtanding it is ſaid that he Coldly reuoked at the time of his death. (But not before, neither then but coldly.) Againe it is ſaid, that Pope Benedictus, his next Succeſſor, openly Condemned the ſame errours. Chriſtianus Maſſæus ſaith: Papa Iohannes prædicauit errorem, &c. Miſitque Pariſios duos, alterum Dominicanum, alterum Franciſcanum, qui eandem Hæreſim prædicarent, &c. Pope Iohn preached and profeſſed an errour, &c. And ſent two Preachers to Paris, the one a Blacke Friar, and the other a Gray Friar, to maintaine the ſame Hereſie. But one Thomas, a Preacher of England, withſtood the Pope. Him the Pope tooke, and threw into priſon. Herevpon the King ſummoned a Councell vnto his Palace in Vinciana Sylua. The whole aſſembly ſubſcribed againſt the Pope. Immediatly the King ſent to Pope Iohn, and willed him to reforme his errour, and to ſet the Preacher at liberty: and ſo he did.

Nauclerus Generat. 45. Anno 1324. Tepidè.

Benedictus Condemnat. Maſſæus, Lib. 18. An. 1332.

Thus you ſee, M. Harding, That Pope Iohn, being Pope, ſtood in errour: That Pope Iohn was condemned for an Heretike: That Pope Iohn profeſſed and preached falſe Doctrine: That Pope Iohn ſent out Preachers to maintaine his Hereſie, and they were Friars: That Pope Iohn was controlled by an Engliſh Preacher: That Pope Iohn was reproued by a Councell: That Pope Iohn was willed by the King to reforme his errour. And yet can you tell vs, all this notwithſtanding, that Pope Iohn was then a Priuate man, and no Pope at all.

Further you ſay: Touching that you haue alleged out of the Councell of Conſtance, what a great falſhood is it to put in your Booke the name of Pope Iohn 22. for Pope Iohn 23? The name of this Iohn 23. was (before he tooke vpon him to be Pope) Balthazar de Caſſa, as there ye haue it declared. Neither was it certaine that he held that deteſtable opinion. Howſoeuer it be, Pope Iohn 23. was not a true Pope lawfully elect, but an Vſuper. The Anſwer. And what if I ſhould here confeſſe an errour, M. Harding? Or what if I ſhould ſay, I had not aduiſedly conſidered the Storie, but had taken one number for another? yet haue you not one Heretike Pope Iohn the leſſe, but one the moe. For howſoeuer ye number them, as it ſhal wel appeare, both were Iohns, and both were Popes, and both were Heretikes. But as you can ſo fauorably tell vs, it is no Hereſie in a Pope, wilfully to maintaine an open error touching the ſtate of the ſoule: ſo I truſt of your courteſie ye will not ſo haſtily condemne it for hainous Hereſie, if a man happen only to miſreckon the name or number of a Pope. For more then that you cannot make it. Otherwiſe it may happen that you your ſelfe, euen in this ſelfe ſame place, may finde your ſelfe in like error, and yeld your ſelfe to be an Heretike. For where you ſay, It was Benedictus vndecimus that followed Iohannes 22. Onuphrius calleth him Benedictum decimum: and Sabellicus ſaith it was Benedictus duodecimus. In this reckoning, if euery miſnumbring of a Pope be an Hereſie, by your iudgement we muſt néeds haue two Hereſies at the leaſt. As for Balthazar à Coſſa, whom ye call Pope Iohn 23. Platina calleth him Pope Iohn 24. Onuphrius calleth him, euen as I did, Pope Iohn 22. & not as you do, Pope Iohn 23. And the other Iohn, whom you cal Pope Iohn 22. he calleth Pope Iohn 21. Looke on your Bookes, & you ſhal finde it. Now, M. Harding, you ſee the very cauſes of all this error: and yet no great cauſe why you ſhould ſo fiercely vpbraid vs with ſo great falſhood. The matter wherewith this Pope Iohn the latter was charged, was this, as it is ſpecially obiected againſt him in the Councell of Conſtance: Quin imò dixit, & pertinaciter credidit, Animam Hominis cum Corpore humano mori & extingui, ad inſtar Animalium Brutorum: Pope Iohn ſaid, and ſtubbornly beleeued, that the Soule of Man dieth together with the Body, and is conſumed to nothing, as the Soule of Brute Beaſts. Therefore, M. Harding, the greateſt fault ye can finde in me in this behalfe is this, that ſeeking to finde Heretikes among the Popes, I thought there had béene but one Pope Iohn condemned of Hereſie, whereas indéed there were two.

M. Har. 66. b.

M. Har. 67. a.

Sabel. Enn. 9.

You ſay, This Hereſie was obiected only againſt Pope Iohn 23. but neuer prooued. But is was obiected against him, M. Harding, in the Councell of Constance, and of his part neuer purged. Seeke his Purgation where ye will, ye shall neuer finde it. And the want of Purgation is called in Law, a plaine Conuiction.

Pope Iohn 22.

Yet the better to countenance a bad matter, you say, This latter Pope Iohn was no true Pope, nor lawfully chosen, as apperteined. Who saith so, M. Harding, but only your selfe? And what is your owne only Authority against all others? In the Councel of Constance, where al the Enormities and Villanies of this Pope Iohns whole life were blased abroad, yet this Article of his Election, and title of Popedome, was neuer laid to his charge. Platina, touching his Election, saith thus: Bononiæ omnium consensu Pontifex creatur: This Iohn was chosen Pope at Bononia, by the consent of al the Cardinals. Hauing the consent of al the Cardinals, he wanted none, no not one. And what Election can be more Canonicall, or Lawful, then when the voices of all the Electours agree together? Certainly in any reasonable iudgement he was much more Lawfully chosen then Pope Iohn 22. that chose himselfe. And yet was that Pope Iohn a Lawfull Pope. Indeed the other two Popes were set vp in Schisme and Diuision, only by a part of the Cardinals. But Pope Iohn 23. was Lawfully chosen by the consent and agreement of the whole: and had he not beene charged with other crimes, he had neuer beene remoued.

Platina in Iohan. 24.

To conclude, you say, The Heretikes that of S. Augustine are called Arabici, were not the first Authours of this errour. But the Armenians and Grecians, if we beleeue Guido. The Answer. And why so, M. Harding? Did not the Arabian Heretikes hold this same errour? Verily S Augustines words are plaine: Arabici dixerunt, animas cum corporibus mori atque dissolui: & in fine Sæculi vtrunque resurgere. But you say, The Armenians were the Founders of this error and they were long before the Arabians. For I trow, so saith your Guido. But examine you better the course of times. You may happen to finde your errour. S. Augustine saith, The Arabians were in the time of Origen, wel neere foure score hundred yeres agoe. As for the Armenians, Alphonsus saith, They began about eleuen hundred yeres agoe, after the Counsel of Chalcedon, about the yere of our Lord 450. that is to say, two hundred and fifty yeres after the Arabians. Now, M. Harding, tell vs, I pray you, whether of these two sorts of Heretikes was the former? Is it not a likely matter, that the Arabians, that were foure score hundred yeres agoe, learned first their Heresie of the Armenians, that followed two hundred and fifty yeres after them?

Now, that the truth of your words may appeare the better, let vs lay forth a Brief hereof by way of Comparison, as in a Table.

M. Harding.	The Answer.
This was an errour in Pope Iohn 22. I deny not. Yet for the same is not he to be counted an Heretike.	Antoninus. Pope Iohn vttered words of Heresie. And many iudged him to be an Heretike. Massæus. Pope Iohn sent Preachers to Paris to maintaine his Heresie.
M. Harding.	The Answer.
Gerson neuer said, that Pope Iohn made any such Decree.	Gerson. Pope Iohn professed and taught this Heresie. Massæus. Pope Iohn preached and published this errour. Prædicauit errorem.
M. Harding.	The Answer.
This error of Pope Iohn 22. was not condemned by the Diuines of Paris, in the presence of the King, when he was Pope, but before, when he was a Priuate Doctour,	Pope Iohn 22. was Pope thirteene yeres before King Philip was King. Antoninus. Pope Iohn spake words sauouring of Heresie, in the Consistorie, that is to say, being Pope. Nauclerus. The most famous Diuines proclaimed Pope Iohn, being Pope, to be an Heretike. Massæus. Pope Iohn preached error, and sent Preachers abroad to maintaine his Heresie.
M. Harding.	The Answer.
Pope Iohn was condemned before he was Pope, when hee liued in the Realme of France.	Pope Iohn, during the whole time of his Popedome, continued stil at Auenion in France, and neuer departed thence to Rome. Sabellicus.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The Answer.

Pope Iohn held this errour only as his priuate opinion.

Gerson. Pope Iohn professed and taught this Doctrine.
Massæus. Pope Iohn preached it, and sent out Preachers to maintaine it, and imprisoned them that durst to withstand it.

Pope Iohn 22.

M. Harding. The Answer.

You name Pope Iohn 22. for Pope Iohn 23.

Onuphrius calleth him, as I doe, Pope Iohn 22.
Platina calleth him Pope Iohn 24. and not as you do Pope Iohn. 23.
Instead of one Heretical Pope Iohn, we haue found two, and the latter much more horrible then the former.

M. Harding. The Answer.

This heresie was obiected against Pope Iohn 23. in the Councell of Constance, but neuer proued.

This Heresie was obiected against Pope Iohn, but neuer purged.

M. Harding. The Answer.

Pope Iohn 23. was neuer lawfully chosen.

Platina. Pope Iohn was chosen at Bononia, by the consent of al the Cardinals. Whose hath the consent of all the Electors, is Lawfully chosen.

M. Harding. The Answer.

The Arabians were not the Authors of this error, but the Armenians.

S. Augustine. The Arabians were the Authours hereof.
The Arabians were two hundred and fiftie yeeres before the Armenians.

So many waies, M. Harding, haue you corrupted and altered the truth of this storie. And yet you thinke it lawful for you to crie out against vs, All is false: Wicked Impudencie: Ye belie the Doctors: Yeare malicious: Ye are ignorant: Ye are shameleſſe shifters.

For the rest, ye say, We bely Pope Zosimus: He corrupted not the Councell of Nice. For trial whereof I referre my selfe to my Former Replie vnto your Answer. Certainelie whatsoeuer Learned man wil stand to the denial heereof, he must needs want colour in his face. The fraud was notoriouslie found, and detected to the whole world by the Ancient Learned Fathers, Cyrillus and Articus, the one being Patriarke of Alexandria, the other of Antioch, and was reproued and published by two hundred and seuenténe Bishops, openlie in the Councell of Aphrica. The pœnish forged Epistle that ye allege vnder the name of the learned godly Father Athanasius: The fantasticall burning of the Canons of Nice without fire, with other your like childish vanities, scarcelie meet children to play withall, are likewise answered.

Pope Zosimus. Art. 4. Diu. 6. Concil. Aphr. Can. 101.

An epistle forged vnder the name of Athanasius.

One of your owne Louanian companie confesseth, that in the Late Councel of Florence the Greekes there made open complaint, that the Bishop of Rome had corrupted the Canons of the Councell of Nice. Alypius the Bishop of Tagasta, speaking heereof in the Councell of Carthage, saith thus: Adhuc tamen me mouet, quoniam cùm inspiceremus Græca Exemplaria huius Synodi Nicenæ, ista ibi, nescio qua ratione minimè inuenimus: Yet this thing moueth mee, that when we examined and conferred the Originals of the Nicene Councell, written in Greeke, I know not by what meanes, these things we found not there.

The Councell of Nice corrupted. In the Replie. Art. 4. Diu. 6. Copw pag. 78. Conc. Florens. Sessione 20. Concil. Carthag. 6. ca. 4.

Addition. Addition. Howbeit, all this may bee easilie holpen by a Writ of Errour. For you will say, Pope Zosimus alleged the Councell of Sardica, in stead of the Councel of Nice. And heerein he was deceiued: and this was his whole fault. If this were all the fault, M. Harding, yet were it a great fault for Christs Vicar, and S. Peters Successor, in maintenance of his owne inordinate Ambition, to allege one Councell for another, and therewith to face downe two hundred and seuenténe Bishops in Generall Councell. If it were the Councell of Sardica, and not of Nice, why then did Pope Zosimus, so often and so stoutlie allege it for the Councell of Nice? How durst he say, he had seene it, he had read it, and had the verie true Copie of it in his Librarie in Rome? Why did he cause the Bishops of Aphrica, to send so many hundred miles, to Constantinople in Thracia, to Alexandria in Egypt, and to Antioch in Syria, to search the originals of the Councell of Nice, himselfe knowing there was no such thing written in the Councell of Nice?

Whether the Pope may erre or no.

Was this plaine dealing M. Harding? Was this no corruption of a Councell? The Law ſaith: Magna negligentia culpa eſt: Magna culpa dolus eſt: Great negligence is a fault, and a great fault is guile and falſhood.

As for the Councell of Sardica, Nicolaus Cuſanus ſaith: Sardicenſe Concilium pro ſtatuto Niceni Concilij per Legatos Apoſtolicæ Sedis falſò fuit allegatum: The Councell of Sardica, was deceitfully or falſly alleged by the Legates of the Apoſtolike See of Rome, ſent from Pope Zoſimus inſtead of a Canon of the Councell of Nice. Beare, M. Harding, I beſeech you of your courteſie, forget not this: Nicolaus Cuſanus one of your principall Doctors telleth you, that Pope Zoſimus and his Legates deceitfully and falſly alleged the Councel of Sardica under the name of the Councell of Nice.

Nicol. Cuſan. De Concordia, Lib. 2. Cap. 25.

But yet let vs ſee, Of what authoritie and credit was this Councel of Sardica? Nicolaus Cuſanus ſaith: Auguſtinus non putauit illud Concilium eſſe Catholicum, ſed potius Arianum: S. Auguſtine held not the Councell of Sardica for a Catholike Councell, but rather for a Councell of Arian Heretikes. It goeth hard with the Pope, M. Harding, when he is driuen to leaue all Catholike Councels, and to hold by ſuch euidence.

Nicol. Cuſan. De Concordia, Lib. 2. Cap. 15.

Merrily Cuſanus opening his owne iudgement touching the ſaid Councell of Sardica, ſaith thus: Verum eſt, ipſos Patres Aphricani Concilij (in quo & S. Auguſtinus interfuit) in Epiſtola ad Cœleſtinum ſcribere, ſe hanc Conſtitutionem nulla Patrum Synodo inueniſſe Conſtitutam. Quare ſatis poſſet dubitari, an Sardicenſis Concilij Conſtitutio exiſtat. It is certaine that the Biſhops in the Councell of Aphrica (among whom alſo was S. Auguſtine) in their Letters vnto Pope Celeſtine write thus, that they neuer found this Conſtitution decreed in the Councell of any Biſhops: wherefore it may well be doubted whether this be a Conſtitution of the Councell of Sardica, or rather no. Thus, M. Harding, you ſee Pope Zoſimus falſly alleged a Canon of the Councell of Sardica, for a Canon of the Councell of Nice: You ſee, the ſaid Councell of Sardica, whereby ye would hold, was a Councell of Heretikes: You ſee, your owne Doctor Cuſanus doubteth whether euer there were any ſuch Canon written, or no, either in the Councell of Nice, or in the Councell of Sardica, either by Catholikes, or by Heretikes. And yet will you ſay, It cannot be prooued that Pope Zoſimus was a Corrupter of Councels?

Epiſt. Boniſ. 2. ad Eulalium.

Yet Pope Bonifacius, to ſaue the Credit of the See of Rome, was forced to ſay, and publiſh openlie, that the ſaid Alypius, and Aurelius the Biſhop of Carthage, and S. Auguſtine the Biſhop of Hippo, and two hundred and foureſcore other Biſhops, that had eſpied and reuealed this falſhood, were all enflamed and led by the Diuell. And one of your owne ſudden Doctors of Louaine ſaith: Hæc omnia, tanquam ſomnia, tanquam fabulæ, tanquam ſuperflua, abolita, antiquata, calcata ſunt: All theſe Decrees (of theſe Councels of Carthage and Aphrica) are aboliſhed, and repealed, and trodden vnder foot, as Dreames, and Fables, and things ſuperfluous. This, M. Harding, is the weighing of your Councels. If they like you, they are the erpreſſe Voices of the Holy Ghoſt: If they like you not, they are Dreames, and Fables, and things Superfluous.

Copus pag. 93.

Iohan. Camotenſis.

Camotenſis (ye ſay) is ſome worſhipfull Doctor, ſuch as by our owne iudgement might paſſe in the Blacke Gard. Yet was he a Biſhop, M. Harding, in all reſpects farre better then either your Leontius, or your Hippolytus, or your new found Clemens, whom ye call the Apoſtles Fellow, or your vaine fable of Amphilochius. Ye would ſeeme to finde fault with the name; and thinke we ſhould not haue written Camotenſis, but rather Iuo Carnotenſis. Your ghoſte ye ſhew vs: but reaſon thereof ye ſhew vs none. Ye might as well haue ſaid, Fulbertus Carnotenſis, who being verie much conſumed and ſpent with ſickneſſe, as it is learnedly noted among other your Writers, for a reſtoratiue, ſuckt our Ladies breſt, and by vertue thereof was made whole. Ye might likewiſe haue ghelſed it had beene Iohan Sariſburienſis, otherwiſe called by ſome, Rupertus Carnotenſis. For he ſaith: In Eccleſia Romana ſedent Scribæ & Phariſæi: In the Church of Rome ſit, the Scribes and the Phariſeis. But indeed this Writers name is Iohannes Camotenſis alleged by Cornelius Agrippa. His words be theſe: Angelis præcipiunt: Poteſtatem habent in Mortuos. Vim faciunt Scripturis, vt habeant Plenitudinem Poteſtatis. Ipſe Papa iam factus eſt intolerabilis: Eius pompam & faſtum nullus Tyrannorum vnquam æquauit. Legati Romanorum Pontificum ſic bacchantur in Prouincijs acſi ad flagellandam Eccleſiam Satan egreſſus ſit à facie Domini: They lay their Commandements vpon the Angels of God: They haue power vpon the Dead: They wreſt and racke the Scriptures, that they may haue the Fulneſſe of Power. The Pope himſelfe is now become vntolerable. No Tyrant was euer able to match him in Pompe and Pride. The Popes Legates keepe ſuch reuell in Kingdomes and Countries, as if Satan were ſent abroad from the face of the Lord, to ſcourge the Church. This is not your Iuo Carnotenſis: It is Iohannes Camotenſis: And this is his iudgement of your Church of Rome.

M. Harding.

You haue neuer done with your what ifs. Your Interpreter, good Gentlewoman, that fauoureth your pleasant Diuinity so much, seemeth to be weary of it her selfe. For here she turneth your Quid si, into What wil ye say if. And now Sir, doe you demand of vs, as Madam Interpreter maketh you to speake, what we wil say? Forsooth, for this you allege against the Popes Aduocates, Abbats, & Bishops, we say, that the most part is very false and slanderous: somewhat may bee taken for truth in a right sense. As for the Aduocates, I minde not to be their Aduocate, neither haue they need of my helpe. Let them answer one for another: Hostiensis for Abbat Panormitane, and he for Hostiensis. In good sooth, were those excellent men at this day liuing, I thinke verily they would not doe you that honor, as to answer you themselues. Or if they would vouchsafe to doe you so much, I doubt not but they would make short worke with you, and take you vp roundly for halting, with one word, Mentiris, dashing al your allegations, which word in your Diuinity is a Verbe Commune.

Thus leauing Hostiensis and Panormitane to defense of the Canonists, telling you by the way, that in questions of Diuinity we stand not alwaies to their sayings; we answer you on the behalfe of Cornelius the Bishop of Bitonto in Italy (for him ye meane, I suppose, putting in your margent the name of Cornelius only) that he neuer said the Pope is the Light which should come into the world, in that sense as it is spoken of Christ. If you were hardly charged to shew where he said it, or where he wrote it you would be found a lier, as in many other points you are found already. That he neuer wrote it in any of his eloquent Italian Sermons, set forth in print, I am assured. And more hath hee not set forth, Now it remaineth that you tel vs where he saith so, or else confesse your slanderous lie.

* Vntruth, blasphemous, vnadui sedly defended. For the words be plaine. Papa Lux venit in Mundū.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Where ye say, M. Harding, I thinke yee haue learned of a child, that Mentiris is a Verbe Commune, if ye hold on as ye haue begun, ye wil shortly alter the property thereof to your selfe, and make it hencefoorth a Verbe Priuate. Touching Hostiensis and Panormitane, I wil say nothing, but only refer you to the places.

As for Cornelius the Bishop of Bitonto, forasmuch as, contrarie to your Nature, ye plead ignorance, and say ye cannot finde the place, reade therefore these words in his Oration openly pronounced in your Late Chapter at Trident: Quis erit tam iniustus rerum æstimator, qui non dicat, Papa Lux venit in Mundum? sed dilexerunt homines Tenebras magis quàm Lucem. Omnis qui malè agit, odit Lucem. & non venit ad Lucem, vt non arguantur opera eius, quia mala sunt: Who will so vniustly weigh things, but he wil say, The Pope is the Light that is come into the world? But men haue loued Darknesse more then (the Pope, that is) the Light. Whosoeuer doth euill, hateth the Light, and commeth not to the Light, lest his workes should be discouered, for that they be euill.

The Apologie, Chap. 6. Diuision 2.

Shortly, what though they make Decrees expressly against Gods Word, and that, not in hucker mucker, or couertly, but openly, and in the face of the world: must it needs yet be Gospel straight, whatsoeuer they say? Shal these be Gods Holy Army? Or, will Christ be at hand among them there? Shall the Holy Ghost flow in their tongues, or can they with truth say, We and the Holy Ghost haue thought so?

M. Harding.

After a great many of your foolish and false what ifs, you conclude shortly with What if they make Decrees expressly against Gods Word, and that openly in the face of the world? Hereto we answer, requiting your what if with another what if, and say, What if the Learned and Holy Fathers, &c.

The Apology, Chap. 6. Diuision 3.

Hosius contra Brent. Lib. 2.

The Spirit of Truth in Annas and Caiaphas.

Christ worthy to die.

Indeed Peter Asotus and his Companion Hosius stick not to affirme, that the same Councel, wherein our Sauiour Iesus Christ was condemned to die, had both the Spirit of Prophecying, & the Holy Ghost, and the Spirit of Truth: And, that it was neither a false, nor a trifling saying, whē those Bishops said, We haue the Law, & by our Law he ought to die: And, that they, so saying, did light vpon the very Truth of Iudgement: (for so be Hosius words) and, that the same plainly was a iust Decree, whereby they pronounced, that Christ was worthy to die. This, me thinketh, is strange, that these men are not able to speake for themselues, and to defend their owne cause, but they must also take part with Annas and Caiaphas against Christ. For if they wil cal that a Lawful and a good Coūcel, wherein the Sonne of God was most shamefully condemned to die the death, what Councel will they then allow for false, and naught? And yet (as all their Councels, to say truth, commonly be) necessity compelled them to pronounce these things of the Councell holden by Annas and Caiaphas.

M. Harding.

Such vnhoneſt toies better become Brentius, that shameleſſe railing Heretike. Now to you, Sir Defender. You belie Hosius, as Brentius, of whom you borrowed this, belied the reuerent Father Petera Soto. Either you haue readen the place of Hosius, or you haue not. If you haue not, then are you to blame to say so much euil that you know not. If you haue readen the place, then is your fault plaine malice, in putting that to Hosius, the contrary whereof you finde in the place by your selfe alleged, by which you lead vs, as it were by the hand, to behold and consider your owne dishonesty. How iust cause you haue to reprehend Hosius, for that he wrote against Brentius in defense of Petrus a Soto, touching the Councel in which Christ was condemned by Caiaphas, it should best appeare to him that would read the whole place where Hosius treateth that matter. The same would I here haue rehearsed, to the discouering of your false dealing, and shameleſſe lying, were not the same very long.

(a) A discreet & a worthy Proctour. The Acts were naught, & the sentence good.

The sentence was, that Christ should die the death.

(b) This Truth of Iudgement was, That the Sonne of God was a Blasphemer, and had deserued to die.

(c) Vntruth. For thus said Caiaphas: and his iudgement Hosius defēdeth as true and Godly.

(d) Christ, by Hosius iudgmēt was guiltie of death.

First, this is the truth touching the whole: (a) The Acts of those Priests of the Iewes Synagogue were wicked, and contrary to Christ. (a) But their Sentence, though themselues were neuer so euil, was not only true, but also to mankinde most profitable. And S. Iohn in his Gospel witnesseth, it was the oracle of God. For when, after long deliberation of the Councel, Caiaphas the high Bishop and President of that Councel had pronounced his sentence, whereunto al the rest almost gaue their consent, It is expedient for vs, that one man die for the people, and not that al the Nation perish; the Euangelist thereto added his verdict, saying, This he said, not of himselfe, but whereas he was high Bishop of that yeere, he Prophecied. Therefore let this be the true conclusion of the whole matter: The Acts of that Councel were wicked, the sentence was true, and good. Now Hosius treateth this matter so learnedly, and so substantially, as you cannot truly take any aduantage of his words to reprehend him. He staieth himselfe vpon the Scripture, a good ground to stand vpon. Which Scripture refereth doubtful and hard questions to the Priests of the Leuitical Order. Of whom it is said, Iudicabunt tibi Iudicij Veritatem. (b) They shal shew vnto thee the Truth of Iudgement. In this Iudgement, saith Hosius, though it were neuer so wicked, yet was the Truth of Iudgement. How that might be, there he proueth it to Brentius by most manifest argument.

Where ye impute to Hosius, to haue said that the same plainly was a iust decree, (c) whereby they pronounced that Christ was worthy to die, that is your slanderous lie, not Hosius saying. (c) For he saith the cleane contrary, and that sundry times, that it was a wicked Councel & most vniust decree. God forbid any Christian man should say that Christ was worthy to die. (d) He saith, it might haue bin truly pronounced by Caiaphas, that he was guilty of death. And there he sheweth how, very religiously & wisely admonishing the Reader, that he was most innocent, & deserued not to die. And thus Sir you may see, we take not part with Annas & Caiaphas, as you raile, and yet be able, God be thanked, to defend our true cause, & declare you to the world to be false Teachers. Therefore belie vs no more.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

God Christian Reader, this whole matter concerneth only the credit and certainty of Generall Councels. Sotus and Hosius say, whatsoeuer is determined in Councel, must be taken as the vndoubted Iudgement and Word of God. Whereunto the Godly Learned Father Iohannes Brentius replieth thus: Councels sometimes haue erred, and haue vtterly wanted the Spirit of God, as it may appeare by that in a Councel the Sonne of God was condemned, and indeed to die the death. Hosius answereth: When Annas and Caiaphas sate as Presidents in the Councel, and Christ the Son of God was by them condemned to die, yet neuertheleſſe the same Councel had the assistance of the Holy Ghost, & the vndoubted Spirit of Truth.

Hosius Lib. 2. contra Brent.

For, speaking of the same Councel, he saith thus: Vides, Brenti, quemadmodum non defuerit Sacerdotio Leuitico Spiritus Propheticus, Spiritus Sanctus, Spiritus Veritatis:

Ye

Ye see friend Brentius, how that the Leuitical Priesthood (that pronoũced sentence of death against Christ) wanted not the Spirit of Prophesie, the holy Ghost, the Spirit of Truth: Againe he saith: Ex quo tempore primus parens noster de vetito ligno gustauit, factus est Mortis Reus Christus Dei, &c. Nec falsum fuit illud, quod dixerunt, Nos legem habemus & secundum Legem hanc debet mori: From the time, that our first Father tasted of the forbidden fruit, Christ the Son of God became guilty of death: Neither was it false, that the Iewes said, We haue a Law, and according to that Law he ought to die. With this Spirit, I trow, he was inspired that wrote this marginal note vpon your Decrees: Iudęi mortaliter peccâssent, nisi Christum crucifixissent: The Iewes had committed mortal sin, if they had not nailed Christ vnto the Crosse. Againe Hosius saith: Nulla esse potest tanta Pontificum improbitas, quæ impedire queat, quo minùs vera sit illa Dei promissio, Qui indicabunt tibi iudicij Veritatem: Be the wickednesse of Bishops neuer so great, it can neuer hinder, but that this promise of God shall euer be true, The Bishops shal shew thee the truth of Iudgement. Pag. 62. b. The spirit of truth in Annas & Caiaphas. Pag. 63. a. Diſt. 13. Item in margine.

This therefore, M. Harding, is your Doctors meaning: it is sufficient that Bishops only mæt in Councel. God wil supply al the rest. Whatsoeuer they determine, the Holy Ghost wil assist them: they cannot erre. All this is as true, as that Hosius your Doctor saith: Annas and Caiaphas could not erre in pronouncing Sentence of death against Christ. Hosius contra Brent. pa. 63. b.

But for excuse hereof, somewhat to salue a sorry matter, ye tel vs a long tedious tale, without head or fut: that your Reader may think ye say somewhat, ye cry out aloud, Shamelesse railing Heretikes, we belie Hosius, we belie Sotus. Our false dealing, our shamlesse lying, we are impudent and continue in lying. These, M. Harding, be the proues and grounds of your Doctrine, and the most sauoury, and fairest flowers in your garland.

The substance of your tale is this: The Acts of the Councel, where Christ was condemned were leaud and wicked: But the Sentence of death pronounced by the Bishops against Christ, was iust & true. And thus by your dalliance in darke words, and by your blind Distinction betweene Act and Sentence, ye seeke shifts to mocke the world. Ye should plainly haue told vs, what were these Sentences: and what were these Acts: and what great difference ye can espy betweene Act and Sentence: or when euer yee heard of Sentence in Iudgement without Act: or of perfect Act without Sentence: or how then Sentence of the Iudge may be true, if the Act be false: or how the Act may be right, if the Sentence be wrong. For the Act is a direction to the Sentence: and the Sentence groweth vpon the Act. For your credits sake, leaue these toies, M. Harding. Ye haue vsed them ouerlong. They are too childish for a child: they become not your grauity: they deceiue the simple.

Indeed I can easily beleeue, that neither Sotus, nor Hosius was euer so wicked to say, that Christ was rightly and worthily done to death. Howbeit he that saith: The Sentence of death pronounced in Councel against Christ, was iust and true, seemeth indeed to say no lesse. For if the Sentence of Christs death were iust, then had Christ vndoubtedly deserued to die. The very case and course of your Doctrine vndoubtedly forced them thus to say. For if al Councels be good and holy, without exception, then must that also bee a good and a holy Councel, that was assembled against God and against his Christ.

Hosius your Doctor to make the matter plaine, saith thus: Iudas ne sit, an Petrus, an Paulus, Deus attendi non vult: Sed solùm hoc, quod sedet in Cathedra Petri, quod Apostolus: quod Christi Legatus: quod Angelus est Domini exercituum: de cuius ore Legem requirere iussus es. Hoc solum spectari vult. Si Iudas est, quandoquidem Apostolus est, nihil te moueat, quòd Fur est: God will neuer haue thee consider, whether the Pope be a Iudas or a Peter, or a Paul. It is sufficient, only that he sitteth in Peters Chaire: that he is an Apostle, that he is Christs Ambassador: that he is the Angel of the Lord of Hostes: from whose mouth thou art commanded to require the Law. This thing only Christ would haue thee to consider. Be he Iudas, for asmuch as he is an Apostle, let it not moue thee, though he be a Theefe. Hosius in Confessione Petricouien cap. 29.

But Caiaphas said It is good, that one man die for the people, lest al the people perish. Ergo, say you, Caiaphas had the Spirit of God. Alas, M. Harding, although you little passe for your Diuinity, yet why haue you no more regard vnto your Logicke. Euery child knoweth, that this is a Paralogismus, or a deceitfull kinde of reasoning, called Fallacia Accidentis. And that ye may the better espie your ouersight, like as ye say, Caiaphas prophesied blindly, himselfe not vnderstanding, what he said, Ergo, he had the holy Ghost: Euen so may yee say: Balaams Asse reproued his Master and spake the truth, as Caiaphas did: Ergo, Balaams Asse had the holy Ghost. S. Paul saith: No man can say, The Lord Iesus but in the Spirit of God. Hereof by your Logike ye may reason thus: The Diuel said vnto Christ, I know that thou art Christ the Sonne of the liuing God; Ergo, the Diuel had the Spirit of God. 1. Cor. 12.

It pitieth me, M. Harding, to see your follies. Although Caiaphas vnwares & against his wil by the enforcement and power of God, at one only time spake words of Truth, as did also Balaams Asse, and the Diuel, yet it followeth not, that we should therefore at all times runne to Caiphas to seeke the Truth.

as

Aug. epist. 58.

Pope Iohn 22.

S. Augustine saith: Quando Deus voluit, etiam mutum iumentum rationabiliter loquutum est. Nec ideò admoniti sunt homines, in deliberationibus suis, etiam Asinina expectare consilia: When it pleased God, Balaams Asse being a dumbe beast, was able to speake as a man: Yet are not men therefore commanded in all their Consultations and doubtful cases to seeke counsell of an Asse.

As for the Lies, Shames and Slanders, ye would so liberally lay vpon vs, it may please you, to take them freely home againe. If ye be ful freight and haue store sufficient of your owne, yet may you diuide them among your pore Louanian Brethren. It shalbe a worke of Supererogation. For yewisse, they haue of their owne enough alreadie. To conclude, your whole drift herein is, to force your Reader to haue a good opinion of Annas and Caiphas that condemned Christ to die the death: for that, as Hosius saith, they had the Spirit of Prophesie, the Holy Ghost, and the Spirit of Truth: and therefore could not erre in their iudgement.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision. 1.

BVT wil these men (I say) reforme vs the Church, being themselues both the persons guilty, and the Iudges too? Will they abate their owne Ambition & their Pride? Will they ouerthrow their own causes, & giue sentence against themselues, that they must leaue off to be vnlearned Bishops, Slowbellies, Heapers together of Benefices, Takers vpon them as Princes and Men of War? Will the Abbats, the Popes deare darlings iudge the Monke for a Theefe, which laboureth not for his liuing: & that it is against al Law to suffer such a one to liue & to be found either in City or in Country, al of other mens charges? Or else, that a Monk ought to lie on the ground, to liue hardly with Hearbs, & Pease, to study earnestly, to argue, to pray, to worke with hand, and fully to bend himself, to come to the Ministery of the Church? In faith, as soone wil the Pharisеis, and Scribes repaire againe the Temple of God, and restore it vnto vs a House of Prayer, in stead of a Denne of Theeues.

M. Harding.

Ye leape with a light skip from one thing to another, neither dwel yee long in any one point, but in lying.

But ye say, they be both the persons guilty, and the Iudges also. Iudge, doubtlesse they be. For their vocation is lawful, ye cannot disproue it. Guilty also they be, we denie not, but whereof? Of frailelyuing, not of false teaching for commonly they teach nothing). And where? In the Court of conscience, (a) not in the Court of man. Or if any of them be, both before this Councel, and in this Councel godly Orders haue beene decreed for holesome reformation.

(a Vntruth. For their life is notorious to the world.

As for Monkes, ye may not looke now, that either they get their liuing only by their hand labour, or that they be bound to the hard discipline which Monkes liued in, for twelue hundred yeers past. Now be other daies, other maners. Such great austerity is to be woundred at, and to be wished for. But whether the Religious men of our time be to be compelled thereto, I leaue it to wise consideration. If it may be lawful to direct vs in such spirituall cases by an old example of externe prudency, me thinketh the discretion of Iacobs answer to his Brother Esau is worthy to be thought on. When Esau courteously offered his Brother Iacob returning from Mesopotamia with al his traine of houshold & cattel to goe with him and keepe him company, the rest of the iourney that remained from the place of their first meeting; Iacob ful mildly said, Sir, you know, if it like your Lordship, that I haue here with me tender Babes, (b) Ewes with Lambe (b) and Kine with Calfe: if I our labour them with fast going, my flockes wil die al in a day: May it please your Lordship to goe before me your seruant? I wil follow after the flocke faire and soft, so as I shall see my little ones able to beare it. Genes. 33.

(b) M. Hard. likeneth his Monkes to droues of Cattell.

Likewise if there be not a discreet moderation vsed, but all Monkes be rigorously driuen to the austerity of life they liued in of old time, in this so great looseness of maners, specially the discipline of al religions being so far slaked in comparison of the ancient seuerity, it is to bee feared, we shall rather see Cloisters forsaken (which God grant) then a godly reformation procured (which will neuer be.)

In the end of this Paragraph, ye shew your selfe to despaire of our amendment. God giue you grace so to doe for your parts, as we may haue good cause to hope better of you. But whether we amend our faults or otherwise, what pertaineth that to the iustification of your new Gospel, and to the disproofe of the Catholike faith by vs defended? you know, it is no good argument à moribus ad Doctrinam. Who would not hisse you, and trampe you out of schooles, if ye made this fond reason: The Papists liues be faultie, ergo, their teaching is false? To this head all the reasons of your Apologie in effect may be reduced: and they hold Per locum topicum noui Euangely à malis moribus. (c) Doth not Christ himselfe confute all such your feeble reasons, where hee saith, The Scribes and Pharisies sit in the chaire of Moses, whatsoeuer they say to you, do ye, but after their workes doe ye not? Math. 23.

(c) Here M. Harding compareth the Pope & his Bishops with the Scribes and Pharisеis.

The

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Monkes, Nunnes, Friars.

Ye say, If your Monkes and Friars should now be forced to keepe the old discipline & seuerity of their Foundations, they would rather breake their Cloisters, and leaue altogether. And therefore by a fit comparison, ye resemble them to the beauie droues of Iacobs cattell. Whereby yee seeme secretly to giue vs to imagine, that the Monkes Cowle is not alwaies so holie a weed as is pretended. S. Hierome describing the life and order of Monkes in his time saith thus: Nihil arrogant sibi de continentia supercilij. Humilitatis inter omnes contentio est. Quicunque nouissimus fuerit, hic primus putatur. In veste nulla discretio, nulla admiratio. Vbicunque placuerit incedere, nec detractionis est, nec laudis. Ieunia neminem subleuant: nec defertur inediæ: nec moderata saturitas condemnatur. Suo Domino stat vnusquisque, aut cadit. Nemo iudicat alterum, ne à Domino iudicetur: They brag not of their sole or single life. All their contention is, who may be most humble. Whosoeuer is last, hee is counted first. There is neither difference nor wondring in apparell. Howsoeuer it pleaseth a man to goe, he is neither slandered for it, nor commended. No man is aduanced for his Fasting. Neither is abstinence praised, nor sober refreshing condemned. Each man either standeth or falleth to his Lord. No man iudgeth other, lest of the Lord he himselfe be iudged. Hier. ad Martellam, vt commigret Bethlehem.

But (ye say) your Monkes now adaies are waxen nice and cranke. Such extreame rigour and seuerity they may not beare.

Such holy men they were, of whom Sulpitius Seuerus writeth: Sedentes munera expectant, atque omne vitæ decus mercede corruptum habent, dum quasi venalem præ se ferunt sanctimoniam: These Friars sit still, and looke for money: & haue all the beauty of their life corrupted with hire, setting their holinesse out to sale. Of such holie persons, S. Hierome telleth vs: post cœnam dubiam Apostolos somniant: After they haue well filled their bellies, they dreame of the Apostles. In like sort he writeth of certaine Monkes: Apud hos affectata sunt omnia: Laxæ manicæ: Caligæ follicantes: Vestis crassior. Crebra suspiria: Visitatio Virginum: Detractio Clericorum: Et si quando Dies Festus venerit, saturantur ad vomitum: Among these men, all things are counterfet: Their wide sleeues, their great boots: their course gowne: their often sighes: their visiting of Virgins: their backebiting of Priests. And if their come a Holy day, they eat vntill they be faine to perbrake. Sulpitius Seuerus in Chronic. Hier. ad Eustochium de Virginitate seruanda. in eadem epist. ad Eustochium.

This, no doubt, is that holinesse that Christ brought into the World.

Nicolaus Cusanus a Cardinall of the Church of Rome, thus setteth out the whole life and holinesse of your Monkes: Apud plures non nisi habitus extrinsecus remansit, & nihil de Spiritu Fundatoris: In the most part of them there appeareth only an outward shew in their apparell: but they haue left themselues no part of their Founders Spirit. Nicol. Cusanus Excit. lib. 9. Anima.

Againe he saith: Fallacia illorum, qui sub habitu Christi apparent, vix potest sciri, ob suam varietatem. Nam alius quidem sub hac veste, alius sub alia, alius sub capitio, alius sub hoc Religionis signo, alius sub alio se Christo militare asserit: Licèt penè omnes non quæ Christi, sed quæ sua sunt quærant. Omnes enim studentauaritiæ a maximo vsque ad minimum: The falshood of them that walke vnder the apparell of Christ can hardly be knowen, they are so diuers. For they all say, they serue Christ, one vnder one weed, another vnder another: One vnder a Cowle, another vnder a Hood: one vnder one badge of Religion, and another vnder another. Notwithstanding, the whole sort of them, for the most part, seeke their owne, and not that pertaineth to Iesus Christ. For they are all bent to couetousnesse, euen from the greatest to the least. Nicol Cusanus Excitat lib. 7. Moneta.

These are your Monkes, M. Harding, this is their holinesse. They haue no part of their Founders Spirit: They seeke their owne: They seeke not the glory of Christ.

But your life (ye say) is no preiudice to your Faith: Howsoeuer you liue, yet is your Doctrine right good and Catholike: and that ye proue by the words of Christ: The Scribes and Phariseis sit on Moses chaire: Whatsoeuer they say to you, doe ye: but after their workes doe ye not. Matth. 23. If this be the best claime ye can hold by, then suffer vs, M. Harding, to say to you, as Christ sometime said to them, whom ye confesse to be your Fathers: Woe be vnto you, yee Scribes and Phariseis, ye Hypocrites. Ye deuoure and rauen vp poore Widowes houses, vnder the colour of long praier. Outwardly ye seeme holy: but within ye are full of hypocrisie and wickednesse. In eodem capite

S. Augustine saith vnto the old Heretikes called the Manicheis: Dicitis, non oportere omnino quæri, quales sunt homines, qui vestram sectam profitentur: sed qualis sit ipsa professio. Quid vobis fallacius, quid insidiosius, quid malitiosius dici aut inueniri potest? Ye say, we may not examine what men they be that professe your sect: but only what is their profession. What thing can there be found more false, more deceitfull, more malicious then you are? August. de moribus Manich lib 2 ca. 19. & 20.

Thus said S. Augustine to the Manicheis. Take heed, M. Harding, lest the same may be said to some of you.

The Freedome of the Councell of Trident.

The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision. 2.

There haue been, I know, certaine of their own companions, which haue found fault with many errours in the Church, as Pope Adrian, Æneas Syluius, Cardinall Poole, Pighius, and others, as is afore said: they held afterwards their Councel at Trident, in the selfe same place, where it is now appointed. There assembled many Bishops and Abbats, & others, whom it behooued for that matter. They were alone by themselues: whatsoeuer they did, no body gainsaid it: for they had quite shut out & barred our side from al maner of assemblies: & there they sate sixe yeers feeding folkes with a maruellous expectation of their doings. The first six Moneths, as though it were greatly needfull, they made many determinations of the Holy Trinity, of the Father, of the Son, & of the Holy Ghost, which were godly things indeed, but not so necessary for that time. Let vs see, in al that while, of so many, so manifest, so often confessed by them, & so euident Errours, what one Errour haue they amended? From what kind of Idolatry haue they reclaimed the people? What Superstition haue they taken away? What peece of their tyranny & pompe haue they diminished? As though al the World may not now see, that this is a Conspiracie, & not a Councell: and that these Bishops whom the Pope hath now called together, be wholly sworn and become bound to beare him their faithful allegeance, & wil do no maner of thing, but that they perceiue pleaseth him & helpeth to aduance his Power, and as he wil haue it: or that they reckon not of the number of mens voices, rather then of the weight and value of the same: Or, that Might there doth not oftentimes ouercome Right.

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth manifest, as hereafter it shall appeare.

(b) A slanderous vntruth. M. Caluin was euer an enemie vnto the Arians.

(c) Vntruth most impudent. For their owne confessed & known errours, they neuer once touched.

(d) Vntruth confessed by M. Hardings owne Fellowes, Read the Answer.

(e) O profound Diuinity!

As you proceed, you talke your pleasure of the godly & learned Fathers assembled in the late Councell of Trent. By the way, as your maner is, you drop lies. Of which one is, that they had quite shut out & barred your side from all maner of assemblies: (a) which is a foule lie. That the first six moneths they occupied themselues with making many determinations of the holy Trinity: that also is another lie. For then the world had no need of any new determinations or decrees concerning the Trinity: what it shall haue hereafter by occasion of your chiefe Master Iohn (b) Caluines Doctrine, it is more feared then yet perceiued.

Where ye would faine see of so many, so manifest, so often confessed by themselues, & so euident errours, what one errour they haue amended: they are not like to satisfie your longing. And yet they haue taken order for the amendment (c) of so many as they know. Neither is any of the same about any point of our Faith, but about things of lesse weight. Your exaggeration of the termes, so many, so manifest, so often confessed by them, & so euident, reporteth in one sentence your so many, so manifest, so often confuted by vs, & so euident lies. When you follow your hot humour and aske, from what kinde of Idolatrie the Fathers of the Tridentine Councel haue reclaimed the people, you go too far. Whatsoeuer blasphemie ye vtter in Bookes & Sermons against the adoration of the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, we know no kind of Idolatry vsed in the Church: (d) Neither is any Idolatry committed by vs in worshipping of Saints in praying to them, nor in the reuerence we exhibit to their Images, as ye beare the people in hand. (e) As I cannot wel take a haire from your lying beard, so wish I, that I could plucke malice from your blasphemous heart.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Whether the learned men of our side were shut out from the right and liberty of your Councell or no, it may soone appeare, partly by that is alreadie said: partly by that shall be said hereafter. Verily the Pope for his Premunire, wil not suffer any Bishop to giue voice in Councell, vnlesse he haue him first solemnly sworne to the See of Rome, and therefore they be all called his Creatures. So Cicero saith, Verres when he had bribed and spoiled the whole Iland of Sicilia, thought it not good, to suffer his name or anie part of his doings to come in hazard, but only before a Iudge or Arbiter of his owne.

Therefore the French Kings Embassadour, as it is said before, protested thus openlie euen in your said Councell: Minùs legitima, minusque libera dicuntur fuisse illa Concilia: qui aderant, ad voluntatem alterius semper loquebantur: These Councels are counted neither so free, nor so lawfull, as they ought to be: they that were there, spake euermore to please an other: (by which other, he meant the Pope.)

In Conc. Trid. Anno. 1562.

And for that cause, the Emperours Maiesty, by his Embassadour Hurtadus Mendoza, solemnly protested against the assemblie of the same Councell. His words be these: Ego Iacobus Hurtadus Mendoza, nomine Pientissimi, & Inuictissimi Domini mei, Caroli Cæsaris Romani Imperatoris, ex illius speciali mandato, ac nomine totius Sacri Romani Imperij, aliorumque Regnorum ac Dominiorum suorum protestor, Nullam posse esse authoritatem assertorum legatorum Sanctitatis Vestræ, & eorum Episcoporum qui sunt Bononiæ, Sanctitati vestræ maiori ex parte obnoxiorum, atque ab illius nutu omnino pendentium, vt in Religionis, & morum Reformationis causa, &c. Legem præscribant: Iames Hurtado Mendoza, in the name of the most godly, and most mighty Prince my Lord Charles, the Roman Emperour, by his speciall Commission, and in the name of the whole Roman Empire, and all other his Realmes and Dominions, doe protest, that the authority of the pretensed Legates of your Holinesse and of such other Bishops, as be now at Bononia, (vnto which town the Councel of Trident was then adiourned) for the most part bound vnto your Holinesse, & wholy hanging vpon your becke, is of no force, namely to make Lawes in cause of Reformation of Religion, and maners.

And that it may appeare in what obedience, and seruile subiection, all Bishops be vnto the Pope, Æneas Syluius, otherwise called Pope Pius the Second, saith thus: Quòd si Episcopus Papæ contradicat, etiam vera loquendo, nihilominùs peccat contra Iusiuradum Papæ præstitum: If a Bishop speake against the Pope, yea although hee speake the truth, yet neuertheleſſe he sinneth against the Oth that he hath made vnto the Pope. Therefore whereas at the late Conference at Norenberg, it was required by the Princes & States of Germany, that al Bishops comming to the Councell, might both be discharged from their Oth made to the Pope, & also sworn to speake & to promote the truth, the Popes Legate there made answer in great disdain, that it might not so be: For that so the Popes hands should be bound. Hereby M. Harding, a blinde man may easily see the forme and fredome of your Councels. If the Bishops be fear'd to say the truth, then is the Pope left in bondage.

Æneas Syl. ad Capitulũ Moguntinum.

Whether your Fathers in the Chapter at Trident, sate there sir whole Moneths, debating and reasoning about the Trinity, or no, of certaine knowledge, I cannot tell. But certainely, what thing else they did, either in all that time, or long after, you can hardlie shew vs. Therefore, if they did not this, forasmuch as nothing else appeareth of their doings, we must imagine, they sate mute in a mummery, and said nothing. Notwithstanding Cassander saith, they bestowed one whole Summer in great and holy Disputations about meaner matters then the Trinity: I meane, onely about the Communion of the Cup. Martinus Kemnitius saith, They held Disputations there and kept great stirre, seuen whole Monthes together, about the Iustification of Faith and Workes: and yet in the end, left it worse then they found it. We say, You your selues haue espied many disorders in your Church of Rome, as it is plaine by your owne confessions. To reckon them all in particular, it were too long. I haue partly touched them heretofore. Albertus Pighius confesseth, there be Abuses in your Masse. The French Kings Ambassadour at your late Tridentine Chapter, saith thus: Vel Præfectorum Ecclesiæ incuria, vel etiam (ne quid grauius dicam) præpostera pietate, irrepsisse in Ecclesiam res nonnullas Antiquatione, Abrogatione, vel Moderatione dignas, fateamur necesse est: We must needs confesse, that either by the negligence of the Bishops, or by some disordred opinion of Holinesse (for I will say no more: he meaneth fallhood and mockery and wilful auarice) certaine things are brought into the Church, worthy either to be put away and abolished, or at least to be qualified.

Copus Dialog. 1. pag 115.

I will not enlarge the matter further. These and other like things are confessed by your selues. Other greater matters I will not touch. For in cases of Faith for your credits sake, ye may grant no maner errour. For otherwise it might be thought, ye haue neither the Faith, nor the Life of Christian men.

Now therefore tell vs, M. Harding, what one Abuse of all the Abuses in your Masse, what one Disorder, or Deformitie, of so many Disorders and Deformities in your Church: What one vaine Ceremonie: What one Childish Fable: What Appeale to Rome: What Simony: What Pardon: What Stewes: What Courtheghians: What Concubines haue ye reformed? If ye redresse not those grosse and sensible abuses, that yée see with your eies: how then will yée redresse other more secret matters that pertaine only to Faith, and bée not seene? If yée will not reforme your open Stewes, when will yée reforme the Church of God? But yée are bold to assure vs, that there is no kinde of Idolatry, nor euer was any in your whole Church of Rome. And what if a man would ſay the ſame of your Clergy of Rome? Verily, notwithſtanding ye would ſeeme to miſlike of Idols, yet your Churches and Chappels are ful of Idols. Againe he reporteth certaine words of S. Paul, as vttered of him by the ſpirit of Prophesie: Erunt Mortuis cultum Diuinum præſtantes, quemadmodũ etiam in Iſrael impiè coluerunt: They ſhall giue godly honor vnto dead men, like as alſo they did in Iſrael.

What opinion ye haue had of Saints departed, I néd not here to remember. Cardinal Bembus in an Epiſtle vnto the Emperour Charles 5. calleth the Bleſſed Virgin, Deminam Deam noſtram: Our Lady and Goddeſſe. Your great Hercules Lipomanus crieth out in his marginal agonie: Ecce quàm potentiſſima eſt Sancta Dei genetrix: & quemodò nullus ſaluus fieri poſſit niſi per eam! Behold how mighty is the holy Mother of God, and how no man may be ſaued, but by her! If this be not manifeſt Idolatry, it may pleaſe you to giue it ſome other name.

Bembus in epiſt ad Carolum 5.

Lipomanus. Pag. 289.

It ſeemeth this errour began to ſpring long ſithence, euen in the time of the Old Fathers: and that hereof Fauſtus the Heretike, toke occaſion thus to charge the Catholikes for the ſame: Idola vertiſtis in Martyres; Yee haue changed the Heathen Idoles into your Martyres. Further ye ſay, the Reuerence that ye giue vnto Saints Images is no Idolatry. Yet Polydorus Virgilius ſpeaking hereof, ſaith thus: Quia Sacerdotes populum non docent, & vulgo ex vſu ſuo tacere putantur, idcircò eò inſaniæ deuentum eſt, vt hæc pars Pietatis parùm differat ab Impietate: For that the Prieſts inſtruct not the people, and are thought to hold their peace for gaines ſake, the matter is brought to ſuch a dotage, that this part of Deuotion differeth but little from extreame wickedneſſe.

And Ludouicus Viues ſaith, he ſeeth no great difference betweene many Chriſtian men worſhipping their Images, and an Heathen man adoring his Idols. Catharinus one of your great Doctours of Trident ſaith thus: An licet Adorare Imagines ipſas, & illis cultum præbere? Sunt qui hoc omnino negent, & clament eſſe Idololatriam. Videntur autem non futilibus Argumentis moueri: nec abſque Maiorum, imo etiam Scripturarum authoritate: Whether is it lawful to worſhip the very Images or no? Some men ſay nay, and tell it Idolatry. And they ſeeme to be mooued with no light Arguments nor without the authority, as well of the Fathers as of the Scriptures.

Iacobus Nanclantus ſaith: Non ſolùm fatendum eſt, Fideles in Eccleſia Adorare coram Imagine, ſed & Adorare Imaginem, ſine quo volueris ſcrupulo: quin & eo illam venerari cultu, quo & prototypon eius. Propter quod, ſi illud habet Adorari Latria, & illa habet Adorari Latria: We muſt grant, that the Faithfull people in the Church, do not only worſhip before the Image, but alſo worſhip the Image it ſelfe: and that without any maner ſcruple of Conſcience, whatſoeuer. And further, They worſhip the Image with the ſelfe ſame honour wherewith they worſhip the thing it ſelfe, that is repreſented by the Image. As if the thing it ſelfe be worſhipped with godly honor, then muſt the Image it ſelfe likewiſe bee worſhipped with godly honour. Hereto agreeeth one other of your late Writers, Iacobus Payua. And another of your like Doctors ſaith: This is the very vſe and practiſe of your Church of Rome. But Robertus Holcot ſaith: This kinde of worſhipping is plaine Idolatry. Therefore, I trow, there hath beene ſome Idolatry in the Church of Rome. Ye will ſay, Ye know the Image is no God. And this ye think, is excuſe ſufficient. But ſo likewiſe ſaid the Heathens of their Idols: and yet as S. Auguſtine ſaith, they were Idolaters notwithſtanding.

Ye will ſay, It is the Image of an Apoſtle of Chriſt or of God himſelfe, & therefore it can be no Idolatrie. But S. Yet neuertheleſſe ſhe was an Idolater. The Saracens this day make their Sacrifices in Mount Mecha, not to Diuels, or Heathen Gods, but to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to S. Thomas: yet are they not therefore excuſed of Idolatry. Gregorius the Biſhop of Nyſſa, S. Baſils Brother, ſaith thus: Qui Creaturam Adorat, etſi in nomine Chriſti id faciat, tamen Simulachrorum Cultor eſt, Chriſti nomen Simulachro imponens: He that worſhippeth a Creature, notwithſtanding he doe it in the name of Chriſt, yet is he a worſhipper of Images as giuing the name of Chriſt vnto an Image. By theſe few, M. The Apologie, Chap. 7. Diuision, 3.

And therfore we know that diuers times many good men & Catholike Bishops did tarry at home, and would not come, when such Councels were called, wherein men so apparently laboured to serue factions, and to take parts, because they knew they should but lose their trauell, and do no good, seeing whereunto their enemies mindes were so wholly bent. Athanasius denied to come, when he was called by the Emperour to his Councell at Cæsaria, perceiuing plainly he should but come among his Enemies, which deadly hated him. The same Athanasius, when he came afterward to the Councell at Syrmium, and foresaw what would be the end by reason of the outrage and malice of his Enemies, he packed vp his carriage, and went away immediately. Iohn Chrysostome, although the Emperor Constantius commanded him by foure sundry Letters, to come to the Arians Councell, yet kept he himselfe at home still. When Maximus, the Bishop of Hierusalem, sate in the Councell of Palestine, the Old Father Paphnutius tooke him by the hand, and led him out at the doores, saying, It is not lawfull for vs to conferre of these matters with wicked men. The Bishops of the East would not come to the Syrmian Councell, after they knew Athanasius had gotten himselfe thence againe. Cyril called men backe by Letters from the Councell of them which were named Patropassians. Paulinus the Bishop of Trier, & many others moe, refused to come to the Councell at Millaine, when they vnderstood what a stirre & rule Auxentius kept there: for they saw it was in vaine to goe thither, where not reason, but faction should preuaile: and where folke contended, not for the Truth, & right iudgement of the matter, but for Partialitie and Fauour.

And albeit those Fathers had such malicious and stiffenecked enemies, yet if they had come, they should haue had free speech at lest in the Councels.

M. Harding.

First, here I note the falshood of the Lady Interpreter, who turneth the Latine speaking of Athanasius Cùm vocatus esset ab Imperatore ad Concilium Cæsariense: When he was called by the Emperor to * his Councell at Cesaria. Where by adding the word his of her own, shee (or a worse shrew vnder her name) goeth about to perswade, as Heretikes do, that the Councels be to be accounted the Councels of Temporall Princes, not of Bishops: & that they be the heads of them, not the Bishop of Rome. Thus much to her. Now Sir, to you Defender. All these examples serue you to no purpose. It is not denied you, but that in cases men may refuse to come to Councels. Your examples declare, that Catholike Bishops shunned to come vnto the vnlawfull Councels of Heretikes. But ye, holding strange opinions, condemned by the Church, denie to come to the lawfull Councels of Catholike Bishops. When ye haue prooued vs to bee Heretikes, I mean the Fathers of the late Councel, then may ye iustly allege the example of Athanasius Chrysostome, Maximus, Paphnutius, Cyril, Paulinus, & such other, for not comming to the Councell.

* And why not, as well as M. Har. may call the whole Church the Popes Vineyard pag. 283. b. Or, all the Bishops thorow the World, the Popes sheep? Page 308. b.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Had you not had a shrewd sharpe wit, M. Harding, and a very good liking of the same, ye could neuer haue made your selfe so great sport of so small a matter. The Lady Interpreter pitieth your case, and wisheth you a little more discretion, and would be much ashamed to answer your follies.

If the Councell we speake of were not the Emperors Councell, then much lesse was it the Popes Councell. For in those daies, as hereafter it shall be declared more at large, Councels were summoned by Emperors, and not by Popes. And what reason haue you to shew vs, that the Councell, being summoned by the Emperor, might not be called the Emperours Councell, as well as the Pope, being admitted and allowed by the Emperour, might be called the Emperours Priest? Odoacer in the third Councell of Rome, in the time of Pope Symmachus, said thus: Miramur, prætermissis nobis, quicquam fuisse tentatum: Cùm etiam, Sacerdote nostro superstite, nihil sine nobis debuisset assumi: We marueil that any thing was attempted without our knowledge, forasmuch as our Priest (he meaneth the Pope) being aliue, nothing may be done without vs. As the Pope may be called the Emperors Priest, so may the Councell be called the Emperors Councel, without any impeachment of Christian Faith. Againe, why might not a Generall Councell, holden in Rome be called the

In Concil. Romano 3. Sub Symmacho. pp.

Emperours Councell, as well as a Generall Councell holden in France might be called the Kings Councell? Gerson speaking of a Councell holden in Paris, saith thus: Infamare Regem cum Generali Concilio suo conati sunt: They sought to diffame the King with his Generall Councell. It was a Generall Councell, and a Councell of Bishops; and yet was it called the Kings Councell. Liberatus saith: Flauianus Episcopus Eutychem ad Concilium suum venire præcepit: Flauianus the Bishop (not of Rome, but of Antioch) commanded Eutyches to come to his Councell. Hereafter, M. Harding, ye may take time to study for some better quarrell. Surely this was very simple.

Ye excuse Athanasius, Chrysostomus, Maximus, Paphnutius, Hilarius, Cyrillus, Paulinus, and other Learned Bishops, and holy Fathers, for not appearing at Generall Councels; for that they were summoned to appeare before Heretikes. As for the Fathers of your late Tridentine Chapter, whatsoeuer they were, ye must in any wise call them Catholikes. Yet notwithstanding, ye may remember, that by such good Catholikes as you be, the same Holy Fathers, Athanasius, Chrysostomus, Maximus, Paphnutius, Hilarius, Cyrillus, Paulinus, and others were called Heretikes. Hilarius saith: Congreget nunc Auxentius quas volet in me Synodos, & Hæreticum me, vt sæpe iam fecit, publico titulo proscribat: Now let Auxentius, the Arian Heretike, call what Councels he list against me: and by open Proclamation, let him publish me for an Heretike, as he hath oftentimes done already. The Arian Heretikes said, that the Catholike Christians, whom they called Homousians, which in their meaning was as much as Heretikes, were the cause of all diuision.

S. Hierome saith vnto Marcus: Hæreticus sum: Quid ad te? Quiesce. Iam dictum est: I am an Heretike: What is that to thee? Hold your peace: Ye haue told your tale. By like right Christ himselfe, by certaine your Ancient Fathers, was called a Samaritane, a Deceiuer of the people, and an Heretike. And, if it may please you soberly and aduisedly to consider the matter, ye shall find thorowout the whole Body of the Scriptures, that no People made euer so great crakes of the Church, as they that were the deadly enemies of the Church: nor none were so ready to condemne others of Heresie, as they that indeed were themselues the greatest Heretikes.

The Apology, Chap. 8. Diuision 1.

BVt now sithence none of vs may be suffered so much as to sit, or once to be seen in these mens meetings, much lesse suffered to speake freely our minde: And seeing the Popes Legates, Patriarkes, Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbats, all being conspired together, all linked together in one kinde of fault, & all bound by one oth, sit alone by themselues, & haue power alone to giue their consent, and at last, when they haue al done, as though they had done nothing, bring all their opinions to be iudged at the will & pleasure of the Pope, being but one mã, to the end he may pronounce his owne sentence of himselfe, who ought rather to haue answered to his cõplaint: Sithence also the same Ancient and Christian Liberty, which of al right should specially be in Christian Councels, is now vtterly taken away from the Councell: For these causes, I say, wise & good men ought not to marueil at this day, though we doe the like now, that they see was done in times past in like case, of so many Fathers and Catholike Bishops: which is, though we chuse rather to sit at home, & leaue our whole cause to God, then to iourney thither: where as we neither can haue place, nor be able to do any good: where as we can obteine no audience: whereas Princes Embassadours be but vsed as mocking stocks: & where as also we be al condemned alreadie, before triall: as though the matter were afore-hand dispatched, and agreed vpon.

M. Harding.

*A sage peece of counsell and meet for a Doctor of Diuinity.

If I wist ye would take my councell in good part, & listen vnto it, *as it standeth you vpon, I would aduise you to call in all the bookes of your Apologie, & that with no lesse diligence then ye went about to suppresse the Bookes of my answer to M. Iewels challenge at their first comming abroad. That done, to cast bruits abroad, that the Apology was made & counterfeited by some craftie Papist, to bring you quite out of credit with all the world. So might ye perhaps in time recouer some part of your lost estimation. For while your books be in mens hands, they shalbe an euident witnesse to all the world of your shameleſſe lying.

The Booke of the Canons & Decrees of the Councell hath been printed almost in all parts of Christendome. Looke who list, in euery Booke he shall find three seuerall solemn Safe-conducts, granted by the Councell, & confirmed by the three Popes, vnder whom the same was celebrated. Which Safe-conducts ducts containe first, in most ample wise, ful Liberty, Power, Authority, and assurance for al & singular persons of all Germany, of what degree, state, condition, or qualty soeuer they be that would come to that œcumenical and generall Councel, to conferre, propound, and treat with al freedome, of al things to be treated there, and to the same Councel freely and safely to come, there to tarry and abide, and to offer and put vp Articles, so many as they thought good, as wel in writing, as by word, and with the Fathers, and others thereto chosen to conferre, and without any repoches or vpbraidings to dispute, also at their pleasure safely againe from thence to depart.

The Popes Safe-conduct.

An extension to other Nations:

The same Holy Councel in the Holy Ghost lawfully assembled, the same Legates de Latere of the See Apostolike being president in it, to al and singular others which haue not communion with vs in those matters that be of Faith, of whatsoeuer Kingdomes, Nations, Prouinces, Cities, and Places, in which openly and without punishment is preached, or taught, or beleeued the contrary of that which the holy Roman Church holdeth, giueth Faith publike, or Safe-conduct, vnder the same forme and the same words with which it is giuen to the Germanes.

This being most true, as the better part of the world seeth, and the Bookes and publike instruments extant doe witnesse, your excuse of your refusall to come to the Councel, as Bishops of other Christian Realmes did, is found false. (a) Ye had all free liberty and security granted vnto you for that behalfe, in so ample and large maner as mans wit could deuise.

The second cause why ye came not, is, for that the Popes Legates, Patriarkes, Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbats, all being conspired together, al linked together in one kind of fault, and al bound in one Oath, sit alone by themselues, and haue power alone to giue their consent. What is here that should let you to ioyne with others for procuring vnity & peace in Christendome? Complaine ye of the Fathers concord and agreeing together? (b) That is a signe the Spirit of God, Author of charity & vnitie gouerneth their hearts. In that respect they seeme to come together in the holy Ghost. And indeed had ye gone thither, your heresies had been confuted, your selues required to yeeld, and to conforme you to the Catholike Church; or else ye had beene anathematized, accursed, and condemned.

Your third cause is, for that the determinations & Decrees of the Councel be referred to the Pope. To that we haue answered before. The Pope confirmeth all, being head ouer the Councel. (c) Doth not the Queene so pardy confirme your acts of Parliament, by giuing her roiall assent vnto them at the end of the Parliament? What thing can be done perfectly by a body without the head? And who might better confirme Councels, then he, whose Faith in pronouncing sentence rightly and duly, in matters concerning Faith, we are assured by Christs praier to be infallible?

Your fourth cause is, forasmuch as the Ancient and Christian libertie, which of right should specialie be in Christian Councels, is now vtterly taken away. This cause is not different from your first.

Your fifth cause is a false lie, that Princes Embassadors be vsed but as mocking stockes. (d) Truth it is, they haue most honourable seats in all Councels. In this Councell they sate by the Legates. Euery Ambassador hath his place there according to the degree of honor, the Kingdomes, Common Weales, States, and Princes be of, from whence and from whom he commeth.

The sixth and the last cause ye alledge for your not comming to the Councel, is, for that ye be condemned already before trial, as though the matter were aforehand dispatched & agreed vpon. Indeed (e) your heresies for the more part be and haue bin condemned aboue a thousand yeeres past. And therefore they are not now to be called to a new triall, as though the Church vntill this day had beene deceiued, and so many Fathers ouerseene. This notwithstanding, may ye wel say, touching that point, your matter is aforehand dispatched and agreed vpon. For they know what ye can say, and see that yee say nothing, but only stand wilfully and stubbornely in your false opinions and fleshly pleasures.

(a) A ful discreet kinde of mockerie. They offer men libertie to come and speak, but reserue the whol iugdement to themselues.

(b) They agree together against God and his Christ.

(c) But who made your Pope a King? And when wil he giue his reall consent against himselfe?

(d) They are allowed a place, but touching iudgement they may say nothing

(e) Vntruth, without any colour of honest shame.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

We neuer suppressed any of your Bookes, M. Harding, as you know: but are very well contented to see them so common, that as now children may play with them in the Streets. Your manifest Vntruths: your simple Conclusions: your often contrarieties to your selfe: your new found Authors: your childish Fables: your vncourteous Speeches: your racking, corrupting, and misreporting of the Doctors therein contained, haue much bewraied the miserable feblenesse of your cause. Your fellowes haue no cause greatly to glorie in such helps, no more then in other your like Pamphlets, vnmeet of any wise man to be answered. This was your only and speciall pollicie in the time of your late Kingdome: Ye suppressed, and called in, and burnt all our Writings whatsoeuer, yea the verie Testament and Gospell of Christ, truly translated into English, naming them Heretical and Vnlawful Bookes. And if any man had concealed and kept vnto himselfe for his comfort any such Booke written by any of our side, by most terrible and bloody Proclamations ye made it Felonie. So much ye despaired and doubted your owne follies.

As for the Bookes of our Apology, they haue been spread so farre, and printed so often in Latine, in Italian, in French, in Dutch, in English, that as now it were hard to suppresse them. Touching the shamelesse lying, wherewith ye charge vs, we are wel content to stand to the iudgement of the wise. Certainely it shameth vs much, to see so litle shame in your Writings.

Ye say: The Pope gaue out his safe conduct to al the Princes & free Cities and to the whole people of Germany, to come to the Councel, to propound, to dispute at their pleasure, & when they should think it good, freely & safely to return with a large extention to other Nations, as ye say to like purpose

But first, M. Harding, what safety can there be in his Safe-conduct, that is not able to saue himselfe? Pope Eugenius the Fourth, if he had come to the Councell of Basil, as you know, had beene quite deposed from his Popedome, all his Safe-conducts notwithstanding. Pope Iohn 22. gaue out as sure a Safe-conduct for the Councel of Constance, as Pope Pius could deuise any for your late Chapter of Trident: Yet notwithstanding all his Safety, being himselfe present in the Councell, he was pulled out of Peters Chaire, and depriued of his Dignity, and strip out of his Pontificalibus, and turned home againe in his Minoribus, and allowed onely to be a Cardinall, and no longer to be a Pope. Ye may remember Cicero saith: Qui multorum Custodem se profiteatur, eum sapientes sui primùm capitis aiunt Custodem esse oportere: Wisemen say, Whoso will take vpon him to saue others, ought first to saue himselfe.

Concil. Basil. Sess. 3. & 4.

Conc. Constan. Sessione 234.

Cicero Philippica. 12.

And what credit may we giue to your Safe-conducts? Iacobus Nachiantes the Bishop of Chioca, for that he had simpred out one halfe word of truth to the misliking of the Legates, was faine to run to Rome, to creepe to the Popes feet, and to craue Pardon. Yet shamefully betraied, and cruelly murdered Iohn Husse & Hieronimus Pragensis, in your Councell of Constance. Neither the Protection of the Emperour, nor the Popes Safe-conduct was able to saue them. No, your selues haue already ruled the case in your saie Councell. For thus ye say: Fides non est seruanda Hæreticis: Ye may hold no Faith vnto them that ye call Heretikes. Such is the Safety and Libertie of your Councels.

Illyric. in Protest. cont. Concil. Tridentin. Pag. 77.

Conc. Constan. Sessione 19.

Ye say: Our learned men were allowed to Propound, to Talke, to Dispute. What should this auaile? For ye reserued the Determination and whole Iudgement to your selues; and your selues are sworne to submit your whole Iudgement to the Pope, and without his Iudgement to Iudge nothing. And how may this seeme a Free Councell, where the guiltie partie shall be the Iudge?

Io. Fabritius in Recusatione Concil. Trid.

Ye say: There is an extention granted to other Nations. All this is true indeed. But this same Truth descrieth your open mockerie. For if ye had seene the Instrument it selfe, in the end thereof you should haue found your said Extension restrained onely to them that would Repent, and Recant the Truth of God, which you call Errour, and yeld themselues thrall vnto the Pope.

Iohan. Sleidã. lib. 23. histor. 3 Anno 1552.

Howbeit, not long sithence, the Bishops of your said Chapter at Trident were verie loth to allow any tolerable Safe-conduct at all, either to the Germans, or to any others.

But ye say: If we had come to your Chapter, we had beene confounded. No doubts, by the reuerend Authoritie of your Amphilochius, your Abdias, your Leontius, or some other like Doctors whom ye haue so laiedie raked out of your Chanels, or at least by your Firy Arguments of Swords and Faggots: for such proues must helpe you when others faile.

The agreemẽt of the Tridentine Fathers.

As for the gay stuffe that your Tridentine Fathers, after their Mature Deliberation, as they call it, and more then twentie yeares studie, haue sent vs out lately into the World, it is too simple to mocke Children. Had they not beene men impudent and void of all shame, they would rather haue stollen home secretly in the darke, and haue vttered nothing.

We find no fault with you, M. Harding, for that your Bishops and Abbats agree together: but for that they agree together as did Herod and Pilate, the Sadducees and Pharisees against Christ.

Mat. 22. & 26.

Neither may you well vaunt your selues of your great agreements. Yee may remember that two of the Principall Pillars of your Chapter, Dominicus á Soto, and Catharinus, dissented euen there openly and shamefully, and that in great points of Religion: and wrote the one mightilie against the other: the one charging the other with Error and Heresie, and could neuer yet be reconciled.

Domin. à Soto. Catharinus.

Notwithstanding, against other points of Gods Truth both they and the rest ioined stoutly together. S. Augustine saith: Tunc inter se concordant, quando in perniciem Iusti conspirant. Non quia se amant, sed quia eum qui amandus, simul oderunt: Then they agree together, when they conspire to destroy the Iust: not for that they themselues loue one another, but for that they both hate him whom they ought to loue. Of such kind of Consent, S. Hierome, although to a far contrarie purpose, imagineth Iouinian thus to say: Quòd me damnant Episcopi, non est ratio, sed conspiratio. Nolo mihi ille, vel ille respondeat, quorum me Authoritas opprimere potest, docere non potest: That the Bishops condemne me, there is no Reason in their doings, but a Conspiracie. I would not that this man, or that man should answer me, which may oppresse me by their Authority, and cannot teach me.

Aug. in Psal. 36. concione 2.

Hier. in Apologetico ad Dominionem.

Whether it be conuenient that the Pope, being notoriously accused of manifest corruption in Gods Religion, should neuertheless be the whole & only Iudge of the same, and pronounce sentence of himselfe, let it be indifferently considered by the wise.

ff. De iurisdict. omniũ iudicũ.

The Law saith: Qui iurisdictioni præest, non debet sibi Ius dicere: No man may be his his owne Iudge. Such Authority (ye say) Kings haue in Parliaments. Hereof I am not able to dispute. The Princes right many times passeth by Composition: and therefore is not euermore one in al places. Howbeit, the Pope is a Bishop, and not a King, and other Bishops be not his Subiects, but his Brethren.

The Freedome of the Councell of Trident.

Your fourth Obiection is but a Cauil: ye say, Ye mocke not Princes Ambassadors, but place them next vnto your Legates: to sit stil, I trow, and to tel the Clocke. For voice in iudgement ye allow them none. Thus ye proine their Authoritie, and allow them Honour, and set them aloft to say nothing. Notwithstanding whether the Emperours and Princes Ambassadours may sit so neere to the Popes Legates, or no, I cannot tel. Verily the Emperour himselfe may not be so bold to presse so neere vnto the Pope. For thus it is ordered in your Booke of Ceremonies: Aduertendum est, quòd locus vbi sedet Imperator, non sit altior loco vbi tenet pedes Pontifex: This is to bee noted, that the place where the Emperour sitteth (in General Councell) be no higher then the place where the Pope setteth his feet. That is to say, the Emperour must sit at the Popes footstoole, and no higher. And this, saith your Magister Ceremoniarum, is a thing specially to be noted.

Ceremoniar. Rom. li. 1. Sect. 14. ca. 2.

All the parts of our Religion, which you call Heresies, ye say are already condemned, iust a thousand yeres past. If al this be not true, then haue you foulely abused your pen, to slander Gods truth, and to beguile the world. But I pray you, M. Harding, leaue some part of your wont, and tell vs the Truth. Was the Publike Ministration of the Holy Sacrament, was the Holy Communiõ in both kinds, was the publike order of common praier in the common knowne tongue, was the withstanding of the Ambition and Pride of Rome, condemned for Heresie so long agoe? How could you dare thus to say, and the same to publish so openly and so boldly vnto the world, if ye had any regard to your sayings? It would haue wonne you some good credit, if ye could haue told vs in what Generall Councell, vnder what Emperour, by what Doctors, by what Catholike Learned Fathers, these great Errours were thus condemned: as now ye roaue only at large, and fed your simple Reader with your emptie Calendars of thousands of yeres, and speake at randome. If it had beene true, ye would better haue shewed it: but being most vntrue, as you know it to be, for very shame ye should neuer haue said it.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuision 1. and 2.

NEuertheless, we can beare patiently and quietly our owne priuate wrongs. But wherefore do they shut out Christian Kings, and good Princes, from their Conuocation? Why do they so vncourteously, or with such spight, leaue them out, &c, as though either they were not Christian Men, or else could not iudge, will not haue them made acquainted with the causes of Christian Religion, nor vnderstand the State of their owne Churches?

Or, if the said Kings & Princes happen to intermeddle in such matters, and take vpon them to do that they may do, that they be commanded to do, and ought of duty to do, and the same things that we know both Dauid & Salomon, and other good Princes haue done, that is, if they, whiles the Pope and his Prelats slug and sleep, or else mischieuously withstand them, do bridle the Priests sensuality, and driue thẽ to do their duty, and keepe them stil to it: If they do ouerthrow Idols, if they take away Superstition, and set vp againe the true worshipping of God, why do they by and by make an outcry vpon them, that such Princes trouble all, and presse by violence into another bodies office, and do therein wickedly and malaperly? What Scripture hath at any time forbidden a Christian Prince to be made priuy to such causes? Who, but themselues alone, made euer any such Law?

(a) Vntruth, vain and vnaduised: Read the Answer.

M. Harding.

(a) Ye confound the offices of the Spirituall Gouernours, and Temporall Magistrates. What Kings and Princes may doe, what they be commanded to doe, and ought of dutie to doe, in Gods name let them doe, and well may they so do. Who is he that gainsaith? If by the pretensed example of Dauid and Salomon ye (b) animate them to intermeddle with Bishoply offices, then beware they (say wee) that Gods vengeance light not vpon them for such wicked presumption, which lighted vpon King Ozias for the like offense. 2. Paral. 26.

(b) Vntruth. It is not our Doctrine. But why emboldeth you the Pope to intermeddle with Princes Offices?

Ye teach Princes to vse violence against Priests, as though their faults could not be redressed by the

(c) Prelates

(c) Your Prelates be as blam worthy & as negligent as the Priests.

(c) Prelates of the Clergie, of whom ye speake by spightful surmise, as though God had vtterly withdrawn his holy Spirit from them But forasmuch as Christ assisteth his Church alwaies, & shall neuer faile in things necessary, it is not to be doubted, but the Church shall euer be prouided of some good Gouernors, so as though some slug and sleepe, yet some others shall wake, and diligently attend their charge. Priests haue their Ecclesiastical Courts, where their defaults & offenses may duly & Canonically be punished, and the offenders by Priestly discipline be redressed. Neither is it conuenient for a King to come into Priests Consistories, (d) nor to call Priests before him to his owne seat of iudgment.

(d) Vntruth, reprooued by the Ancient practise of the Church, as it shall appeare.

So many as be necessary to minister, and performe those things that appertaine to the building vp of Christs Body the Church, vntil it come to his perfection, S. Paul reckoneth by name in his Epistle to the Ephesians, saying, that Christ hath to that end placed in his Church (e) some Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelists, some Shepheards and Teachers. Kings and Princes be not there named, as they who haue their proper ranke. That the people be to be stirred by vs to more feruent deuotion to worship God, and some perhaps to be warned of some cases of superstition, we grant. But that any other maner or kinde of worshipping of God is either by vs or by temporall Princes to be set vp in Christs Church, that we deny.

(e) Marke, that Popes & Cardinals in this rank are not named.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

We Confound not these Offices, M. Harding, as ye best know: but rather we teach each man carefully to attend his owne office. You and your Fathers haue brought Confusion of Offices into the Church of God, in that ye haue made your Pope Heire apparet vnto the Empire, and haue armed him with all maner Authority, Spirituall and Temporall, and haue giuen him the right of Both Swords.

Dist. 22. Omnes For thus your owne Pope Nicolas telleth you stoutly in his owne behalfe: Christus Petro Æternæ Vitæ Clauigero, Terreni simul & Cœlestis Imperij Iura commisit: Christ hath committed vnto Peter, the Key-bearer of Euerlasting Life, the right as well of the Earthly, as also of the Heauenly Empire. No doubts. For Christ by his Commission made Peter a King of this world, and dubbed him accordingly with Sword and Scepter, and bade him sit vnder his Cloth of Estate. Thus, by your Doctrine, Priesthood, Kingdome, Popedome, Empire, are all conueied wholy into one mans hands: and so by your handling, one man is Priest, King, Pope, and Emperour, all at once. This perhaps vnto the wise may seme to be some Confusion of Offices.

2. Paral. 26. Touching that ye write of the rash attempt of King Ozias, ye seme not to vnderstand, neither our words, nor your owne. For we teach not Princes to offer vp Incense in Sacrifice, as Ozias did: or by intrusion to thrust themselues into Bishops romes: or to Preach, or to minister Sacraments, or to Binde, or to Lose: but only to discharge their owne Offices, and to doe that dutie that Dauid, Salomon, Ezechias, Iosias, and other Noble and godly Kings did, and euermore was lawful for the Prince to doe. As for right of Place, and Voice in Councell, it pertaineth no lesse to the Prince then to the Pope, as hereafter it shall better appeare.

Ye say: Christ shal alwaies assist his Church, and shall euermore prouide her of good Gouernors. Thus, be your negligence and careleslie slothfulnesse neuer so great, be your liues neuer so lose, be you Dumbe Dogs, not able to barke, be you Lanterns without Light, be you Salt without sauour, yet ye euermore dreame sweetly of Christs Promise, and assure your selues vndoubtedly of his assistance: euen as he that sometime said, Pan curat oues, cumumque magistros. Would God your Bishops would doe their duty, and do it faithfully: The world should haue lesse cause to complaine. Notwithstanding, Christ is euermore mindeful of his Promise. For when he seeth his Church defaced, and laid waste, he raiseth vp faithful Magistrates, and godly Princes, not to doe the Priests or Bishops duties; but to force the Priests and Bishops to do their duties.

But ye say: Christ hath placed in his Church some Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelists, some Pastours, some Teachers. Kings (ye say) and Princes be not there named. Hereof ye conclude, Ergo, The Prince may not cause the Abuses of his Church to bee reformed, nor ouersee the Priests and Bishops if they be negligent, nor force them to do their duties.

I maruel, M. Harding, where ye learned so much Logicke. How frame ye this Argument? In what Mood? In what Figure? With what cement can ye make these silly lose peces to cleaue together? It pitieth me to see your case. For by like forme of Argument, and with much more likelihood of Reason, we may turne the same against your selfe, and may say thus: Christ hath placed in his Church some Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelists, some Pastours, some Teachers: The Pope and his Cardinals are not here named: Apostles they are not; for the Apostles were but twelue: Prophets they are not; for they Prophecy nothing: Euangelists they are not; for they Preach not: Pastours or Feeders they are not; for they Feed not: Doctours or Teachers they are not; for they Teach not: Ergo, by this Authoritie of S. Paul, and by your owne Argument, the Pope and his Cardinals be vtterly excluded, and may not meddle with the charge of the Church of God.

In

In such good substantial sort Pope Paulus 3. not long sithence, reasoned against the Emperour Charles the Fifth: En ego supra Pastores meos; Behold saith God Almighty, I will punish my Priests and Bishops for their negligence and wickednesse: Ergo, saith Pope Paulus, The Prince or Emperor may not punish them: as though when the King or Emperor punisheth the wicked by Gods appointment, God himselfe were not the punisher. Epist. Paul. 3. ad Carolum. 5.

A Bishop conuented before the Magistrate

In this your maner of reasoning, M. Harding, there are welnere as many errours, as there be words. The first is, Ignoratio Elenchi: which is the grossest Fallax of all the rest. Secondly ye conclude without either Mood or Figure: as a very child may easily see. Thirdly, ye reason à Meris Particularibus, or à non Distributo ad Distributum. Fourthly, these words, Rule or Charge of the Church, are words of double and doubtful meaning. And therefore your Syllogismus, such as it is, must nedes stand of foure termes, which errour in reasoning is too simple for a child.

Touching these words, Rule and Charge, which I said, are double and doubtful, notwithstanding we say, both the Prince and the Bishop haue Charge of the Church, yet the Prince and the Bishop haue not both one kinde of Charge. The Bishops Charge is, to Preach, to Minister Sacraments, to Order Priests, to Excommunicate, to Absolue &c. The Princes Charge is, not to doe any of these things himselfe, in his owne person, but only to see that they be done, and orderly and truly done by the Bishops.

I grant there be many special priuiledges granted vpon great and iust considerations of the meere fauour of the Prince, that a Priest being found negligent or otherwise offending in his Ministery, should be conuented and punished, not by the Temporal or Ciuill Magistrate, but by the discretion of the Bishop: yet must you remember, M. Harding, that al these and other like priuiledges passed vnto the Clergy from the Prince, and not from God, and proceded only of special fauour, and not of right. For from the beginning, you know, it was not so.

And therefore to say, that a Prince or Magistrate may not lawfully cal a Priest before him, to his owne seat of iudgement, or that many Catholike & Godly Princes haue not so done, and done it lawfully, it is most vntrue. The Emperour Iustinian himselfe, who of all others most enlarged the Churches Priuiledges, saith thus: Nullus Episcopus inuitus ad Ciuilem, vel Militarem Iudicem in qualibet causa producatur, vel exhibeatur: nisi Princeps iubeat: Let no Bishop be brought or presented against his will, before the Captaine, or Ciuill Iudge, what soeuer the cause be: vnlesse the Prince shall so command it. Hereby it appeareth the Bishop was bound to make his answer before the Magistrate if it had beene the Princes pleasure. Cod. li. 1. de Episco. & Clericis. Nullus.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Iustinian in the Law that you rehearse, M. Iewel, is to be vnderstanded to speake of Ciuil and Temporal cases: & that in those cases no Bishop should be brought before the Lieutenant and Ciuil Magistrate, except the Prince so command it. It is a Maxim, & a principle with the Lawiers, that such Lawes speaking indefinitely, must be vnderstanded by another Law, that speaketh specially & particularly, &c. It had bin your part to haue vnderstanded those words In qualibet causa, spokē there indefinitely by the other Lawes, that speak more specially. But then had you lost a peeuish Sophisticall argument, and men had not knowne your worthy skill in the Law, which no doubt will appeare great by your practise. The Answer. We must take these words, you say, to be spoken of Ciuill or Temporall cases only: in which only cases, you grant the Temporall Iudge may call a Priest before him, by the commandement of the Prince. Herein I will not greatly contend against you. Notwithstanding Iustinians words be general, and include all kindes of cases. For thus he saith, as I haue alleged his words: In qualibet causa, that is, What soeuer the Action be, be it Ecclesiasticall, be it Ciuill. But, that you may the better conceine both Iustinians meaning, and also the weaknesse & vanity of your Glosse, Phocius the Patriarke of Constantinople saith thus: Clerici Constantinopolitani, si nolint actores apud patriarcham agere, à solis præfectis prætorio iudicātur, siue conueniantur, siue cōueniantur, tam pro priuatis, quàm pro Ecclesiasticis: The Priests of Constantinople, if they will not plead before the Patriarke, are iudged only before the Lord Chancellar, whether they plead or be impleaded: and whether it be their owne priuate matter, or Ecclesiastical. Howbeit, by this exposition it appeareth, if the case be Temporal, that then a Priest may be conuented before a Temporal Iudge. But what say you then to Thomas Becket? He alone, as you know, withstood all the Bishops of this Realme, and would neuer yeld, that a Priest although he were a Theefe or a Murtherer, should submit himself to Temporal Iudgement. Theft and Murther doubtlesse be Cases Temporall. And it was the expresse will and commandement of the Prince. Yet, as I haue said, Thomas Becket would neuer yeld, that the Temporall Magistrate should iudge of it: and therefore the Pope made him a Saint. Now if he did well, why doe you by this exposition controle his doing? If in so doing he did M. Harding fol. 379. b. Guil. Neubrigens. li. 2. ca. 16 did euill, why was he Sainted for the ſame? Doth the Pope make folkes Saints for euil doing?

A Biſhop conuẽted before the Magiſtrate

As for the reſt, whereas it pleaſeth you to make your ſelfe ſome pretty ſport, and to ſay, Men had not knowne the worthy skil I haue in Law &c. Deſpiſe not, M. Harding, leſt you your ſelfe be deſpiſed. For ought that I know, the Law is your profeſſion, no more then mine.

The Emperour Martianus commandeth, if the cauſe be criminall, that the Biſhop be conuented before the Lieutenant: Vt coram præſide conueniatur.

Addition. M. Harding. The Law Cum Clericis, hath not theſe words, Vt coram præſide conueniantur, nor any clauſe or ſentence ſounding to that purpoſe. For trial wherof, I refer me to the Booke. Addition.

Cod. de Epiſc. & Clericis L. Cum Clericis.

The Anſwer. The Book wil condemn you, M. Harding. The words there are plain: Cum Clericis in iudiciũ vocaris pateat Epiſcopalis Audientia, volentibus tamen actoribus, ſiactor diſceptatic nẽ ſanctiſſimi Archiepiſcopi noluerit experiri eminentiſſimæ tuæ Sedis examen tam de ſuis, quàm de Eccleſiaſticis negotijs ſibimet nouerit expetendum: qui in nullo alio foro, vel apud quenquam alterum Iudicem, eoſdem Clericos litibus irretire, & Ciuilibus, vel Criminalibus negotijs tenet innectere: Whereas Prieſts when they be ſued in Law, may haue acceſſe to the Biſhops audience. (if the plaintiffe think it good, and none otherwiſe) if the plaintiffe will not yeeld himſelfe to ſtand to the moſt holy Archbiſhops iudgment, then let him know, that he muſt come to the triall of your moſt high Court, whether it be in his own, or in Eccleſiaſtical eaſes. Neither ſhall it be lawfull to the ſaid plaintiffe to implead the ſaid Prieſt in any other Court, or before any other Iudge (ſauing only before the Archbiſhop, or before him being the Preſident or Lieutenant there) whether the matters be Ciuill or elſe Criminall. Here you ſee, that the plaintiffe, if he thought it good, might ſue a Prieſt before the Lieutenant, yea & that in Cauſes Eccleſiaſticall: and that the Prieſt was bound to make his appearance, and to ſtand to his iudgement: yet wil you tell vs, M. Harding, that in this Law there are no ſuch words, nor any clauſe or ſentence to that purpoſe? Or can you without bluſhing ſo vainly blaſe your margin with M. Iewels forgeries?

If the plaintiffe thinke it good.

Pope Innocentius 3. himſelfe confeſſeth, that the Pope may make a Lay man his Delegate, to heare and determine in Prieſts cauſes. The like thereof yee may finde in your owne Gloſſe: Papa Laico delegat cauſam Spiritualem: The Pope committeth the hearing of a Spirituall matter vnto a Layman.

Addition. But forasmuch as M. Harding ſaith, It is not written, Papa delegat, but Si Papa delegat, which neuertheleſſe is nothing elſe, but an empty quarrell, he may alſo finde this ſelf ſame ſentence in the ſame place ſpecially noted without any Si, or condition at all. The words there are theſe: Clericus coram Sæculari quandoque conuenitur: A Prieſt ſometimes is called to make anſwer before a Temporall Iudge. Addition.

Yea further ye ſhall find euen in the Popes owne Decrees, that the Pope hath committed a Spiritual matter in a cauſe of Simony to be heard and ended by a Woman: and that Brunichildis being a Woman, by vertue of the Popes Commiſſion, ſummoned a Biſhop to appeare, and ſolemnly to make his Purgation before her. Notwithſtanding, in your Gloſſe vpon the ſame it is noted thus: Fuit tamen hic nimium Papaliter Diſpenſatum: The Pope was too Popelike in this Diſpenſation.

M. Har. 382. a

Addition. M. Harding. But what if wee cannot finde in the Popes Decrees, to which you refer vs, that the Pope euer committed a Spirituall matter in a cauſe of Simony to be heard & ended by a Woman, and that Brunichildis had neither Commiſſion from the Pope to ſummon a Biſhop, nor euer ſummoned a Biſhop to appeare, and ſolemnly to make his Purgation before her? What then ſhal we ſay, but that M. Iewel is a ſhameleſſe falſifier, and a deceiuer of al that beleeue him? &c. Addition.

M. Har. 383. a

I beſeech you Sir, where is it ſaid in all this Decree, that the Pope committed a Spiritual matter in a cauſe of Simonie to be heard & ended by a woman? &c. In the Text it is not, nor in the Gloſſe, that you ſo ſolemnly allege. Had your Lawier forgotten to tel you, or were you ſo ſimple that you could not conceiue that which is commonly ſaid, Maledicta Gloſſa quæ corrumpit textum? &c. To let paſſe your ſcoffing & your Miniſterlike interpretation, let vs come to the matter &c. You ſay, the Pope cõmitted a Spiritual matter in a cauſe of Simony to be heard and ended by a woman. And this is a vaine tale and vntrue fanſie of yours, not able to be gathered by any word of that Decree. For the cauſe of Simony was heard and ended by the Pope, and the Biſhop was abſolued and ſent home (or elſe M. Harding ouer boldly reporteth vntruth as his maner commonly is to doe.) And a cauſe once heard and determined by the Pope, is not wont to be committed afterward to the hearing & determination of a Woman. After this, as though this lie had not been loud enough, you tel vs that Brunichildis ſũmoned the Biſhop to appeare before her &c Brunichildis being ſo holy, ſo vertuous, ſo religious a Lady, as S. Greg. reported ſhe was, it is to be preſuppoſed, that ſhe wold not diſquiet a good & innocẽt man, nor put him to further troble.

The Anſwer. A ſhameleſſe falſifier (you ſay) A deceiuer of them that beleeue him, Scoffing & Miniſterlike interpretation; As though this lie had not bin loud enough, &c. This eloquence, M. Harding, becommeth no man but your ſelfe. It is reaſon, ye ſhould haue the whole glory of it without without copartner. Howbeit, such intemperance of speech, and such vnciuill dealing wil win smal credit to your cause in the iudgemēt of the wise. You say, It cannot be found, that Queene Brunichildis had any such Commission from the Pope. You hunt wantonly and roaue at pleasure, M. Harding, and will finde nothing but that may like you. But Pope Gregories Commission is so plaine, that I maruell, with what good countenance you could denie it: sauing that I see you are armed with boldnesse to deny what you list. These be Pope Gregories own words: Purgationem ante te, duobus sibi Sacerdotibus iunctis, eundem ex se præbere tuo commissmus arbitrio: I haue giuen Commission to your discretion, that the said Bishop, taking to him two other Priests or Bishops, shall make his Purgation before you. And thus he said to Brunichildis, being the Queene of France. Is not this enough to proue, that the Pope gaue Commission that the Bishop should make his Purgation before the Queene? Is not here the plaine & expresse word Purgatio? Are not here two other Priests or Bishops appointed to be Compurgators? Is not heere the Latine word Commissimus? whereby the Pope gaue the Queene to vnderstand, that he had sent her his speciall Commission? Are not here these other two Latine words, Ante te, that is to say, before thee or in thy presence? Are not here these other two Latine words, Tuo Arbitrio, whereby it is signified, that the matter was committed to her Discretion? Doth not the same Pope immediatly afterward in the same Decree straitly charge the said Queene Brunichildis that she should not require the said Bishop to cleare himselfe by any Vulgar Purgation, as by standing in scalding water, or by bearing a gad of burning iron in his bare hand, as many then vsed to try their innocencie, and to purge themselues? Sought you so busily for these things, M. Harding and could you not finde them? Or could you see all these things in a heape together and yet could you see nothing? Or al this notwithstanding, can you so assuredly tell vs, that the Pope neuer committed any Spirituall matter to be heard by a woman? Or, that the Queene had no Commission to any such purpose from the Pope? The Pope himselfe saith, Yea: you onely say, Nay. And may we safelie giue credit to you alone against the Pope?

It is not likely (you say) that being once purged before the Pope, he should afterward be purged again before a Woman. It is not likely (you say) that Brunichildis being so holy, so vertuous & so religious a Lady would disquier a good & an innocent man, or put him to any further trouble, after his cause had bin heard & ended by the Pope. And are not these good & substantiall likely reasons, M. Harding? Or, were it not well worth the while, that your Reader, contrarie to the Popes plain words should beleeue you & rather yeld to such prety likelihoods? Is it not likely that M. Harding, so boldly maintaining manifest falshood, wil euer giue place to any truth? I beseech you, how had this Bishop made his sufficient Purgation before the Pope? By what words of Gregory can you learne it? Indeed he offered an oath for himselfe. And so far forth only, and none otherwise he was purged. But there was no Proclamation giuen out vnto his accusers, if any man had to allege against his Purgation, neither had he any man there to be his Compurgator. Nor was he fully restored vnto his fame, nor had the Pope thoroughly concluded and ended the matter. And therefore he committed it ouer, to be ended at home before the Queene. For the Law saith: Ibi fieri debet Purgatio, vbi quisq; est infamatus: vt ibi moriatur malum, vbi contigit: There ought euery man make his Purgation, where he is defamed: that the euill may die, and haue an end, where it began to spring first. To be short, whereas you tell vs, M. Harding, that Queene Brunichildis had no such Commission from the Pope, the Expositor of that Decree, if it might haue pleased you to haue seen him, would haue taught you the contrarie. For thus he saith: Papa mandat Reginæ, vt indicat eidem Episopo purgationē cum duobus Sacerdotibus: Et delegatur hic Laico negotium spirituale: Et Episcopus expurgatus corā Papa, cogitur adhuc corā muliercula se purgare: The Pope giueth Cōmission to the Queen to appoint the said B. to make his purgation together with two other Priests: Againe: Here a Spiritual matter is cōmitted ouer to a Lay person: And again: A Bishop being purged (in part & after a sort) before the Pope, yet neuertheless is compelled afterward to purge himself before a Woman. I know not what I should say further, Committere is Latine to giue Commission: Purgatio, in English is a Purgation: Simony is a Spirituall Cause: Queen Brunichildis was a lay person: Ante Reginam, is, before the Queene: The text is plaine: The Glosse is plaine: The words are plaine: The sense is plaine. The Pope himselfe saith: I haue giuen out my Cōmission, that the Bishop should appeare before the Queen. The Expositor saith: A Spirituall cause is committed to the iudgement of a person Temporall.

Yet M. Harding, it is lawfull for you to say, M. Iewel is a loud liar, and a shameful falsifier, & a deceiuer of all them that wil beleeue him. Thus may you lawfully and boldly say: For full well it becommeth you thus to say, as a man that reckoneth not what he say.

The Emperor Constantinus wrote thus vnto the Bishops that had been at the Councell cel of Tyrus: Cuncti quotquot Synodũ Tyri compleuistis, sine mora ad pietatis nostræ castra properate: ac re ipsa, quàm sincerè, ac rectè iudicaueritis, ostendatis: idq; coram me quem sincerum esse Dei Ministrum, ne vos quidem negabitis: All ye that haue bin at the Councel of Tyrus, come without delay vnto our Campe, and shew mee plainely and without colour, how vprightly ye haue dealt in iudgement: and that euen before my selfe, whom you cannot deny to be the true Seruant of God.

Authen. constitutione, 123.

Iustinian the Emperour, in the Law that he maketh touching the Publike praiers of the Church, saith thus: We command all Bishops and Priests, to Minister the holy Oblation, and the Praier at the holy Baptisme, not vnder silence, but with such voice, as may be heard of the faithfull people, to the intent, that the hearts of the hearers may bee stirred to more deuotion, &c. Afterward he addeth further: And let the Holy Priests vnderstand, that if they neglect any of these things they shall make answer therefore at the dreadfull Iudgement of the Great God and our Sauiour Iesus Christ. And yet neuertheless we our selues vnderstanding the same, will not passe it ouer, nor leaue it vnpunished.

Hereby we see, that Godly Princes may summon Bishops, to appeare before them euen in Causes Ecclesiasticall, to receiue such punishment, as they haue deserued. Likewise the Emperor Constantinus in his Letters vnto the people of Nicomedia, speaking of the wilfull errors & heresies of Priests and Bishops saith thus: Illorum temeraria præsumptio, mea, hoc est, Ministri Christi, manu coërcebitur: Their rash attempts shall be represſed by my hand, that is to say, by the hand of Christs Seruant.

Theodoretus lib. 1. cap. 19.

M. Hard. 387. Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Where you say, that the Emperour spake of the wilful errors & heresies of the Priests & Bishops, & adde not Arian Priests & Arian Bishops, you declare your malicious heart against Priests & Bishops. But I wil leaue that cankred spight of yours, &c. Why do you not report the Emperors words as they are in your author? wil you neuer leaue this accustomed vile corruption? The Answer. And wil you neuer leaue this vanity, M. Harding? You say, I speak of errors & heresies of Priests and Bishops, but I adde not, Arian Priests and Arian Bishops. And therein, you say, I declare my malicious heart. Of such good words your gentle hart toucheth no more. It is your skil with such terrors & outcries to amaze the simple. For no wise man, I trow, would thus demeane himselfe without some cause. I said not, the Errours and Heresies of Arian Priests and of Arian Bishops. What then? Thinke you therefore I meant the Errors and Heresies of Catholike Priests, and Godly Bishops? Or can any man imagine Heresies without an Heretike? Fie M. Harding, such wantonnesse is not fit for your grauity: when I spake of Errors and Heresies, a verie Babe might wel know I spake onlie of Heretikes, and of none others. Addition. ☞

But I haue not reported the Emperours words as I found them. And this in your accustomed curteous speech, you call my accustomed vile Corruption. Howbeit indeed, I corrupt no part of the Emperours words. He speaketh none otherwise, but as I report him. Adde hardly the words that you would seeme to mille. You can adde nothing to the meaning. Thus saith Theodoretus, euen as you haue translated him your selfe: If any man be inflamed boldly and vncircumspectly at the remembrance and commendation of those Wicked and Pestilent Heretikes, his boldnesse shall be represſed straightway by my working, that is to say, by the Minister of God. This is all that I say, M. Harding: I say no more. ☜

Aug. contra epist. Parmen. lib. 1. cap. 7.

So likewise saith S. Augustine vnto the Donatists: An fortè de Religione fas non est vt dicat Imperator, vel quos miserit Imperator? Cur ergo ad Imperatorẽ Legati vestri venerunt? Is it not lawfull, that the Emperor or the Emperors Deputy should pronounce in a case of Religion? Wherefore then went your owne Embassadors to the Emperour?

M. Ha. 388. a. Addition. ☞ M. Harding. S. Augustine reasoning against Parmenian the Donatist, took aduantage of his own doings, not as allowing the appeale to the Emperour, but as prouing him vnreasonable, who for aduantage would appeale to the Emperour, and when the Emperour had pronounced sentence against him, would striue & repine at the sentence, and say, that he being a Temporall Prince ought not to punish Bishops, &c. S. Augustine in his talke against the Donatists, cannot be said to allow the Emperors authority in cõdemning of Bishops & other Ecclesiastical causes. For he, answering another Donatist that said, Non debuit Episcopus proconsulari iudicio purgari, said, if he be worthy to be blamed, whom the Temporall Iudge hath absolued, wheras he himselfe did not require it, how much more are they to be blamed, which would haue a Tẽporal Prince to be Iudge in their cause? By this it appeareth that he thought that Princes could not be Iudges ouer BB. Moreouer he reporteth that Constantine who appointed Iudges to heare their cause did it, à Sanctis Antistibus veniã petituros, as minding to aske pardon of the holy Bishops for his fact. And the same Emperor, seeing their importunity in repairing to him, as Iudge, said, O rabida furoris audacia! Sicut in causis Gentilium solet fieri, appellationẽ interposuerunt. The Answer. The very story hereof is this: The Donatian Heretiks, being condemned by an assembly of Bishops in Aphrica, and appealing for aid vnto the Emperour, were by his authority appointed ouer by special Cõmission to be iudged by Miltiades the Bishop of Rome, with certaine others. Wherein two things are especially to be noted: First, Addition. ☞ that the Pope in thoſe daies thought not himſelfe to be Superiour to the Emperour, but could be contented to be his Delegate, and to receiue authoritie by his Commiſſion: Againe, that the Pope was not appointed to iudge alone, but had other Biſhops ioined with him. The Donatians being condemned before the Pope and the other Commiſſioners, and once againe appealing to the Emperour, were eftſoones appointed ouer by like Commiſſion to be iudged by the Biſhop of Arle in France, with certaine others. And heere alſo it is to be noted, that in thoſe daies, it was lawfull to appeale from the Pope, and that an inferior Biſhop might lawfully iudge of his iudgements. But the Donatians ſeeing themſelues condemned by the Biſhop of Arle, as they were before by the Biſhop of Rome, laſt of all appealed to the Emperours owne perſon, complaining of the partialitie of the Biſhop of Rome, and of the Biſhop of Arle, as at whoſe hands they could find no iuſtice. In the end, being likewiſe condemned by the Emperour himſelfe, they found themſelues alſo greeued with his Maieſtie, and condemned his iudgment to, as they had done the others. Heereof S. Auguſtine ſaith thus: Iudex eligitur Imperator: Iudicans contemnitur Imperator: They chuſe the Emperour to be their Iudge: and after iudgement they deſpiſe the Emperor. This is it that the Emperour ſo much miſliked in the Donatiſts. Therefore he abhorred them as impudent and peruerſe Wranglers, that ſeeing iudgement ſo many waies, and ſo cleerelie paſſe againſt them, yet would not ſubmit themſelues to anie order. Such, this day, M. Harding, is the peruerſneſſe and impudencie of all them, that ſeeing their follies laid open to the World by Gods holie Word, and ſo manie kingdomes and Countries departing from them, yet neuertheleſſe haue hardned their faces againſt all ſhame, and will neuer yeeld to the confeſſion of anie one errour. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith vnto the Donatiſts, as we likewiſe may ſay vnto you: Quid vultis amplius homines, quid vultis amplius? O ye men, tell me, what would ye haue more? What more would ye haue.

The Pope the Emperours Delegate.

Appeale from the Pope.

A Biſhop conuẽted before the Magiſtrate

Aug. epiſt. 162.

Aug. in eadem epiſt.

As touching the matter that lieth betweene vs, the queſtion is this, Whether a Prince may be Iudge in Eccleſiaſticall cauſes, or no. He may not, ſay you. Heere we allege the example of the godlie Chriſtian Emperor Conſtantinus, who being only a Temporall Prince, neuertheleſſe tooke vpon him to iudge in Cauſes Eccleſiaſticall betweene the Donatian Heretikes, and the Catholikes. Vnto this you anſwer: Thus he did, à Sanctis Antiſtitibus veniam petiturus, as minding to ask pardon of the Holy Biſhops for his fact. For what his fact, M. Harding? Why deale you ſo darkely? Will you tell vs, that Conſtantinus knew in his conſcience he did ill, and committed Sacrilege, and wickedly intruded vpon the Biſhops Offices, and wilfully deſerued Gods vengeance, as did Oziss, or Oza, and yet would doe it notwithſtanding vpon the hope of pardon? Verilie this had been the ſinne of Preſumption, which ſome men haue reckoned, as the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, that ſhal neuer be forgiuen, neither in this life, nor in the life to come. Or do you thinke that theſe holy Fathers would ſo eaſily haue forgiuen ſo great an offence, ſo preſumptuouſly committed againſt God? Or is it likelie, that the Emperour Conſtantinus, for thus doing, ſtood Excommunicate ipſo facto, and was therfore diuided from the Sacraments and Prayers, & all other Communion and comfort of the Church? Or that afterward he waited three daies together bareheaded and barefoot, as did that Noble Emperour Henry 4 vpon Pope Gregory 7. to receiue abſolution for his ſins? I know you dare to ſay many things. But thus much I trow, you dare not ſay. What Pardon then was it, that the Emperour minded to ſeek at the Biſhops hands? Indeed the place it ſelfe is very darke, and ſuch as whereof it is hard to gather a readie and perfect ſenſe. Thus ſtand the words: Atque vtinam, ſaltem ipſius iudicio, inſaniſſimis, animoſitatibus finem poſuiſſent, atque, vt eis ipſe ceſſit, vt de illa cauſa poſt Epiſcopos iudicaret, à Sanctis Antiſtitibus poſtea veniam petiturus, dum tamen illi quod vlterius dicerent, non haberent, ſi eius ſententiæ non obtemperarent, ad quem ipſi prouocauerunt, ſic & illi aliquando cederent veritati?

Sabell. Ennead. 9. lib. 38.

If ye vnderſtand this ſentence thoroughly, M. Harding, ye are more then Dauus: ye are as good as Oedipus. Notwithſtanding that filly ſenſe that you haue imagined, cannot poſſiblie be gathered heereof by any reaſonable order of conſtruction. This only is it, that S. Auguſtine ſaith, The Emperour minded to excuſe himſelfe vnto the Biſhops, not for that he had dealt in a cauſe Eccleſiaſticall, but for that he had dealt therein, after that it had been twice heard and determined by the Biſhops. Theſe are his words: Ipſe eis ceſſit, vt de illa cauſa, poſt Epiſcopos iudicaret, à Sanctis Antiſtitibus poſtea veniam petiturus. You know right well, M. Harding, Veniam petere, is not alwaies to aske Abſolution, as for ſome hainous offence againſt God. Bona tua Venia dicam: dabis mihi hanc Veniam, &c. are phraſes commonly vſed among the Learned. In this place S. Auguſtine ſaith, The Emperour minded courteouſly to excuſe his doing vnto the Biſhops, for that calling the matter before himſelfe, that had been before thoroughlie conſidered and debated by them, he might ſeeme to iudge of their iudgements, and to call their doings into queſtion

A Bishop cõuented before the Magistrate question. This onely was the thing that he would haue excused. And this was his courtesie only, and not his duty.

As for the hearing of Ecclesiasticall Causes, which is the matter that lieth betweene vs, he neither thought he offended God therein, for any thing that may appeare, nor minded to aske pardon for the same. For he did no more therein then was lawfull for him to doe, nor euer was there any Pope so vnciuill that durst to condemne him for so doing. S. Augustine saith plainly in the same Epistle: Diximus, Fœlicem Aptungitanum ad Constantini iussionem, Proconsularibus gestis fuisse Purgatum. Ait quidam, Non debuit Episcopus proconsulari iudicio purgari: quasi verò ipse sibi hoc comparauerit, ac non Imperator ita quæri iusserit: ad cuius curam, de qua rationem Deo redditurus esset, res illa maximè pertinebat? We told you, that Fœlix the Bishop of Aptungita, was purged before the Lord Lieutenant by the commandement of the Emperour. But one of the Donatian Heretikes saith, A Bishop should not haue made his Purgatiõ before the Lieutenant: As though it had bin the Lieutenants seeking, and not rather the Emperours commandement: to whose charge, whereof he shall yeeld account vnto God, that matter specially did belong. Behold these words, M. Harding: Lay them abroad: Cast no cloud ouer them: S. Augustine telleth you, that the Purgation of a Bishop, notwithstanding it were an Ecclesiasticall matter, yet belonged specially to the Emperours charge. And thus he saith euen in the selfe same Epistle and place that you haue alleged. And yet must we beleeue you vpon your word, that the Emperour could not deale herein without offending of God, and craning of Pardon? Againe S. Augustine saith: An fortè de Religione fas non est, vt dicat Imperator? Cur ergo ad Imperatorem Legati vestri venerunt? What, Is it not lawfull perhaps, that the Emperour should giue sentence in a case of Religion? Wherefore then did your Legates sue to the Emperour? Here M. Harding marke this by the way: They that said the Emperour might not be Iudge in Ecclesiasticall cases, were Donatian Heretikes. For S. Augustine and the Catholikes said the contrarie. Againe S. Augustine saith: Si criminis non est, prouocare ad Imperatorem, non est criminis audiri ab Imperatore. Ergo, nec ab illo, cui causam delegauerit Imperator: If it be no fault to appeale to the Emperor, then is it no fault to be heard or iudged by the Emperour. And so consequently it is no fault to be Iudged before him, to whom the cause was committed by the Emperor. S Augustine presupposeth and taketh it as a ground, that it is no fault, neither to appeale to the Emperour, nor to be iudged before his Maiesty, be the cause neuer so much Ecclesiasticall.

Specially belongeth to the Emperours charge.

Aug. epist. 162.

Ad cuius curã res ea maximè pertinebat.

August. contra epist. Parmen. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Aug. epist. 162. Non est criminis.

Now, M. Harding, if there were no fault committed by the Emperour, why should you thus force him to craue Pardon.

Photius the Patriarke of Constantinople saith thus: Clerici Constantinopolitani, si nolint actores apud Patriarcham agere, à solis præfectis prætorio iudicantur, siue conueniant, siue conueniantur, tam pro priuatis, quam pro Ecclesiasticis: The Priests of Constantinople, if they will not plead their matters before the Patriarke, then are they iudged only before the Lord Chancellour, whether they be Plaintiffes or Defendants, and whether their cause be priuate or Ecclesiasticall.

Photius de peccatis & iudicio Episc. Tit. 9.

Againe he saith: Bishops, Priests, and Monkes are to be sued before the Lord Deputy or President of the Country: or if they be found in the City of Constantinople where the Emperour hath his Court, then are they to be sued only before the Lord Chancellour.

In eodem Tit. Apud Præsides prouinciarum. Apud solos præfectos prætorio.

Likewise Balsamon expounding a Canon of the Councell of Antioch, alleged this sentence of Iustinian: Patriarcha debet rationem reddere Imperatori, & ab eo corrigi: The Patriarke is bound to make his answer before the Emperour, and of him to receiue correction. And thus he speaketh of a cause Ecclesiasticall, as by the place it may appeare. Againe he saith: Patriarcha ab Imperatore, qui Ecclesiæ habet potestatis scientiam, iudicabitur, fortè vt sacrilegus, vel malè de Fide sentiens, vel alicuius alius criminis reus. Hoc enim nos iudicialiter factum esse vidimus diuersis temporibus: The Patriarke shall be iudged of the Emperour, hauing the knowledge of the Ecclesiasticall Power, whether the matter be of Sacrilege or of Heresie, or of any other crime. For this haue we seene done often times in forme of Iudgment.

Balsamon.

Conc. Antioch. Canon. 12.

What would ye haue more, M. Harding? Heresie is a Cause Ecclesiasticall: The Patriarke is a Bishop: The Emperour is a Ciuill or Lay Magistrate. Yet Balsamon telleth you, that this Bishop in this cause, is to be tried before the Emperour: and that he himselfe hath oftentimes seene the same iudicially put in practise, no restraint or Law being to the contrary.

Balsamon, eodem loco.

Gerson standing before the French King, and answering his Aduersaries in a Cause Ecclesiasticall, said thus vnto him: Loquimur sic ad eos, Rex Serenissime, te audiente, te Iudice: Thus we say to them, O most gratious King in your hearing: your Grace shall be Iudge. Heere you see, M. Harding the Cause is Ecclesiasticall, and the Iudge is the King.

Gerson. Trilogus. In materia schismatis.

But what speake we of other Priests and Inferiour Bishops? The Popes themselues ſelues, notwithſtanding al their Vniuerſall power, haue ſubmitted themſelues, and made their Purgations before Kings and Emperours. Pope Liberius made his humble appearance before the Emperour Conſtantius: Pope Sixtus was accuſed, and made his Purgation before the Emperour Valentinian: Pope Leo 3. being accuſed by Paſchalis and Campulus, pleaded his cauſe before Carolus Magnus at Rome, not yet choſen Emperour. Pope Iohn 22. was accuſed of Hereſie, and forced to recant the ſame vnto Philip the French King. Theod. Lib. 1. Cap 16. 2. qua 4. Manda ſtus. 2. q. 4. Auditũ.

Pope Leo 4. in this wiſe humbly ſubmitted himſelfe vnto the iudgement of Lewis the Emperour: Nos, ſi incompetenter aliquid egimus, & in Subditis iuſtæ Legis tramitem non conſeruauimus, veſtro admiſſorum noſtrorum cuncta volumus emendare iudicio: If we haue done any thing out of order, and if we haue not followed the right courſe of the Law ouer our Subiects, we will amend all our faults by your Maieſties iudgement. Gerſon in Sermone paſchal. 2 qua. 7. Nos ſi.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. If this ſubmiſſion had not beene made voluntarily by them, not King nor Cæſar could haue had Authority or power to be Iudges ouer them. The good Emperor Conſtantine ſaid to the Biſhops, Vos non poteſtis ab hominibus iudicari: You cannot be iudged of men, that is, of Lay-men. The Anſwer. This is wiſely conſidered, M. Harding, and for good aduantage. Lay men be men: All others be Angels. Otherwiſe if Biſhops were Men, as others be, then could no Prieſt or Biſhop be iudged before them: For Conſtantinus ſaith: Vos non poteſtis ab hominibus iudicari: You cannot be iudged by men. And yet in the ſelfe ſame place he ſeemeth to ſay, that a Biſhop may not be iudged, neither before any other Biſhop, nor before the Pope himſelfe, or any other Creature, but only before God alone. For thus he ſaith vnto the Biſhops: Iſtæ accuſationes veſtræ opportunum tempus habent Magni Iudicij diem, & Iudicem tunc omnibus iudicaturum: Theſe quarrels of yours haue a meet time of triall, I meane the day of Great Iudgement, and a meet Iudge, that ſhall iudge ouer all. Happy are you, M. Harding, that may do what you liſt, and neuer come to anſwer before the day of our Lord. M. Harding fol. 389. a. Sozomen. li. 1. cap. 17.

A Biſhop conuẽted before the Magiſtrate

M. Harding. Pope Liberius, you ſay, made his humble appearance before Conſtantius. It is true. But Liberius dealing with the Emperor Cõſtantius, was ſuch as became a Biſhop of the Apoſtolike See. For in that cauſe he would neither be ouerborne by the Authority of the Emperour, nor yeeld vnto his wickednesſe againſt Athanaſius for a long time, (yet at length he yeelded, and ſubſcribed too, as it became a Biſhop of the Apoſtolike See) much leſſe acknowledge him for his Superiour, or Iudge. (And yet Pope Gregory, that followed long after Pope Liberius, called the Emperour his Lord & Maſter: Ego ſum veſter Seruus, & Imperator: Ego ſum veſtræ iuſſioni ſubiectus: Imperatori obedientiam præbui. Theſe be his words) As for Pope Sixtus, it is certaine he made his Purgation before the Emperor Valentiniã. But he did it of Humility, &c. The Emperor of himſelf had no power to ſummõ the Pope to his Iudgement ſeat, nor any Iuriſdiction to force him to make his Purgation before his Maieſty. He gaue him licence to heare his Purgation. Concerning Leo the 3. and Leo the 4. their caſe is like, &c. And therefore we ſay, the Emperour was not their Iudge, nor Superiour by any Princely Authority, but by theſe Popes permiſſion and appointment. Gregor. lib. 3. Epiſt. 61.

The Anſwer. O what a bleſſed thing it is to be a Pope! Be he neuer ſo wicked, yet if hee be alſo ſtout and wilfull, and refuſe Iudgement, then may he not be iudged by any Creature vnder Heauen, neither by King, nor by Emperour, nor by the Church, nor by the whole people of God. For ſo it is enacted by Pope Innocentius himſelfe: Kings and Emperours liue vnder Lawes; but the Popes Prerogatiue is, to do what him liſteth, without controlement, or feare of Lawes. And ſo is it true that Ennodius ſaith: Succeſſores Petri, vnà cum Sedis priuilegijs, peccandi quoque licentiam accepiſſe: That the Succeſſors of Peter, together with the Priuileges of their See, haue alſo gotten free liberty to doe ill. ☜☞ 9 qu. 3. Nemo. Ennodius.

Your owne Gloſſe ſaith: Papa poteſt dare poteſtatem Imperatori, vt deponat ipſum: & eſſe in omnibus illi ſubijcere: The Pope may giue the Emperour power to depoſe himſelfe: and may in all things ſubmit himſelfe vnto him. Now, M. Harding if the Pope may giue the Emperour this Authority, what Scripture haue you to the contrary, why the Emperor may not take it of himſelfe? To be ſhort, Franciſcus Zabarella ſaith: Papa accuſari poteſt coram Imperatore de quolibet crimine notorio: & Imperator requirere poteſt à Papa rationem Fidei: The Pope may be accuſed before the Emperour of any notorious crime: and the Emperour may require the Pope to yeeld an account of his Faith. Concil. Tom. 1. Diſt 63. in Synodo. In Gloſſa. Fran. Zabarel. de Schiſmate, & Concilio.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. Zabarella ſaith not, as you report, Papa poteſt accuſari coram Imperatore, &c. Theſe words, coram Imperatore, are of your owne interlacing, and bee not in the Author. You ought to bee aſhamed, ſo foulely to corrupt your Authors, and deceiue the people. Againe, Zabarella ſaith not, Imperator requirere poteſt à Papa rationem Fidei. They are your words, M. Iewel. That which Zabarella ſaith, is this: Si Papa erit ſuſpectus de Hæreſi, poteſt Imperator ab eo exigere, vt indicet quid ſentiat de Fide. Now Sir, to require a man to yeeld an account of his Faith, and to require him to declare what hee thinketh touching the Faith, are two diuers things. The Anſwer. You ought to bee aſhamed, you ſay: Verily and ſo I am, and ſo ought I to bee in your behalfe, M. Harding, to ſee your Vanity. Theſe words, coram Imperatore, are not interlaced M. Har. 391. b

M. Har. 392. A Bishop conuēted before the Magistrate

by mee: you may easily finde them in the Authour. Wherein I will vse no other prose but onely the verie same words that you your selfe haue alledged. These they be: Nec quæritur quam moueat, quòd Imperator est Laicus, vt ex hac putet esse inconueniens, quòd se intromittat de Clericis. Non enim semper prohibetur iudicare de Clericis. Sed tunc prohibetur, quando non subest ratio specialis: Let no man be moued for that the Emperour is a Lay man, to thinke it therefore a thing vnconuenient that hee should intermeddle with Priests causes. For he is not alwaies forbidden to iudge of Priests. But then is he forbidden, when there is no speciall cause.

You see therefore, M. Harding, that vpon some cause (him specially moouing) the Emperour may lawfully iudge in Ecclesiasticall matters. Againe you say: Zabarella saith not, Imperator requirere potest à Papa rationem Fidei: But thus he saith: Imperator exigere potest à Papa, vt iudicet quid sentias de Fide. Here haue I put Requirere in stead of Exigere; and, rationem Fidei, in stead of quid sentiat de Fide. To require a man to yeeld an account of his Faith, and to require a man to declare what he thinketh touching the Faith, (say you) are two diuers things. Is not here a wonderfull difference, and a foule corruption of Authors, M. Harding? Is not this a foule deceiuing of the People? Are not these weighty and worthy matters to be proclaimed and published to the world? I marueil if you be not ashamed in your owne behalfe.

The words of Zabarella are plaine: Imperator exigere potest à Papa, vt iudicet quid sentiat de Fide: The Emperour may require the Pope to shew him what he thinketh of the Faith. That is to say, The Emperour may require the Pope to yeeld a reckoning of his Faith. Where also it is to be noted, that the Pope may be an Heretike, or at least suspected of Heresie. For thus saith Zabarella: Si Papa erit suspectus de Hæresi. Crie out therefore, M. Harding, no more of deceiuing the people. For, as it appeareth, the Pope himselfe may be an Heretike, and a deceiuer of the people.

Now therefore, M. Harding, I report mee to your owne indifferent iudgement, how true it is that yee say, It is not conuenient for a King to call Priests before him to his owne Seat of Iudgement. Verilie this Note ye might haue found Glossed in your owne Decretals: Quæritur, Quis exemit Clericum de Iurisdictione Imperatoris, cùm priùs esset illi subiectus? Dicit Laurentius, quòd Papa de consensu Principis: A question is moued, Who hath exempted a Priest from the Iurisdiction of the Emperour, whereas before he was subiect to the Emperours Court? Laurence saith, The Pope hath exempted him by the consent of the Prince. Yee see therefore, M. Harding, your Priests, Abbats, and Bishops, haue their Priuileges and Exemptions, not by any right of Gods Word, but onlie by the Popes Policie, and by the speciall fauour of the Prince.

Extra de Maiorit. & Obed. cap. 2. in marg.

The Apologie, Chap. 9. Diuision 3.

They will say to this, I ghesse, Ciuill Princes haue learned to gouerne a Common Wealth, and to order matters of warre: but they vnderstand not the secret Mysteries of Religion. If that be so, what is the Pope, I pray you, at this day, other then a Monarch, or a Prince? Or, what be the Cardinals, who must be none other now but Princes and Kings Sons? What else be the Patriarkes, and, for the most part, the Archbishops, the Bishops, the Abbats? What be they else at this present in the Popes kingdome, but worldly Princes, Dukes, and Earles, gorgeously accompanied with bands of men whithersoeuer they goe: often times also gaily arraied with Chaines and Collars of Gold? They haue at times too, certaine Ornaments by themselues, as Crosses, Hats, Miters, & Palles: which Pompe the Ancient Bishops, Chrysostome, Augustine, & Ambrose neuer had. Setting these things aside, what teach they? what say they? what doe they? How liue they? I say not, as may become a Catholike Bishop, but, as may become a Christian man? is it so great a matter to haue a vaine Title, and by changing a garment only, to haue the name of a Bishop?

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth, manifest. For wee moue no Prince to take vpon him the Bishops office.

The duty of Ciuill Princes consisteth in ciuill matters: The dutie of Bishops, in Spirituall things: That serueth to the preseruation of mens persons: This to the Saluation of their Soules. Euerie High Priest (saith S. Paul) that is taken from among men, is ordeined for men in things apperteining to God. (a) Ye moue Temporall Princes to take vpon them the Office of the Pope, and Bishops, as though it were a thing so indifferent, and so common, that when Bishops be negligent, Temporall men may doe their their stead. But the reason which to this end ye make, is so slender, as (I weene) few Princes that feare God will be greatly moued to aduenture that thing so much subiect & thrall to Gods reuenge. (b) In effect your reason is this, cõsider it who wil: They of the Clergy be no other but Ciuil Princes: Ergo, Temporall Princes may bear the office of Bishops. Sir, both your Argument is naught, & your Antecedẽt is false. For although Bishops had but a Title, & the name of Bishops by changing a garment only, as you say, yet that defect in them should not giue ability to the meere Lay, as to Kings & Queenes, to do the Office of Bishops. Now is your Antecedent manifestly false: For the Bishops of the Catholike Church, which in scoffe ye cal the Popes Kingdome, be duly ordinated and consecrated.

Though the Pope haue a Princely Dominion, & some other Bishops of Christendome haue Dukedomes & Earledomes, though they ride well accompanied with men & horse, yea though some of the, otherwise then becommeth that vocation, do weare Chaines & Collars of Gold, (c) as you belie them: though they haue other ornaments to their states perteining, which greeueth you much in comparison of the (d) beggery of your married estate, yet all this imbarreth the not, but that they be Bishops.

Though they teach not, though they say not, though they doe not, though they liue not as becommeth Bishops, neither as becommeth euen a Christian man, (e) as you raile, al this notwithstanding, yet be they Bishops, though euil Bishops. Neither for al this may it be lawful for Lay men to take their office vpon them. (f) Iudas was an Apostle, til the rope choaked him. Neither for his wickednesse might Steuen, Matthias, or any other of the Disciples, of his owne presumption, haue stept into his roome. Now as this is true, so is your railing talke false, which malice hath stirred you to vtter.

(b) Vntruth. For this is our Reason: A Temporall Prince, say you, may not meddle in Ecclesiastical causes? But the Pope, say we, is nothing else but a Temporall Prince, Ergo, by your iudgment the Pope may not meddle in Ecclesiastical Causes.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Bishops entangled in worldly affaires.

Once againe we tell you, M. Harding, we confound not these Offices: notwithstanding you so often and so leaudly report vs to your owne discredit. Our Princes neuer tooke vpon them the Office of Bishops: but your Bishops haue taken vpon them the Office of Princes. Of your Bishops it is written in your owne Councels: Eccè iam penè nulla est actio sæculi, quam non Sacerdotes administrent: Behold, there is now in a maner no worldly affaire, but Priests and Bishops haue it in hand. Such Bishops be they of whom S. Chrysostome writeth thus: Qui non credunt Iudicium Dei, nec timent, abutentes Primatu suo Ecclesiastico sæculariter, conuertunt eum in sæcularem: They that neither beleeue, nor feare the Iudgement of God, abusing their Ecclesiasticall Dignity in Secular sort, turne the same into Secular Dignity. Such Bishops they be of whom S. Hierome saith thus: Ipsi sibi & Laici sunt, & Episcopi: They themselues be to themselues both Lay men, and Bishops too. And againe: Adorant Dominum & Melchom, qui Sæculo pariter & Domino putant se posse seruire, & duobus Dominis satisfacere, Deo & Mammonæ, qui militantes Christo obligant sese negotijs Sæcularibus, & eandem Imaginem offerunt & Deo & Cæsari: They worship the Lord, and Melchom both together, thinking that they may serue both the World, and the Lord, and satisfie two Masters at once, God and Mammon: who fighting vnder Christ, bind themselues to worldly affaires, and offer vp one Image, both to God, and to Cæsar.

And therefore Cardinall Cusanus saith: Maxima ex hac re deformitas oritur, quòd Prælati tantùm sæcularibus curis inuigilant: Heere of groweth a great deformity, that Bishops are bent only to worldly cares. Marke well these words, M. Harding, he saith: Your Bishops are bent only to worldly cares.

Conc. Trident. Sub Paulo 3. Admonitio Legator.

If ye will beleeue none of these, yet your Popes owne Legates, in your late Chapter at Trident, speaking of your Priest like Apparell, say thus: Nihil â Laicis, præterquam in Vestis genere, ac ne in hoc quidem differunt: Our Priests differ nothing from Lay men, saue only in Apparell: nay indeed they differ not so much from them, as in Apparell.

Ye say: Your Bishops are gay and gallant, attended and garded with Princelike routs, both behind and before. And therefore ye make no smal account, specially in respect of our estate, which you call beggerly. In such disdaine the Heathens sometime said, That Christ was the Beggerliest and Poorest of all the Gods that were in Heauen. Howbeit, our Bishopricks, saying that certaine of your Fathers haue shamefully spoiled them, are now euen as they were before. Certainly the Poorest Bishopricke in England, as it is reported, is better in reuenues then some three of your Popes Italian Bishopricks in the Kingdome of Naples. Howbeit, the Gospell of Christ standeth not by Riches, but by Truth: In comparison of the one, we make small reckoning of the other.

Therhence commeth their Gold in their Bridles, in their Saddles, and in their Spurs.* Againe he saith: Incedunt nitidi & ornati, circumamicti varietatibus, tanquam Sponsa procedens de Thalamo suo. Nonne si quempiam talium eminùs procedentem aspexeris, Sponsam potiùs putabis, quàm Sponsæ Custodem? They goe trimly and finely in their colours

The Apology, Chap. 10. Diuision 1.

Surely to haue the principall stay and effect of all matters committed wholly to these mens hands, who neither know, nor wil know these things, nor yet set a iot by any point of Religion, saue that which concerneth their belly and riot; & to haue them alone sit as Iudges, & to be set vp as Ouerseers in the Watch Tower, being no better then blind Spies: Of the other side, to haue a Christian Prince, of good vnderstanding and of a right iudgement, to stande still like a Blocke, or a Stake, not to be suffered neither to giue his Voice, nor to shew his Iudgement, but only to wait what these men shal wil & cõmand, as one which had neither eares, nor eies, nor wit, nor heart, and whatsoeuer they giue in charge, to allow it without exception, blindely fulfilling their Commandements, be they neuer so Blasphemous & wicked, yea although they command him quite to destroy all Religion, and to Crucifie againe Christ himselfe: This surely, surely, besides that it is proud and spitefull, is also beyond al right and reason, and not to be endured of Christian and wise Princes. For why, I pray you, may Caiaphas and Annas vnderstand these matters, and may not Dauid and Ezechias do the same? Is it lawfull for a Cardinall, being a man of warre, and delighting in Blood, to haue place in a Councell? And is it not lawfull for a Christian Emperour, or a King? Supreme Head. Supreme Gouernor.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Hereto M. Harding, saith nothing, but that he hath often times said before.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision. 1.

VErily we grant no further Libertie to our Magistrates, then that we know hath both been giuen them by the Word of God, and also bin confirmed by the Examples of the very best gouerned Comon Wealths

M. Harding.

If a man should aske you where that word of God is, that maketh a Temporal Prince Supreme Head of that part of the Church which he hath gouernment of in all Ciuill matters, I am sure you can bring forth, a no other word of God, then that wherein S. Peter and S. Paul willeth al men to obey the Superiour Powers, especially Kings. Which thing was written to al Christian men, whiles they liued vnder Heathen Princes and Infidels, as Claudius Cæsar & Nero were, whom (I suppose) ye wil not say to haue been Heads of the whole Church, as they were Monarchs, and Princes of the whole world. If then by those Scriptures which cannot proue Nero (being a (b) persecutor of Christs Church) to haue beene Head of the same, you wil now proue that other Princes are Supreme Heads of the Church; it seemeth that either you make Nero Head of the Church with them, or giue more vnto them then the word of God will beare. And as for examples of good Common Weales, shew vs but one since Christs Ascension, wherein before Luthers time, any Emperor Christian, or other Prince did attribute that Title vnto himselfe, and we wil say, that when you speake of Common Weales, in the plural number, you make but one lie: but in case you shew vs no one Common Weale that hath so done, then you lie in the plurall number. Yea further, if at this day the Common Weales in Christendome, not onely that are Catholike, but the best also of those that are Lutherish and new fangled, doe abhorre from that strange and vnheard Title of (c) Supreme Head of the Church, why doe you say, that yee haue either Word of God for it, or example of approued Common Weales?

(a) Vntruth. For we allege many other places besides, as it may soone appeare.

(b) Then cannot the Pope bee Head of the Church: For he hath persecuted the Church, as Nero.

(c) Much adoe about nothing: For our Prince hath not this Title. But Queene Mary had and vsed the same Title of Supreme Head, as many waies it may be prooued.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Concerning the Title of Supreame Head of the Church, wee néede not to search for Scripture to excuse it. For first, we deuised it not: Secondly, we vse it not: Thirdly, our Princes at this present claime it not. Your Fathers, M. Harding, first entituled that most Noble and most Worthy Prince, King Henry the Eighth, with that Vnused and Strange Stile as it may wel be thought, the rather to bring him into the talke and slander of the world.

Howbeit, that the Prince is the Highest Iudge, and Gouernour ouer all his Subiects whatsoeuer, as well Priest, as Lay men, without exception, it is most euident, by that hath béene already said; by that shall be said hereafter; by the whole course of the Scriptures, and by the vndoubted practise of the Primitiue Church. Verily the Prince, as it shal afterward better appeare, had Both the Tables of the Law of God euermore committed to his charge: as well the First, that pertaineth to Religion, as also the Second, that pertaineth to Ciuill Gouernment.

But now, M. Harding, if a man would aske you, by what Word of God your Priests and Bishops haue exempted themselues from the iudgement and Gouernment of their Princes: or, by what Word of God the Princes hand is restrained more from his Clergy, then from other his Subiects: or, by what Word of God ye would stablish Two Supreme Gouernors in one Realme, I maruel in what Scriptures ye would seeke to finde it. Your owne Doctors and Glossers say, as it is before alleged: Quæritur, quis exemit Clericum de Iurisdictione Imperatoris, cùm priùs esset illi subiectus? Dicit Laurentius, quòd Papa de consensu Principis; Question is moued, who hath exempted the Priest from the Iurisdiction of the Emperour, whereas before he was his subiect? Laurentius saith, (not the Word of God, but) the Pope exempted him by the consent of the Prince. Extra. de Maiorit. & Obed. cap. 2. in mar.

Further, M. Harding, we beseech you, by what Word of God can your Pope claime himselfe to be the Head of the Vniuersall Church of God? Where is it recorded? Where is it written? In what part of the Testament, New or Old? In what Law? In what Prophet? In what Epistle? In what Gospel? Where is his Headship? Where is his

Supreme Head. Supreme Gouernor.

Vniuersall Power? If ye can finde it, then may ye shew it: If it cannot be found, then should ye not say it. As for that you and other your fellowes haue alleged before, for proofe hereof it is so childish, and so weake, that I thinke ye cannot now come again with the same, without blushing.

Touching the Right that we say belongeth vnto all Christian Princes, it hath bin inuested and planted in them from the beginning. For, to leaue other authorities of the Scriptures, Pope Eleutherius himselfe wrote thus vnto Lucius, sometime King of this Realme of England: Vos estis Vicarius Dei in Regno, iuxta Prophetam Regium: You are Gods Vicar within your owne Realme, according to the Prophet Dauid.

Epist. Eleuthe. Citatur inter Leges Edwardi Primi.

Paul the Bishop of Apamea writeth thus vnto the Emperor Iustinian, in a cause mere Ecclesiasticall, touching Religion: Transtulit ipsum Dominus, vt Plenitudinem directionis vestræ custodiret Serenitati: Our Lord hath taken Pope Agapetus away, that he might leaue the fulnesse of order (concerning these Heretikes, Dioscorus and Eutyches) vnto your Maiestie.

Quinto Synod. Act. 1. pissim.

Tertullian saith: Colimus Imperatorem, vt hominem à Deo secundum, solo Deo minorem: We worship the Emperour, as a man next vnto God, and inferiour only vnto God.

Tertullian ad Scapulam.

And notwithstanding the name of Head of the Church belong peculiarlie & onlie vnto Christ, as his onlie Right and Inheritance, (for as the Church is the Bodie, so Christ is the Head) yet may the same sometimes also be applied in sober meaning, and good sense, not onely vnto Princes, but also vnto others, farre inferiour vnto Princes. Chrysostome saith: Videntur mihi istæ mulieres Caput fuisse Ecclesiæ quæ illic erat: It seemeth vnto me, that these women were the Head of the Church that was at Philipi. Likewise again, speaking of the Emperour, he saith thus: Læsus est qui non habet parem vllum super terram, Summitas & Caput omnium super terram hominum: We haue offended him that in the Earth hath no peere, the Top and the Head of all men in the world. If he were the Head of all men, then was he the Head, not onely of Bishops and Cardinals, but also of the Pope himselfe, vnlesse the Pope were no man.

Chrys. in ep. ad Phil. Hom. 13. A woman head of the Church. Chry. ad popul. Ant. Hom. 2.

To conclude, our Princes neede no more to claime their lawful Authority and Emperiall Right, by the example of Nero, whereof ye haue moued much vntimely and wanton talke, then your Pope needeth to claime his Vsurped and coloured Power by the Examples of Annas and Caiphas.

The Apology, Chap. 11. Diuision 2.

For besides that, a Christian Prince hath the charge of Both Tables committed to him by God, to the end he may vnderstand, that not Temporall matters only, but also Religious and Ecclesiasticall Causes pertaine to his Office, &c.

M. Harding.

You will prooue, that Ecclesiastical causes pertaine to a Kings office, because he hath the charge of both Tables. If you mean that a King is bound to keepe both Tables of the Law, so is also euery priuate man. And yet as no priuate man is Supreme Head of the Church by keeping them, so neither the King is proued therby the (a) Supreme Head. If you meane that the king ought to see others to keepe both Tables of the Law: that may he doe either in appointing temporal paines for the transgressors of the, or in executing the said paines vpon the transgressors. But as he cannot excõmunicate any man for not appearing when he is called, so can he not iudge all causes of Law. For if a man sin only in his heart, as for example, in Murder, or Aduoutery, the King cannot haue to do with him: and yet the tru Supreme Head of the Church shall haue to doe with him. For that malicious & sinful thought (b) shal neuer be forgiuen, except the party come to be absolued of their Successors, to whom Christ said, Whose sinnes ye forgiue, they are forgiuen; and whose sins ye reteine they are reteined. To commit murder in hart, is a sin, and it is reteined vntill it be forgiuen. (c) Neither can it be forgiuen, vntil he that is iudge, by the Keie of discretion, perceiue that it is to be forgiuen. Which he cannot know vntill it be confessed with a contrite heart by him who only knoweth it, and is bound to tel it for absolutions sake. If then there be a Iudge who can see the Law kept in an higher point, and beyond the reach of a King, surely the King shall not be Supreme Head, sith another is more like to God then he: As who is iudge of the inward conscience, whereunto no King reacheth, but * only the Minister of Christ, who is the Spiritual King, * and hath giuen the Keies of his Kingdome to his Ministers.

(a) A graue Disputer Yee conclude against that that is not auouched.
(b) Vntruth, fõd and manifest, & leading directly to de peration.
(c) Vntruth, ioined with blasphemy. Read the Answer.
* A fond folly. For this Key is giuen no more to the Pope, thẽ to any other simple Priest.

Mat. 16.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here, M. Harding, ye roue and wander without a marke, and reply to that that was not spoken. I maruell whereof you can spin your selfe such idle talke. For we neither call our Princes the Heads of the Church of Christ, (it was your Fathers inuention, & not ours) nor say we, they haue power, either to Excommunicate, or to Binde, or to Loose; nor haue we leasure to make such vaine conclusions.

Thus we say, the Prince is put in trust, aswell with the First as with the Second Table

Supreme Head. Supreme Gouernor.

Table of the Law of God, that is to say, as well with Religion, as with Temporall Gouernment, not onlie to kepe and performe the contents of Both Tables in his own person (for so much euery priuate man is bound to do) but also to see, that al others his Subiects aswell Priests as Lay-men, each man in his calling, doe duly keepe them. This is it, that no priuate man is able to doe. Therefore S. Augustine saith: In hoc seruiunt Domino Reges, in quantum sunt Reges, cùm ea faciunt ad seruiendum illi, quæ non possunt facere, nisi Reges: Herein Kings serue the Lord, in that they be Kings, when they doe those things to serue him, that no man can doe, but only Kings. We say not the Prince is bound to do the Bishops dutie. And therefore it is the grater follie of your part, M. Harding, to obiect it so often. Wise men vse not so to aduenture their wordes in vaine. But thus wee say, The Prince is bound to see the Bishops to doe their duties. Aug. in epist. 50. ad Bonif.

But what meant you, so far out of season to talke so fondly of your priuy Confession, of Binding, and Loosing, & power of Keies? For as it is said before, we say not, that Princes may either Binde or Loose, or Minister Sacraments, or preach the Gospell, or sit downe and heare Confessions. Therefore with all this great adoe, ye soine only at your owne shadow, and hit nothing.

Ye say full discreetly, If a Man sin only in his heart, the king cannot haue to do with him, for that he cannot enter, to know his secrets. Here I beseech you, M. Harding, what entrance then hath the Pope to know the secrets of the Heart? Perhaps yee will say, the Pope may know all the world by Cõfession. But S. Augustine saith: Quid mihi est cum hominibus, vt audiant cõfessiones meas? &c. Vnde sciunt cùm à me ipso de me ipso audiunt, an verũ dicam? quandoquidẽ nemo scit hominum quid agatur in homine nisi spiritus hominis, qui in ipso est: What haue I to do with these men, that they should heare my Cõfessions, &c. How know they, when they heare me report of my selfe, whether I say true or no? For no man knoweth what is in man, but the spirit of man that is within him. Again he saith vnto ỹ people: Intrantes vos & exeuntes possumus videre. Vsq; adeo autẽ non videmus, quid cogitetis in cordibus vestris, vt neq; quid agatis in domibus vestris videre possimus: We may see you comming in & going forth. But we are so far from seeing the thoughts of your harts, that we cannot see, what you do at home in your houses. Likewise againe he saith: Quid singulorum quorunq; modo conscientiæ dixerint, ad aures meas, quia homo sum, peruenire non potuit. Ille, qui absens est præsentia Corporis, sed præsens est Vigore Maiestatis, audiuit vos: What euery of your consciẽces hath said, it could not enter into my eares, for that I am but a mortall man. Notwithstanding, Christ that is absent, as touching the Presence of his Body, but present by the power of his Maiesty, hath heard you well. It is not the Pope, but God only, that trieth the reines and searcheth the heart. Aug. Confess. lib. 10. cap. 3. August in Psal. 126. August. in Psal. 127.

Yet ye say, the true Supreame Head of the Church shall haue to doe with him, that sinneth only secretly in his heart: For that malicious and sinful thought (you say) shal neuer be forgiuen except the party come to be absolued of their Successors, to whom Christ said, Whose sins yee forgiue, &c. This, M. Harding, is the Supreme Follie of all other Follies. For first, where euer heard you, that the Pope would once vouchsafe to heare Confessiõs? and if he would; yet by your own Doctors iudgemẽt, the Pope hath no more power to Binde & to Loose, then any other pore simple Priest. As I haue shewed you before: Alphonsus de Castro saith: Quando absoluit simplex Sacerdos, tantum absoluit de Culpa, sicut Papa: When a Simple Priest absolueth, he absolueth as much touching the fault, as if it were the Pope himselfe. Origen saith: Quæ sequuntur, velut ad Petrum dicta, sunt omnium communia, &c. Quod si nos idem loquimur, quod Petrus loquutus est, efficimur Petrus: The words that follow, as spoken vnto Peter, are common vnto all. If we speake the same that Peter spake then are we made Peter. Euen in the Popes owne Glosse vpon his Decretals it is noted thus: In necessitate Laicus potest, & audire Confessiones & absoluere: In case of necessity a Lay man may both heare Confessions and also giue absolutions. Yet will ye not say, that euery Lay man is Peters Successor. Alph. de hæres. lib. 2. de Absolutione. Orig. in Mat. Tract. 1. Extra. de offic. Iudicis Ordin. Pastoralis. In Glossa.

To what purpose then serueth all this your vaine talke, M. Harding, The true Supreme Head of the Church shal haue to doe with him that sinneth onely in his heart? For euery Simple Priest hauing the keie of Gods word, entreth into the heart, and hath to do with the same as well, and asmuch, and as deepely as the Pope: and in respect of being Iudge of the Conscience, is aboue Kings and Princes, no lesse then he.

But where ye say, The malicious & sinful thought shal neuer be forgiuen, except the party come to be Absolued of their Successors, to whom Christ said, whose sins ye forgiue &c. This Doctrine is not only strange and false, but also full of desperation. Your owne Gratian saith: Latentia peccata non probantur necessariò Sacerdoti confitenda: It is not proued (by any sufficient authority of Scriptures or of Doctors) that secret sins are of necessity to be vttered in Confession vnto the Priest. Again he saith: Datur intelligi, quod etiam, ore tacente, veniam De pœnit. dist. 1. Quis alias quando. De Pœn. dist. 1 Conuertimini.

veniam consequi possumus: It is giuen vs to vnderstand, that we may obtaine pardon, although we vtter nothing with our mouth. And againe: Non Sacerdotali iudicio, sed largitate Diuinæ Gratiæ peccator emendatur: The sinner is clensed, not by the Iudgement of the Priest, but by the abundance of Gods grace. Againe he saith: Confessio Sacerdoti offertur in signum veniæ, non in causam Remissionis accipiendæ: Confession is made vnto the Priest, in token of forgiuenesse already obtained: not as a cause of Forgiuenesse to be obtained. Your very Glosse saith: Apud Græcos Confessio non est necessaria: quia non emanauit ad illos Traditio talis: Among the Christians in Græcia, Confession of sinnes is not necessarie: for that this Tradition neuer came among them. Yet, M. Harding, I trow, ye will not say, but their sinnes may be forgiuen.

In eodem cap. De Pœnit. dist. 1. Omnis qui. De Pœn. dist. 5 In Panitent. In Glossa.

Certainly Chrysostome saith: Solus te Deus confitentem videat: Let God onely see thee making the Confession of thy sinnes.

Chrys. de Confess. & Pœnit.

It was very much therefore, M. Harding, for you, so assuredly, and so precisely to say, that sinnes can neuer be forgiuen without your priuie Confession: and specially thereby to proue the Vniuersall Headship of the Pope.

Supreme Head.

Supreme Gouernor.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision. 3.

Besides also, that God by his Prophets often, & earnestly commandeth the King to cut down the Groues, to breake downe the Images & Altars of Idols, and to write out the Booke of the Law for himselfe: and besides that, the Prophet Esaias saith: A King ought to be a Patron, and a Nurse of the Church, &c.

M. Harding.

Your second argument for the Ecclesiastical power of Kings is, because God bade thē to cut down superstitious groues and ouerthrow idols: (a) as though this were not an office of executing a commandement, rather then of decreeing any thing. The Authority to diseerne an Image of Christ frō an idoll of the Diuel, belongeth to them, who know, that an image is a name of arte, which is of God, an idoll is a name of false worshiping, which is of the Diuel. So that an Image is godly, an idol diuelish. When the Priest hath iudged this or that to be an Idol, or when it is euident, that so it is, then the King shall doe well to breake it down. (b) But if the King will breake downe the image of Christ, when the Priest telleth him it is a godly representation and no Idol: then the King doth more then his office requireth, and shall not only not procue his supremacy, but also shall incur danger to bee reiected of God, as King Saul was, when he despised to keepe the commandement of Samuel the high Priest. 1. Reg. 15.

(a) The King is the Priests executioner.

(b) O vanity of vanities! Aaron the Bishop set vp the golden calfe and cried vnto the people, This is thy God. But Moses the Ciuill Magistrate or Prince, brake it downe.

Whereas you alleage for a Kings Ecclesiastical power, that he was cōmanded to write out the booke of the Law for himselfe; why left ye out that which followeth there immeadiatly: Accipiens exemplar à Sacerdotibus Leuiticæ tribus? The King must write out a Booke of the Deuteronomie: but the example thereof he must receiue of the Priests that be of the Tribe of Leui. If in Spirituall matters the King were aboue the Priests (c) why had he not the keeping of the Law in his owne hands? Why must he take it of the Priests? Why did not rather the Priests come to him, sith the inferior taketh al his right of the Superiour? If the Priests must giue the holy Scripture vnto the King, then verily must he take such as they giue him, and with such meaning as they giue vnto it. So that if you had not (d) falsified the meaning of Gods word by leauing out halfe the sentence, this place had proued against you. It is to bee weighed to what end a King is required to haue & to read that holy Book. Verily not to take vpon him the part of a Iudge in causes of Religion: but as there it is expressed, to the intent he learne to feare his Lord God and keepe his words and ceremonies in the Law commanded, and that his heart be not lifted vp into pride aboue his brethren, &c.* I omit that you read, Librum legis, whereas the Church readeth Deuteronomium,* it were too long to enter into that disputation. The booke of the law signifieth the whole Law, the Deuteronomy is but one of the fiue bookes. Deut. 17.

(c) Ful discreetly As though kings had not Officers to keepe their Records.

(d) Vntruth For we haue falsified no part hereof, as it shal appeare *Heere M. Harding would faine say somewhat if hee wist what it were. Read the Answer

Where Esay calleth a King a Patron of the Church, I haue not found. But were it he called him so, it betokeneth, that he should defend the Church from worldly enemies, as in repelling the Turkes, in expelling Heretikes and such like kingly acts. Which proueth no spirituall supremacy, but vnder God a fealty and seruiceable power. I finde where Esay saith; Et erunt Reges nutricij tui & Reginæ nutrices tuæ: Kings shall be thy fosterers and Queenes thy nurses. But not euery nurse or fosterer is aboue him who is nourished. (e) A faithfull seruant often times fostereth the master: yet is he not aboue his master. Besides S. Hierome vnderstandeth the Kings whō Esay nameth, to be the Apostles, according to which sense it maketh nothing to the purpose as it is alleged for. Cap. 49.

(e) By this prety conclusion, the king is the seruant, and the Priest is the Master.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

All Christian Princes are much beholden to you, M. Harding: ye make them so like to Polyphemus the Giant, after his eies were stricken out, that is to say, to a man mighty in body and great in bones: but starke blinde, and no way able to guid himselfe. A King ye say, may not take vpon him to iudge or pronounce in matters of Religion, be they neuer so cleere: but onely must hearken and be ready to execute whatsoeuer shal be thought good & commanded by your Bishops, as if he were only your Bishops man. So saith your holy Father Pope Bonifacius 8: Gladius materialis excercendus est manu Regum & Militum: Sed ad nutum & patientiā Sacerdotis: The Materiall or Temporall Sword must be vsed by the hand of Kings and Souldiers: but at the becke and ſufferance of the Prieſt: by which Prieſt he meaneth the Pope.

But Dauid ſaith: Now ye Kings, haue vnderſtanding: Be learned, ye that iudge the Earth. Pſal.2. God Kings haue oftentimes reformed Religion, and haue lawfully controlled and corrected, and depoſed idle and wicked Biſhops: as before in place conuenient it is largely prooued. The Emperour Iuſtinian threatneth, if the Biſhop offended in ſaying the publike Seruice, or in the Miniſtration of the Sacraments, that then he himſelfe would vſe his authority ouer him, and ſee him puniſhed. Fraciſcus Zabarellus ſaith: That for any crime notorious, the Emperour may ſummon the Pope to appeare before his Maieſty, and may require him to yeelde a reckoning of his Faith. And yet will ye ſay, The Emperour is ſtill the Popes man and may iudge nothing in cauſes of Religion without him. Authen. Conſtitut.123. Franc. Zabar. De Schiſma. & Concil.

The King (ye ſay) is not able to iudge, whether an Idoll be an Idoll or no, but by the leading and teaching of the Prieſt. So well ye wiſh all Chriſtian Princes were inſtructed, that they ſhould not be able, either to ſee or to ſpeake without you. But what if your Prieſts ſay, as it hath often happened, God is an Idoll, and an Idoll is God? Light is Darkneſſe, and Darkneſſe is Light? What if they ſay, Greatis Diana the Goddeſſe of Epheſus. What if they condemne the innocent, and ſay, as they ſometime ſaid of Chriſt, Vnleſſe this man were a malefactor, we would neuer haue brought him to thy hand. Yet muſt the Prince neuertheleſſe draw his ſword, and ſtrike, when and whomſoeuer the Prieſt biddeth: and blindly execute his wicked will? Indeed, M. Harding, you ſay preciſelie: If the matter decreed bee Spirituall and appertaining to Faith, the Prince ought to obey without queſtion or grudge. Likewiſe againe ye ſay: It ſhal be enough for you, to doe as the Succeſſors of Peter bid you to doe. Chriſt now requireth of you not to obey Peter and Paul, but to obey him that ſitteth in their Chaire. Whatſoeuer ye ſay, true or falſe. For this, no doubt, muſt be your meaning. Eſay.5. Act.19. Iohan.18. M. Harding pag.302.a. M. Harding pag.192.a.

The King was bound to write out the Booke of the Law: This (ye ſay) prooueth not the Kings Superiority ouer the Prieſts. No verily, M. Harding: neither was it alleged by vs to that purpoſe. Neuertheleſſe heereby it appeareth, that God would haue the King to bee learned in his Lawes. pag.192.b.

But the King muſt receiue the Booke of the Prieſt, and of none other: Therefore, ſay you, the Prieſt is aboue the King. Mee thinketh, M. Harding, euen for your credits ſake, yee ſhould looke better to your Logicke. For what auaileth the deliuerie of a Booke to make the Prieſt either higher or lower? When the Pope is at his Conſecration, the Cardinall that is his Orderer, deliuereth him a Booke of the Epiſtles and Goſpels. Will ye therefore conclude, that the ſaid Cardinal is aboue the Pope? Marry God forbid.

The Prince iudgeth in Eccleſiaſtical cauſes. Ceremon. lib.1. Sect.2.

Gods meaning touching this Ceremonie, was this, that the Kings Booke ſhould bee true and faultleſſe. And therefore God commanded him to take a Copie thereof out of the Regiſtrie or Records, which were thought to be void of al corruption, and were euermore kept in the Temple, vnder the cuſtodie of the Prieſts. Paulus Phagius ſaith: Euery priuate man was commanded to haue one Booke ſeuerally to himſelfe: but the King was commanded to haue two. And forasmuch as the King was a Publike perſon, therefore God willed him to take his Copy out of the publike Records of the Temple. Paul. Phag. in Deut. cap.17.

Your owne Hugo Cardinalis ſaith: Accipiet exemplar à Sacerdotibus: non à quibuſlibet, ſed à bonis: vbi nihil fucatum eſt: nihil corruptum: He ſhall take his Copy of the Prieſts, not of euery Prieſt what ſoeuer, but of the good: that in the ſame Copy there be nothing, neither coloured, nor corrupted. Hugo in Deut. cap.17.

All this, M. Harding, will hardly prooue your ſtrange concluſion, that the Prieſt was Superiour to the King: It ſeemeth much better to prooue the contrary, that the Prieſt was the Kings Inferiour, and his Subiect, and his Clerke of Records, as being appointed to keepe his Bookes. So S. Auguſtine ſaith, the Iewes this day keepe the very true Bookes of the Scriptures: albeit, not for their owne vſe, but only for ours. And thereofore hee ſaith they be not our Superiours, but our Seruants. Auguſt. contra Fauſt. li.16.ca.21. & in Pſal. 58. & ſæpe alibi

Certainly, concerning the Kings and Prieſts of the Old Law, one of your own friends, whom for many cauſes ye may not wel refuſe, ſaith thus: In Veteri Lege Sacerdotium indignius erat Poteſtate Regia & ei Subiectum: In the Old Law, the Prieſts Office was Inferiour to the Prince and Subiect vnto him. Ioh. de Pariſijs, de Poteſt. Reg. & Papali, ca.5.

Ye ſay, If the Prieſt muſt giue the holy Scriptures to the King; then verily muſt he take ſuch as they giue him, and with ſuch meaning as they giue vnto it. Yea, I trow, though they teare their robes againſt Chriſt, as Caiaphas did, and crie out, He blaſphemeth, yet muſt we by your iudgment, euermore ſeeke to them for the ſenſe and meaning of the Scriptures. For this is the ground and foundation of your Diuinity: The Scripture of God hath none other ſenſe, but as it ſhall pleaſe the Prieſt to giue vnto it. But S. Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of the ſame Prieſts and Biſhops, from whom we haue receiued the ſelfe ſame Scriptures, ſaith thus:

Literæ

Chrysost in Genesim, hom. 8. Literæ quidem Legis apud illos sunt: Sensus autem apud nos: The Letters or words of the Scriptures are with them, but the true meaning of them is with vs.

Deutero-nomie. A Copy. A Double.

Heere you much disaduantage your selfe, and as you say, omit that we read, Librum Legis, whereas the Church readeth, Deuteronomium, for that, as you say, it were too long for you to enter into that disputation. Therefore, M. Harding, we will patiently abide your leasure, vntill ye haue found out the whole mysterie, & considered it better. In the meane season, it shal not be good for you, to be ouerranke with your Commentaries, vntill ye better vnderstand the Text. Certainely the wise and learned thinke, that heerin ye are much deceiued. For whereas the words are these: Describit sibi Deuteronomium Legis huius, they thinke that Deuteronomium, in this place is not put for any one certaine seuerall Booke of the fiue Bookes of Moses, as it is otherwise commonlie vsed, but rather for a Copie, or a Draught of the whole Law. And in this sense, they say, that Δευτερόνομιον is none other but Ἀντίγραφον, that is to say, a Copy or a Double. The Italian translation hath thus: Esso si scriuero questo Doppio de la Legge. The French Translation hath, Le double. Leo Iudas translateth it thus: Describet sibi Exemplum Legis huius. He shall write out for himselfe a Copy of this Law. And for some proofe heereof, it is thus written in the Booke of Iosh-ua: Afterward Ioshua read out of the words of the Law, both the blessings and the curses, according to euery thing that is written in the Booke of the Law. And there was not one word of all the things that Moses commanded, but Iosua read the same before the whole Congregation of Israell. Thus ye see, M. Harding, that this word Deuteronomium in this place signifieth not the fifth Booke of Moses, as you imagine, but a full Copy of all the Law. And therefore eftsoones I tell you, ye are much deceiued.

Quesito Doppio Le Double.

Iosua. 8.

Where we allege the words of the Prophet Esay: Kings shall be thy Fosterers, and Queenes thy Nurses: (ye say) Euery Nurse or Fosterer is not aboue him that is nourished. Faithfull seruant often times fostereth his Master. Yet is not he aboue his Master. So loth ye are, the King should be Superiour to a Priest. And thus haue ye brought about by your handsome conclusions, that your Priests be the Masters, and Kings their Seruants. And therefore it is discreetlie noted in your Glosse: Imperator Romanus est Procurator, siue Defensor Romanæ Ecclesiæ: The Emperour of Rome is the Steward or Bailiffe of the Church of Rome.

I say, besides all these things, we see by Histories and by Examples of the best times, that good Princes euer tooke the administration of Ecclesiasticall matters to pertaine to their duty.

Moses being a Ciuill Magistrate, & chiefe guide of the people, both receiued from God, & deliuered to the people all the order for Religion, & Sacrifices, and gaue Aaron the Bishop a vehement and sore rebuke for making the Golden Calfe, and for suffering the Corruption of Religion.

M. Harding.

(a) Vntruth. For at that time hee was no Priest.

(b) Vntruth. For it proueth the contrary. Read the answer.

(c) Vntruth confessed by M. Hard. friends. For in the time of Moses law the Priest was inferiour to the Prince.

(d) Substantial arguments, whereby to proue the Pope a King.

* Discreetly reasoned. For al this pertaineth as wel to a Simple Priest, as to the Pope.

Moses was not only a Ciuill Magistrate, (a) but also a Priest. In that he had both offices (b) it proue-eth that a Priest may haue both; but not contrariwise that a King may haue both. For the greater may include the lesse, but the lesse cannot include the greater. (c) The office of a Priest is the highest of all, (d) And Christ comming naturally of the Kings line from Dauid in the Trbe of Iuda, yet esteemed that honour nothing in respect of that he was a Priest according to the order of Melchisedech. Therfore Melchisedech also being both Priest & King, was not yet said to bee the figure of Christ so much cõcerning his kingdom as his priesthood. For Dauid said of Christ, Thou art a Priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech. As for his kingdome it was included in his Priests office. And therfore whe we speake of Christs Kingdome, though in euery respect he be the very King indeed of all Kings, and Lord of al Lords; yet we assigne it also to haue bin vpon the Crosse, Vo regnauit a ligno Deus, where God raigned from the wood. According to the same meaning, whereas the people of Israell were called Regnum Sacerdotale, a Priestlie Kingdome. S. Peter writing to the Christians, turned the order of the words, calling the Church of Christ Sacerdotium Regale, a Kinglie Priesthood. Moses was both a Priest and a Ciuill Gouernour, as being a figure of Christ, who ioined both together making the tribe of Iuda which was before Kingly, now also to be Priestly. Therefore S. Augustine vpon those words of Dauid. Moses and Aaron are in the number of his Priests; concludeth that Moses must needs haue beene a Priest. * For (saith he) if he were not a Priest, what was he? * Nunquid maior Sacerdote esse potuit, could he be greater then a Priest? As who should say, there is no greater dignity then Priesthood. And seeing Moses had the greatest dignity, for he ruled all, & consecrated Aaron high Bishop, & his sonnes Priests, therefore himselfe must needs haue beene a Priest, (e) Now if Moses were both, & his chiefe office was Priesthood, it followeth by that example, that the Pope may rule temporally, but not that a king may rule spiritually. Thus you haue gained nothing by this example.

Iustin. in Dial. aduers. Tryph. Exod. 19. 1. Pet. 2. Psal. 99.

(e) Louanian Logicke. Moses consecrated Aaron: Ergo the Pope is a King.

The

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here, M. Harding hath many great words of small weight. The finall conclusion and Summa Summarum, is this: The Pope must needs be a King. And that he proueth as his maner is, by these his yong vntidy arguments: Moses being a Ciuill Magistrate or a Prince, had also the Priesthood and was a Priest: Ergo, saith he, The Pope being a Priest, must haue also the Kingdome and be a King. And thus he peeceth these matters handsomely together, as though, what soeuer were once in Moses, ought of necessity to be also in the Pope. But if a man should desire him to proue his argument, and to make it good, and to shew vs how these peces may be framed together, I think he would be faine to take a day. First, whether Moses were a Priest, or no, it is not certaine. As for that M. Harding allegeth these words of Dauid: Moses & Aaron in Sacerdotibus eius, he himselfe wel knoweth that the Hebrew word there is doubtfull, and signifieth aswell a Prince as a Priest. And therefore we cannot necessarily conclud by force of these words that Moses was a Priest: It is sufficient that he was the Captaine and Prince and had the leading of the people.

The Pope is a King. Moses a Priest.

Psal. 98.

S. Hierome saith: Vnus Legis, alter Sacerdotij Regulam tenuit: Moses held the rule of the Law: Aaron the rule of Priesthood. Hier. in Psalm. 98.

Againe he saith: Emisit ante faciem nostram Mosen Spiritualem Legem & Aaron Magnum Sacerdotem: God sent out before our faces, Moses (not as the Priest, but as) the Spiritual Law, and Aaron the great Priest. Euen Hugo your owne Doctour, touching the same words, saith thus: Moses etc. &c. Notwithstanding Moses were not a Priest, yet because he hallowed the peoples praiers, &c. he was called a Priest. For in the Scriptures Great and Noble men are called by the name of Priests. Hieron. in Michaam, cap. 6. Hugo in Psal. 98.

Here your Hugo telleth you, that notwithstanding Moses were called a Priest, yet indeed he was no Priest.

Who so listeth to know more hereof, let him read Sanctus Pagninus, Dauid Kimchi, Nicolaus Lyra, &c.

But if Moses indeed were a Priest, ye should do wel, M. Harding, to resolue vs: First whether he were a Priest, borne, or else afterward made a Priest? A Priest borne, I trow, ye wil not say. If ye say he was afterward made a Priest, then tel vs by what Bishop or other Creature was he Consecrate? At whose hands receiued he Authority? When, where, and to what purpose? What Priestlike Apparel euer ware he? Or in what Office or Ministery euer shewed he himselfe to bea Priest? S. Paul saith: A Priest is appointed to offer vp Oblations and Sacrifices for sinne. What Oblations or Sacrifices for sinne, can ye tel vs, that Moses offered? If he were neither borne a Priest, nor made a Priest, nor euer knowne by office to be a Priest, then was he, I trow, a very strange Priest. Hebræ. 9.

If Moses were the highest Priest and head of the Church, & Aaron likewise the highest Priest, and in so much the Head of the Church tw, aswell as he, then had the Church two Highest Bishops, and two Heads both together: which thing were monstrous, not only in speech, but also in Nature.

Notwithstanding, whether Moses at any one certaine time were a Priest or no, it is a matter not worthy the striuing. Certaine it is, that before the Law was written, Kings and Princes, and the best borne, and inheritours, and the wealthiest of the people, were euer Priests. S. Hierome saith: Hebræi tradunt, Primogenitos functos Officio Sacerdotum & habuisse Vestimentum Sacerdotale: quo induti, Deò Victimas offerebant, antequam Aaron in Sacerdotium eligeretur: The Hebrew Rabbins say, that the First borne children did the office of the Priests, and had the Priestlike apparell, and wearing the same, offered vp their Sacrifices vnto God, vntill the time, that Aaron was chosen into the Priesthood. Hier. in Quæst. Hebraicis in Genesim.

Againe he saith: Priuilegium offerendi Primogenitis, vel Maximè Regibus debebatur: The Priuiledge of offering vp Sacrifice was due to the First borne of the children, but most of all vnto Kings. The Heathen Roman Emperours, as Vespasianus, Traianus and others, to increase their Maiesty towards their Subiects, beside the state of the Empire, would also be called Pontifices Maximi. Hier. in Iob cap. 1. Di. 10. de capit. in Glossa. Inter acta Gelasij.

Therefore we wil grant M. Harding, seeing he hath taken so much paines about a matter not worthy so long talke, that Moses for some little short time bare the Office of a Priest. Yet neuertheless had he no Ordinarie Priesthood: neither was he a Priest more then for the space of two or three houres, only vntil he had consecrated Aaron and his children and no longer. Immediately afterward, al this great Priesthood was at an end. One of your owne Doctours, M. Harding, saith thus: Non erant Sacerdotes Legales, Dignitate & Officio, sicut Aaron: Licet in necessitate, & propter Defectum Sacerdotum, aliquos actus Sacerdotum fecerint: vt quòd Moses inunxit Aaron: propter quòd Moses Exod. 29. Iob. de Parisijs cap 18.

Sacerdos

The Pope is a King.

Sacerdos dicitur in Psalmo: The First borne were not Priests in Office, and dignity, as Aaron was: notwithstanding in case of necessity and for lack of Priests, they did some part of the Priests Office: as that Moses anointed or consecrated Aaron: for which thing Moses in the Psalme is called a Priest.

This, M. Harding, is that foundation, that must néeds beare the burden of your whole Church of Rome. The Pope (ye say) must be a King, because Moses was both Prince & Priest. And yet your owne Fellowes say, Moses by office and dignity was neuer Priest. Ye say, The Pope being a Bishop may be a King; but of the other side a King may in no wise be a Bishop. And thus either vnwittingly or willingly, ye seeme to ouerthrow your owne position. For the example that ye groũd vpon, of Aaron, & Moses proue quite the contrary. For Moses being a Prince, did also the Office of a Bishop. But Aaron being a Bishop did neuer the Office of a Prince. Therefore hereof ye might better conclude, that a Prince may be a Bishop, but a Bishop may not be a king. Strengthen your bolts therefore, M. Harding, & shaue thē better before ye so suddenly, I wil not say, so rudely, shoot them frō you.

Extra. de Maiorit. & Obed. Solit. in Glos. H

Neuertheless ye say, The Priesthood which is the more, may containe the kingdome being the lesse. In this respect, I trow, your Glosse, as it is said before, compareth the Pope to the Sunne, and the Emperour to the Moone, and findeth out substantially by good Geometricall proportion, that the Pope is iust seuen and fifty times greater then the Emperour.

Ioh. de Parisijs de potest. Reg. & Papali, ca. 5.

Howbeit your owne Doctours say, as I haue likewise shewed before, that in the Law of Moses, the Prince was greater then the Priest.

That ye allege of the Priesthood and kingdom of Christ, serueth you to smal purpose. For, I beseech you, what Crowne, what Scepter, what Sword bare Christ? What Ecclesiasticall Priesthood had he, but only that he executed vpon the Crosse? Verily touching any Ciuil shew or outward Office, as he was no King, so was he no Priest. As he said,

Iohn 18

My Kingdome is not of this world. So might he also haue said, My Priesthood is not of this world. Otherwise, he was both King and Priest, in power and vertue, but not apparently in outward Office.

Ioh. de Parisijs. De potest. Pap. cap. 8.

One of your Fellowes saith thus: Patet, per Sanctos Expositores, quòd Christus non habuit in Temporalibus, Authoritatem vel Iudicium. Sed dare potuit, & dare habuit Virtutis Documentum: It appeareth by the holy Expositours that Christ had neither Authority, nor Iudgement in things Temporall. But hee could both giue and had to giue Instructions of Vertue.

As for these two words of S. Peter,

1. Pet. 2.

Ye are a Kingly Priesthood, ye would not haue alleged them to this purpose, had ye not béene in your dreame. For thinke you, that S. Peter calleth the whole Body of the Church of Christ, a Kingly Priesthood, for that you fansie your Pope to be together both Priest and King? Certainly, the Church of God was a Kingly Priesthood, before either the Church of Rome was a Church, or the Pope of Rome was a Pope. Ye should haue some care to deale more reuerentlie with the Word of God, for it is holie. S. Peters meaning is this, that euery faithfull Christian man is now, after a Spiritual or Ghostlie meaning, not only a Priest, but also a King: and therefore he calleth the whole Church, a Kingly Priesthood. Tertullian saith thus: Nonne & Laici Sacerdotes sumus? Regnum quoque nos, & Sacerdotes Deo & Patri suo fecit: And wee that bee Lay-men, are we not Priests? Truly Christ hath made euen vs a Kingdome and Priests vnto his Father. S. Augustine saith: Hoc Sacerdotio Regali consecrantur omnes pertinentes ad Corpus Christi, Summi & Veri Principis Sacerdotum: With this Roiall Priesthood, all they are consecrate that pertaine to the Body of Christ, which is the high and true Prince of Priests. Againe he saith: Omnes sunt Sacerdotes, quia membra sunt vnius Sacerdotis: All bee Priests because they are the members of one Priest. S. Ambrose saith: Omnes Filij Ecclesiæ Sacerdotes sunt: All the Children of the Church be Priests.

Tertull. in Exhor. ad Cast. Apocal. 1. August. 2. Euang. lib. 8. cap. 40. Aug. de Ciuit. Dei, li. 20. c. 10 Ambr. in Luc. lib. 5. cap. 6.

S. Hierome saith: Genus Sacerdotale & Regale sumus omnes, qui Baptizati in Christo, Christi censemur nomine: All we are the Priestly and Kingly kinred, that beeing Baptized in Christ, are called Christians by the name of Christ.

Hieron. in Malac. cap. 1. Chrys. 2. Cor. Homil. 3.

Chrysostome saith: Et tu in Baptismo, & Rex efficeris, & Sacerdos & Propheta: Euen thou in thy Baptisme, art made both a King, and a Priest, and a Prophet.

Now M. Harding, let vs take the view of your Priestly conclusions.

Moses once did one part of the Bishops Office in consecrating Aaron and his Children: and that neuer at any time else, neither after nor before. Againe: Christ hath a Spirituall Priesthood, and a Spirituall Kingdome: for otherwise Ordinary Priesthood, and Earthly Kingdome he had none. Againe: S. Peter called the whole Church of Christ, a Kingly Priesthood: Ergo, say you, The Pope beareth both the office of a Priest, and also the Right & State of an earthly King.

To dissemble all other the fond weakenesse of these follies, Christ himselfe saith to the Pope,

Pope, and to all other Priests and Bishops: The Kings of Nations rule ouer them, and they that are great, exercise Authority ouer the people: But it shall not be so amongst you. Math. 20.

S. Cyprian saith, as he is alledged by Gratian: Christus actibus proprijs & Dignitatibus distinctis, officia Potestatis vtriusque discreuit: Christ by seuerall duties, and distinct honors, hath set a difference betweene the offices of both Powers. Dist. 10. Quoniam idem.

Whereupon your owne Glosse saith: Hic est Argumentum, quòd Papa non habet vtrunque Gladium: Here is a good Argument that the Pope hath not both Swords: that is to say, that the Pope is not both Priest and King. Glossa.

S. Bernard saith thus vnto Pope Eugenius: Planum est, quòd Apostolis interdicitur Dominatus. Ergo tu tibi vsurpare audes, aut Dominans Apostolatum, aut Apostolicus Dominatum. Planè ab alterutro prohiberis. Si vtrunque similiter habere vis, perdes vtrumque. Alioqui ne te putes exceptum illorum numero, de quibus conqueritur Dominus, dicens, Ipsi regnauerunt, & non ex me. It is plaine, that Temporall Dominion is forbidden the Apostles. Now therefore thou, being Pope, dare to vsurpe either the Apostleship, being a Prince, or the Princehood, being the Successor of the Apostles. Doubtlesse from the one of them thou art forbidden. If thou wilt indifferently haue both, thou shalt lose both. Otherwise thinke not, thou canst be excepted from the number of them of whom the Lord complaineth, They haue made themselues Kings, and not by me. Bernar. de con. Lib. 2.

The Pope is a King.

Concerning the place of S. Peter, one of your company saith, it nothing furthereth the Popes Kingdome. Thus he saith: Sacerdotium dicitur Regale, à Regno, non huius mundi, sed Cœli: S. Peter calleth vs a Kingly Priesthood, of the Kingdome of Heauen, not of the Kingdome of this world. Yet is this the selfe same Kingdome that the Pope craueth, and that by the Authority of S. Peter. Ioan. de Parisijs. cap. 18.

Notwithstanding one of your Louanian company hath sent vs home lately other newes from Louaine. His words be these: Vos estis Regale Sacerdotium: You are a Kingly Priesthood, as who should say, the Priesthood before was not Kingly, for that then Kings ruled ouer Priests: but now is the Priesthood Kingly, for that to it bee subiect euen Kings themselues. Thus vnlesse your Priests may rule Kings, and Princes, and all the World at their pleasure, ye thinke they haue no Kingly Priesthood. Dorm. fol. 40.

In the Councell holden at Macra in France it is written thus: Solus Dominus noster Iesus Christus verè fieri potuit & Rex & Sacerdos. Post Incarnationem verò, & Resurrectionem, & Ascensionem eius in Cœlum, nec Rex Pontificis Dignitatem, nec Pontifex Regiam Potestatem sibi vsurpare præsumpsit: Onely our Lord Iesus Christ might truly bee both Priest and King. But sithence his Incarnation, and Resurrection, and Ascension into Heauen neither hath the King presumed to take vpon him the dignity or office of a Bishop, nor hath the Bishop presumed to vsurpe the power and maiesty of a King. Concil. Macr. Citatur ab Illyric. inter Testes Veritatis, pag. 121.

To bee short, M. Harding, wee say not, as you so often and so vntruly haue reported of vs, that the King may in any wise execute the Bishops Office: but thus wee say, and because it is true, therefore wee say it: The King may lawfully correct and chastise the negligence and falshood of the Bishop: and that in so doing, he doth onely his owne Office, and not the Bishops.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision 6.

Iosua also, though he were none other then a Ciuill Magistrate, yet as soone as he was chosē by God, and set as a Ruler ouer the people, he receiued cōmandments, specially touching Religiō and the Seruice of God. Iosua Cap. 1.

Iosua.

M. Harding.

There is no doubt but Iosua receiued commission and commandement to worship God, but none to rule Priests in spirituall matters. Yea rather he was commanded to goe forth and come in at the voice and word of Eleazarus the High Priest, he and all the children of Israel. Do not these men prooue their matters handsomely?

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Iosua was commanded to go in and out, and to be directed by the voice of Eleazarus the High Priest. Therefore (ye say) in spirituall causes the Priests may not be controlled by the Prince. Ye deliuer out your Arguments, M. Harding, before they be ready. These peces would haue beene better tied together.

Though the Prince be commanded to heare the Priest, yet if the Priest be negligent, or deceiue the people, he may by his Ordinary Authority controle the Priest.

When Aaron the High Priest had consented to the making and worshipping of the golden Exod. 32.

Iosua.

golden Calfe, Moſes being then the Temporall Prince, rebuked him ſharply vnto his face: and in ſo doing, did not the Biſhops Office, but onely his owne. As touching Iosua, whom ye would faine haue reſtrained from all Eccleſiaſticall Cauſes, he cauſed the People to be Circumciſed: He cauſed Altars for their bloody Sacrifices to be reiected: He cauſed the Prieſts to make their Sacrifices: He cauſed the Deuteronomie to be written in ſtones: He cauſed both the Bleſſings and the Curſes of God to be pronounced: He ſpake openly to the People, and fraied them from Idolatry. All theſe were Cauſes, not of Ciuill Policy, but of Religion. S. Auguſtine ſaith: In hoc Reges Deo ſeruiunt, ſicut eis Diuinitùs præcipitur, in quantum ſunt Reges, ſi in ſuo Regno bona iubeant, mala prohibeant; non ſolùm quæ pertinent ad humanam ſocietatem, verùm etiam quæ ad Diuinam Religionem: Herein Kings ſerue God, as it is commanded them from aboue, in that they be Kings, if within their Kingdome they command good things, and forbid euill; not onely in things perteining to Humane Fellowſhip, or Ciuill Order, but alſo in things perteining to Gods Religion. He may ſee therefore, M. Harding, how handſomely ſoeuer we proue our matters, that of your part hitherto they are but vnhandſomely and coutſly anſwered.

Auguſt. contra Creſconium, Lib. 3. Cap. 51.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuiſion 7.

1. Paralip. 13.

King Dauid ordereth matters in Religion.

King Dauid, when the whole Religion of God was altogether brought out of frame by wicked king Saul, brought home againe the Arke of God, that is to ſay, he reſtored Religion againe, and was not only amongſt the himſelfe, as a Counſeller and furtherer of the worke, but he appointed alſo Hymnes and Pſalmes, put in order the companies, and was the only doer in ſetting forth that whole Soiemne Triumph, and in effect ruled the Prieſts.

M. Harding.

As Dauid reſtored all things to good order after the euill king Saul ſo did Queene Mary redreſſe diſorders before committed. But as Queene Mary did it by the conſent of Prieſts, ſo king Dauid in Prieſtly matters called for Sadoch and Abiathar. Indeed Dauid paſſed other Princes herein, becauſe he had the* gift of Prophecy, whereby he wrote Pſalms, which to this day we ſing. But al this maketh nothing to prooue him Iudge in Spirituall matters. He did not vſurpe the Authority to ſacrifice, to diſcerne the Leaper, and to doe the like things of Prieſtly charge.

* An il compariſon, for that the one ſet vp, the other pluckt downe.

* A ſimple ſhift, God wot. For other Kings that did the like, were no Prophets.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

King Dauid (ye ſay) reſtored Religion by meane of the Prieſts. Nay verily, M. Harding: for by meane of the Prieſts the Religion vtterly was decaied. Therefore ye ſpoile that moſt Noble Prince of his worthy praiſes, and giue them to others that neuer deſerued them. The Holy Tabernacle was broken and loſt: the Arke of God was kept, not in the Temple, but in a priuate mans houſe: the people had no Common place to reſort vnto, to heare Gods will: they had each man his owne Priuate Chapell in their Hilles and Groaues. And all this was done by the ſlothfulneſſe and negligence of the Biſhops.

Dauid therefore called the Biſhops and Prieſts together: He ſhewed them in what ſort the Religion of God was defaced: He willed them to bring the Arke into Sion: He was preſent himſelfe: He appointed and ordered the whole Triumph: He aſſigned which of the Leuites, and in what order they ſhould ſerue before the Arke: He allotted Aarons Children, which were the Prieſts, to walke each man in his ſeuerall Office.

2. Paralip. 8.

So likewiſe it is written of King Salomon touching the ſame: King Salomon, according to the Decree and order of his father Dauid, appointed the Offices of the Prieſts in their ſeuerall Miniſteries, and the Leuites each man in his Order, that they ſhould praiſe God, and miniſter before the Prieſts. For ſo Dauid the man of God had commanded. Likewiſe it is written of King Ioſaphat: He appointed and ordered the Leuites and Prieſts.

2. Paralip. 19.

Thus then did theſe Godly Princes: and thus doing, they vſurped not the Biſhops Office, but only did that they lawfully might do, and apperteined wholly vnto themſelues.

Where ye ſay, Dauid was a Prophet, and not only a King, as though he had done theſe things by vertue of his Prophecy, and not by the right of his Princely Power, this poore ſhift is very ſimple: For notwithſtanding King Dauid were a Prophet, yet King Ioſaphat, and other Princes that did the like, were no Prophets: neither doe we read of any other Prophet that euer attempted to do the like: nor did Dauid theſe things, as a Prophet, but as a King.

The Apologie, Chap. 11. Diuision 8.

King Salomon built vnto the Lord the Temple, which his Father Dauid had but purposed in his minde to do: and after the finishing thereof, hee made a godly Oration to the people, concerning Religion and the Seruice of God. He afterward displaced Abiathar the Priest, and set Sadok in his place. 2. Paralip. 6. 3. Regum. 8.

M. Harding.

Salomons building of the Temple, and praying therein, prooueth no Supremacie ouer the Priests in Spirituall things. His putting of Abiathar out of his dignity and roome, * was like to that Queene Mary did to Cranmer: Whom shee might haue remooued for Treason, as Salomon laid the like to Abiathar, yet shee chose rather to burne him for Heresie. But this prooueth *only an outward execution of Iustice, without any preiudice to the Substance of our question: which is, whether a Temporall Prince may determine the causes of Religion or no. 3. Reg. 2.

* Vntruth. For what Superiour Bishops authority vsed Salomon in the Deposition of Abiathar?

* Vntruth, manifest. Read the Answer.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The deposing of Abiathar, yee say, was onely the execution of outward iustice; like to that Queene Mary did to Doctor Cranmer the Archbishop of Canturbury. Wherein ye shew your selfe to be much ouerseene. For these comparisons are in no wise like. Salomon, by his Princely authority, lawfully deposed the High Priest Abiathar: But Queene Mary Deposed not, nor could she by your Canons lawfully Depose the Archbishop of Canturbury: nor doe you thinke it in any case lawfull, that a Bishop should be Deposed by a Prince. For Deposition (ye say) is a Spirituall punishment, and only belongeth vnto a Bishop. And your Law saith: Eius est Destituere, cuius est Instituere: Hee may depose a Priest, that hath authority to place a Priest. Therefore these two Princes doings were not like. But touching the High Priest Abiathar, King Salomon Summoned him to appeare before him: King Salomon sate in Iudgement, and heard the Accusations wherewith he was charged; King Salomon pronounced Sentence against him: King Salomon Deposed him: King Salomon appointed Sadoch to succeed him. If all this be not sufficient, ouer and besides these things, King Salomon placed the Arke of God: King Salomon Sanctified and Hallowed the Temple: King Salomon offered vp burnt Sacrifice: King Salomon directed and ordered the Priests in their seuerall Offices: King Salomon blessed the whole people: And as it is written, The Priests and Leuites left not ought vndone, of all that was commanded them by the King. If these cases be not Spirituall, tell vs then, what cases may be allowed for Spirituall? Thus the godly King Salomon, thought it lawful for him to deale, not only in matters of Temporall Gouernment, but also in Ecclesiasticall or Spirituall cases of Religion. Therefore M. Harding, it is but a toy that ye tell vs of the Execution of outward Iustice.

King Salomon iudgeth in Spirituall cases.

After this, when the Temple of God was in shamefull wise polluted through the naughtinesse and negligence of the Priests, King Ezechias commanded the same to be cleansed frō the rubble & filth, the Priests to light vp Candles, to burne Incense, and to do their Diuine Seruice according to the Old and allowed Order: The same King also commanded the Brasen Serpent, which then the People wickedly worshipped, to bee taken downe, and beaten to powder. 2. M. Harding.

How often shal I tel you, that this prooueth no more, but that good Kings doe good deeds, maintaining true Religion, and pull downe the false, as the Constable of France burned the Pulpits of the Huguenots in Paris? But these facts proue not that Kings and Constables be Iudges of Religion, which is good, and which is euil: which true, which false. For therein they * follow the iudgment and aduice of Priests and Prophets, who be about them, as * Esaias was at hand with good King Ezechias, to direct his doings: and so was Elizeus with King Iehu.

This is far from the purpose. For Esaias and Elizeus neither were Priests, nor had the execution of Priestly Offices.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Ezechias. King Ezechias (ye say) and other Kings followed the aduice and iudgement of the Priests and Prophets. This tale, M. Harding, is not only vnlikely, but also vntrue. For ye know that Elias and Elizeus, notwithstanding they were the Prophets of God, yet were they neither Priests, nor Bishops, nor had any maner of Ordinary Ministration in the Church. The Bishops and Priests of whom ye speake, had disordered and wasted Gods whole Religion. The Holy Place of God was full of filthinesse: The Gates of the Temple were shut vp, that no man might enter in: The people had turned away their faces from the Tabernacle of the Lord: There was no Incense: There was no Sacrifice. M. Harding.

Ye put vs in minde to consider how that your selues are those Priuate Hil Altars, & darke Groues. For ye be they that stop the people from the common Temple of Christendom, the Catholik Church: out of which is no Saluation, the head whereof sitteth in Peters Chaire at Rome. For setting order both in matters of Common Weale, & others, Iehosaphat said thus, concerning Religion: Amarias Sacerdos & Pontifex vester, in iis quæ ad Deum pertinent, præsidebit: Amarias the Priest and High Bishop, for such matters as perteine to God, he shal be head ouer you.

The putting of Priests and Bishops in mind of their duty, is not a Supremacie in determining Ecclesiasticall causes. And whereas you say, that king Ioas bridled the riot & arrogancie of the Priests;
* Ye might haue found it. 4. Reg. cap. 12. if it were so, it was well done: but *I find not those words in the Text. Concerning that Iehu did, it is a * meere Temporall Office to put false Preachers & Heretikes to death. Neither can it belong to

But

But ye will say, He did all things by the discretion of the Priests and Bishops. This thing indeed is necessarie, while the Priests and Bishops be Learned and Godly. But King Iosias did far otherwise: for he sent the Bishop himselfe vnto Olda the Propheteſſe, to learne the Discretion and Iudgement of a Woman: and so was directed in matters of Highest Religion by a Woman, and not by a Priest. 4. Regum 22.

These Examples be so manifest, that one of your Fellowes of Louaine is faine thus to excuse the matter by ouermuch Antiquitie: If we would in these daies (saith he) vse in all points the Examples of the Old Law, there would follow an huge number of inconueniences. It is no good reason, to say that therefore our Kings now adaies must haue the like authority. Thus saith he: As though the Princes right were now abated and altered, as the Ceremonies of the Law; and were otherwise now then it was before: Or, as if the Comming of Christ into the world, and the Preaching of the Gospell, had purposely been to represse and pul down the Seat of Kings. Dorm. fol. 37. Dorm. fol. 39.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. Diuision 1.

AND, to reherse no moe Examples out of the Old Law, let vs rather Consider sithence the Birth of Christ, how the Church hath been gouerned in the time of the Gospel. The Prince is a Iudge in Ecclesiastical Causes.

M. Harding.

If we consider the Office of a King in it selfe, it is (a) one euery where, not onely among Christian Princes but also among Heathen. (a) The definition of a King, which agreeth to Iulius Cæsar, or to Alexander the great, as they were Monarkes & Princes, is one with the definition of a King which agreeth to Henry the Eighth, or to Charles the fifth. (b) So that no more could King Henry, a King, meddle with Religion, then Alexander, or Iulius Cæsar. (c) His place is chiefe among the Lay, euen when they are in the Church at the Seruice of God; and (c) without the Church in all Temporall things and causes, he is ouer the Priests themselues.

(a) Euen so Iupiter, or Baals bishop, was as well a Bishop as the Bishop of Rome

(b) Neither can the Pope meddle more with Religion, then Annas or Caiaphas.

(c) Vntruth. For if the Bishop had offended, he was subiect to the Prince, as well within the Church, as without.

And because all these examples are taken out of the Old Testament, I will giue thee a true resolution out of the same Booke, what authority Priests had, and what authority Kings had. Moses gaue this rule, cõcerning the same matter. If (saith he) thou perceiue an heard & doubtful iudgement to be with thee between blood and blood, cause and cause, Leaper and Leaper, and seest the words of the Iudges within thy gates to varie, arise, and go vp to the place which thy Lord God shall chuse, and thou shalt come to the Priests of the stocke of Leui, and to the Iudge that shall be for the time, and thou shalt demand of them, who shall shew the truth of iudgement to thee. Deut. 17.

But neither the Priest by this place may meddle with that iurisdiction which belongeth to the Temporall Iudge, neither the Iudge with that which was Spirituall, and belonging only to the Priest. For of such causes Azarias the Priest and Bishop said to King Ozias, It is not thy Office, Ozias, to burn incense vnto our Lord. It is the Office of the Priests: That is to say, of the Sons of Aaron, who are consecrated to doe such Ministeries. But this the King might doe euen in matters of Religion: (d) When the High Priest had giuen sentence, he might see the execution thereof to be done. But (e) otherwise whatsoeuer King or Temporal Iudge might not do in his owne person, (e) much lesse might he Iudge whether another did well therein, or no. And thus much concerning the Old Testament. 2. Paral. 26.

(d) The Prince is Executioner to the Priest.

(e) Vntruth, euident. Reade the Answer.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

The Office of a King, ye say, was no more in King Henry the Eighth, or in Charles the Fifth, then it was in the Heathen Princes, Iulius Cæsar, or Alexander the Great. And therefore, yee say, a Christian Princes Office standeth only in Matters Temporall: And for that cause ye often call him, a Meere Lay, Temporal Prince: as if he were in Authority not much better then an Heathen Magistrate.

Euen so, M. Harding, is your Pope no more a Bishop or perhaps much lesse a Bishop, then Annas and Caiaphas: Neither is your Priest more a Priest, then the Priest of Dagon, or Baal. The difference standeth not in Office, but only in Truth. Yet neuertheleſſe yee know that Heathen Princes had euermore a Souereigne Authority not only ouer their Priests and Bishops, but also ouer all Cases of Religion.

Aristotle saith: Βασιλεὺς τῶν θεσπρεπῶν τῶν θείων κύριος: The King, that is, Lord and Ruler of things that pertaine vnto the Gods. Aristot. Politicor. Lib. 3.

And therefore Socrates in his Story saith: Imperatores vnà complexi sumus, &c. Wee haue also herein compriſed the Emperours Liues, for that sithence the Emperors were first Christened, the affaires of the Church haue hanged of them, and the greatest Councels both haue beene, and are kept by their aduice. Socrat. Lib. 5. In Proœmio: τὰ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν πράγματα ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐκείνων ἐκρέμετο.

Ye say: The Prince in doubtful cases was commanded to take Counsel of the Highest Priest. This is true. But will ye conclude heereof, that the Highest Priest may say and doe what he listeth, without controlement? What if the High Priest would answer thus, as hee answered sometime indeed: This Christ is a Samaritane, a deceiuer of the people, and hath a Diuell? What if he teare his owne roabes for anger, and crie out, He blasphemeth: hee is worthy to die? Yet must the Emperour nedes giue care vnto him, and beleeue him, without exception? Certainly in the Old Law, if the Biſhop either had bene negligent in his Office, or of malice or ignorance had anſwered Vntruth, hee was euermore vnder the generall controlment of the Prince.

The Prince is a Iudge in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes.

Within the Church (ye ſay) the Prince is inferiour to the Prieſt, notwithſtanding without the Church hee is in Temporall caſes aboue the Prieſt. Thus ye fetch your matter round, within without, and round about, with all the Circumſtances: as if Princes were as changeable as your ſelfe, and would be other without then they are within.

Indeed in that the Prieſt doth his Office, in that he either openeth Gods Will, or declareth his threats, or rebuketh ſinne, or Excommunicateth, and cutteth off a dead member from the Body, ſo farre forth the Prince, be hee neuer ſo mighty, is inferiour vnto him. But in this reſpect the Prince is inferiour, not onely to the Pope, or Biſhop, but alſo to any other ſimple Prieſt: And the Pope himſelfe, in this reſpect, is inferiour to his Confeſſour, bee hee neuer ſo poore a Prieſt. So the Emperour Conſtantinus was wont to ſay to the Godly Biſhops: Be you Biſhops within the Church, and I will be Biſhop without. But if the Biſhop had beene faultie, either in Negligence, or in Faſhood, whether he had beene within the Church, or abroad, hee was alwaies to be controlled by the Prince.

Ye ſay: When the High Prieſt had giuen Sentence, the Prince might ſee the execution thereof to be done. And thus ye make the Emperour the Popes man, to put his Sentence in Execution. So Pope Bonifacius 8. telleth you: Materialis Gladius excercendus eſt manu Regum & Militum, ſed ad nutum & patientiam Sacerdotis: The Temporall Sword muſt be drawn by the hand of Kings and Souldiers: but at the becke and ſufferance of the Prieſt.

9. qu. 3. Nemo. In Gloſſa. Ab Enſ. de vita Conſt. Orat. 4. De Maioritate & Obedientia, Vnam Sanctã. Iohan. de Parijs, cap 18.

But I beſeech you, at whoſe becke did King Salomon Depoſe Abiathar the High Prieſt? At whoſe becke did Ioſias, and other Godly Princes, of whom we haue ſaid before redreſſe the Religion of God, which the Prieſts ſo ſhamefully had decaied: At whoſe becke did they rebuke the careleſſe negligence of the Prieſts? Verily one of your owne Doctours ſaith: In Veteri Lege, Sacerdotes qui Reges inungebant, indubitanter Regibus ſubdebantur: In the Old Law, the Biſhops that anointed the Kings, out of doubt were Subiects vnto the Kings.

Augu. Epiſt. 166. ad Donatiſtas.

And S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quando Imperatores Veritatem tenent, & ipſa Veritate contra Errorem iubet, quiſquis illud contempſerit, ipſe ſibi iudicium acquirit. Nam & inter homines pœnas luit, & apud Deum frontem non habebit, qui hoc facere noluit, quod ei per cor Regis ipſa Veritas iuſſit: When the Emperor holdeth the Truth, and by force of the ſame Truth gineth out Lawes & Proclamations againſt Error, whoſoeuer deſpiſeth the ſame, procureth iudgement againſt himſelfe. For he ſhal bee puniſhed before men, and before God he ſhall haue no face, that refuſed to doe that thing, that the Truth it ſelfe, through the heart of the Prince, hath commanded him.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. Diuiſion 2.

The Chriſtian Emperours in the old time appointed the Councels of the Biſhops. Conſtantine called the Councell at Nice: Theodoſius the firſt called the Councell at Coſtantinople: Theodoſius the ſecond called the Councell at Epheſus: Martian called the Councell at Chalcedon.

M. Harding.

(a) A diſcreet diſtinctiõ. As if the Emperor receiued his authority ſiõ the Pope.
(b) Vntruth, manifeſt as it ſhall appeare.
(c) Al the Biſhops thorowout the whole world are the Popes ſheep
(d) Vntruth. For the Emperor may ſummon Councels whether the Pope will or no.
(e) Vntruth. For Syluester was dead long before the ſummoning of the Councell.

The calling or ſummoning of Councels may be done (a) either by way of Authoritie, which the callet himſelfe hath; or by way of Authority, which he taketh of another. If Conſtantine, the two Theodoſians, and Martian, called the foure firſt Generall Councels by their Authority onely, then were they no Generall Councels; neither could their Decrees binde the whole world. For although they were great Emperors, yet was not the whole Chriſtian world vnder them. And therefore thoſe Chriſtian Biſhops, who liued in Perſia, in Æthiopia, in Scotland, in Scythia, or in any other Land not ſubiect to the Emperour, were neither bound to come, nor bound to obey the Lawes made by them, who were not their Superiours. But if it be farre from reaſon, that a Generall Councel ſhould not binde all Biſhops, and all Chriſtians, it is alſo farre from reaſon, to ſay that Emperours called Generall Councels by their owne only Authority. Indeed they called them by the aſſent of the Biſhop of Rome, (b) who being the Generall Shepheard of Chriſts Flocke, and therefore alſo of all Biſhops, might command (c) al his Sheepe to come together, except they were reaſonably to be excuſed: and they were bound to heare his voice, and to obey his decree. So that although ye proued the Emperors to haue ſummoned and called the foure firſt Councels, yet were ye not able to proue they did it (d) without the aſſent of the Biſhops of Rome, which for the time ſate in Peters Chaire. And by the force of that aſſent the deed muſt take effect. And thus much generally.

Now to proue vnto you that (e) S. Silueſter aſſented to the calling of the firſt Councel at Nice, it is to be conſidered, that he only hath Authority to ratifie, who hath authority to command, and to giue aſſent and ſtrength from the beginning. For none other difference is between commanding, aſſenting, authorizing, authorizing & ratifying but that assenting is common to them all; commanding is a thing that goeth before the fact, auctorizing is the making of a thing good by present agreeing to it, while it is done, ratifying is the allowing of it whē it is done. If then I shew both that the Pope did ratifie the calling of the generall Councels & auctorize them; I shew much more that he assented to the calling of them. The auctorizing is prooued, by reason he sent his Legates to euery of them. As (f) S. Syluester sent Osius Cordubensis of the Prouince of Spaine vnto Nice, with Victor & Vincentius, Priests of the City of Rome. Of which the last two, being themselues no Bishops, yet for that they were Legates of the chief Bishop, did in(g)the first place put vnto the decrees of that Councell their consent & names, writing after this sort: Prouenerabili viro Papæ & Episcopo nostro Sylvestro subscripsimus: Wee haue subscribed for the reuerend man our Pope & Bishop Sylvester. And at the very (h)same time that the generall Councell was kept at Nice, S. Sylvester called another Councell in Rome, at the which two hundred seuenty & fiue Bishops were assembled. And it is expressly written in the same Councell; Sylvester coll. git vnive. sim Synodum Episcoporum cum consilio Augusti vel matris eius: Sylvester gathered together the whole Synod of the Bishops with the counsell of the(i)Emperor or * his mother. Why his counsell was needful, it appeareth there. Because the Emperor bare the charges of their diet & carriage. So that his counsel was necessary, not chiefly for Religion, but rather for supportation of the charges of so great a iourney. For then neither was the Bishop of Rome, nor other Bishops endued with so large possessions as they were afterward.

Now to returne to the Councell of Nice. The Emperour was indeed the cause of their comming together, aswell for that himselfe perswaded that meane of concord, as also for that liberally he defraied the charges. Yet called he not the Bishops of his owne head. And that these men might haue seene in the Ecclesiasticall History, where Ruffinus writeth: Tum ille ex Sacerdotum sententia apud Vrbem Nicæam Episcopale Concilium conuocat: The Emperour calleth together a Councell of Bishops according to the determination of the Priests. Hee did it according as it seemed * good to the Bishops. (k) And shall we thinke the Bishop of Rome was none of them that consented to the calling? Yes verily hee was the chiefest of all. How can it otherwise seeme? For when all the Decrees were made, Placuit vt hæc omnia mitterentur ad Episcopum Vrbis Romæ Syluestrum: It was thought good that all those acts and decrees should bee sent to * Sylvester Bishop of the City of Rome. If hee were the last that had the view and confirming of al things, there is no doubt but he had a voice & great authority in calling the Councel.

What other is that, which Socrates in his Ecclesiasticall History witnesseth, saying: Cum vtique Regula Ecclesiastica iubeat non oportere (l) præter sententiam Romani Pontificis * Concilia celebrari; Whereas the Ecclesiasticall rule commandeth, * that no Councels ought to be kept beside the determinate consent of the Bishop of Rome. We know (saith Athanasius and the Bishops of Egypt assembled in Councell at Alexandria) that in the great Councell of Nice of 318. Bishops it was with one accord by all confirmed there, that without the determination of the Bishop of Rome, neither Councels should bee kept, nor Bishops condemned. I omit here as a thing well knowen, how Constantine the Emperor refused in expresse words, to be iudge ouer Bishops, saying, that God had giuen them power to iudge of him; much lesse did he arrogate to himselfe only & chiefly authority to summon Councels or to iudge Bishoply affaires. As for me (saith Valentinian the Emperor) inasmuch as I am but one of the people, it is not lawfull to search such matters; (hee speaketh of the Heretikes doctrines) but let the Priests, to whom this charge belongeth, be gathered together within themselues where they will, &c.

Concerning the second Councell, which was the first of those that were kept at Constantinople, it may be that Theodosius called it, as Constantine called the first at Nice. But what authority Damasus bare in the same, it appeareth partly by that he had his (n) Legates there, partly also by that Photius Patriarke of Constantinople writeth in his Epistle to Michael Prince of Bulgaria. Where hauing declared the comming together of the Patriarkes of Alexandria and Ierusalem, he saith thus: Quibus haud multò post & Damasus Episcopus Romæ eadem confirmans atque idem sentiens accessit; To which (Patriarkes of Alexandria and Ierusalem) not long after, Damasus the Bishop of Rome ioined himselfe, confirming (o) and determining the same matter. Thus much saith Photius of the second Councell, the confirmation whereof he doth attribute not to Theodosius the Emperor, but to Damasus the Pope.

But what did Theodosius then? (will some man say) Did he nothing? Yes verily he did very much, as in the said Epistle Photius recordeth. Then did great Theodosius (saith hee) indeed worthy of great praise rule the Empire, who was himselfe also a defender & maintainer of godlinesse. Behold what the Emperors part was, not to sit in iudgement of matters of Religion, and (p) determine which was the true faith, but to defend it & maintaine it. And that thou maist see, Reader, plainly, what Theodosius thought of Religion, whom these Defenders would make a Iudge in causes of Religion; I aduise thee to read the ninth Booke of the Tripartite History, where appeare many great arguments of his owne faith, which he published to the world from Thessalonica in a Publik Law to be such, as Peter had taught the Romans (q) and as Damasus who succeeded Peter, taught at that day, requiring all his subiects to beleeue the same. He required not them to follow his owne priuate faith, but Peters faith, and the Popes faith. And whereas there were two Bishops of Alexandria at that time, the one, whose name was Peter, holding with the Bishop of Rome, the other named Lucius, not so; Theodosius commanded his subiects to beleeue as Peter did, who followed the first Peter and Damasus the Bishop of Rome.

Touching the third generall Councell, it was kept indeed vnder Theodosius the younger at Ephesus. But he was not supreme head there. Yea rather who knoweth not, that Cyrillus beeing himselfe Patriarke of Alexandria, yet was President at Ephesus, beating the stead and person of Pope Celestine? If Cyrill was in stead of the Bishop of Rome there President (r) who may doubt, but that he was Supreme head of the Church, in whose name the President sate? Doth the President of the Queenes Maiesties Councell vse to sit at her Councell in the name of any other inferiour person? If Theodosius were Supreme and Chiefe, why sat not Cyrill in his name as President? But seeing that Photius writeth, and Nicephorus also, that Cyrill Archbishop of Alexandria sate in the stead of Celestine Pope of Rome ouer that Councell kept at Ephesus, vndoubtedly it cannot be denied, but that Celestine was Supreme Head, as well of the Church as of the generall Councell.

(f) Vntruth, vain and vnaduised. For neither was Hosius Sylvesters Legate, nor was Sylvester then aliue.

(g) Vntruth impudent. For they had the fourth place in the Councell, and subscribed after Eustathius.

(h) Vntruth, vnlesse a dead man may summon Councels.

(i) By the counsell of the Emperor or of his mother wisely, hee woteth not whether. And yet the Emperours Mother was dead before, Sozom. li. 2. cap. 2. & 3.

(k) Full Clerkly prooued. For Ruffinus saith, the Emperour herein followed the aduice of Alexander the Bishop of Alexandria, &c. but of the Pope there is no mention.

(l) Vntruth fondly forged. For Sylvester was dead long before.

(m) Vntruth, standing in plain corruption of the words. See the Answer.

(n) So had sundrie other Bishops.

(o) Other Bishops likewise gaue their consents and confirmed, &c. Yea had they no authority to summon Councels.

(p) Vntruth manifest. For Theodosius the Emperour expressly determined, what should bee holden for Christian Faith.

(q) Vntruth, guilefully enclosed. For Theodosius willed his subiects to follow as well the faith of sundrie other Bishops as the Popes. (r) A fond folly. For the Bishop of Rome had euermore the First Place in Councels. Yet was hee not therefore the Head of the Church.

It is not therefore only to be considered, that Theodosius sent abroad his messengers to summon the Fathers to the general Councell, but also it is to be considered (s) by whose authority it was done. If in our time it had pleased the Emperor Ferdinand of famous memory to haue sent his messengers to the Kings and Princes of Spaine, France, England, Hungary, Bemeland, Pole, and to the Estates and Dukes of Italy & Germany, to summon them to the Councel, which the Pope thought good to indict at Trent; I thinke verily the Pope would haue thanked the Emperour for it, and himselfe should haue saued so much charges as men of experience know such an enterprise to require. But now sith the Pope hath of his owne sufficient to beare the Charges of such affaires he asketh not any more of the Emperor, such expences as in old time to that necessarie purpose by the Emperors was allowed.

(s) No doubt by the authority of the Pope. And so was the Emperour onely the Popes man.

Last of al Martian (say you) called the fourth Generall Councell at Chalcedon. We answer Hee called it not in such sort as ye meane, as wit, as Supreme Head and Ruler thereof, but as one able to send Messengers for the Bishops about the world, and to sustain the charges also willing to see peace & concord in the Church of God. Who list to read the Epistles of Pope Leo to Pulcheria the Empresse, to Martian Emperour himselfe, to Thodosius, to Flauianus Archbishop of Cõstantinople, to the Synod first assembled at Ephesus, afterward for certaine causes at Chalcedon; in the same Epistles he may see both the cause of the Councel, and what (t) conference was had thereof with the said Leo Bishop of Rome, whose sent first to Ephesus, Iulianus a Bishop, Renatus a Priest, and Hilarius a Deacon, and afterward to Chalcedon, Paschasinus & Lucentius Bishops, and Bonifacius a Priest, to represent his Person. In one of the said Epistles written to the Second Synod at Ephesus, Leo saith thus: Religiosissima Clementissimi Principis fides, &c. The most religious Faith of our most clement Prince, knowing it to pertain chiefly to his renowne, if within the Catholike Church no branch of error spring, hath deferred this reuerence to Gods ordinances, as to vse the authoritie of the See Apostolik to atchieue the effect of a holy purpose, as though he were desirous by the most blessed Peter himselfe, that to bee declared, which in his Confession was praised. By which words it is plaine, that in matters of Religion the Emperor Proceeded not vpon his own head, but (u) was directed by the See of Peter. What shall I say more?

(t) Vntruth. For the Councel was summoned to Chalcedon, quite contrary to the Popes will. Read the Answer (u) Vntruth, most manifest. Read the answer.

If the Emperour first Christened the Pope, let the Emperour bee superior in things to Godward. But if the Pope Christened the Emperour, (as (x) Sylvester did Constantine) let the spirituall Father in that degree of rule be aboue the spirituall Childe.

(x) Vntruth. For he was Christned by Eusebius the Bishop of Nicomedia, long after that Sylvester was dead,

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

No man could vtter so many Vntruths together, with such affiance, without some cunning. First, M. Harding, ye beare vs in hand, that the Emperours of the World in those dates summoned Councels, not by their owne authority, but by the authority and warrant of the Pope. As if the Popes authority at that time, had beene many degrees aboue the Emperour. Notwithstanding Pope Pius 2. as you know, saith thus: Ante Nicenam Synodum vnusquisq; sibi vixit: & paruus respectus ad Romanam Ecclesiam habebatur: Before the Councell of Nice, each Bishop liued seuerally to himselfe: and little regard was there then had to the Church of Rome. Pope Innocentius complaineth, that hee had not authority sufficient, to force Pelagius, being but one man to come before him: much lesse had he authority sufficient, to command and call the whole World. Pope Leo both was an humble suter himselfe vnto the Emperour Martianus, that it would please his Maiesty to command a Councel and also intreated other Bishops to promote the cause. Thus hee writeth: Humiliter ac sapienter exposcite, vt petitioni nostræ, qua plenariam indici Synodum postulamus, Clementissimus Imperator dignetur annuere: Make sute with discreet and humble Praier, that our most Gracious Emperour would vouchsafe to grant our request, in that we haue desired a Generall Councel. It is not likely that Pope Leo would thus haue written, if his owne Authority had beene sufficient.

Nay it is the more vnlikely, that the Emperor should herein at any time vse the authoritie of the Pope, for that the Pope himselfe was neuer able to summon Bishops as hereafter it shall appeare, but onlie by the authority of the Emperour. Emperour, he was as much bound to haue made his appearance there, as the reſt of his Brethren.

The Summoning of Councels.

Ye ſay, If the Emperour ſhould haue ſummoned the Councell by his owne authority, then the Biſhops of Perſia & Scotland, which Countries were not then vnder the obedience of the Roman Empire, would not haue appeared vpon the Summon, and ſo it had beene no generall Councell. This cauill wanteth both truth and ſauour. For proofe whereof, I wil bring forth your ſelfe, M. Harding, to reproue your ſelfe. Ye ſhould not ſo ſone haue forgotten your owne Decree, ſpecially conceiued and publiſhed in this ſelfe ſame Booke. Thus you ſay: theſe be your owne words: A Councell is not accounted General, becauſe Biſhops of all Countries vnder Heauen be aſſembled, but becauſe many be aſſembled and al be lawfully called. Otherwiſe your late Chapter of Trident, with your worthie number of forty Prelates, whereof certaine were onlie May Biſhops, otherwiſe by you called Nullatenſes, could neuer haue beene a Generall Councell.

M. Harding fol. 329. a.

Nicolaus Cuſanus ſaith: Authoritas Concilij non ita dependet à congregante, vt niſi à Papa congregetur, non ſit Concilium: quia tunc omnia Octo Vniuerſalia Concilia non fuiſſent firma: quoniam per Imperatores conuocata leguntur. Et Romanus Pontifex ad inſtar aliorum Patriarcharum, Diuales Sacras iuſſiones, de veniendo, aut mittendo ad Concilium, recepit: The authority of a Councell dependeth not of him by whom it was ſummoned, that vnleſſe it be ſummoned by the Pope, it can be no Councell. For ſo we ſhould auoid all the firſt eight Generall Councels. For we read, they were ſummoned by Emperours, and not by Popes. And the Pope receiued the Emperours Maieſties Commandement to come or ſend to Councels as other Patriarks did.

Nicol. Cuſan. de concord. Cathol. li. 2. ca. 25.

Certainlie it cannot appeare, that there was anie Biſhop either of Scotland, or of England then called Britaine, at anie of the firſt foure Councels, either at Nice, or at Epheſus, or at Conſtantinople, or at Chalcedon. Yet are theſe Councels neuertheleſſe called Generall.

Touching the reſt, the Emperour, was then the onlie Monarke of the World: and as Chryſoſtome calleth him, Summitas & Caput omnium ſuper terram hominum: The top and head of all men in the World. No doubt whoſoeuer would then haue refuſed the Emperours Summon, much more would he haue refuſed the Summon of the Pope.

Chryſ. ad Pop. Antioch. hom. 2

To qualifie the matter, ye ſay, the Emperour did theſe things, although not by the Popes Warrant, yet at the leaſt by the Popes conſent, and neuer otherwiſe. Heere likewiſe is another Vntruth. For the Emperour commanded Councels, both when he would and whither he would, whither the Pope would or no, manie times without anie maner of regard had to his pleaſure. Pope Leo wrote thus vnto the Emperour Theodoſius. Omnes noſtræ Eccleſiæ, Omnes manſuetudini Veſtræ cum gemitibus & Lachrimis ſupplicant Sacerdotes, vt Generalem Synodum iubeatis intra Italiam celebrari: All our Churches, and all our Prieſts moſt humbly beſeech your Maieſty with ſobs and teares, that ye will command a Generall Councell to be holden within Italy. In like ſort he moued the Clergie of Conſtantinople, to be ſuters vnto his Maieſty for the ſame: yet neuertheleſſe the Emperour continued ſtil in his purpoſe: and contrarie to the Popes humble petition, kept the Councell, not in Italy, but at Chalcedon, where alſo, as it is ſaid before, Pope Leo himſelfe was ſummoned to appeare by the Emperours commandement, with other Biſhops.

Leo ad Theodoſium, epi. 14:

Of ſuch authority was the Popes conſent in Summoning of Councels. Ye humblie craued it vpon his knees with ſighes and teares, and could not get it. And therefore Nicolaus Cuſanus ſaith: Habetur ex præſcriptis vna concluſio, ſcilicet in Concilijs Romanum Pontificem in condendis ſtatutis generalibus non habere eam poteſtatem, quam quidam adulatores illi contribuunt: Heereof we haue one Concluſion, that in Generall Councels, and in making of Lawes Generall, the Biſhop of Rome hath no ſuch Power, as certaine flatterers would allow him. Take heed therefore, M. Harding, leſt for your great paines in a deſperate cauſe ye be taken for one of the Popes flatterers.

Nicol. Cuſan. De Concord. Cathol. lib. 2. cap. 12.

Hereof Æneas Syluius which afterward was Pope Pius 2. ſaith thus: Ex hiſce authoritatibus mirum in modum ſe putant armatos, qui Concilia negant fieri poſſe ſine conſenſu Papæ. Quorum ſententia, ſi vt ipſi volunt, inuiolata perſiſtet, ruinam ſecum Eccleſiæ trahet. Quid enim remedij erit, ſi criminoſus Papa perturbet Eccleſiam: ſi animas perdat: ſi peruertat malo exemplo populos: ſi denique contraria Fidei prædicet, Hæreticiſq; Dogmatibus imbuat ſubditos? Sinemuſne cum ipſo cuncta ruere? At ego, dum veteres lego Hiſtorias, dum Actus perſpicio Apoſtolorum, hunc equidem morem non inuenio, vt Soli Papæ Concilia conuocauerint: Nec poſt, tempore Conſtantini Magni, & aliorum Auguſtorum, ad congreganda concilia quæſitus eſt magnoperè Romani conſenſus Papæ: *By theſe authorities they think thẽſelues armed, that ſay, No Councell may be kept without the cõſent of the Pope. and ruine of the Church. For what remedie were there then, if the Pope himselfe were vitious, destroied soules, ouerthrew the people with euill example, taught Doctrine contrary to the Faith, and filled his Subiects full of Heresies? Should we suffer all to goe to the Diuell? Verily, when I read the old Stories and consider the Acts of the Apostles, I find no such order in those daies, that only the Pope should Summon Councels. And afterward in the time of Constantine the Great, and of other Emperours, when Councels should be called, there was no great account made of the Popes consent. Cardinall Cusanus saith: Negligente aut contradicente Papa, Imperator potest præceptiuè Synodos indicere, ad prouidendum fluctuanti Ecclesiæ: If the Pope be negligent, or if he say nay, the Emperour to stay the wauering state of the Church, may command Councels by his owne authority. Thus the Emperour Sigismund, called a Councel at Constance: notwithstanding it stood Pope Iohn much vpon, neuer to yeld his consent vnto it. For in the same Councell he was depriued, and of a Pope was made a Cardinal.

Cusan. de Concordia Cathol. Lib. 3. cap. 15.

We say, The Pope had no authority to cõfirme Councels. Ergo, Much more he had authority to call Councels. And here ye tell vs a very solemne tale, what is Commanding: what is Assenting: what is Authorizing: what is Ratifying: as if it had beene somewhat to the purpose. But if your reason hold, then must Generall Councels haue many callers. For as I shall heereafter sufficiently prooue, not only the Pope or the other principall Patriarkes, but also all other Bishops that were present, yea Emperors, Kings Lieutenants, and Counsellers had authority to Confirme Councels.

Sozom. lib. 6. cap. 23.

Zozomenus saith: Nec Romanus, nec Vincentinus, nec alij confirmarunt: This Councel was Confirmed, neither by the Bishop of Rome, nor by the Bishop of Vincentia, nor by the rest of the Bishops. Whereby it appeareth, that in Confirmation of Councels all other Bishops whatsoeuer, had as good right and authority as the Bishop of Rome. And the Emperour Martianus saith: Sacrosancto nostræ Serenitatis edicto venerandam Synodum confirmamus: We Confirme the Reuerend Councell by the Holy Edict of our Maiesty. Thus you see, that not only all Bishops, but also Emperors and Lay Princes had authority to confirme Councels. Now therefore, M. Harding, if it be true that you say, that whosoeuer hath authority to Confirme Councels, much more hath authoritie to call Councels, then must it needs follow, that not onlie Kings and Emperors, but also al Bishops thorow the World, haue authoritie to call Councels.

Concil. Calced. Act. 3. pag. 804

We say, Pope Syluester sent that famous learned Father Hosius, the Bishop of Corduba, to the Cõcel of Nice, to represent his person. This may wel passe among the rest of your truths. For neither was Hosius there in the Popes behalfe, but in his owne: nor was Pope Syluester then aliue or able to send him, during the whole time of the Nicene Councell, notwithstanding anie thing that your Fabular Peter Crabbe hath said to the contrarie. As for Hosius the Bishop of Corduba, of what authoritie and estimation he was in al Ecclesiasticall Assemblies, it may appeare by these words of Athanasius: In qua Synodo Dux ille, & Antesignanus non fuit? Quæ Ecclesia istius præsidentiæ non pulcherrima monumenta retinet? In what Councell hath not Hosius beene Chiefe and President? What Church is without some notable remembrance of his gouernment? Certainly, M. Harding, it seemeth he was a great deale to good to be sent so farre in a dead mans errand.

Athanas. Apologia. 2.

Sozom. lib. 1. cap. 16.

Notwithstanding, Iulius being then Bishop of Rome, for that he was vnable to trauell because of his age, sent thither two Priests, Vitus and Vincentius, to supplie his roome. Thus he did not of pride, the better by his absence to maintaine a state, but only for that he was forced of necessitie so to doe. For if he had beene able to trauell so farre, he had beene forced to goe thither himselfe. Therefore Pope Agatho afterward thus excused his absence vnto the Emperours: Christianissimi Domini Filij, secundum pijssimam iussionem Mansuetudinis vestræ, pro Obedientia quam debuimus, præsentes confamulos nostros misimus: My most Christian Lords and Children, according to the most godly Commandement of your Maiesties, and according to the obedience that we owe of duty, we haue sent these present our Fellow Seruants.

Conc. Constantinopol. Act. 4. ad Heraclium, & Tiberium Impp. pag. 288.

Other Bishops in like cases of age or infirmity did the like. For example, Lucifer, the Bishop of Sardinia, sent Herennius and Agapetus: and Paulinus sent Maximus and Calemerus to the Councell of Nice to be in their steads.

Athan. ad Antio. Tom. 2.

We say, Vitus and Vincentius for that they were the Popes Legates had therefore the First place in Subscription among the Bishops. Here is another great Vntruth. For Theodoritus saith: the First and Chiefe of all that company, both in place and in speech, was not Vitus or Vincentius, the Popes Legates, but Eustathius the Patriarke of Antioch.

Theodor. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Sozomenus lib. 1. cap. 16.

Touching these two the Popes Legates, Zozomenus placeth them only in the Fourth rowme: Athanasius saith: Subscripserunt, Hosius ab Hispania, Iulius Romanus per Archidamum & Philoxenum Presbyteros: They Subscribed their names to the Councell, Hosius that came out of Spaine, and Iulius the Bishop of Rome, by Archidamus, and Philoxenus Priests

Athanasius Apologia. 2.

Priests, that were his Legats. By which words he alloweth the Bishop of Romes Legats the second place in Subscription, but not the First. And thus ye see, Hosius the Bishop of Corduba, subscribeth before Iulius the Bishop of Rome.

In the Councell of Aphrica, Philippus and Asellus the Popes Legates, had the Last place in Subscription after al others. In the Councel of Chalcedon, Philippus one of the Popes Legates had an hundred and seuen and fifty others to Subscribe before him. Conc. Aphric. cap 100. Conc. Chalced. Act. 1. Sanct.

These Fathers, I trow, would not haue béne so vnmanerly in their dealing, if they had taken the Pope for the Head of the whole Vniuersall Church, to haue placed his Legat behind so many. Further ye say, At the very same time that the Generall Councell was kept at Nice, S. Sylvester called another Councell in Rome. This, I trow, M. Harding, is another vntruth, vnlesse ye haue power to raise vp dead men to kéepe Councels. For Sylvester was dead long before.

The Summoning of Councels.

Sozomenus saith Vitus and Vincentius were sent to Nice, not by Pope Sylvester, who then was dead, but by Pope Iulius, that was the second after him. The like may easilie appeare by Athanasius, Theodoretus, Nicephorus and others. Beda also in his Chronicles telleth you that the Councell of Nice was holden not in the time of Pope Sylvester, who then was dead, but in the time of Pope Iulius. Sozom. lib 1. cap. 16. Athanas. Apologia 2. Theod. lib. 1. cap. 7. Niceph. lib 8 cap. 14. Beda in Chronicis.

Therefore, M. Harding, you must néds deuise two Councels of Nice about one time: two Sylvester Popes: two Writers of this one Story, the one true, the other false. Otherwise this fraile stuffe will neuer hold. Ye are ouer easie to credit Fables.

The Councel that ye imagin was holden in Rome by Pope Sylvester is nothing else but a great heap of childish vanities. The holy discréet learned Fathers say there: Nemo Presbyterorũ Chrisma conficiat: quoniam Christus à Chrismate vocatur: Præsul Summus non iudicabitur à quoquam. Quoniam scriptum est: Non est Discipulus supra Magistrum Neque ab Augusto, neque ab omni Clero, neque à Regibus, neque ab omni Populo Iudex iudicabitur: No Priest may make or hallow the Chrisme: For Christ of Chrisme hath his name: The Highest Prelate (that is, the Pope*) may bee iudged of no man: For it is written,* The Scholer is not aboue his Master. The Iudge (that is, the Pope) shall not be iudged neither by the Emperour, nor by all the Clergie, nor by Kings and Princes, nor by the whole people. Such and other like good stuffe haue you in your Councel of Rome. Conc. Rom cap. 5 cap. 3. cap. 20.

Notwithstanding of what credit soeuer this Councel were, yet M. Harding, it vtterly ouerthroweth your whole purpose. For if euer there were any such Councell summoned in Rome, it was summoned not by Sylvester the dead Pope, but by the authority of the Emperour that then was aliue. So Eusebius writeth of the Councell of Rome holden in the time of Pope Meltiades, as it is said before: Exemplar Regiarum Literarum, &c. Here is a Copy of the Emperours Writ, whereby he hath commanded a Councell of Bishops to be kept at Rome. Euseb. lib. 10. cap. 5.

Likewise the Bishops assembled in the Councell of Constantinople, wrote vnto the Bishops in the Councell of Rome: Cum indixissetis, &c. After ye had called a Councell to Rome, ye warned vs also to come thither, as the Members of your owne Body, by the most godly Emperours Writ. Theod. lib. 5. cap. 9.

By these it appeareth, if there were any such Councell called to Rome, it was called by the Emperour, and not by the Pope.

Ye say, The Emperour in such affaires was aduised euermore by the Bishops. This is not vnlikely, and therefore easily may be granted. Notwithstanding, for ought that ye can finde, he was more aduised oftentimes by some other Bishops, then by the Pope, as it shall appeare. Eusebius touching the Emperour Constantinus writeth thus: Quasi Communis quidam Episcopus à Deo constitutus, Ministrorum Dei Synodos conuocauit: As if he had beene one Common Bishop appointed by God, he appointed Councels of Bishops to assemble together. Ruffinus saith: The Emperour was aduised hereto by Alexander the Bishop of Alexandria, and by other Bishops & Priests of Ægypt. Here is no mention of the Pope. In the like cases of Ecclesiasticall affaires, Athanasius was an earnest suiter vnto the Emperour Constantius: Dioscorus vnto Theodosius, and so others vnto other. Euseb. De vita Constantini, Oratione 1. Ruff. lib. 1. ca. 1 Art. 4. dist. 29. Soc. li. 2 ca. 17 Μὴ δεῖν τινὰ γνώμην τῶν ἐπισκόπων κανονίζειν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν.

But of the Popes omnipotent consent, without which, ye tell vs, no Emperour may summon a Councel, there is no man that maketh mention. Cassiod. lib 4. cap. 16. Regula iuris. Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet approbari.

Ye say, There ought no Councell to be kept without the determinat consét of the Bishop of Rome. This also is another of your Vntruths, standing in the manifest corruption of the words of Socrates, as in my Former Replie I haue declared more at large. The words of Socrates be these: Non licet scribere Ecclesiastica Decreta præter sententiam Episcopi Romani: It is prouided that Ecclesiastical Lawes be not made without the cõsent of the Bishop of Rome. For that the Bishop of Rome was one of the Foure Great Patriarkes, whose assents in all Generall Councels were thought necessary. But Socrates meaneth such Ecclesiasticall

Lawes

Lawes, as pertaine to the whole Church of God. For this is a rule agreeable to reason, That toucheth all, must be allowed by all.

The Summoning of Councels.

Now whereas ye haue exchanged the Allowing of Canons, into the Summoning or Calling of Councels, it may please you to remember, that Allowing of Canons was common to all the Members of the Councel, and specially to the Foure Principall Patriarkes, as it is said before: But the Authority of Calling Councels belonged onely to the Emperour.

That ye allege of Athanasius is a vaine and shamelesse forgery, as I haue otherwhere declared more at large. Such Religion, such Doctours. Such follie is worthy no other Answer.

Soz. li. 6. ca. 7. Valentinian the Emperour (ye say) accounted himselfe as one of the people: and therefore said, It was not lawfull for him to examine matters of Religion. Thus he said, either of humility, or else for want of time. His forraine Enemies, his Warres, and his Ciuill Cares had filled his head with other thoughts. Nicephor. Lib. 11. cap. 3. Nicephorus imagineth him thus to say: Mihi negotijs occupato, & Reipublicæ curis distento, res huiusmodi inquirere non est facile: For mee, being thus occupied with Businesse and Publike Cares, it is not easie to inquire of such matters. Otherwise, that Ecclesiasticall Causes be within the Princes Charge, I doubt not but hereafter it shall well appeare. King Odoacer said vnto Pope Symmachus, and vnto the Clergy of Rome, as it is alleged once before: Concil. Roman. 3. Cap. 2. Miramur quicquam tentatum fuisse sine nobis: Nam viuente nostro Presbytero, sine nobis nihil tentari oportuit: We marueil that any thing was attempted without vs: For without vs nothing should haue beene done so long as our Priest (he meaneth the Pope) was aliue.

After this ye fill the house full with Patriarkes of Constantinople, Patriarkes of Alexandria, Patriarkes of Hierusalem, Princes of Bulgaria, and with other like great and stately persons. The Conclusion hereof is this, That Pope Damasus gaue his consent to the Councell of Constantinople. All this, M. Harding, ye might some haue obteined with more fauour, and lesse adoe. Howbeit, ye may not hereof well reason thus, The Pope consented vnto the Councell: Ergo, The Pope had Authority to call the Councell, let children wonder at your Logicke.

In the meane while, ye say, the Emperour Theodosius ruled the Empire: whereby ye giue vs to vnderstand, that he had no charge ouer the Church. And thus ye continue still to enrich your selfe, and to heape your Reader with Vntruths.

Post Conc. Ephesinum primum. Certainely the Bishops in the Councell of Constantinople wrote thus in humble wise vnto the same Emperor Theodosius: Obsecramus Clementiam tuam, vt quemadmodum Literis honorasti Ecclesiam, quibus nos conuocasti, ita finalem Conclusionem nostrorum Decretorum corrobores sententia tua & Sigillo: We beseech your Maiesty, that as you haue honoured the Church by your Letters wherewith ye haue called vs together, so it may please you to Confirme the finall Conclusion of our Decrees with your Sentence, and with your Seale.

The Emperor limiteth the Catholike Faith.

Further, as it appeareth by your owne Allegation, the same Emperour Theodosius toke vpon him to bound and to limit the Catholike Fath, and that euen in the Body of his Ciuill Lawes: which thing neither could he haue done without Judgement, nor would he haue done without authority. But if ye meane, that by this Determination of the Emperour Theodosius, that Faith only should be taken for Catholike, that was then professed by Pope Damasus, and should afterward be professed by others succeeding in Peters Chaire, then haue ye secretly conueied vs in another Vntruth. The place it selfe will some reproue you. Cod. Theodosian. lib. 16. Tit. de Fide Catholica. Cunctos Populos. The Emperours words be these: Cunctos populos in tali volumus Religione versari, quam Diuinum Petrum Apostolum tradidisse Romanis, Religio vsque nunc ab eo insinuata declarat: quamque Pontificem Damasum sequi clarer, & Petrum Alexandriæ Episcopum, virum Apostolicæ Sanctitatis: Wee will all men to walke in that Religion which Holy Peter the Apostle deliuered to the Romans, as the Faith first enkindled by him and still continued vntill this day, doth declare: which Religion also it is plaine that Pope Damasus followeth, and Peter the Bishop of Alexandria, a man of Apostolike holinesse. Here the Emperour Theodosius commandeth his Subiects to follow, as well the Faith of Peter the Bishop of Alexandria, as of Damasus the Bishop of Rome.

Cod. Theodos. lib. 16. Tit. 1. Soz. li. 7. ca. 9. And yet in the next title following he openeth his owne meaning in this wise by other Examples more at large: Episcopis tradi omnes Ecclesias mox iubemus, quos constabit vti Communione Nectarij Episcopi Constantinopolitanæ Ecclesiæ, & Timothei, &c. We command that forthwith the Churches be restored to all Bishops, of whom it shall appeare, that they Communicate with Nestorius the Bishop of Constantinople, or with Timotheus: or such as shall haue Fellowship or agreement in Faith with the Bishops of Alexandria in Ægypt: and with Pelagius the Bishop of Laodicea: and with Diodorus the Bishop of Tarsus in Asia: and with Amphilochius the Bishop of Iconium: and with Optimus the Bishop of Antioch: and with with Helladius the Bishop of Cæsaria: and with Orreius the Bishop of Melite and with Gregorius the Bishop of Nyssa: and with Terennius the Bishop of Scythia: and with Marmarius the Bishop of Martianopolis. Euery of these seuerall Bishops, M. Harding, by the Emperours iudgement, in triall of the Catholike Faith, had as great Authority and weight, as had Damasus the Bishop of Rome.

The Summoning of Councels.

But Pope Cœlestinus, ye say, desired Cyrillus the Bishop of Alexandria to represent his person, and to supplie his rowme in the Councel of Ephesus, that is to say, to haue the First Place in the Councel. For the First Place in all Ecclesiasticall Assemblies was allotted to the Bishop of Rome: The Second to the Bishop of Constantinople: The Third to the Bishop of Alexandria: The Fourth to the Bishop of Antioch: The Fifth to the Bishop of Hierusalem. Dist. 22. Renouantes.

This packing of places therefore, betweene Cœlestinus and Cyrillus, was a Mysterie purposely canuelled, to keepe the Bishop of Constantinople, whom the Pope euermore enuied, out of countenance. For by this policy the Bishop of Alexandria, that should haue had the Third Place, was handsomely thrust into the First: and the Bishop of Constantinople, which in the Bishop of Romes absence should haue had the First Place, was remoued downe to the Second.

Howbeit, what auaileth all this, M. Harding, to further your purpose, and to proue that Councels were summoned by the Pope? Verily it appeareth not hitherto, that either Cœlestinus, or Cyrillus, or any other Bishop, had any such Power or Authority to summon Councels. This is it that ye should haue proued. As for the First or Second Place in Councels, we moued no question.

Againe ye seeme to say, The Pope of right was euermore President in all Councels. This if ye know, it is another Vntruth: if ye know it not, it is an errour. For it is plaine, that in the First Councel of Nice Pope Iulius was not President, but Eustachius the Bishop of Antioch. The Popes Legates, as it is said before, were placed beneath in the fourth rowme: In the Fifth Councel of Constantinople, Menna the Bishop of the same City, was President, and not the Pope. In the Second Ephesine Councell, Dioscorus the Bishop of Alexandria was President. In the Second Councel of Carthage it seemeth Gennedius was the President. Theod. li. 1. ca. 7. Euagr. li. 4. ca. 38. Niceph. lib. 17. cap. 27. Conc. Chalced. Act. 1. Dosc. Exactis. Cons. Carthagin. 2.

Nicolaus Cusanus, after he had well debated this matter, saith thus: In Concilijs fuit semper Præsidentialis Romani Pontificis Authoritas, sine qua Vniuersale Concilium non fuisset, dummodò saltem interesse voluisset, aut potuisset: The Bishop of Rome had alwaies Authority to be President in Councels, otherwise the Councel had not beene Generall: so that the Bishop of Rome either would, or could be present at the Councel. For otherwise he was not President. Therefore of your part, M. Harding, it was a great Vntruth, to say, The Pope of right was euermore President in all Councels. Againe, Cusanus saith: Imperatore in persona existente, reperio eum semper præsedisse. In Sexta Synodo Constantinus Imperator præsedit in medio cum decem de maioribus Patritijs, & ad leuam eius Vicarij Senioris Romæ, &c. When the Emperour was present in person, I finde that he was alwaies President. In the Sixth Councel of Constantinople Constantinus the Emperour was President, and sate in the midst with ten of his greatest Lords: and at his left hand sate the Popes Legates, &c. This, M. Harding, is very farre from your reckoning. Nicol. Cusanus De Concord. Lib. 3. Cap. 16

This Dignity then passed not by Inheritance, or by Succession, as the Pope now would seeme to claime it; but either by choice of the Councel, or by consent of the Prince. Thus Hosius, the Bishop of Corduba in Spaine, not by right of his place but for the worthinesse of his person, was appointed President in the Councel of Sardica. And Athanasius speaketh of him in this wise with great admiration: Cuius non fuit Concilij Princeps! In what Councel hath not Hosius beene the President, or Chiefe? Sozomen. Lib. 3. Cap. 11. Theodo. Lib. 2. Cap. 15. Athanas. Apologia 2. & Epist. ad solitariam vitam agentes.

Ye say: Pope Sylvester Christened the Emperor Constantinus, & therefore was his spiritual father. This may passe among your other Truths. For your Popes, by their Omnipotent Power, may minister Sacraments being dead. It is knowne, that as long as Sylvester was aliue, Constantinus was neuer Christened. And yet, notwithstanding all this were true, M. Harding, yet your cause thereby were little surthered: vnlesse perhaps ye will reason thus: Pope Sylvester Christened the Emperour: Ergo, The Pope hath Authority to call Councels. Howbeit, vnlesse this Argument be better digested, your very Sophisters of Louaine will hardly allow it. But indeed that whole tale, touching the Christening of the Emperour Constantine, is nothing else, but a peuish fable. Constantius, the Emperours owne Sonne, vtterly denieth that Sylvester euer Baptized Constantinus his Father. Eusebius saith, Constantinus was Christened, not in the flourishing state of his age, but only a little before he died: not in Rome, but at Nicomedia, in the Kingdome of Epirus: not in a corner, but in the presence of many Bishops: and, as S. Inter Acta Liberij, ca. 6. Euseb. de vita Constan. Orat. 4. ca. 41. Socrat. Anno ætatis suæ 63. συγκλήτου τῆς Ἐπιτείτου.

Hier. in Chron. Ambr. de obitu Theodosij.

Hierome saith, not by Pope Sylvester that then was dead, but by Eusebius the Bishop of Nicomedia. For proue whereof S. Ambrose saith: Constantino in vltimis constituto, Gratia Baptismatis omnia peccata dimisit: The Grace of Baptisme forgaue Constantine all his sinnes, euen at the ending of his life. Therefore, M. Harding, we must néeds say, that either your tale is vntrue, which is not strange; or else Constantine was twice Baptized, which is very vnlikely.

Cardinal. Polus de Baptismo Constantin. Pag. 87.

Cardinall Poole séeing the matter to palle so clére, telleth vs roundly in one word, that Eusebius and Constantius were Arian Heretikes, & therefore refuseth the whole Story written by Eusebius, touching the Christening of Constantine. But, somewhat to sooth you in your tale, let a Fable stand for Truth, and let vs grant you an impossibility, that Constantine was Baptized by Pope Sylvester being dead: yet will you néeds gather hereof, that therefore the Emperour is Subiect to the Pope? Or, that the Pope hath Authoritie to call Councels? What will you then say when the Emperour is Baptized by some other Priest, or Bishop, or by a Midwife? Shall euery of these therefore require to haue, and to doe the like? Or must we beléeue, that such a Priest, Bishop, or Midwife, shall haue Authority to call Councels? Indéed this were a good short way to get Supremacie. But it might haue pleased you to remember, that the Cardinall of Ostia vseth alwaies of Office to Consecrate the Pope. Yet, I trow, ye will not therefore place him aboue the Pope. Elizæus anointed King Iehu: yet was he not therefore aboue the King. Your owne Doctor saith: Quòd hoc Argumentum non concludat, patet: quia in Veteri Lege Sacerdotes qui Reges inungebant, indubitanter Regibus subdebantur: It appeareth, that this Argument is nothing worth, and concludeth nothing. For in the Old Law, the Priests that anointed the Kings, were vndoubtedly subiect to the Kings.

To conclude, what right Emperours had in Summoning of Councels, by these few Authorities and Examples following it may soone appeare. Eusebius saith: Constantinus Synodum Oecumenicam collegit, & Episcopos, vt vndique accelerarent, honorificis literis conuocauit: (Not the Pope, but) Constantine the Emperour gathered a General Cóncell, and by honourable Writs called the Bishops of all Countries to repaire thither. Theodoretus saith: A great and a holy Councel was gathered to Nicæa, by the Grace of God, and (not by the Pope, but) by the Godly Emperour Constantinus. Sozomenus saith: (Not the Pope, but) The Emperor Constantine wrote vnto all the Rulers of the Churches, that they should be at Nice by a day: to the Bishops of the Apostolike Sees, to Marcarius the Bishop of Hierusalem, and to Iulius the Bishop of Rome. In which words this also may be noted, that the Pope then was vnder the Emperors Summon, no lesse then others.

Leo ad Anatolium.

S. Hierome saith: Orientis atque Occidentis Episcopos, ob quasdam Ecclesiasticas dissensiones, Romam Imperiales Literæ contraxerunt: To stay certaine Ecclesiastical dissensions, (not any the Popes Letters of Commandement, but) the Emperors Writs caused the Bishops as well of the East, as of the West, to draw to Rome.

The Pope lũblie desireth the Emperor to summon a Councell.

Of Pope Leo we haue said before. Being Pope, and, as M. Harding imagineth, able to summon the world with a becke, thus he writeth to the Emperor Theodosius: Dignetur Pietas vestra supplicationi nostræ annuere, vt intra Italiam haberi iubeatis Episcopale Concilium: We beseech your Godly Maiesty to grant vnto our humble request, that it may please you to command a Councel of Bishops to be holden within Italy.

Sozomenus saith: The Arians besought (not the Pope, but) the Emperour Constantius, to command a Councel to be holden at Antioch. The same Arians afterward besought (not the Pope, but) the same Emperor Constantius to summon another Councel at Millaine. Againe Sozomenus saith: The Catholike Bishops sent Hypatianus their Ambassador to intreat (not the Pope, but) the Emperor, that to redresse certaine Errours, they might haue leaue to meet together. Pope Liberius saith: A Councel is holden at Millaine (not by my Authority, but) by the commandement of the Prince. Pope Leo saith: The Great Councell of Chalcedon was summoned (not by himselfe, but) by the trauell of Martianus the Emperour. The Emperour rour Constantius commanded two seuerall Councels to be kept at one time, the one at Seleucia in Isauria in the East, the other at Ariminum in Italie in the West. Socrates saith: Sithence the Emperors were first Christened, the state of the Church hath hanged on them, and the greatest Councels haue beene, and be kept by their aduice. Soc. li. 2. ca. 35. Socrat. Lib. 5. In præmio.

Thus many Ancient Councels we are able to shew you summoned by Emperors. Now shew you, M. Harding, either that the Emperour did all these things by the Authoritie of the Pope, or that the Emperour was only the Popes Summoner, to call to Councell such and so many, as it should like his Holinesse to command, or that the Pope did euer summon any one Ancient Generall Councell by his owne only right, without further Commission from the Emperour; then will we say, ye haue said some thing. As for all that ye haue now said, in good sooth it is lesse then nothing.

The Apology, Chap. 12. Diuision 3.

And when Ruffine the Heretike had alleged for his Authority a Councell, which, as he thought, should make for him, S. Hierome his Aduersary, to confute him, Tell vs, (quoth he) What Emperor commanded that Coūcell, to be called? The same S. Hierome againe in his Epitaph vpon Paula, maketh mention of the Emperours Letters, which gaue commandement to call the Bishops of Italie and Græcia to Rome, to a Councell. Ruffinus.

M. Harding.

Besides that ye * doe strangely to cal Ruffine an Heretike, we say that S. Hierome might wel demand what Emperor summoned that Councel, which was neuer summoned. Againe, we confesse that some Emperours haue summoned both Latine and Greeke Bishops. * But ye prooue not that any did it as supreme head, and as Iudge in matters of Religion, but by the consent of the Bishops of Rome, as I haue declared before.

* Vntruth, proceeding of ignorance, as it may soone appeare.

*Read the former Answer.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Were you not a stranger in your owne Bookes, M. Harding, ye would not thinke it so strange a matter to heere Ruffinus called an Heretike. S. Hierome doubted not so to cal him. Thus he saith: Dum mihi inconstantiæ crimen impingit, se Hæreticum, &c. Ita vertit Origenem, vt qui in Trinitate Catholicum legeret, in alijs Hæreticum non caueret: While Ruffinus chargeth me with inconstancie, he prooueth himselfe to be an Heretike, &c. Ruffinus hath so translated Origen into Latine, that whoso findeth him Catholike touching the Trinitie, should neuer suspect him in any thing else to be an Heretike. Againe he saith vnto him: Solos Hæreticos non recipimus, quos vos solos recipitis: Only Heretikes we receiue not into our houses: and yet them only you receiue. Hier. in Apologia cont. Ruffin. In eadem Apologia.

Anastasius the Bishop of Rome hath thus published his iudgment of the same Ruffinus: Omni suspicione sepositâ, Ruffinum scito, quòd propria mente Origenis dicta in Latinum transtulit, ac probauit. Nec dissimilis ab eo est, qui alienis vitijs præstat assensum. Illud tamen scire te cupio, ita haberi â nostris partibus alienum, vt quid agat, vbi sit, nec scire cupiamus: All suspition set apart, know thou that Ruffinus hath translated Origen (the Heretikes) words into Latine, according to his owne liking, and well alloweth the same. And whosoeuer giueth his consent vnto another mans fault, is not vnlike vnto him. Notwithstanding, thus much I would haue thee to know, that Ruffinus is so farre from our fellowship, or profession of Faith, that we desire not to know, neither what he doth, nor where he is. Anast. ad Episcop. Hieroſol. Apud Hieron. Tom. 4.

Vincentius saith, that S. Hierome charged Ruffinus with the Pelagian Heresie. Erasmus saith: Ruffinus non fuit alienus ab Origenistarum Hęresi: Ruffinus was not cleere from the Origenians Heresie. Againe, speaking of the same Heretikes, he saith: Huius rei Dux & Signifer Aquileiensis Ruffinus fuit. Againe: Notat, nescio quem, ipsum opinor, Ruffinum, qui in eam Heresim inductus est à Magistro quopiam, &c. Againe: Monet, vt exposa factione Origenistarum, eos etiam eijciat, qui clam & obliquè essent Origenistæ, Ruffinum, & illius amicos: The Captaine and Standard bearer of this Heresie, was Ruffinus of Aquileia, &c. Againe: S. Hierome heere noteth some body, I know not whom: but I thinke Ruffinus himselfe, that was brought into this Heresie by some Teacher, &c. Againe: He warneth his friend, that hauing renounced the Origenian Heretikes, be would likewise renounce ethem that priuily and in secret were Origenian Heretikes, meaning Ruffinus and his friends. Vinc. in Speculo, Ti. 17. Ca. 99. Eraſm in vita Hieronymi. Eraſ. in Epiſt. Hier. ad Princip. In Schol. Eraſm. in Argum. Epiſtolæ Theophili, ad Hieronym. Eraſm. de libris Origenis.

Likewise againe he saith: Ruffinus grauissima suspicione premebatur, quòd esset Origenista. Sub hoc enim titulo Arianorum Hæresis conata est repullulascere: Ruffinus was grieuously suspected to be an Origenian Heretike. For vnder that name the Arian Heresie began to reuiue. Thus ye see, M. Harding, it was not so great an Heresie, to say that Ruffinus was an Heretike.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. Diuision. 4.

Continually, for the space of Fiue Hundred yeeres, the Emperor alone appointed the Ecclesiasticall Assemblies, and called the Councels of the Bishops together.

We now therefore maruell the more at the vnreasonable dealing of the Bishop of Rome, who knowing what was the Emperours right, when the Church was well ordered, knowing also that it is now a common right to all Princes, for so much as kings are now fully possessed in the seuerall parts of the whole Empire, doth so without consideration, assigne that office alone to himselfe, and taketh it sufficient in summoning a Generall Councell, to make that man that is Prince of the whole world none otherwise partaker thereof, then he would make his owne seruant.

M. Harding.

(a) This is M. Hardings modestie. Read the Answer next going before this, sauing one.

Where you say, The Emperour alone celebrated, kept, or held Councels, for so is your Latine, (a) it is too impudently faced, without any face, without proofe, without truth. They were celebrated or holden (b) by the Popes Legates, the Patriarkes and Bishops, and not by Emperours. Albeit, Emperours might sit in them (c) but not as Iudges. And they haue euer beene called Episcopalia Concilia, not (d) Imperatoria; Councels of Bishops, not of Emperours. And diuers Councels, not accounted Generall, were kept by Bishops before any Emperour was Christened: As those which were kept by S. Peter in Hierusalem, mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles: in the time of Victor the Pope, in Palestina, and other places, concerning the keeping of Easter: at Rome, about the time of Pope Fabian, against the Nouatian Heresie: at Antioch, against Paulus Samosatenus, and many others. All which Councels were kept, not only without the presence of the Emperours person, but (e) also without his Power, or Authority. And yet if he were head of the Church, it could not haue beene done without him. Actes 15.

(b) Vntruth, plaine and euident. For many times the Popes Legats were vnderlings, and inferiour vnto others.

If you say, He was not then Christened, I answer, that Christianity is no part of his Imperiall Power. It is a Spirituall Power, whereby he is made the sonne of God. He may thereby be ruled by a Christian Bishop. But verily he hath no Power giuen to him, whereby he may rule Bishops. (f) Baptisme maketh a man the Childe of the Church. But (fi) it is imposition of hands, in consecrating a Christian Priest to be a Bishop, that giueth him rule ouer others, and not the Sacrament of Baptisme. Therefore Emperours were not the holders or keepers of Councels the first fiue hundred yeers. Yea three hundred were fully expired before the Emperour professed openly the Christian Faith. So much the lesse may you maruell that now the Bishop of Rome calleth and keepeth Councels chiefly by his owne authority. (g) For hee succeedeth Peter, not Nero. He took his authority of Christ immediatly, not of the people of Rome. Be the Emperor Christian, or not Christian, the Bishop of Rome, by (h) nature of his Bishops Office, is not only alwaies a Christian man, but also a chiefe Priest.

(c) Vntruth. For the Emperours Embassadours sitting in Councell, were called Illustrissimi Iudices.

(d) No more were they called Concilia Papalia.

Where you say, the Bishop of Rome in summoning the late Councell, did besides good consideratiõ, in that he made a man, that is Prince of the whole world, no otherwise partaker thereof, then he would make his owne seruant: you forget your selfe foulely, & seeme to reckon little what you speake, so you vtter your malice. For who is that whom you call Prince of the whole world? What contradiction is this? said you not in the same sentence before, that Kings are now fully possessed in the seuerall parts of the whole Empire? How then call you Ferdinand (i) Prince of the whole world? Well, this is but one of the common ornaments of your Rhetoricke. Sir, the Emperour Ferdinand, of famous memory, was not so abused of Pius the fourth, that blessed man, Bishop of Rome in these our daies. Ye rather are they who abuse the Emperours Maiesty: For yee depose him cleane from his Seat. ye find fault that euer Leo the Third made an Emperour in the West. Ye complaine openly, that the Emperiall Maiesty had not continued still at Constantinople; belike to the intent the Turke might now haue had it, who is knowen to suffer in his Dominions all Faiths and Religions: For which cause it may seeme ye fauour him. As for Pope Pius that now is, he deferred the old priuilege of honor vnto the Emperour Ferdinand, without the old burthen. For whereas in old times (k) Councels were holden by Authority of the Pope, (k) as Socrates witnesseth, yet the Emperour bare the charge of calling the Bishops together. But now the Pope himselfe bare a great part of that burthen, & communicated his purpose fully with the Emperor, Lib. 5. cap. 1.

(e) So were the most part of the same Councels kept without either the presẽce or the power, or authority of the Pope.

(f) O folly of follies. As if the Emperors power were either increased, or empaired by his Baptisme.

(g) A subst anti- all good reason.

(i) It is written in your owne Glosse, Iura communia dicunt, quòd Imperator est Dominus Mundi. (k) Vntruths, two together, For neither was it so, nor doth Socrates record it so.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Whether it were the Emperour alone that appointed Ecclesiasticall Councels, it may appeare by that we haue alreadie said. The Pope alone Iassure you it was not. May the Emperour, as it is said and proued before, often times held such Assemblies, when and where himselfe listed, whether the Pope would or no. The Popes dutie was only to appeare amongst other Bishops when he was called.

I grant such Councels had their name of Bishops, and were called, Concilia Episcopalia, for that matters there were specially ordered by the discretion and iudgment of the Bishops. But will you therefore conclude, that the same Councels perteined nothing to the Prince? Certainlie the Emperour Conſtantinus commanded al the Biſhops to appeare before him, and to yeld him a reckoning of their Determination in the Councell. This was the tenor of his Writ: Quotquot Synodum Tyri habitam compleuiſtis, ſine mora ad Pietatis noſtræ Caſtra properetis: ac re ipſa, quâ ſincerè ac recte iudicaueritis, oſtendatis: idq; coram me, quem ſincerum eſſe Dei Miniſtrum ne vos quidem ipſi negabitis? As many of you as haue kept the Councell at Tyrus, repaire to our Campe without delay, and ſhew me indeed how ſincerely & rightly ye haue proceeded: and that euen before me, whom you your ſelues cannot denie to be the Sincere Seruant of God.

Athanaſius was the greateſt traueller in the Councel of Nice, againſt the Arians: yet was he then no Biſhop, but onlie a Deacon. Your owne Ceremoniarie of Rome telleth you, that Abbats haue right and authoritie to determine and ſubſcribe in Councell, as well as Biſhops: and yet were they neuer called the Councels of Abbats, but onlie of Biſhops. Therefore, M. Harding, this gheſſe is ouer ſimple, and ſerueth you not. But heereof we haue ſufficiently ſaid before.

Tripart. Hiſt. Lib. 2. Cap. 2.

Chriſtianity (ye ſay) is no part of the Emperiall Power. Ye might likewiſe haue ſaid, Chriſtianity is no part of the Papall Power. Verily it cannot well appeare that Peter & Paul had euer any ſuch Chriſtianity. The Emperours right is neither increaſed, nor abated by his Baptiſme. Whether he be faithfull, or vnfaithfull, hee is the Miniſter of God, and beareth the Sword to punish ſinne.

Ye ſay: The Pope ſucceedeth Peter, and not Nero: Therefore he calleth and keepeth Councels chiefly by his own Authority. Of ſuch proper Arguments, M. Harding, we maruel not much, though ye make no ſtore. Howbeit, ſome men haue thought ye doe S. Peter great wrong, appointing him ſuch children to be his Heires. For many of them in all their dealings haue reſembled Nero more then Peter. S. Bernard ſaith thus vnto Pope Eugenius: In his ſucceſſiſti, non Petro, ſed Conſtantino: In theſe things ye haue ſucceeded, not Peter the Apoſtle, but the Emperour Conſtantine. Pope Adrian the fourth was wont to ſay, Succedimus, non Petro in docendo, ſed Romulo in parricidio: Wee ſucceed, not Peter in teaching, but Romulus in killing our brethren.

Eraſmus ſaith: Pontifices nunc ſunt Vicarij Iulij Cæſaris, Alexandri Magni, Crœſi, Xerxis: non Chriſti, non Petri: The Popes now are the Vicars of Iulius Cæſar, of Alexander the Great, of Crœſus, and of Xerxes: not of Chriſt, nor of Peter. It is written in a Sermon, bearing the name of S. Ambroſe: Qui debuerint eſſe Vicarij Apoſtolorum, facti ſunt Socij Iudæ: They that ſhould haue beene the Apoſtles Vicars, are now become Iudas fellowes. Robertus Gallus, that liued welneere three hundred yeres paſt, imagineth Chriſt thus to ſay of the Pope: Quis poſuit Idolum hoc in ſede mea, vt imperaret Gregi meo? Who ſet this Idol in my roome, and made him ruler ouer my Flocke? And bring to vile in his owne houſe, how can he be glorious in the Houſe of God?

Yet (you ſay) the Pope is alwaies, not only a Chriſtian man, but alſo a chiefe Prieſt. (not by faith but) by the nature of his Office. Euen ſo your Gloſſe telleth you: Papa Sanctitatem recipit à Cathedra: The Pope receiueth his holineſſe of his Chaire: that is to ſay: of the nature of his Office. Cardinal Cuſanus ſaith: Veritas adhæret Cathedræ, &c. Veritas per Chriſtum Cathedræ alligata eſt, non perſonis. Ait enim, Super Cathedram Moſi ſederunt Scribæ & Phariſæi: The Truth cleaueth faſt to the Popes Chaire, &c. Chriſt hath nailed his Truth to the Popes Chaire, and not to his perſon: For he ſaith, The Scribes & Phariſeis are placed in Moſes Chaire. Another ſaith: Tametſi Papa non ſit bonus, tamè ſemper præſumitur eſſe bonus. In Papa ſi deſint bona acquiſita per meritum, ſufficiunt quæ à loci Prædeceſſore præſtantur: Notwithſtanding the Pope be not good, yet he is euer preſumed to be good. If the Pope lacke good vertues of his owne, the vertues of Peter his Predeceſſor are ſufficient.

Addition. ☞ Addition. ☞ M. Harding. You beare your Reader in hand, that Nicolaus Cuſanus wrote a Booke entituled, De Authoritate Eccleſiæ & Concily, ſupra & contra Scripturam. Now M. Iewell, if you be able to ſhew vs any Booke of Cuſanus ſo entituled, either in print, or in Authentike written hand, I will ſay that you wil prooue your ſelfe a truer man then euer I tooke you to be, &c. The Anſwer. This matter, M. Harding, you haue blazed out with ſuch eloquence as is moſt meet for a man of your ſobriety. Indeed at what time I wrote mine Anſwer, I had not that Booke of Cuſanus, nor could not get it by any meanes, but was faine therin to vſe the report and credit of Matthias Flacius Illyricus, whom I thinke you will not denie to bee a man of good reading. His words hereof are theſe: Nicolai Cuſani ſententia de Authoritate Eccleſiæ & Concilij, ſupra & contra Scripturas. Hereupon you cry out in the mildneſſe of your ſpirit: A ſhameleſſe Man: A falſe Harlot: An impudent Liar: Growen to ſuch impudencie: A Slanderer: A bragger: A Boaſter of great reading, &c. O, M. Harding, it were much fitter for a wiſe man to be ſober, then thus to rare. But you paſſe along boldly and conſtantlie, as your maner is.

Peters Succeſſours.

M. Harding. Wel, ſay you, perchance you will ſay, though the Title be alte red, yet the words out of the ſame Epiſtle be truly recited, wherein conſiſteth the chiefe effect and principal purpoſe. If you ſo ſay, you will be proued no leſſe a lier, and falſe reporter herein, then you haue bin in the reſt. And for example herein I will bring euen the very firſt place that you haue alleged out of him. You tel vs. pag. 55, that thus he ſaith: Sequuntur Scripturæ Eccleſiam, & non e conuerſo: The Scriptures of God follow the Church: but contrariwiſe, the Church followeth not the Scriptures. You haue here clipped the Authors ſentence, and quite altered the ſenſe. His words are theſe: Eccleſia igitur, ſicut recipit Scripturam, ita & interpretatur: Sequuntur Scripturæ Eccleſiam, quæ prior eſt, & propter quam Scripturæ, & non e conuerſo: The Church, as it receiueth the Scripture, ſo doth it expound the ſame. The Scriptures therfore do follow the Church, which is the former, and for the which the Scripture is ordained, & not contrariwiſe. Cuſanus words in their right forme, doe both ſtand well, and haue a good meaning. But your falſe changing of them cauſeth them to import an intollerable derogation of the Scriptures, without any colour of truth. For as it is moſt true, that the Church was before the Scriptures, that is to ſay, the written word of God, and that the Scriptures were ordained and appointed for the Church, ſo it is very falſe, that the Scriptures do follow the Church, and the Church not the Scriptures. For why hath the Church receiued the Scriptures, but to follow them, and to put them in Execution, both in our inward beliefe, and in our outward actions? Doe you not bluſh, M. Iewel, thus wilfully to peruert that (with your falſe iuggling, and conueying away of thoſe words, Quæ prior eſt, & propter quam Scripturæ) which before had a good right ſenſe? You thought belike you ſhould neuer heare hereof againe, nor be called to any reckoning; or elſe ye would haue had more regard to your good name & honeſty, &c. You thought you would paſſe Illyricus an ace in falſhood, although hee be his crafts maſter therein.

The Anſwer. A fierce Oratour you are, and a fauourable Interpreter M. Harding. Cardinall Cuſanus muſt needs be defended, and ſtaied vpright in reſpect of his Dignity, and whatſoeuer he hath written, it muſt haue a right good Catholike meaning. But poore M. Iewell muſt bluſh, and be aſhamed of his iuggling. But I pray you M. Harding, are not theſe Cuſanus your Doctors owne words? Doth he not ſay plainely, Sequuntur Scripturæ Eccleſiam, & non e conuerſo? The Scriptures follow the Church; but contrariwiſe, the Church followeth not the Scriptures? You ſay, There be other words between, Quæ prior eſt, & propter quam Scripturæ: That is to ſay, The Church was before the Scriptures, and the Scriptures are to ſerue the Church. Is this the matter, M. Harding, that muſt make M. Iewel to change his colour? Or are theſe words ſufficient to put Cuſanus from his meaning? Firſt he ſaith, The Scriptures follow the Church. Doth he afterward by theſe words recant the ſame, and tell vs, that the Church followeth the Scriptures?

You will ſay, Cuſanus ſaith not, The Scriptures follow the Church in Authoritie, but onely in time: For he ſaith, The Church was before the Scriptures. So might he haue ſaid, Moſes was before Chriſt: or, The Law was before the Goſpel: or, The Synagogue was before the Church. But what had this beene to his purpoſe? Awake a little, M. Harding, and remember your ſelfe. Was this the queſtion that lay betweene Cardinall Cuſanus and the Bohemians, Whether the Church, or the Scriptures were former in time? Or, if it were not the queſtion, would he ſpeake ſo much, and ſo vainely, as you often times doe, beſides his purpoſe? Leaue, leaue this trifling, M. Harding. It will not helpe you: Learne rather to vnderſtand your Doctors meaning by himſelfe.

The matter, as you know, was this: The Bohemians required the Holy Communion in both kindes, and therein alleged the warrant of the Scriptures. For Chriſt, ſaid they, ordained and miniſtred the Communion in both kindes. Cuſanus defended the abuſe and diſorder of the Communion in one kinde only, and therein alleged the warrant of the Church of Rome. Hereof this iſſue grew betweene them, whether they ought in caſes of Religion to follow the Church of Rome, or rather the Scriptures: To this Cuſanus ſaith. The Church of Rome is aboue the Scriptures. This he laieth as a Foundation of the whole. And therefore of the Scriptures he ſpeaketh full meanly, and verie coldlie, or rather diſdainefully, as it ſhall appeare, and alloweth all Power and Authority to the Church of Rome. Theſe things conſidered, I beſeech you, to what purpoſe had it beene for Cuſanus to ſay, The Church was before the Scriptures? For the queſtion was not, whether the Church, or the Scripture were the elder, but whether of theſe two, in trial of the Truth, we ought rather to follow.

Cuſan. ad Boham. Epiſt. 2.

Cuſan. Excitationem. li. 2. Non diceret. Excita. lib. 6. Vbi Eccleſia.

Now concerning the Authoritie of the Church, Cuſanus ſaith thus: Veritas adhæret Cathedræ Petri: Vniuerſa Catholica Eccleſia ad Petri Cathedram conglobata, à Chriſto nunquam recedet: Hæc eſt vna, quæ tenet & poſſidet omnẽ Sponſi ſui Domini Poteſtatem: Veritas Cathedræ per Chriſtum alligata eſt, non perſonis: Extra Romanam Sanctam Catholicã Eccleſiam non eſt Salus: Quàm firma eſt ædificatio Eccleſiæ? Quia nemo decipi poteſt etiam per malum Præſidentem. Si dixeris, Domine obediui tibi in præpoſito, hoc tibi ſufficiet ad Salutem: etiamſi præpoſitus de oneribus humeris tuis impoſitis, præceptis & ſolutionibus rationem ſit Deo redditurus. Tu enim per obedientiam, quam facis præpoſito, quẽ Eccleſia tollerat, decipi nequis, etiamſi præceperit alia quàm debuit. Quare Sententia Paſtoris ligat te pro tua Salute, propter, bonũ obedientiæ, etiamſi amsi iniusta fuerit. Nam ad te non attinet cognoscere, quòd Sentẽtia sit iniusta, nec conceditur tibi, vt non obedias, si tibi iniusta videatur. Nulla enim esset obedientia, si in tuo arbitrio esset de Sententia Pastoris iudicare. Præsumit enim Ecclesia de illa Sentẽtia: cui si tu obedieris, magna erit merces tua. Obedientia igitur irrationalis est consummata obedientia, & perfectissima: scilicet, quando obeditur sine inquisitione rationis, sicut iumentum obedit Domino suo, &c. The truth cleaueth fast to Peters Chaire: The whole Vniuersall Catholike Church rolled vp to Peters Chaire, shall neuer depart from Christ: This Church (of Rome) is that only Church that holdeth & possesseth all the power of the Lord her spouse: Christ hath tied his Truth to the Chaire, not to the persons of the Bishops: without the Holy, Catholike Church of Rome there is no saluation: How strong is the building of the Church? For no man can be deceiued, no not by an euil Bishop: if thou say vnto God, O Lord, I haue obeied thee in my Bishop, this shall suffice thee vnto saluation: notwithstanding the Bishop of his part shall yeeld an account vnto God for the burdens that he hath laid vpõ thy shoulders, for his commandements, & for thy paiments. For thou canst not be deceiued by thy obedience that thou yeeldest to the Bishop, whõ the Church suffereth, although he command thee other things then he ought to do. Therefore the Bishops sentence, although it be vniust, bindeth thee for thy Saluation, because of the goodnes of obedience. For it behoueth not thee to know that his Sentence is vniust: nor is it lawful for thee to disobey it, although thou take it to be vniust. For it were no obedience at all, if it were in thy power to iudge of the sentence of thy Bishop. For the Church presumeth his Sentence to be good: which Sentence if thou obey, thy reward shall be great. Obedience therefore without reason is a full and most perfect obedience: That is: when thou obeiest without requiring of reason, as a horse is obedient to his Master. With such colors Cusanus adorneth & blazeth the Maiestie of the Church of Rome, and such obedience and bondage he requireth to be yeelded vnto the same. So must we be obedient vnto the Pope, as a Horse is obedient vnto his Master.

Peters Successors.

No man can be deceiued.

Vnto Saluation.

Obedience without reason:

As a Horse is obedient to his Master.

Now let vs consider in what regard he hath the Scriptures of God, so shall we see how far he placeth the one in authority before the other. Thus therefore he saith to the Bohemians: Dicitis præcepto Christi obediendum esse primo loco, deinde Ecclesiæ: & si aliud præceperit Ecclesia, quàm Christus, non Ecclesiæ, sed Christo obediendum esse. Certè in hoc est omniũ præsumptionũ initium, quando iudicant particulares suum sensum in Diuinis Præceptis conformiorẽ, quàm Vniuersæ Ecclesiæ. Intellige, Scripturas esse ad tempus adaptatas & variè intellectas, ita vt vno tempore secundũ currentem vniuersalẽ ritum exponantur: mutato ritu, iterũ Sententia mutetur. Non mirum, si praxis Ecclesię vno tempore interpretetur Scripturã vno modo, & alio tempore alio modo. Nam intellectus currit cum Praxi. Intellectus enim qui cum Praxi concurrit, est Spiritus viuificãs. Fatuũ est ergo argumentũ, velle Vniuersalẽ Ecclesiæ ritum, ex Scripturis Prædecessorũ arguere. Legitur enim, Apostolos non tradidisse Fidẽ per Scripturas &c. Hæc est omniũ sanè intelligentiũ Sententia, qui Scripturarum authoritatẽ, aut intellectũ in Ecclesiæ authoritate fundant, quæ vnam accipit, & alteram abijcit: & non è conuerso, Ecclesiæ firmamentum in Scripturarũ authoritate locant. Dicetis forsitan quomodo mutabuntur Præcepta Christi authoritate Ecclesiæ, vt tunc sint obligatoria, quando Ecclesiæ placuerit? Dico, nulla esse Christi Præcepta, nisi quæ per Ecclesiam pro talibus accepta sint. Mutato iudicio Ecclesiæ, mutatũ est & Dei iudicium: You say, we must first obey Christs Cõmandement, & afterward the Church. And if the Church cõmand vs to do otherwise thẽ Christ cõmandeth, we must then obey Christ, & not the Church. Verily herein standeth the beginning of all presumption, when particular men thinke their own iudgement to be more agreeable to Gods commandements then the iudgemẽt of the Vniuersal Church. Vnderstand thou that the Scriptures are appointed to serue the time, and haue diuers vnderstandings: so that at one time they may be expounded after the vniuersall, common and ordinarie custome: and that the same custome being changed, the meaning of the Scriptures may likewise be changed. No maruell though the Practise of the Church at one time doe expound the Scriptures after one sort, and at another time, after another sort, for the vnderstanding of the Scriptures, runneth with the practise of the Church. For the vnderstanding that runneth with the practise is the quickening Spirit. It is a foolish enterprise to goe about to reproue the Vniuersall order of the Church by the Scriptures of our Ancestors. For we read that the Apostles deliuered not the Faith by the Scriptures. This is the iudgement of all that be wise, that build and found the authority & vnderstanding of the Scriptures in the authority of the Church, which receiueth one Scripture & refuseth another: but contrariwise they build not the stay of the Church in the authority of the Scriptures. Perhaps you wil say, How shal Christs Cõmandements be changed by the authority of the Church, that they shall binde vs, when the Church shall think it good? I tell thee, There is nothing to be taken for Christs Cõmandement, vnlesse it be so allowed of the Church.

Peters Succeſſors.

When the Church hath once chãged her iudgemẽt, Gods iudgemẽt is likewiſe chãged. Heereby, M. Harding, may you know Cardinall Cuſanus iudgement, touching the Scriptures of Almighty God. The Scriptures, ſaith he, follow the practiſe of the Church, not only in time as you ſay, but alſo in authority and in credit. As for your Commentaries, they are too ſimple, and ouer partiall, and a great way beſide the Text. Now iudge you indifferently, M. Harding, whether Cuſanus ſay not, as I haue alleged him: Sequuntur Scripturæ Eccleſiam, & non è conuerſo: The Scriptures follow the Church, but contrariwiſe the Church followeth not the Scriptures. To conclude, heereby may ye iudge of the Title of theſe Epiſtles, wherewith you finde your ſelfe ſo much incombred: De Authoritate Eccleſiæ, ſupra & contra Scripturas: Certainely it is manifeſt by his plaine words, that he placeth the authority of the Church, not only aboue, but alſo againſt the authority of the Scriptures.

There were neuer ſo manie Heretiks in any one See, as haue bin in the See of Rome, as I haue already ſufficiently and fullie proued. And yet ye ſay, The Pope cannot erre. There were neuer ſo notorious examples, or as Platina calleth them, Monſters of filthie life: Yet (yee ſay) they are all holy Fathers, & hold their Chriſtianity by nature of Office. Howbeit, your Doctor Alphonſus ſaith: Quamuis credere teneamur ex Fide, Verum Petri Succeſſorem eſſe Supremũ Paſtorẽ totius Eccleſiæ, non tamen tenemur eadẽ Fide credere Leonẽ aut Clementẽ eſſe verũ Petri Succeſſorẽ: Although we be boũd to beleeue that the true Succeſſor of Peter is the Higheſt Paſtor of al the Church, yet are we not boũd with like Faith to beleeue, that Pope Leo, & Pope Clemẽt are the true Succeſſors of Peter. Iohn ỹ Baptiſt ſaid rightly vnto ỹ Phariſeis ỹ likewiſe made vaunts of their Succeſſion: Neuer ſay Abrahã is your Father. For God is able euen of theſe ſtones to raiſe vp Children vnto Abrahã. Chryſoſtom ſaith: Non locus Sanctificat hominẽ, ſed homo locũ: Nec Cathedra facit Sacerdotẽ, ſed Sacerdos Cathedrã: The Place Sãctifieth not the Man, but the Man ſanctifieth the Place. Neither doth the Chaire make the Preſt, but the Prieſt maketh the Chaire. Nazianzene ſaith: Non locorum eſt Gratia, ſed Spiritus: The grace of God goeth not by place, but by the holy Ghoſt.

Harding, leſt ye ſhould happilie be deceiued: notwithſtanding your Fellowes haue ſo often told vs, Papa totius Orbis obtinet principatum: The Pope hath the Princehood of all the world.

In ſexto lib. 3. Titul. 16. cap. Vnico.

The Emperours Maieſtie we finde oftentimes entitled by this name: but your Popes Holineſſe ſo entitled we finde neuer: vnleſſe it be ſome certaine late Decrees & Gloſſes of his owne. Albeit, you of late haue much abated the Emperours honour, and made him onlie the Popes man. For thus ye ſaie: Imperator (Occidentis) eſt procurator, ſiue Defenſor Romanæ Eccleſiæ: The Emperour (of the Weſt*) is the Proctor or Steward of the* Church of Rome.

Diſt. 98. Si Imperator. In Gloſſa.

Yet Chryſoſtome ſaith: Imperator eſt Summitas & Caput omnium ſuper Terram hominum: The Emperour is the Head and Toppe of al men vpon the Earth. In the Councell of Chalcedon, the Emperour is called, Dominus Vniuerſi Mundi: The Lord of the whole World.

Chryſoſt. ad Pap. Antio. homil. 2.
Concil. Chal. Act. 1. in nomine.

Perhaps ye wil ſay, The ſtate of the Empire is now impouerished: and therefore the Emperour hath loſt his title. Yet your owne Doctors and Gloſſers could haue told you, Iura communia dicunt quod Imperator eſt Dominus Mundi: Notwithſtanding the decay of the Empire, The common Lawes ſay, that the Emperour is the Lord of the World. Robert Holcote ſpeaking of the Emperour of Germanie, ſaith thus: Hic eſt Rex Regũ, cui omnes ſubditæ ſunt Nationes & Populi, &c. The Emperour is the King of Kings, vnto whom all Nations and Countries be in ſubiection.

Extra de Maiorit. & Obedient. vnam Sanctam. in Gloſſa.
Holcote in Sapien. Lect. 199.

The Romans of late yeeres wrote thus vnto the Emperor Conradus: Excellentiſſimo & præclariſſimo Vrbis & Orbis totius Domino, &c. Vnto the moſt Excellent & moſt Noble Emperor, the Lord both of the City of Rome, and alſo of al the whole World. Therefore, M. Harding, to moue this vaine quarrell without ſome cauſe, it was great folly.

Otho Friſingenſis.

Councels (ye ſay) in old times were holden by authority of the Pope. For proofe whereof ye allege Socrates in the eighth Booke, and the ſecond Chapter: But Word or Sentence ye allege none. Howbeit it was a great ouerſight to allege the Eighth Booke of Socrates, whereas Socrates himſelfe neuer wrote but Seuen, and ſo farre to ouerleape your Authour. Notwithſtanding this ſmall Errour may well bee diſſembled amongſt ſo many. Howbeit, touching the thing it ſelfe, ye may as eaſily finde it in the Eighth Booke of of Socrates, that neuer was written, as elsewhere. For indeed amongst all that euer he wrote, this thing certainly, that you allege, he wrote neuer.

The Apologie, Chap. 12. Diuision 5.

And although the modesty and mildenesse of the Emperour Ferdinando be so great, that he can beare this wrong, because peraduenture he vnderstandeth not well the Popes packing, yet ought not the Pope of his holinesse to offer him that wrong, nor to claime another mans right as his owne.

Constantine in the Councell of Nice.

The Apologie, Chap. 13. Diuision 1.

BVT hereto some will replie: The Emperor indeed called Councels at that time, ye speake of, because the Bishop of Rome was not yet growen so great as he is now, but yet the Emperor did not then sit together with the Bishops in Councell, nor bare any stroke with his authority in their Consultations. I answer, nay, that is not so. For as witnesseth Theodore, the Emperour Constantine, not only sate together with them in the Councell of Nice, but gaue also aduice to the Bishops, how it was best to trie out the matter by the Apostles, and Prophets writings, as appeareth by these his owne words: In disputation (saith he) of matters of Diuinity, we haue set before vs to follow, the doctrine of the Holy Ghost. For the Euangelists and the Apostles workes, and the Prophets sayings, shew vs sufficiently what opinion we ought to haue of the will of God.

M. Harding.

For the sitting of Emperors in Councels, you treat a common place not necessary. No man euer denied, but Emperours may sit in them, we acknowledge two sorts of sitting: one for the Assessours, another for the Iudges. (a) No Emperour euer sate as a Iudge in Councell. But many both Emperours in person, and their Lieutenants for them haue sitten, as being ready to assist and defend that which the Bishops had iudged and decreed.

(a) Vntruth, For Cusanus saith; Inuenio Imperatores in concilijs iudicia fecisse, Read the Answer.

Diuina Constant. lib. 3. Trond. lib. 1 cap. 7. Ἐκαθέζετο καὶ ὁ τῆς οἰκουμένης ἀρχιερεύς.

What maner a seat great Constantine had in the first Councell at Nice, Eusebius in his life, & Theodoritus doth declare. After that all the Bishops were set in their seats to the number of 318. in came the Emperour last with a small companie. (b) A low little chaire being set for him in the middest, hee would not sit downe before the Bishops had reuerently signified so much vnto him; and as Theodoritus writeth, not before he had desired the Bishops to permit him so to do. Now thinke you that the Supreme Head of the Church should haue (c) come in last, and haue sitten (d) beneath his subiects, and haue staid to sit vntill they had as it were giuen him leaue?

(b) Vntruth enclosed: for this low little Chaire was al of beaten gold, and was set in the highest place of the Councell.

Neither consulted he with the Bishops, but required them to consult of the matters they came for, as Theodorite witnesseth. Neither spake he there so generally as you report, nor framed his tale in that sort, as you faine, (e) Vniuersally of the will of God, (e) but of the Godhead, saying; That the Bookes of the Gospels, and of the Apostles, and the Oracles of the Prophets do plainly teach vs what we ought to thinke of the Godhead, περὶ τῆς θεότητος. For the controuersie about which the Arians made so much adoe, was touching the equality of the Godhead in Christ, and his consubstantiality with God the Father. And by those words and other, which there be vttered, he tooke not vpon him to define or iudge, but only to exhort them to agree together in one Faith. For among those Bishops certaine there were that fauoured the Heresie of Arius. Such examples you bring for defense of your part, as make much against you. Not that you delight in making a rod for your selfe, but because you haue no better: and somewhat must you needs say, lest the stage you play your part on, should stand still.

(c) Vaine folly. For the Prince neuer commeth into the Parliament house, before the Lords be set.

(d) Vntruth. For Sozomenus saith; Erat thronus ille maximus, & alios omnes superans,

(e) Vntruth, euident. For Cassiodorus expoundeth it thus; Quid de diuina Lege Sapere debeamus.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Emperours (ye say) sate in Councels, as Assessours only, but not as Iudges. That is to say, they sate by the Bishops and held their peace, and told the clocke, and said nothing. Yet your Doctours say, Assessor Episcopi non potest esse Laicus: The Assessour of a Bishop may not be a Lay man. But touching the matter it selfe, Eusebius that was alwaies neare about the Emperour Constantine, and wrote his life, and was present at the Councell, saith thus: Constantinus quasi communis quidam Episcopus à Deo constitutus, Ministrorum Dei Synodos conuocauit: nec dedignatus est adesse, & considere in medio illorum, consorsqué fieri ipsorum, &c. Constantine as if he had beene a common Bishop appointed by God, called together Councels of Gods Ministers: and disdained not himself to sit in the mids amongst them, and to be partaker of their doings. Againe Constantinus himselfe saith thus: Ego interessem

And againe Euſebius ſaith: Conſtantinus erat Vocaliſſimus Dei præco, & quaſi Seruator ac Medicus animarum: Conſtantine the Emperor was a moſt cleere Preacher of God, and as it were, the Sauiour and Phyſitian of ſoules. In this ſort Nicephorus writeth vnto the Emperor Emmanuel Palæologus: Tu es Dux profeſſionis Fidei noſtræ, &c. Your Maieſty is the Captaine of the Profeſſion of our Faith: your Maieſty *hath reſtored the Catholike and Vniuerſall Church. Ye ſay, When the Biſhops were ſet, in came the Emperour laſt with a ſmal company. Whereof ye would haue vs to gather, that he came only as an inferiour perſon, & not as a Iudge. Howbeit Theodoritus ſaith: Cõſtantinus iuſſit Epiſcopos ingredi: Conſtantine commanded the Biſhops to goe in.

And Euſebius ſaith: Sedit tota Synodus reuerenter, vt par fuit, cum ſilentio expectans aduentum Principis: The whole Councell ſate in reuerent and comely order, quietly and in ſilence looking for the Princes comming.

This is no good proofe, M. Harding, that the Emperor in the Councell was inferiour to the Biſhops. Nay the Biſhops were commanded to take their places, to ſit in ſilence, and to wait for the Emperours comming, as it becommeth Subiects to wait for their Prince. Againe he ſaith: Signo, quo aduentus Imperatoris indicatus eſt, dato, omnibus exurgentibus, ipſe deinde ingreſſus eſt medius, tanquam aliquis Dei Cœleſtis Angelus: When the Watch word was giuen, that the Emperor was come, the Biſhops ſtood vp from their places, and his Maieſty paſt along thorow the middeſt of them, as if he had beene an Angell of God.

But the Emperour (ye ſay) ſate vpon a little low ſtoole, and therein ſhewed him ſelfe inferiour to the Biſhops. Yea, M. Harding, but Euſebius ſaith, that the ſame little low ſtoole was made of whole beaten gold: and therein, I trow, as low as ye place him, he was ſomewhat aboue the Biſhops.

Ye ſay, he ſate alow, and in the midſt of the Biſhops. And heerof ye conclude, he was their Inferiour. So Iulius Cæſar notwithſtanding he were the Emperour of Rome, yet when he came into the College of Poets, he was well contented to be placed in the loweſt rome: and yet was he not therefore their Inferiour.

But touching the Emperor Conſtantines place in the Councel, Euſebius ſaith thus: Acceſſit ad ſummum gradum ordinum: He went vp to the higheſt riſing of all the benches. Sozomenus ſaith: Imperator peruenit ad Caput Concilij, & ſedit in Throno quodam, quem ipſe ſibi fecerat. Erat autem Thronus ille Maximus, & alios omnes ſuperans: The Emperor went vp to the head or higheſt place of the Councell, and ſate downe in a Throne of Eſtate, that he had prepared for himſelfe. But this Throne was very great, and far paſſed all the reſt. In the meane ſeaſon the Popes Legare ſate, as it is ſaid before, neither in the firſt place, nor in the ſecond, nor in the third, but in the fourth. Whereby it ſeemeth to appeare plainly, that Conſtantinus the Emperor had this place in the Councell aboue all the Biſhops.

Euſeb. de vita Conſt. Oratio 3 cap. 10. Προελθὼν δὴ τὴν πρὸ τῆς τῶν τιμημάτων ἀρχῆς. Μίσγεσθαι δὲ ἦν ἄτοπος, καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ὑπερφέρων.

Notwithſtanding, ſithence that time the Pope hath determined, it muſt now be otherwiſe. His order is this, as it hath beene alleged before: Sedes Imperatoris parabitur, &c. The Emperors Seat ſhall be prepared next vnto the Popes Seat, and ſhall haue two ſteps ioined vnto the ſame: but neither ſo broad nor ſo long as be the Popes. It ſhall be apparelled with cloath of Gold: but Canopie ouer the head it ſhall haue none. Howbeit, this thing is ſpecially to be marked, that the place, whereupon the Emperour ſitteth, may be no higher then the place where the Pope ſetteth his Feet. Thus we ſee, the Emperour is allowed to ſit at the Popes footſtoole: but in any caſe to mount no higher.

Ceremonia lib. 2. Sect. 14. ca. 2 Et aduertendum quòd locus vbi ſedet Imperator, non ſit altior loco, vbi tenet pedes Pontifex.

The Emperour (ye ſay) ſtood ſtill (no doubt, with Cap in hand) and durſt not ſit downe without leaue: And thereby teſtified himſelfe to be inferiour to the Biſhops. Theſe cold concluſions, M. Harding, will hardly ſerue you. For Traianus being the Emperour of Rome, was contented himſelfe to ſtand aſide, and for honours ſake, commanded the Conſuls to ſit downe: Yet was he not therefore Inferiour in dignity to the Conſuls.

Helena

Helena the Empreſſe apparelled her ſelfe like a Seruant, and miniſtred vnto the Holy Virgins, and gaue them water to their hands, as if indeed ſhe had beene their Seruant: yet was ſhe not therefore Inferiour vnto the Virgins.

The ſame Emperour Conſtantine at the time of the Eccleſiaſticall Sermons, ſtood vpright and would not ſit, for the reuerence that he bare to the Word of God. Yet was he not Inferior to the Preacher. This was that good Emperors modeſty and humility, M. Harding, but not his dutie. It were wiſdome for Princes to take heed, they commit not ouermuch to your hands. For whatſoeuer they once yeeld of meere curteſie, ſtraightway ye claime it as your owne.

Conſtantine in the Councell of Nice.

Ruffin. li. 1. c. 7. Euſeb. in vita Conſt. Orat. 4. cap. 33. Soz. li. 1. ca. 18 Καὶ ὁ αὐτὸς καθίζειν ἐκελεύσθη.

Howbeit touching the Emperours ſitting in the Councell it was farre otherwiſe then you report it. Sozomenus ſaith: Imperator reſedit in Throno, qui illi paratus fuerat; & Synodus iuſſa eſt ſedere: The Emperour ſate downe in his Chaire of Eſtate prouided for him: and (then) the Councel was commanded to ſit downe. Hereby it appeareth the Emperor needed not the Biſhops leaue, but rather gaue leaue to the Biſhops.

No doubt, that godly and milde Prince being in that reuerend aſſembly, bare himſelfe with much reuerence. And therefore Euſebius ſaith: He ſate not downe before the Biſhops had beckoned vnto him. But he added withall: Poſt Imperatorem, idem fecerunt omnes: (Not before, but) After that the Emperour was ſet, they ſate downe al together. Now, M. Harding, if he that ſate firſt in the Councel, were the Head of the Church, as you ſeeme to ſay, then may I reaſon thus: The Pope or his Legate in that Councel ſate not firſt: Ergo, the Pope then was not Head of the Church.

Euſeb. in vita Conſt. Orat. 3. cap. 10. ὁ σφόδρα, ἢ τὰς ὑποκλίσεις ὑπομείνας ἐκεῖνος ἐκάθιζε τοιοῦτος ὢν ἐφ' ἑαυτοῦ μετ' ἐξουσίας.

Againe, the Emperor in that Councel ſate Firſt: Ergo, by your owne concluſion, the Emperour was the Head of the Church. Certainly the Pope himſelfe ſaith plainly: The Emperour Constantine was the Preſident or Ruler of the Nicene Councel. His words be theſe: Conſtantinus Præſidens Sanctæ Synodo, quæ apud Nicæam congregata eſt: Conſtantinus the Emperor, being Preſident of the holy Councell that was kept at Nice. Theſe be not our words but the Popes, regiſtred euen in his owne Records. Therefore, I truſt, ye will not refuſe to giue them credit.

But you ſay, The Emperour determined and defined nothing. Yet the Emperour himſelfe, contrary to your ſaying, ſaith thus: Ego ſuſcepi, & perfeci res ſalutiferas, perſuaſus Verbo tuo: O Lord I tooke in hand, and brought to paſſe wholeſome things, being perſwaded by thy word.

Euſeb. in vita Conſt. Orat. 2. cap. 54.

And againe, writing hereof vnto the Biſhops of ſundry Churches, he ſaith: Ego vobiſcum interfui, tanquàm vnus ex vobis. Socr. li. 1. cap. 9 Καὶ αὐτὸς τῆς ἀληθείας ἐξέτασιν ἀνεδεξάμην.

Likewiſe ſaith Euſebius: Imperator, quaſi luculentam facem accendens, ne quæ occultæ erroris reliquiæ ſupereſſent, oculo Regio circumſpexit: The Emperour, as hauing inkindled a great flame, looke well about with his Princely eie, that no priuy remnants of Errours ſhould reſt behinde.

Euſeb. in vita Conſt. Orat. 3. cap. 11. ἵνα μὴ λάθοι τι μνημεῖον.

The Biſhops in the ſame Nicene Councel, being at variance amongſt themſelues, offered vp their Bookes of accuſation, not vnto the Pope or to his Legates, of whom they had then no great regard, but vnto the Emperor. Neither did the Emperors put ouer their quarrels vnto the Popes iudgement, but vnto the iudgement of God. Againe, the ſame Emperor Conſtantine ſaith: If any Biſhop wickedly offend, by the hand of Gods ſeruant, that is to ſay, by my hand, he ſhalbe puniſhed.

Socr. li. 1. ca. 8. Theodoret. lib. 1. cap. 19.

Here

Conſtantine in the Councell of Nice.

Here ye ſée plainly by the authority of Cardinal Cuſanus, one of your owne ſpeciall Doctours, that in the Eight firſt Generall Councels, the Emperor was Preſident and not the Pope.

Whereas the Emperors willed the Biſhops to conclude their matters by the Apoſtolical and Prophetical Scriptures, He ſpeaketh not (ſay you) ſo generally as we report him, nor frameth his tale in that ſort, as we faine, vniuerſally of the wil of God, but of the Godhead. For τὸ θεῖον in your fanſie ſignifieth only the Subſtance and Nature of God, and not Gods Wil, or his Religion. Here, M. Harding, it were ſome point of learning, to know what skilfull Greeke Reader told you this tale, that τὸ θεῖον is nothing elſe, but the Godhead, or Nature of God. Verily Caſſiodorus in plaine wiſe tranſlateth it thus: Euangelici & Apoſtolici libri erudiunt nos, quid de Sacra Lege ſapiamus: The Bookes of the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles teach vs, what we ought to thinke (not only of the Subſtance and Nature of God, but alſo) of the Holy Law.

Tripart. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 5.

Theod. li. 1. c. 7 περὶ θείων παραδόσεων.

Therefore Theodoretus addeth further theſe words: Accipiamus explicationes quæſtionum noſtrarum ex dictis Sancti Spiritus: Let vs take the reſolution of our queſtions out of the words of the Holy Ghoſt. And immediately before he ſaith: De rebus Diuinis diſputantes, præſcriptam habemus Doctrinam Sancti Spiritus: In our Diſputations (not onely of the Godhead, but alſo) of Godly matters, wee haue laid before vs the Doctrine of the Holy Goſpel. In like ſenſe S. Hilary ſaith: Non eſt relictus hominum eloquijs de Dei rebus alius, præterquam Dei Sermo. Omnia reliqua & arcta, & concluſa, & impedita ſunt, & obſcura: In matters touching God, there is no ſpeech left vnto men, but onely the Word of God. All other Authorities be ſhort, and narrow, and darke, and troubleſome. Beleeue them not henceforth, M. Harding, that tell you, that τὸ θεῖον, ſignifieth onely the Subſtance and Nature of Gods Diuinity. For as ye may eaſily ſée, your Gloſſe is vaine, and fighteth directly againſt the Text.

Hilar. de Trin. li 7. De rebus Dei περὶ τῶν θείων.

The Apologie, Chap. 13. Diuiſion, 2.

The Emperour Theodoſius (as ſaith Socrates) did not only ſit amongſt the Biſhops, but alſo ordered the whole arguing of the cauſe, and tare in peeces the Heretikes Bookes, and allowed for good the iudgement of the Catholikes.

(a) As if a priuat Councel were no Councel.
*Fond folly. As though the Emperor could cõdemn the Heretikes or allow the Catholikes, without iudgement.
(b) A worthy reaſon. The Emperour ſought meanes to abandon Hereſies: Ergo, he iudged not whether part was the truer.
(c) Vntruth, contrary to the plaine ſtory.
(d) And how could he make choiſe without iudgement?
(e) Thus M. Harding maketh the Emperour a diſſembling hypocrite.
*A fond cauil. It was a priuate Councel of ſundry Biſhops, and the Iudgement therof was ſpecially directed by the Emperor.

M. Harding.

It is a wonder to ſee, how theſe men abuſe the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories. Whereas they talke a little before of the ſitting of Emperors in Generall Councels, a man would thinke, that now alſo Theodoſius had beene ſaid to haue ſitten among Biſhops (a) in ſome General Coũcel. But there is no ſuch matter. Theodoſius the Emperor conferred with Nectarius the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, how al Chriſtiã men might be brought to an vnity in Faith. And after that Nectarius had learned of Siſinnius a great Clerke, the beſt way to be, if al the Heads of each Hereſie and Sect, might be induced to be iudged by the old Fathers and Doctours of the Church; the godly Emperor hearing this aduiſe, cauſed both the Heretikes and Catholikes alſo to write each of them ſuch things as each of them had to ſay for his Beliefe. And after praier made, reading ouer al the writings, *he reiected the Arians, the Macedoniãs, & the Eunomians, * embracing only their ſentence, who agreed vpon the conſubſtantiality of the Sonne of God. Here (ſay theſe Defenders) Theodoſius did not only ſit among the Biſhops, but alſo ordered the whole arguing of the cauſe, tearing the papers of the Heretikes, & allowing the iudgement of the Catholikes. To which obiectiõ, I make this Anſwer. Firſt, that Theodoſius here took counſel of Nectarius the Biſhop and followeth it. Secondly, that he intended not to iudge, whether opinion of al the Sects were truer, (b) but only ſought how to rid the Church of controuerſies. Otherwiſe he would not only haue taken counſel of Nectarius the Catholike Biſhop, but alſo of the Arians, Macedonians, and Eunomiãs. For he is not a right Iudge that calleth one ſide only to him, & in iudgemẽt is ruled by it. If then it be plaine, that the Emperor only conſulted with Catholikes, it is no leſſe plaine, (c) that he ſate not Iudge vpon the Catholikes. What did he then? Verily hee entended to execute that iudgement, which the Biſhops had pronounced at Nice, and therefore hee conferred only with men of that ſide. And becauſe he was inſtructed, that by diſputation no good ſhould come, he choſe this way, to make all to write their opinions. Not that he minded now to learne his faith out of their writings, ſith hee had learned that long before, and profeſſed the ſame in his Baptiſme: but he ſought a way, whereby to put al Heretikes to ſilence. Therefore hauing read al the writings, and hauing made his praier to God for grace, (d) to chuſe the better ſide, which alſo he made, not doubting of his Faith (for elſe he were an Infidel, and vnworthy to be a Iudge, euen in the Temporal matters among Chriſtians) but partly he declared that all goodneſſe is to be asked of God, (e) partly he would the Heretikes to vnderſtand, that he went not to worke with affection, but with the feare of God. Thus hauing praied and read the writings, he executed the iudgement of the Nicene Councel, and reiected thoſe Heretikes.

Iacob. 1. 1. Cor. 4.

Now to returne to the words of the Apology, how ſay they, that the Emperor not only ſate among Biſhops, but alſo cauſæ diſceptationis præfuit, was chiefe Ruler & Moderator of the reaſoning & debating of the matter? They cannot ſay thus, as of a Councel, whereof they talke. * For there was no Councel indicted, not only by the Pope, but neither by the Emperour, nor by any other Archbiſhop. * It was a priuate calling together of certaine heads of each Sect, and not a ſolemn ordinary Councel. If there were were no Councel of Biſhops, no ſitting of Biſhops: if no ſitting, no preſidence at al. How then was Theodoſius Preſident, and Iudge of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes?

If we ſhal report the thing as it was in truth done, onely Theodoſius vſed a politike way to put Heretikes to ſilence. Other iudgement he tooke not vpon him, as he that proteſted alwaies, that Spirituall cauſes, and controuerſies of Doctrine, could not better be decided, then by Biſhops. For which ſaying S. Ambroſe praiſed him. So that we are ſure of Theodoſius, that he neuer meant to intermeddle with Eccleſiaſtical matters, (f) otherwiſe then to execute the Biſhops Decrees.

In Actis Concil Aquileien.

(f) Thus the Emperor is become the Biſhops man

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Heere (ye ſay) it is a wonder to ſee how theſe men abuſe the Eccleſiaſtical Stories. It was a Priuate Councel (yee ſay) whereat Theodoſius was preſent, and not a Generall. As if this poze helpe were ſufficient to ſalue the matter: Dz, as if a Priuate Councel were no Councell: Dz, as if an Emperor might ſit as a Iudge in Priuate Councels, but not in Generall. I cannot blame you, M. Harding foz ſeeking ſuch ſhifts. A ſimple ſticke may make a ſtay. The Storie in briefe is this: Theodoſius the Emperor, the better to bring his Churches into Vnitie, Commanded an Aſſembly of the Biſhops and beſt Learned to appeare Sozom. Lib. 7. Cap. 12. beſoze him, and each part to wzite a ſeuerall Confeſſion of his Faith, that he himſelfe might iudge betweene them, which Faith were the beſt. Hauing receiued their wzitings, Socr. l. 5 ca. 10. he willed Publike Pzaiers to be made, and alſo both openly and pziuately pzaied himſelfe, that it might pleaſe God to aſſiſt him with his Holy Spirit, and to make him able to iudge iuſtly.

Then he peruſed and conſidered each Confeſſion aſunder by it ſelfe: allowed only the Catholikes, and condemned the Confeſſions that were wzitten by the Arians, and Eunomians, and tare them in peces. This is the true repozt of the Stozy, M. Harding. Whatſoeuer ye haue added hereunto, as your maner is, it is your owne. Now whether the Emperor Theodoſius tooke vpon him to Heare and Determine Eccleſiaſticall Cauſes of Religion, oz no, I repozt me to your owne indifferent iudgement.

But ye will ſay: The Emperour preſumed not to iudge any thing of himſelfe, but was wholly ruled by the Biſhops, as the executer of their willes. And hereof, ye ſay, ye are wel aſſured. Thus by your handling, ye make the Prince onely your Biſhops man, to ſtrike blindely whomſoeuer your Biſhop ſhal command: to Condemne, to Depziue, to Spoile, to Kill his owne Subiects: not of any Iudgement, oz Knowledge, but onely vpon the doubtfull Credit, and at the pleaſure of your Biſhop. So ſimple make ye this Godly Emperor in his dealing. He willed the Congregation to pzay: He pzaied himſelfe, that God would direct him with his Spirit, and giue him wiſdome to diſcerne the Truth: He Conferred the Confeſſions: He weighed each Reaſon: He allowed one ſide foz true and Godly: Al the reſt he condemned foz falſe and wicked. And yet (yee ſay) ye are ſure of Theodoſius, that he intended not to iudge whether of all theſe Sects were the truer. And ſo, by your diſcretion, hee both Allowed and Condemned, without Iudgement, he knew not what.

Dioſcorus Iuuenalis. Thalaſſius.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuiſion. 1.

IN the Councel of Chalcedon, a Ciuil Magiſtrate Condemned foz Heretikes by the Sentence of his own mouth, the Biſhops, Dioſcorus, Iuuenalis, and Thalaſſius, and gaue Iudgement, to put them down from their Dignities in the Church.

M. Harding.

Where true & good matter wanteth, for defenſe of this cauſe, theſe men care not what they bring, ſo they make a ſhew of ſome learning, to deceiue the vnlearned. Firſt, for condemnation of Heretikes, by ſentence of a Ciuil Magiſtrate, they allege the name of the long Councel of Chalcedō, not ſhewing in what Action, or part thereof it may be found. True it is, that al theſe three are named in that Councel, Dioſcorus, Iuuenalis, and Thalaſſius. (a) But that al three were condemned, we finde not. Much leſſe, that they were condemned by any Ciuil Magiſtrate, doe wee finde. The condemnation of Dioſcorus, Archbiſhop of Alexandria, was pronounced by the Legates of the Pope of Rome, in form as followeth. Patchaſinus hauing asked the conſent of the Fathers preſent in the Council, to the condemnation of Dioſcorus after his faults rehearſed, with his two fellowes, Lucentius Biſhop of Tuſculum, & Bonifacius Prieſt of the great Church of Rome, ſaid: The moſt holy and bleſſed Archbiſhop of the great & elder Rome, Leo, by vs, and by this preſent holy Synod, with the thrice moſt bleſſed, and worthy of all praiſe, Peter the Apoſtle, * who is the rock and * higheſt top of the Catholike Church, and who is the * foundation of the right Faith, hath depriued Dioſcorus, as wel of the dignity of his Biſhopricke, as alſo of his Prieſtly Miniſtery. This was the ſentence pronounced by the Popes Legates in the name of the Biſhop of Rome, vnder the Authority of Peter. Which ſentence the whole Councel allowed. This being true, how did the Ciuil Magiſtrate condemne Dioſcorus? Was then the Biſhop of Lilybæum, or the Pope, in whoſe name he gaue ſentence, a Ciuil Magiſtrate? (b) What is impudency, what is licencious lying, what is deceitful dealing, if this be not?

Act. 3.

(a) Vntruth, encloſed, ſtanding in ignorance: for if M. Harding had read the Councel, hee might haue found it.

* This was ſpoken cuē like the Popes Legat. for S. Paul ſaith: Chriſt was the Rocke, &c.

(b) This is the patience of M. Hardings Spirit. When hee ſhall read the Councell, and ſee his owne errour, he wil be colder.

(c) Vntruth, vain and childish. For then there belonged no such Authority to the See of Rome.

(d) Vntruth, shameles aboue measure: For they neuer asked pardon for sitting without the Popes authority.

(e) M. Harding is wel assured, before he know.

(f) Manifest Vntruth. Read the Answer.

Of Iuuenalis Archbishop of Hierusalem, and Thalassius Archbishop of Cæsaria in Cappadocia, thus much I say: They might well haue a rebuke for misusing themselues in the second Councel at Ephesus, where they sate like Iudges, (c) without Authority of the See of Rome; (which as Lucentius said in the Synode of Chalcedon, was neuer orderly done, neither was it lawfull to be done) they might, I say, take a rebuke for so presuming besides the Popes Authority: But forasmuch as they (d) maintained not their fact, but among other Bishops of the East, cried out, Omnes peccauimus: Omnes veniam postulamus: We haue al sinned: We all beseech pardon. Yea forasmuch as Iuuenalis reiected the faulse vpon Elpidius, who did not command Eusebius the accuser of Eutyches to come in, and Thalassius said, hee was not cause thereof, it may wel be, they were pardoned, although the honorable Iudges and Senate said vnto them: In Iudicio Fidei non est defensio: In a Iudgement of Faith, this is no excuse. But in case they were deposed, (e) then are we sure (f) it was not done by the Ciuil Magistrates, otherwise then that they might allow and execute the sentence of Depofition before giuen.

Dioscorus Iuuenalis. Thalassius.

Copus Dialog. 1. Pag. 28. Conc. Chalced. Act. 1 pa. 831.

If the Councel of Chalcedon seme ouer long, with better reading ye may make it shorter. That Dioscorus, Iuuenalis, and Thalassius, were all three condemned in that Councel. That (ye say) ye finde not. Howbeit, if yee had sought it better, yee might some haue found it. One of your owne Friends of Louaine saith, that herein ye were too much ouerseene. The very words, truly recorded in the Councel, are these: Videtur nobis, iustum esse, eidem pœnæ Dioscorum Reuerendum Episcopum Alexandriæ, & Iuuenalem Reuerendum Episcopum Hierosolymorum, & Thalassium Reuerendum Episcopum Cæsariæ Cappadociæ, subiacere: & à Sancto Concilio, secundùm Regulas, ab Episcopali dignitate fieri alienos: Vnto vs it seemeth right, that Dioscorus the Reuerend Bishop of Alexandria, and Iuuenalis the Reuerend Bishop of Hierusalem, and Thalassius the Reuerend Bishop of Cæsaria in Cappadocia, should be put to the same punishment, and by the holy Councel, according to the Canons should be remoued from their Episcopal dignities. The which words ye might also haue found fully reported in Euagrius.

Euagr. Lib. 2. Cap. 4.

Leo Epist. 40. ad Anatolium.

Likewise also saith Pope Leo touching the same: De nominibus Dioscori, Iuuenalis, & Eustachij (vel potiùs, Thalassij) ad Sacrum Altare non recitandis, dilectionem tuã hoc decet custodire: Touching the names of Dioscorus, Iuuenalis, and Eustachius, (or rather, Thalassius) not to be rehearsed at the Holy Altar, (which was the Communion Table) yee must keepe this order.

But ye say: Notwithstanding these Bishops were condemned in the Councel, yet the Ciuil or Lay Iudges condened thẽ not. For they were there (ye say) only to see good order, & to keepe peace. This, M. Harding, is your owne only idle gheese, without any maner further Authoritie, only grounded vpon your selfe. Certainly the words of the Councel be plaine: Gloriosissimi Iudices & amplissimus Senatus dixerunt: The most Noble Iudges, and most worthy Senate said. Likewise saith Euagrius: Οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς συγκλήτου βουλῆς ἐψηφίσαντο ταῦτα: The Lords of the Emperors Councel decreed these things.

Conc. Chalced. Actio. 1.

Euagr. Lib. 2. Cap. 4.

Neither were the Ciuill Iudges then so scrupulous, to thinke they might not deale in Cases of Religion, as it may well appeare by their words. For thus they say: Gloriosissimi Iudices & Amplissimus Senatus dixerunt, De Recta & Catholica Fide perfectiùs sequenti die, conuenienti Concilio, diligentiorem Examinationem fieri oportere, perspicimus: The most Noble Iudges, and most worthy Senate, said, We see that touching the Right Catholike Faith, the next day, when the Councell shall meet, there must be had a more diligent Examination.

Conc. Chalced. Act. 1. pa. 831.

And when the matters were concluded and published, the Bishops of the East brake out into fauourable shouts, in this sort: Iustum & Rectum Iudicium: Vita Longa Senatui: Multi anni Imperatori: Iust and Right is this Iudgement: Long life vnto the Senate. Many yeeres vnto the Emperour. For in all cases, as well Ecclesiasticall as Temporall, the Emperour was Iudge ouer all. Whatsoeuer the Councel had determined, without the Emperors consent it had no force. And therefore both the Bishops, and other Temporal Iudges in the Councel, vsed often times to suspend, and to stay their Decrees in this sort: Videtur nobis iustum, si placuerit Diuinissimo & Pijssimo Domino nostro: Vnto vs it seemeth right, if it shall also like our most vertuous and most godly Lord (the Emperour.) In the end they conclude thus: Omnibus quæ acta sunt, ad Sacrum Apicem referendis: So that all our doings be remitted to the Emperours Maiesty. All which words are borrowed, as the rest, out of the Ecclesiasticall Story of Euagrius.

Conc. Chalced. Act. 1. pa. 831. Euag. lib. 2. ca. 4. εἰ παραιτεῖται τὸν θειοτάτου ἡμῶν δεσπότην.

Ye say: Iuuenalis and Thalassius might wel haue a rebuke for sitting like Iudges in the Second Councel of Ephesus, without Authority of the Pope. O, M. Harding, either ye are much deceiued, and presume to speake before ye know, which were great follie; or else yee speake directly against your knowledge and Conscience, and willingly seeke to deceiue others, which which were great wickednesse. Verily ye might easily haue knowen that these three Bishops were condemned, not for intruding vpon the Popes Authority, as ye haue imagined, but only for condemning other Godly Bishops, wickedly, and without cause. The words of the Councell are plaine: Glorioſiſſimi Iudices dixerunt, Vos quidem primitùs docuiſtis, quia per vim & neceſſitatem in pura charta coacti eſtis ſubſcribere ad damnationem ſanctæ memoriæ Flauiani. Orientales, & qui cum ipſis erant, Reuerendiſſimi Epiſcopi, clamauerunt, Omnes peccauimus, Omnes veniam poſtulamus: The moſt Noble Iudges ſaid, Ye haue heere proouèd before vs, that ye were driuen by force and violence, in a blanke paper to ſubſcribe your names to the condemnation of Flauianus of godly memory. The Biſhops of the Eaſt, and other Reuerend Biſhops that were with them, cried out, We haue all offended, We all deſire pardon. This indeed was their fault, M. Harding: All that you imagine, of vſurping the Popes Authority, is but a fantaſie. For the Popes Huge and Vniuerſall Authority, whereby now he claimeth the whole Iuriſdiction of all the World, at that time was not knowen.

Dioſcorus. Iuuenalis. Thalaſſius. Concil. Chalcedon. Action 1.

The ſame Councell of Chalcedon, maketh him equall in Authority and Dignity, with the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. The words be theſe: Sedi Senioris Romæ, propter Imperium Ciuitatis illius, Patres conſequenter Priuilegia reddiderunt. Et eadem intentione permoti centum quinquaginta Deo amantiſſimi Epiſcopi, æqua Sanctiſſimæ Sedi Nouæ Romę Priuilegia tribuerunt; rationabiliter iudicantes, Imperio & Senatu Vrbem Ornatam, equis Senioris Regiæ Romæ Priuilegijs frui, & in Eccleſiaſticis, ſicut illa, Maieſtatem habere negotijs: Vnto the See of the Old Rome, in conſideration of the Empire of that City Our Fathers haue accordingly giuen Priuileges. And vpon like conſideration, the hundred and fifte godly Biſhops haue giuen equall and like Priuileges to the City of New Rome; (whereby is meant the City of Conſtantinople) for that they thought it reaſonable, that the ſame City of Conſtantinople, being now adorned with Empire and Senate, ſhould alſo haue Priuileges Equall with Rome the Elder, and haue the ſame Maieſty and Authority in Eccleſiaſtical affaires, that Rome hath. Concil. Chalcedon. Act. 16. Conſulatis.

Thus ye ſee, your Pope had not then a Power Peereleſſe ouer all the World: but was made Like, and Euen, and Equall, in all reſpects, to one of his Brethren. Therefore if the Biſhop of Rome were the Head of the Church, then was the Biſhop of Conſtantinople likewiſe the Head of the Church. And if the Biſhop of Romes Power were Vniuerſall, then was the Biſhop of Conſtantinoples Power Vniuerſall, as well as his. For the Councell alloweth as much Eccleſiaſticall Authority to the one Biſhop, as to the other.

Now ſhortly to conſider the whole ſubſtance of your talke: Firſt, ye ſay, Theſe three Biſhops, Dioſcorus, Iuuenalis, & Thalaſſius, were neuer condemned in the Councell of Chalcedon. This ye ſee, is One Vntruth. Secondly, ye ſay, The ciuill Magiſtrate neuer condemned them. This is Another Vntruth. Thirdly, ye ſay, Iuuenalis and Thalaſſius were rebuked for ſitting as Iudges in Councell, without the Popes Authority. Theſe are two other Vntruths. For neither had the Pope any ſuch Prerogatiue at that time, nor was this the Cauſe of their Condemnation. And yet, as if ye would run vs ouer with terrour of words, ye cry out with a courage, What is impudencie, what is licentious Lying, what is deceitfull dealing, if this be not?

Touching theſe fierie termes, M. Harding, I dare not anſwer you. But as for plaine lying without a difference, if ye know not what it is, looke thorow your owne Bookes, and ye cannot faile of it. Verily it is to publiſh Vntruths ſo largely, and ſo liberally, as you haue done, only vpon affiance of the ſimplicity and ignorance of your Reader, without regard or feare of God or Man.

The Apology, Chap. 14. Diuiſion 2.

In the Third Councell at Conſtantinople, Conſtantine a Ciuill Magiſtrate, did not onely ſit amongſt the Biſhops, but did alſo ſubſcribe with them. For ſaith he, We haue both read and Subſcribed.

M. Harding.

The ſubſcribing is not the matter, but the iudging. Conſtantine ſubſcribed to the Councell as now all Chriſtian Princes, being required, ought to ſubſcribe to the Tridentine Councell. * But Conſtantine vſed not this ſtile when he ſubſcribed, Definitis ſubſcripſi, I haue ſubſcribed with giuing definitiue ſentence. * For to ſubſcribe, it apperteined only to Biſhops.

* A vaine Diſtinction.
* Vntruth, manifeſt, Read the Anſwer.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuiſion. 3.

In the Second Councell called Arauſicanum, the Princes Embaſſadors, being Noble Men borne, not only ſpake their mind touching Religion, but ſet to their hands alſo, as well as the Biſhops. For thus it is written in the latter end of that Councell: Petrus, Marcellinus, Felix, and Liberius, being Moſt Noble Men, and famous Lieutenants, and Captaines of France, and alſo Peeres of the Realme, haue giuen their conſent, and ſet to their hands. Further, Syagrius, Opilio, Pantagathus, Deodatus, Cariattho, & Marcellus, men of very great honour, haue ſubſcribed.

M. Harding.

What if all the Lay-men of the World had ſubſcribed by the word of conſenting or agreeing to the Biſhops Decrees, each one writing thus, as in that cauſe the old maner was; Conſentiens ſubſcripſi? What other thing is prooued thereby, then that they thought it neceſſary to allow that which Biſhops had determined? Which we wiſh ye would doe.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuiſion 4.

The Temporall Magiſtrate Subſcribeth in Councell.

If it be ſo then, that Lieutenants, Chiefe Captaines, and Peeres haue had Authority to Subſcribe in Councell, haue not Emperors and Kings the like Authority?

M. Harding.

Kings and Queenes not only might, but ought to ſubſcribe when they are required.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Heere, M. Harding, yee are driuen to many ſhifts. Some of you ſay, that Princes Embaſſadours and Ciuill Magiſtrates had no right to Subſcribe in Councell, but only by licence and ſufferance of the Biſhops. Some others haue found out a certaine difference in Subſcriptions. The Biſhop (ye ſay) Subſcribed in one Forme, and the Ciuill Magiſtrate in an other. The Biſhop thus: Definiens ſubſcripſi; By giuing my Definitiue Sentence, I haue ſubſcribed: The Lay Magiſtrate thus: Conſentiens ſubſcripſi; Giuing Conſent heerto, I haue Subſcribed. Thus haue you found out a knot in a raſh, and deuiſed a Diuerſitie without a Difference. Certainely in the Old Councels there appeareth only one Forme of Subſcriptions, and no mo. And afterward theſe two words, Definiens and Conſentiens, wherein you imagine ſo great a difference, were vſed indifferently, as well of Biſhops, as of others, as each man was beſt affected. Sometime the Biſhop Subſcribed, Conſentiens: Sometime the Lay man Subſcribed, Definiens, without ſcruple. In the Councell of Chalcedon it is written thus: Ego Dorotheus Epiſcopus Conſenſi & Subſcripſi: I Biſhop Dorothee haue Conſented and Subſcribed, &c. Likewiſe it is written in the Councell of Paris: Ego Probianus Epiſcopus Bituricenſis Conſenſi & Subſcripſi: I Probiane the Biſhop of Bourges haue Conſented and Subſcribed. Marius Victorinus ſaith: Nicenæ Fidei multa Epiſcoporum millia Conſenſerunt: Many thouſand Biſhops Conſented vnto the Nicene Faith.

Conſentiens Subſcripſi. Conc. Chalced. Act. 1. pa. 780. Conc. Pariſien. Marius Victorin. contra Arianos. Lib 2. Definiens. Subſcripſi. Euag. li. 2. c. 4. Soz. li 4. c. 15. ὥστε ἡμῶν συνεδρεύειν κατὰ τὰς ἐκκλησιαστικὰς γραφὰς συνελθόντων ἀλλήλοις, καὶ περὶ τῶν πραγτέων ὅπως ἂν βέλτιστα δοκῇ ἐπιτελεῖσθαι.

Of the other ſide, the Lay Prince in Councell hath had Authoritie, not only to Conſent and agree vnto others, but alſo to Define and Determine, and that in caſes of Religion, as by many euident Examples it may appeare. Euagrius ſaith, as it is before alleged: Οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς συγκλήτου βουλῆς ἐψηφίσαντο τάδε: They that were of the Senate of the Lords of the Councell, Determined theſe things. Sozomenus ſaith: Imperator Conſtantinus iuſſit decem Epiſcopos Orientis, & totidem Occidentis, quos Synodus deſignaſſet ad Aulam ſuam venire, & ſibi exponere Decreta Concilij, vt ipſe quo conſideraret, an ſecundùm Scripturas inter ſe conueniſſent, & de rebus agendis, quæ optima viderentur, Determinaret: The Emperour Conſtantine commanded, that ten Biſhops of the Eaſt, and ten of the Weſt, choſen by the Councell, ſhould repaire to his Court, and open vnto him the Decrees of the Councell, that his Maieſtie might conſider whether they were agreed according to the Scriptures; and that he might further (not only Conſent, or agree, but alſo) Determine, and Conclude what were beſt to be done. Æneas Syluius, which afterward was Pope Pius 2. ſaith thus: Viſum eſt Spiritui Sancto, & nobis: Vnde apparet, alios quàm Epiſcopos in Concilijs habuiſſe vocem Decidentem: It ſeemeth good to the Holy Ghoſt, and to vs: Heereby it appeareth, that ſome others beſide Biſhops had a voice Definitiue in Councels. And againe he ſaith: Nec ego cuiuſuis Epiſcopi Mendacium, quamuis ditiſſimi, Veritati præponam pauperis Presbyteri. Nec dedignari debet Epiſcopus, ſi aliquando ignarus & rudis, ſequacem non habeat multitudinem: Neither will I ſet more by any Biſhops Lie, be he neuer ſo rich, then I would ſet by any Prieſts Truth, be he neuer ſo poore. Neither may the ignorant and vnlearned Biſhop diſdaine, if hee ſee the people vnwilling to follow him.

Æneas Syluius de geſtis Cõcil. Baſil. lib. 1. Eodem loco.

Gerſon, quæ veritates ſint credendæ.

Gerſon ſaith: Iudicium & Concluſio Fidei, licèt Authoritatiuè ſpectent ad Prælatos & Doctores, Doctores, ſpectare tamen poſſunt ad alios quàm Theologos, Deliberatio ſicut & cognitio, ſuper his quæ Fidem reſpiciunt. Ita vt ad Laicos etiam hoc poſſit extendi; & plus aliquando, quàm ad multos Clericorum: Notwithſtanding the Iudgement and Concluſion of Faith belong by Authority vnto Biſhops and Doctors, yet aſwell the Deliberation hereof, as alſo the Knowledge and Iudgement, concerning matters that touch the Faith, may belong vnto others too, beſides the Diuines, or Doctors, & profeſſors of Diuinity. Yea it may ſomtimes be extended euen vnto the Lay men: and more ſometimes vnto them, then vnto many Prieſts.

The Temporal Magiſtrate Subſcribeth in Councell.

The Emperour Iuſtinian in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes often times vſeth theſe words: Definimus, Mandamus, Iubemus, &c. We Determine, we Conclude, we Command, we Bid. Touching Biſhops he writeth thus: Definimus, vt nullus Deo amabilium Epiſcoporum foris à ſua Eccleſia, plùs quàm per totum annum, abeſſe audeat: Wee Define, or Determine, that none of the Godly Biſhops ſhall dare to be abſent from his Church, more then by the ſpace of one whole yeere. Heere ye ſee the Temporall Prince in an Eccleſiaſticall Cauſe ſaith, Definimus. To be ſhort, Pope Nicolas himſelfe ſaith, writing vnto the Emperour Michael: Vbinam legiſtis Imperatores Anteceſſores veſtros, Synodalibus Contentionibus interfuiſſe? Niſi fortè in quibuſdam, vbi de Fide tractatū eſt: quæ Vniuerſalis eſt, quæ omnium Communis eſt: quæ non ſolum ad Clericos, verum etiam ad Laicos, & ad omnes omninò pertinet Chriſtianos: Where haue you read, that your Predeceſſors, being Emperours, were euer preſent at our Diſputations in Councels; vnleſſe happilie it were in certaine caſes, whereas matter was moued touching the Faith? For Faith is Vniuerſall, and Common to all: and pertaineth not onlie vnto Prieſts, but alſo vnto Lay men: and generally and thorowly to all Chriſtians.

Anthe. Colla. 1. Tit. 6. Quomodo oport. Epiſcop. Diſt. 96. Vbinam.

Nicolaus Cuſanus ſaith: In Sexta Synodo Baſilius imperator Patriarchalium Sedium Vicarijs & Patriarchis in Subſcriptione ſe poſtpoſuit ex humilitate, tota Synodo rogante, vt ſe preponeret: In the Sixth Councell of Conſtantinople, the Emperour Baſilius ſubſcribeth his name after the Legates of the Patriarkall Sees, and after the Patriarks: But this he did of humility. For the whole Councell beſought him to ſubſcribe his name before all others. Thus ye ſee, M. Harding, by the Popes own Iudgement, that Cauſes and Diſputations of the Faith belong as well to the Temporall Prince, as to the Pope.

Nicol. Cuſan. de Concordan. lib 3. cap. 16.

The Apology, Chap. 14. Diuiſion 5.

Truly there had been no need to handle ſo plain a matter as this is, with ſo many words, & ſo at length if we had not to do with thoſe men, who for a deſire they haue to ſtriue, & to win the Maſterie, vſe of courſe to deeme al things, be they neuer ſo cleere, yea the very ſame which they preſently ſee, and behold with their owne eies.

M. Harding.

The matter ye ſpeake of, is ſo cleer, that frō the beginning of the world to this day no ſecular Prince can be named, who by the ordinary power of a Prince, without the gift of Prophecy, or ſpecial reuelation, did laudably intermeddle with Religion, as a Iudge & Ruler of ſpiritual cauſes The reaſon thereof is cleere. Religion is an order of diuine worſhipping, belonging to God only; whereupon no man hath power, but he that is called thereto by God He is called in the iudgement of men, who can ſhew his calling outwardly, as by conſecration and impoſition of hands, Prieſts and Biſhops are called to be the Mat. 16. & 18 diſpenſators of the myſteries of God. In that conſecration, the keies of knowledge and diſcretion, the power of binding and looſing is giuen.* If a ſecular Prince cannot ſhew the keies giuen to him, how dareth he to aduenture to break vp, rather then to open, the claſped Booke of God, the doore of the Church, and the gates of the Kingdome of Heauen? Wherefore S. Ambroſe ſaid vnto Valentinian,
Lib. 5. Ep. 32. Quando audiuiſti, Imperator, in cauſa Fidei, Laicos de Epiſcopo iudicaſſe? When haſt thou heard, Emperour, Lay men to haue beene Iudges of a Biſhop in the cauſe of Faith? And yet now theſe men thinke that which S Ambroſe neuer heard of, not only to haue beene vſed continually, the firſt fiue hundred yeeres after Chriſts birth, but alſo to be as cleere a matter, as if we beheld it with our eies.

* Vntruth, euident as by ſundry examples it ſhall appeare.

* O Vaine man! What pertaine theſe Keies to Generall Councels? For by thē euery poore Prieſt hath as good right in Councell as the Pope.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

The Temporall Prince (ye ſay) hath not the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen: Ergo, hee may not iudge in Eccleſiaſticall Cauſes, nor giue Deffinitiue Sentence in Generall Councell. This is a very ſilly poore Argument, M. Harding, as heereafter it ſhall appeare. But S. Ambroſe ſaith vnto the Emperour Valentinian: When did your Maieſty euer heare, that in a cauſe of Faith Lay men were Iudges ouer Biſhops? Heere, M. Harding by the way, S. Ambroſe giueth you to vnderſtand, that vnleſſe it be in a cauſe of Faith, a Lay man may be Iudge ouer a Biſhop: which thing is contrary, not onely to your former Doctrine, but alſo to the whole courſe and practiſe of your Church of Rome.

Part. 6. cap. 9. Diuiſ. 2.

The Prince may deale in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes.

Howbeit, touching the meaning of theſe words, it behoueth vs to know, Firſt, the cauſe wherefore S. Ambroſe ſo ſhunned and fled the Emperours Iudgement: Next, before what Iudges he deſired to be tried.

Firſt, the Emperour Valentinian at that time was verie young, as well in Age, as alſo in Faith: He was not yet Baptized: He knew not the Principles of Chriſts Religion: He was an Arian Heretike, and beleeued not the Godhead of Chriſt, but bent all his ſtudy and power to maintaine the Arians: Yee would haue thruſt out the Chriſtians, and would haue poſſeſſed the Heretikes in their Churches: and to that end had raiſed his Power, and filled Millaine full of Souldiers: He ſaid, It was lawfull for him to doe what him liſted. Briefly, his whole dealing was full of force and violence, ſuch as hath been ſeene in ſome Countries not many yeares ſithence.

Allegatur Imperatori licere omnia.

In conſideration hereof, S. Ambroſe worthily refuſed him to be his Iudge: and therefore he ſaid vnto him: Tolle Legem, ſi vis eſſe certamen: Take away the rigour of your Law, if ye will haue the matter tried by diſputation. Againe: Noli te grauare, Imperator, vt putes te in ea quæ diuina ſunt, Imperiale aliquod ius habere: Noli te extollere: Eſto Deo ſubiectus. Scriptum eſt, Quæ Dei Deo, quæ Cæſaris Cæſari: O my Lord, trouble not your ſelfe to thinke you haue any Princely Power ouer thoſe things that pertain to God. Vaunt not your ſelfe: Be ſubiect vnto God. It is written, Giue vnto God that belongeth vnto God: Giue vnto Cæſar that belongeth vnto Cæſar.

But as S. Ambroſe ſaith, The Emperor hath no power ouer Gods cauſes, ſo may we likewiſe, and as truely ſay, The Pope hath no power ouer Gods cauſes. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Siquidem eſt in Cauſa Fidei, fuge illum, & euita: non ſolùm ſi homo fuerit, verùm etiam ſi Angelus de Cœlo deſcẽderit: If it be a Matter of Faith (wherin he ſeeketh to abuſe thee) flee him, and ſhun him; not only if he be a man, but alſo if an Angel ſhould come down from Heauen. Thus it appeareth, S. Ambroſe refuſed not the Emperours Power, & Authority of Iudgement in Caſes Eccleſiaſticall, but onely his wilfull Ignorance, and his Tyranny, for that he knew his iudgement was corrupted, and not indifferent.

Chryſo. ad Hebræ. Hom. 34.

Ambroſ. lib. 5. Epiſt. 32. Dicentes de Fide, in Eccleſia coram populo deberi tractari.

And for that cauſe he ſaith: Veniſſem, Imperator ad Conſiſtoriũ Clementiæ tuæ, &c. O my Lord, I would haue made mine appearance at your Conſiſtory, to haue vttered theſe things in your Preſence, if either the Biſhops, or the People would haue ſuffred me. For they told me, that Matters of Faith ought to be diſputed in the Church openly before the People. Againe he ſaith: Veniant ſanè, ſi qui ſunt, in Eccleſiam: Audiant cum Populo: non vt quiſquam reſideat Iudex, ſed vt vnuſquiſq; de ſuo affectu habeat examen, & eligat quẽ ſequatur: Let them hardly come to the Church: Let them hearken together with the People: not that any man ſhould ſit as Iudge, but that euery man may after his own minde examine the matter, and ſo chuſe whõ he may follow. Of ſuch Tyranny in Councels Athanaſius likewiſe cõplaineth: Quo iure contra nos Synodũ vllam conſtituere potuerunt? Aut qua fronte talem Conuentũ Synodũ appellare audent, cui Comes præſedit? Vbi Spiculator apparebat? Vbi Commentarienſis, ſiue Carcerarius, pro Diaconis Eccleſiæ aduentantes introducebat? Comes Imperio vtebatur: Nos à militibus ducebamur: By what Law could they keepe a Councell againſt vs? Or with what face could they call ſuch an Aſſemblie by the name of a Councel? wheras the Lord Lieutenãt was Preſident, where the Hangman was Apparitor, where the Iailer preſented the Suters in ſtead of the Deacons of the Church? The Liuetenant did all things by Authority and Commandement: We were taken by the Souldiers, and carried to Priſon.

Therefore he ſaith: Fiat Eccleſiaſtica Synodus longè à Palatio: vbi nec Imperator præſtò eſt, nec Comes ſe ingerit, nec Iudex minatur: & vbi Solus Timor Dei ad omnia ſufficit, &c. Let there be made an Eccleſiaſtical Synod, farre from the Emperors Palace: whereas neither the Emperor is preſent, nor the Liuetenant thruſteth in himſelfe, nor the Iudge with his threats maketh men afraid but whereas the feare of God to all purpoſes is ſufficient. For this cauſe S: Ambroſe refuſed to be tried by the Emperour Valentinian: That is to ſay, as then it was, by a raſh young man; by a man Vnbaptized, and therefore no Chriſtian, by a Tyrant; and by an Arian Heretike, that vtterly denied the Godhead of Chriſt.

Otherwiſe Athanaſius himſelf was wel contented to commit his whole cauſe vnto the Emperour. For thus he ſaith: Poſtulamus cauſam iſtam Pientiſſimo Imperatori reſeruari: apud quem licebit, & Iura Eccleſiæ, & noſtra proponere. Planè enim confidimus eius Pietatem, cognitis noſtris rationibus, nequaquam nos condemnaturam eſſe: We require that the Emperours moſt godly and moſt Religious Maieſtie may haue the hearing of the ſame matter: Before whom wee may open both our Churches Right, and alſo our owne. For wee haue good hope, that his Godlineſſe, vnderſtanding our Reaſons, will neuer condemne vs.

Likewise S. Augustine saith vnto the Donatian Heretikes: An fortè de Religione fas non est, vt dicat Imperator, vel quos miserit Imperator? Cur ergo ad Imperatorem vestri venere Legati? Cur eum fecerunt causæ suæ Iudicem? Is it not lawfull for the Emperour or his Deputy to giue Sentence in a matter of Religion? Wherfore then went your Embassadors to the Emperour? Why made they him the Iudge of their cause?

The Prince may deale in Ecclesiasticall Causes.

Thus, M. Harding, it appeareth, that you in defrauding Emperours, and Kings of their Emperiall and Princely Right, are faine to take part with the Donatian Heretikes.

As for vs, we claime no other right in Ecclesiasticall causes, vnto our Christian Princes this day, then that may well appeare, hath bene iustly vsed both by Constantinus the Emperour, and also by other Catholike and Godlie Princes.

The Emperour Theodosius wrot thus vnto the Councel of Chalcedon: Quoniam scimus Magnificentissimum Florentium Patritium esse Fidelem, & probatum in recta Fide, volumus eum interesse audientiæ Synodi, quoniam Sermo de Fide est: For that wee know the most Noble Florentius to be faithfull and well approued in the Right Faith, therfore we will that he be present at the hearing and debating of cases in the Councel, forasmuch as the Disputation is of the Faith.

Dist. 96. Vbinam.

For Pope Nicolas himselfe saith, as it is alleged before: Fides Vniuersalis est: Fides omnium communis est: Fides non solum ad Clericos, verùm etiã ad Laicos, & ad omnes omninò pertinet Christianos: * Faith is Vniuersall: Faith is common to all: Faith pertaineth not onely vnto Priests, but also vnto Lay men, and generally to all Christians.

* He speaketh of questiõs of Faith mooued in Councels

As touching the Pope and his Vniuersality of Power, in, and ouer all Councels of Bishops, we may rightly say, as Athanasius saith of Constantius the Arian Emperor: Obtendit in speciem Episcoporum Iudicium: sed interim facit quod ipsi libet. Quid opus est hominibus titulo Episcopis? He maketh a shew of Iudgements or Determinations of Bishops: In the meane while he doth what he listeth himselfe. What are we the neere for these men, that beare only the name of Bishops? Such commonly be the Popes Prelates. Whatsoeuer learning they haue besides, Diuinity is commonly the least part of their studie. And therefore when they are assembled in Councel, they may well iudge by Authority, but not by Learning.

Verily Luitprandus saith: Imperator vti experientia didicimus, intelligit negotiã Dei, & facit, & amat ea: & tuetur omnibus viribus & Ecclesiasticas res, & Ciuiles. Sed Iohannes Papa facit contra hæc omnia: We see by experience, that the Emperor vnderstandeth Gods causes, and fauoureth, and performeth the same: and with all his power maintaineth both Ecclesiasticall and Temporall matters. But Pope Iohn doth all the contrary.

The Apologie, Chap. 14. Diuision, 6.

The Emperour Iustinian made a Law to correct the behauiour of the Clergie, and to cut short the insolent leaudnesse of the Priests. And albeit he were a Christian and a Catholike Prince, yet put he downe from their Papall Throne, two Popes, Syluerius and Vigilius, notwithstanding they were Peters Successours, and Christs Vicars.

M. Harding.

Iustinians Law concerning good Order to be kept among Priests Morally was good, and bound them by the force of reason. If he made any other Law touching matters of Religion, Pope Ioannes then being, approued it, or at the least, Iustinian * asked approbation thereof, * as it may appeare in his own Epistle, wherein he confesseth in the fact it selfe, that his Lawes could not bind in supernaturall causes belonging to faith except the head of the Vniuersall Church confirme them. Syluerius & Vigilius were deposed rather by Theodora the Empresse, then by Iustinian the Emperour. * Yee doe wrong to impute that wicked Tiranny vnto him. * He is not to be burdened therewith, vnlesse the man be countable for his wiues iniquities.

* Vntruth. For he did but conferre with the Pope touching his Lawes. Touching the asking of allowance there appeareth nothing.

* Vntruth. For it was no Tyranny, but iust iudgement. And Iustiniã gaue Belisarius great thãks for so doing.

Howsoeuer it was, that extraordinarie violence and tyranny cannot iustly be alleged to the defense of your falle assertion. Neither would your selfe haue mentioned the same, if yee could haue found better matter. As hungry Dogs eat dirty Puddings, according to the Prouerbe, cleane enough for such vncleane Writers, so your foule matters be defended by foule facts.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Iustinian (ye say) might well make some Moral Law to keepe Priests and Bishops in good order. Wherein neuertheleſſe Pope Paul 3. condemneth you vtterly. For thus he writeth, and reasoneth substantially against the Emperor Charles the Fifth: Ecce ego super Pastores meos: Behold, saith Almighty God, I my selfe wil ouersee my shepheards: Ergo, saith Pope Paulus Addition. ☞ Michael an Emperour of the East, contrary to the custome & order of the Church, made a Law that no Monke should serue the Ministery in any cure. The Emperour Iustinian giueth licence to a Bishop, to release a Priest from part of his Pennance and to restore him to the Ministery. Emperours had authority to appoint Patriarkal Sees and that not by warrant from the Pope, but as Balsamon saith: Secundū Potestatem illis desuper Datam: According to that Power that is giuen to them from above. By the Ecclesiasticall Lawes, no Bishop may giue orders without his own Dioceese. Yet Balsamon saith: Characterem dare extra Diocœsim Imperatorio iussu permissum est. A Bishop being without his own Dioceese may giue orders, so that the Emperour so command him. Here we see, the Emperours commandement is aboue the Law of the Church. By the Apostles Canons, a Priest may not wander from one Dioceese or Cure to another. Yet Balsamon saith: Nota, quòd etiam Imperatori concessum est, facere Clericorum translationes: Marke thou, that the Emperour hath a Priuilege to translate Priests from one Cure to another. ☜

It were much for you, M. Harding, to say, as now ye would seeme to say, All these were Morall Lawes, and pertained onely to good order. But the Pope (ye say) allowed the Emperors Ecclesiastical Lawes; Otherwise of the Emperors owne authoritie, they had no force. The truth hereof, by the Particulars may some appeare.

By one of the Emperours Lawes, it is prouided, That the Bishop of Constantinople shall haue Equal Power and Prerogatiue with the Bishop of Rome. This Law the Pope could neuer breake. And yet that notwithstanding, Liberatus saith: It holdeth still by the Emperours Authority, whether the Pope will or no. Againe it is prouided, in the same Law that Churches of Illyricum, in their doubtfull cases, shall appeale to Constantinople, and not to Rome.

Ministri Dei, hoc est, mea manu coercebitur.

The Emperour Constantine saith: If the Bishop moue trouble (by Doctrine or otherwise) by my hand he shall be punished: for my hand is the hand of Gods Minister.

Iustinian the Emperor in his Law commandeth, That the Priest or Bishop in pronouncing the Publike Praiers, and in the Ministration of the Sacraments, lift vp his voice, and speake aloude that the people may say Amen, and be stirred to more Deuotion. Againe he saith, as it is noted in the Glosse vpon the Authentikes: Papa Temporalibus immiscere se non debet: The Pope may not intermeddle with Temporall Causes.

The same Emperour Iustinian commandeth: That all Monkes either be driuen to studie the Scriptures, or else be forced to Bodily Labor. Carolus Magnus made a Law, That nothing should be read openly in the Church, sauing only the Canonical Bookes of the holy Scriptures. And that the faithfull people should receiue the holy Communion euery Sunday. I leaue the rehearsall of infinite other like examples.

Now, M. Harding, will you say, or may we beleeue, that all these, and other like Lawes were allowed by the Pope? Verily certains of them are made directly against the Pope.

Indeed your Glosser saith: Ad quid intromittit se Imperator de Spiritualibus, vel Ecclesiasticis, cùm sciat ad se non pertinere? Wherefore doth the Emperour thus busie himself with these Spirituall or Ecclesiasticall matters, seeing he knoweth they are no part of his Charge? To so profound a question, after a solemne study, he deuiseth this answer: Dic, quòd Authoritate Papæ hoc facit: Say thou, that he doth it by the Popes Authority. And then the whole matter is discharged, and all is well.

Notwithstanding, some likelihood hereof ye would seeme to gather, euen out of Iustinians owne words. For thus he saith vnto the Pope, although far otherwise the Pope haue forced him to say: Omnia quæ ad Ecclesiarum statum pertinent, festinauimus ad notitiā deferre vestræ Sanctitatis. Necessariū ducimus, vt ad notitiam vestræ Sanctitatis peruenirent. Nec enim patimur quicquam, quod ad Ecclesiarū Statum pertinet, vt non etiam vestræ innotescat Sanctitati: quæ Caput est omniū Sanctarum Ecclesiarū: Whatsoeuer things pertain to the state of the Churches, we haue speedily brought to the knowledge of your Holines. We thought it necessary that your Holines should haue knowledge thereof. We suffer not any thing, that concerneth the State of the Churches, but it be brought to the knowledge of your Holinesse, which is the Head or Chiefe of all the holy Churches.

not

f The Prince may deale in Ecclesiasticall Causes.

The Emperour willeth the Pope to take knowledge of his Lawes, for that he was the Chiefe of the Foure Principall Patriarkes, and in respect of his See, the greatest Bishop of all the World: for which cause also he calleth him, the Head or Chiefe of all Churches. So Iustinian saith: Roma est Caput Orbis Terrarum: Rome is the Head of all the World. So S. Chrysostome saith: Caput Propheterum Elias: Elias the Head of the Prophets. So saith Prudentius: Sancta Bethlem Caput est Orbis: The Holy Towne of Bethlem is the Head of the World.

So Nazianzene calleth S. Basil, τὸν τῆς οἰκουμένης ὀφθαλμὸν, Oculum Orbis Terrarum: The Eie of all the Earth. So Iustinian calleth the Bishop of Constantinople, an Vniuersall Patriarke: Epiphano Vniuersali Patriarchæ.

Cod. de Veteri iure Enucleādo. Chrys. ad Romanos, hom. 18. Prudentius in Enchiridio. Nazian. in epist. ad Basil. 14.

These and other like words, passe oftentimes in fauour as Titles of Honour. But they import not alwaies that Vniuersall Gouernment or Infinite authority, that the Pope hence hath imagined. But touching the Confirmation and allowance of the Emperours Lawes, in these words of Iustinian, yee find nothing: vnlesse ye will say, Notitia, is Latine for Allowance: or Peruenire, is Latine to Confirme.

Auth. Col. 1. Vt determinatus.

The Emperours purpose was, as it plainlie appeareth by his words, by these and all other meanes to bring the See of Rome into credit. For thus he saith: Properamus, Honorem, & Authoritatem crescere Sedis vestræ: Omnes Sacerdotes Vniuersi Orientalis Tractus, & subijcere, & vnire Sedi Vestræ Sanctitatis properauimus. Plus ita Vestræ Sedis crescet authoritas: We labour, to aduance the Honour and Authority of your See: we labour to subdue and to ioine all the Priests of the East part vnto the See of your Holinesse. Thus shall the Authority of your See the more increase.

Cod. de Summa Trinit. & Fide Cathol. Inter Cleras.

Notwithstanding, it is noted by the learned of your owne side, that these Epistles betweene the Emperour and the Pope, in the Oldest allowed Bookes, are not found: and therefore are suspected to sauour of some Roman forgerie. Whereby it is easie to vnderstand, that vntill the time of the Emperour Iustinian, which was welnere fiue hundred yeres after Christ, the Bishops of the East Church were not subiect to the Bishop of Rome, and that for so long time, the Pope was not yet knowen for the Head of the Vniuersall Church of God. One of your owne allowed Doctors saith thus: Dicere, quòd Princeps non potest facere Leges, vel eis vti, quousque fuerint approbatę per Papam, falsum est: To say that the Prince cannot either make or vse his Lawes before the Pope haue allowed them, it is plainly false. Abbate Panormitane to qualifie the matter, saith thus: Lex Principis Præiudicialis Ecclesijs, non extenditur ad Ecclesias, nisi expresse approbetur per Papam: Sed, si fauet Ecclesijs, intelligitur approbata, nisi expresse reprobetur: The Princes Law, if it be Preiudiciall or hurtfull to the Church, is not extended vnto the Church, vnlesse it bee expresly allowed by the Pope: but if it be profitable for the Church, we must thinke it is allowed, vnlesse it be expresly disallowed.

Greg. Haloander & Azo. Extra. de Constit. sanct. Maria. Numer. 9.

But here, M. Harding, this one thing ye may note by the way, that notwithstanding you cannot finde by anie shift or colour, whereof ye lacke no store that the Pope hath Authoritie to allow the Emperours Lawes, yet of the other side, we are able readily to finde, that the Emperour hath Authority to allow the Popes Lawes. For so the Emperour Iustinian himselfe saith: A præcedentibus nos Imperatoribus, & à nobis ipsis rectè dictum est, Oportere Sacras Regulas pro Legibus valere: It is wel said both by other Emperors our Predecessors, and also by vs, that the holy Canons must be holden for Lawes.

Auth. Col. 1. Quomodo oporteat. Extra. de Iuramen. Calum. Inhærentes.

Likewise saith Pope Honorius 3. Imperator Iustinianus decreuit, vt Canones Patrum vim Legum habere oporteat: The Emperour Iustinian hath decreed, that the Canons of the Fathers shall haue the force of Lawes.

Authen. De Eccles. diuersis capitulis. κανόνας τῶν ἁγίων πατέρων δέχεσθαι. Aug epist. 48. Cod. de Veteri Iure Enuclean. lib. 1. Auth. Tit. 133. μηδὲν ἄλογον εἶναι εἰς ζήτησιν τῆς βασιλείας.

But what can be so plaine, as that Iustinian hereof writeth himselfe? These be his words: Nisi intra præscriptum tempus ad Ecclesias suas redeant, deponantur, & alij in illorum locum surrogentur, idque Authoritate & vi huius præsentis Legis: Vnlesse Bishops and Priests repaire againe vnto their Churches by a day appointed, let them be deprived from their liuings, and let others be placed in their roomes (not by the authority of the Pope, but) by the force and authority of this present Law. So saith S. Augustine: Reges in Terris seruiunt Christo, faciendo Leges pro Christo: Kings in the World serue Christ, in that they make Laws for Christ. Likewise saith Iustinian: Legum Authoritas & Diuinas & Humanas res bene disponit: By the authority of the (Emperours) Lawes, both Heauenly and Worldly things are well ordered. And againe: Nullum genus rerum est, quod non sit penitùs quærendum Authoritate Imperatoris. Is enim recipit à Deo communem gubernationem & principalitatē super omnes homines: There is no kind of thing but it may be thorowly examined by the authority of the Emperour. For he receiueth from God a Generall Gouernment, and Principality

Touching the Depriuation of the two Popes, Syluerius and Vigilius, ye ſay, it was done only by Theodora the Empreſſe, and not by the Emperor Iuſtinian: And therein, ye thinke, ye haue taken vs in ſome great aduantage. Notwithſtanding, in your owne Pontificall it is written thus: Beliſarium interrogauit Imperator, quomodo ſe haberet cum Romanis: vel quomodò in loco Syluerij ſtatuiſſet Vigilium. And hereto ye applie the vnſauoury Similitude of your Homely Puddings. Notwithſtanding, what Vertue or Holineſſe was in either of theſe men, it may ſone appeare by the Storie. Pope Syluerius was choſen Pope by Corruption and Symony, contrary to the will of the Clergy: Pope Vigilius accuſed him of Treaſon, for that he would haue betraied the City of Rome to the Gothians. The Popes power Supernatural

M. Harding.

Now then Kings & Emperors, * who haue their first authority by the poficiue Law of Nations, not by supernaturall grace from God, as Priests haue; who can haue no more power then the people hath, * of whom they take their Temporall iurisdiction; Who haue euer (a) bin anointed and blessed by Bishops whosoeuer blesseth, being greater then he that is blessed; shall we say that such Kings and Emperors haue authority to rule the Church (b) whose Sons they are? To be supreme Heads ouer them whom they ought to kneele vnto for absolution? To controule their Spirituall Iudges? Whom if they sin by humanities frailty, they (c) ought to couer with their clokes (c) as the great Constantine said; to degrade them of whom they must be Baptized, Anointed, Crowned and Buried?

* Vntruths, three together, open and manifest. Read the Answer.

(a) Vntruth, confessed by M. Hardings owne Doctours.

(b) And is not the Pope a son of the Church? Then is he not the son of God. (c) Vntruth for that so the Prince ought to doe, Constantinus neuer said it.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Now, M. Harding, ye huddle vp hastily your poore Arguments in heaps together. One or two of them only I minde to touch: The rest are not worth the stirring. First, ye say, The Popes power is of God, The Princes power is only of Man. The one Supernatural, the other Natural. In such sort your Pope Nicolas aduanceth and magnifieth his own Chaire. For thus he saith with a lolly courage: Illud verbum quo constructum est Cœlum & Terra, quo denique omnia facta sunt Elementa, Romanam fundauit Ecclesiam: The Word of God whereby Heauen and Earth was made, and whereby all the Elements were fashioned, the same word founded the Church of Rome. As if the Church of Rome and other Churches were not all of one Foundation. Another of your Popes Retainers saith: Papatus est Summa Virtus Creata: The Popedome is the Highest Vertue or Power that euer God made: that is to say, The Popedome is aboue Angels, Archangels, Thrones, Dominations, and all the Powers, in, vnder, or aboue the Heauens. Another saith euen as you say, and as I haue partly said before: Rex per hominem fit: Sacerdos autem proximè nascitur ex Deo ipso: Quantùm Deus præstat Sacerdoti, tantùm Sacerdos præstat Regi: The King is made by man: But the Priest is immediately begotten of God. As much as God excelleth the Priest, so much the Priest excelleth the King.

Stanislaus Orichonius in Chimæra. fol. 97. & 99.

And notwithstanding all this Supernatural power be as well in the simplest Priest, as in the Pope, yet another of your Doctors saith: Papa eligitur secundum Ius diuinum: alij verò Episcopi secundum Ius humanum: The Pope is chosen by the Law of God: but other Bishops are chosen by the Law of Man. Thus ye thinke no colour too deare to paint out the Popes face, and to make it shine faire and glorious.

Pet. de Palud. de potest. Curator. Art. 6.

But the Princes power (ye say) is Temporal and Naturall, and only from beneath, and only of Man, & therefore can be no greater then man may giue him. This is your Louanian Diuinity, M. Harding: So highly ye estéme the Dignity and Maiesty of the Prince. But God himselfe saith: Per me Reges regnant: Kings rule by me, (and not by Man.) S. Paul saith: Non est potestas, nisi à Deo: There is no Power or Princehood, but from God. Likewise Christ himselfe said vnto Pilate: Thou couldst haue no Power ouer mee, vnlesse it were giuen thee (not from Man, but) from aboue. To like purpose the Empereror Iustinian saith: Maxima in omnibus sunt dona Dei, & superna collata Clementia, Sacerdotium & Imperium, &c. Ex vno eodemque Principio vtraque procedentia Humanam exornant vitam: Priesthood and Princehood be in al things the greatest gifts of God, giuen vnto vs frō the Mercy aboue,

These

Gloſſa. In Verbum Vtraque. Theſe two flowing (not the one only from Man, and the other from God, but) both from one Originall, doe adorne and beautifie the Life of Man. Upon which woꝛds it is noted in your Gloſſe: Idem Principium habent, & parum differunt: Prieſthood and Princehood came one Originall, and ſmall difference. Ye ſaith not, as you ſay, The oddes betwæne theſe two is ſo great, as is betwæne Naturall and Supernatural: betwæne Heauen and Earth: oꝛ betwæne God and Man. But he ſaith plainly, Prieſthood and Princehood haue one Originall and little oddes and ſmall difference. Theodorus Balſamon ſaith thus: Nota Canonem, qui dicit, Spirituales dignitates eſſe præſtantiores ſæcularibus, ſeu mundanis dignitatibus. Sed ne hoc eo traxeris, vt Eccleſiaſticæ dignitates præferantur Imperatorijs: illis enim ſubijciuntur: Marke well this Canon, that ſaith, The Spirituall dignities are better then the Temporall or Worldly dignities. But ye may not gather thereof, that the Dignities of the Church are aboue the Dignity of an Emperour, for they are ſubiect and inferiour to him. Thus you ſee, M. Harding, how eaſily your light coniectures may deceiue you. And therefoꝛe another of your Doctours ſaith: Supponunt quòd Poteſtas Regalis ſit Corporalis, & non Spiritualis; Et quòd habeat Curam Corporum, & non Animarum: quod falſum eſt: They imagin that the Princes power is only Bodily, and not Ghoſtly: and that the Prince hath the charge of mens Bodies, but none of their Soules: but this is ſtarke falſe.

The Popes Power Supernatural

Balſamon in Sexta Synod. Canon. 7.

Ioh. de Pariſijs cap. 18.

Ioh. de Pariſijs, de poteſt. Regia. & Papal. c. 25

And whereas you ſo highly extol your Popes Vniuerſall Power, as if it were Supernaturall and heauenly, and came onely from God. Another of your Doctours ſaith: Ea quæ ſunt Iuriſdictionis Papæ, non ſunt ſupra Naturam & Conditionem negotij, nec ſupra Cõditionem hominum. Quia non eſt ſupra Conditionem hominis, quod homines præſint hominibus. Imo naturale eſt quodammodo: Such things as belong to the Popes Iuriſdiction, are not aboue Nature, nor aboue the Condition of the thing it ſelfe, nor aboue the Capacity of a Man: For it is not aboue the Nature of a Man, for Man to rule ouer Men. Nay rather, in a ſort, it is Naturall.

Now, M. Harding, if the Princes power be from God aſwell as the Popes: If the Popes power concerning iuriſdiction be Naturall aſwel as the Princes: If they flow both from one Originall: If they haue ſo ſmall difference, what meant you then by theſe odious Compariſons, ſo highly and ſo ambitiouſly to aduance the one, and ſo diſdainfully and ſcoꝛnfully to abaſe the other? What meant you ſo vainly to ſay, that Kings and Emperours haue their authority by the poſitiue Law of Nations: and Popes haue their authority by the Supernaturall grace of God? Touching the Princes power, we are certainly aſſured by Gods holy Word, it is from God. As foꝛ the Popes Infinite and Vniuerſal power thoꝛowout the whole Scriptures, from the Geneſis vnto the Apocalyps, vnleſſe it be the power of Darkeneſſe, ye can find nothing.

Herueus de poteſt. Pa. cap. 18.

Yée ſay, Kings haue euermore beene Anointed and Bleſſed by Biſhops. This is another foule Vntruth. Foꝛ you might eaſily haue knowne, that Chriſtian Kings in old times were neuer Anointed. Your own Doctour ſaith: In Nouo Teſtamento non legimus quod Sacerdotes debeant inungere Reges: nec etiã nunc obſeruatur in omnibus Regibus Chriſtianis: vt patet in Regibus Hiſpaniæ: Wee read not in the New Teſtament, that Prieſts or Biſhops ought to Anoint Kings. Neither is that order at this day vſed amongſt all Kings that be Chriſtened: as it appeareth by the Kings of Spaine. Foꝛ they are not Anointed. Againe ye ſay, and that ye bring in as a ſpecial good argumẽt of your ſide, The Emperor kneeleth to the Prieſt for Abſolution: Ergo, The Emperour is not the Head of the Church. How may a man anſwer ſuch follies better then with the like folly. The Pope himſelfe by your owne Decrees, is bound to Confeſſe his Sinnes, and kneeleth downe to a Simple Prieſt for Abſolution. Foꝛ your Canoniſts ſay: Papa tenetur confiteri peccata ſua vni Sacerdoti: Et Simplex Sacerdos poteſt illum ligare & abſoluere: The Pope is bound to confeſſe his Sinnes to ſome one Prieſt: and a Simple Prieſt may both Binde him and Abſolue him. Ergo, by your owne Concluſion, The Pope is not Head of the Church. Such a handſome Pꝛoctour the Pope hath gotten to pꝛomote his Cauſe.

With ſuch pꝛety ſtuffe, M. Harding, ye thinke to ouerrun and to conquer the Woꝛld.

The Apologie, Chap. 15. Diuiſion. 2.

Wheꝛefoꝛe, if it were lawful foꝛ them to do thus, being but Ciuil Magiſtrates, and hauing the chiefe Rule of Common Weales, what offence haue our Princes at this day committed, that they being in the like degree, may not haue leaue to do the like? Oꝛ what eſpecial gift of Learning, oꝛ of Judgement, oꝛ of Holineſſe haue theſe men now, that they, contrary to the cuſtome of al the Ancient and Catholike Biſhops, who vſed to confer with Princes and Peeres, concerning Religion, do now thus reiect reiect and caſt off Chriſtian Princes from knowing of the cauſe, and from their meetings?

M. Harding.

We anſwer, It was * neuer lawful in any Temporal Prince, to iudge in Cauſes of Religion. Neither did any Prince before this time euer vſe it.

* Vntruth, as it may eaſily appeare by that hath beene ſaid before.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This is another of your Abſolute Truths, M. Harding. For anſwer whereof, it may pleaſe you indifferently to weigh that I haue written a little before touching the ſame. Part. 6. Ca. 14. Diuiſ. 4. & 5.

The Apologie, Chap. 15. Diuiſion. 3.

Wel, thus doing, they wiſely and warily prouide for themſelues, and for their Kingdome, which otherwiſe they ſee is like ſhortly to come to naught. For if ſo be, they, whom God hath placed in greateſt Dignity, did ſee & perceiue theſe mens practiſes, how Chriſts Commandements be deſpiſed by them, how the Light of the Goſpell is darkened, & quenched out by them, and how themſelues alſo be ſubtlely beguiled and mocked, and vnawares be deluded by them, and the way to the Kingdome of Heauen ſtopped vp before them; no doubt they would neuer ſo quietly ſuffer themſelues, neither to be diſdained after ſuch a proud ſort, nor ſo deſpightfully to be ſcorned and abuſed by them. But now through their owne lacke of vnderſtanding, and through their owne blindneſſe, theſe men haue them faſt yoked, and in their danger.

Affiance in Darkneſſe.

M. Harding.

Biſhops (a) cannot vphold their Kingdome by wrong doing. (b) That is the way to pul them downe. Therefore we are wel aſſured, that your Schiſmatical Superintendentſhip cannot ſtand, though al the power of the world were bent to hold it vp. Your wicked ſtate is not planted of God, and therefore it ſhal be rooted out. It is God that ruleth: It is God that ſetteth vp, and putteth downe. This ſtate of Chriſts Church hath cõtinued, & the ſucceſſor of Peter hath gouerned it; whereas the greſidleſſe building of al the Hereticks, frõ Simon Magus downward, to this day hath failed. Luther is rotten, and his new found Religiõ decaied, and the Pope ſitteth in Peters Chaire, & ſo ſhal his ſucceſſors to the end.

Ye would men to beleeue, that Emperors & Kings are deceiued by the Popes & Biſhops. But I pray you, what is the cauſe that Princes cannot eſpy theſe deceits (if any ſuch were) as wel as ye? If themſelues lack your knowledge, yet haue they wiſe mẽ about them, who for their duries ſake, & their allegeance to them, would ſoone aduertiſe them, how by the Biſhops they be ſubtilly beguiled & mocked.

(a) Otherwiſe it were not the Kingdome of Darkneſſe.

(b) When they bee once eſpied: and not before.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

Of the maintenance of your Kingdome, M. Harding, Chriſt ſaid vnto certaine of your Forefathers: Hoc eſt tempus veſtrum, & Poteſtas Tenebrarum: This is your time, and the Power of Darkneſſe. Blinde they are, and the Guides of the Blinde. If the Blinde lead the Blinde, they will both fall into the ditch. The Lion, or wild Bull, be they neuer ſo cruell or great of courage, yet if yée may once cloſely couer their eies, yée may eaſily lead them whither yée liſt, without reſiſtance. Euen ſo doth the Pope hoodwinke and blindfold the Princes of the World, and hold them in Ignorance: which done, hée maketh them to hold his Stirrup, to lead his Horſe, to knéele downe, and to kiſſe his Shooe, and to attend vpon him at his pleaſure. But if they knew either him, or themſelues, they would not doe it. Luke 22. Mat. 15.

S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, as it is noted before: Hæretici Sacerdotes claudunt Ianuas Veritatis. Sciunt enim, ſi manifeſtata eſſet Veritas, quòd ipſorum Eccleſia eſſet relinquenda: & ipſi de Sacerdotali Dignitate ad Humilitatem venirent popularem: Hereticall Biſhops ſhut vp the gates of the Truth. For they know, that if the Truth be once laid open, their Church ſhall be forſaken: and they, from their Pontificall Dignity, ſhall bee brought downe to the baſeneſſe of the people. Chryſoſt. in Opere imperfect. Homil. 44.

Petrus Ferrarienſis, in conſideration hereof, complaineth thus: O miſeros Imperatores, & Sæculares Principes, qui hæc & alia ſuſtinetis, & vos ſeruos Eccleſiæ facitis: Et Mundum per eos infinitis modis vſurpari videtis: nec de remedio cogitatis: Quia prudentiæ & ſapientiæ non intenditis: Alas, miſerable are yee, the Emperours and Princes of the World, that abide theſe and other like things (at the Popes hands) and make your ſelues ſlaues vnto their Church. Yee ſee the world is by innumerable waies miſerably abuſed by them: Pet. Ferrarien. Citatur ab Illyrico, inter Teſtes Veritatis.

yet yee neuer bethinke your ſelues of any remedie, becauſe yee apply not your mindes to wiſdome and knowledge.

Hier. in Eſaiã. Lib. 9. 30.

S. Hierome ſaith: Vt ſagittent in obſcuro rectos corde. Iſti tantam ſibi aſſumunt Authoritatem, vt ſiue Dextra doceant, ſeu Siniſtra, id eſt, ſiue bona, ſiue mala, nolint Diſcipulos ratione diſcutere, ſed ſe Præceſſores ſequi. Tunc hi, qui priùs decipiebant, nequaquam vltrà ad eos valebunt accedere, poſtquam ſe ſenſerint intellectos: To ſtrike in the darke thē that be ſimple of heart, theſe men challenge vnto themſelues ſuch Authority, that whether they teach with the Right hand, or with the Left, that is to ſay, whether they teach good things, or bad, they will not haue their Diſciples, or Hearers, with reaſon to examine their ſayings, but onely to follow them, being their Leaders. For then they which before deceiued the people, can no more come vnto them, after they once perceiue they be eſpied.

The Apology, Chap. 16. Diuiſion 1.

VErily we for our parts, as we haue ſaid, haue done nothing in altering Religion, vpon either Raſhneſſe, or Arrogancy: nor nothing, but with good leaſure, and great conſideration. Neither had we euer intended to doe it, except both the manifeſt & moſt aſſured Wil of God, opened to vs in his Holy Scriptures, and the regard of our own Saluation, had euen conſtrained vs thereunto. For though we haue departed frō that Church, which theſe men call Catholike, & by that meanes get vs enuy amongſt thē that want ſkil to iudge, yet is this enough for vs, & it ought to be enough for euery wiſe & good man, and one that maketh account of euerlaſting Life, that we haue gone from that Church which hath power to err: which Chriſt who cannot erre, told ſo long before, it ſhould err: & which we our ſelues did euidently ſee with our eies, to haue gone frō the Old Holy Fathers, & from the Apoſtles, & from Chriſt himſelfe, and from the Primitiue & Catholike Church of God: & we are come, as neere as we poſſibly could, to the Church of the Apoſtles, & of the Old Catholike Biſhops & Fathers: which Church, we know, was ſound & perfect, &, as Tertullian termeth it, a Pure Virgin, ſpotted as then with no Idolatry, nor with any foule or ſhameful fault: and haue directed, according to their Cuſtomes and Ordinances, not only our Doctrine, but alſo the Sacraments, and the forme of Common Praier.

M. Harding.

Ye haue treated thereof after your accuſtomed maner, that is to ſay, with all Vntruth and Lies.

Ye come in with many gay words: whereto with guilty conſcience inwardly ye ſay, yea, thereto with lying tongue outwardly, doe ye not ſay, nay?

This generation of looſe Apoſtates, inceſtuous Vow-breakers, Sacrilegious Church-robbers, deſpiſers of all Holineſſe, breakers of the dead mens Willes, ouerthrowers of al ancient order & diſcipline.

If it be ſo, where be your Signes? Where be your Miracles? Where bee the examples of your rare Vertue and Holineſſe.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

The reſt of your ſpēch we will paſſe ouer, as talke of courſe. Touching your curious demand of Signes and Miracles, Pope Leo may anſwer you. For whereas certaine of your Forefathers in old times ſaid, if hee be the King of Iſrael, let him come downe from the Croſſe, and we will beleeue: Pope Leo ſaith thus vnto them: Non erat veſtræ Cœcitatis arbitrio, ſtulti Scribæ, & impij Sacerdotes, oſtendenda potentia Saluatoris: Ye fooliſh Scribes, and wicked Prieſts, the Power of our Sauiour was not to be ſhewed at the diſcretion of your Blindneſſe. God ſheweth his Miracles when, and where, and to whom he will.

Matthæ. 27. Leo in Serm. de Paſſione Dom.

S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: In fine temporis concedenda eſt poteſtas Diabolo, vt faciat Signa vtilia: vt iam Miniſtros Chriſti non per hoc cognoſcamus, quia vtilia faciunt Signa, ſed quia omninò hæc Signa non faciunt: In the end of time, Power ſhalbe giuen to the Diuel, to worke profitable Signes, and Miracles: So that then we cannot know the Miniſters of Chriſt by that they worke profitable Miracles, but by that they worke no Miracles at all.

Chryſ. in Matthæ, Hom. 49.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: Non dicat, Idcò verum eſt, quia illa vel illa mirabilia fecit, vel iſte, vel ille: aut quia homines ad memorias mortuorum noſtrorum orant, & exaudiuntur: aut quia illa vel illa ibi contingunt, &c. Remoueantur iſta, vel Figmenta mendacium hominum, vel portenta fallacium Spirituum: Let no man ſay, Therefore it is true for that this man, or that man, hath wrought this or that Miracle: for that men make their Praiers at the

Tombes

Tombes of our dead, and obteine their desires: or for that these or these Miracles be wrought there, &c. Away with these things: They may be either the Iuglings and Mockeries of deceitfull men, or else Illusions of lying Spirits. The Patterne of Faith.

Againe, S. Chrysostome saith: Per Signa cognoscebatur, qui essent Veri Christiani qui Falsi. Nunc autem signorum operatio omninò leuata est: Magis autem inuenitur apud eos qui falsi sunt Christiani: In old times it was knowen by Miracles, who were the True Christians and who the False. But now the working of Miracles is taken quite away, and is rather found among them that be false Christians. Chrys. in Matthæ. Hom. 49.

Therefore S. Augustine saith: Contra illos Mirabiliarios cautum me fecit Deus meus, dicendo, In nouissimis diebus exurgent Pseudoprophetæ, facientes Signa & Portenta, vt inducant in errorem, si fieri possit, etiam Electos: Against these Mongers of Miracles, my God hath armed me, saying, In the latter daies there shall rise vp false Prophets, working Signes and wonders, to deceiue the Elect of God, if it be possible. Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 13. Matthæ. 24.

Neither is the Gospell of Christ preached this day vtterly without Miracles. The Blinde see: The Dumbe speake: Your Idols are fallen: Your Great Babylon is come to ground. These, M. Harding, if you haue eies to see them, are no small Miracles. S. Chrysostome saith: The Conuersion of the world is a Miracle. S. Augustine saith: Modò Caro Cœca non aperit oculos Miraculo Domini: Et Cor Cæcum aperit oculos Sermone Domini: Now adaies the Blinde Flesh openeth not her eies by the Miracle of our Lord: But the Blind Heart openeth his eies at the Word of our Lord. And againe: Modò Aures Corporis surdæ non aperiuntur: Sed quàm multi habent clausas Aures Cordis, quæ tamen, Verbo Dei penetrante, patescant. Now adaies the deafe Eares of the Body be not opened: Yet many there are that haue the Eares of their heart shut vp; which Eares notwithstanding are opened by entring of the Word of God. Chrysost. in 1. Cor. Hom. 6. Aug. de verbis Domin. secund. Mat. Ser. 18. Eodem loco.

Therefore we may rightly say to you with other words of S. Augustine: Quisquis adhuc Prodigia, vt credat, inquirit, magnum est ipse Prodigium: qui, mundo credente, non credit: Whosoeuer yet requireth Miracles, to bring him to the Faith, is himselfe a great Miracle, that, the world beleeuing, remaineth still in vnbeleefe. Aug. de Ciuit. Dei, lib. 22. c. 8.

Whereas the Pharisees said of Christ, Let him now come downe from the Crosse, and we will beleeue him; S. Hierome saith vnto them, Etiamsi de Cruce descenderit, similiter non credideretis: Yea although he should come downe from the Crosse, yet would ye not beleeue him. Hieronymus in Matt. 27.

But it were a woe to behold the glorious countenance of your Miracles, M. Harding. Your Crosses can speake: your Idols can goe: your Images can light their owne Lamps: your Holy Water is able to calme the Sea, to chase away Mise, and to make barren women to conceiue. If you doubt hereof, conferre with M. Cope, one of your owne Louanian company, or with that worthy Prelate the Bishop of Verona, your Holie Father Lipomanus. I am ashamed to remember the things that you are not ashamed, euen now in these daies, to publish in writing. Howbeit, such Religion, such Miracles. S. Hierome saith: Mendacium Antichristi Christi Veritas deuorabit: The Truth of Christ shall deuoure and consume the Falshood of Antichrist. Copus Dial. 1. Pag. 18. Hieronymus ad Algasiam.

The Apology, Chap. 16. Diuision 2.

And, as we know both Christ himselfe, & all good men heertofore haue done, we haue called home againe to the Originall and first Foundation, that Religion which hath been foulely neglected, & vtterly corrupted by these men. For we thought it meet, thence to take the Patterne of reforming Religion, from whence the ground of Religion was first taken; because this one reason, as saith the most ancient Father Tertullian, hath great force against all Heresies: Looke whatsoeuer was first, that is true: and whatsoeuer is latter, that is corrupt. Irenæus oftentimes appealed to the Oldest Churches, which had bin neerest to Christs time, & which it was hard to beleeue had been in error. But why at this day is not the same cõmon regard and consideration had? Why returne we not to the Patterne of the Old Churches? Why may we not heare at this time amongst vs, the same saying which was openly pronounced in times past in the Councel at Nice, by so many Bishops and Catholike Fathers, and no body once speaking against it: τὰ ἀρχαῖα κρατείτω: Hold still the Old Customes.

M. Harding.

Ye say much in your own commendation, but lies be no proofes. Ye haue not called Religion home againe to the Originall and first Foundation, as ye say: but ye haue quite ouerthrowen all true Religion

(a) Heere followed ſomewhat touching the Sacrament, and Sacrifice, which matters are otherwhere anſwered more at large.

(b) Irenæus neuer knew the diſorders and deformities that now are in the Church of Rome.

(c) Vntruth. For as now, it is all vnfaithfully peruerted.

(d) Vntruth, manifeſt, and apparent to all the world.

ligion from the Foundation. As for your Apiſh noueltie, ye haue taken the patterne therof frõ Satan Author of diuiſion, the ancient enemie of Chriſt, & of his true Religion. We admit the ſaying of Tertullian (though it be not altogether as ye allege it) that this reaſõ hath great force againſt al Hereſies: Whatſoeuer was firſt, that is true: Whatſoeuer is latter, that is corrupt. Of the bleſſed Sacrament Chriſt ſaid firſt, &c. (a) Contra Prax. eam.

Ye would ſeeme to be faine, that we followed the aduice of Irenæus. We are content with all our hearts. And with Irenæus we appeale to that Tradition which is from the Apoſtles, which (as he ſaith) is kept in the Churches by Prieſts that ſucceeded thẽ. With Irenæus, leauing other Churches, whoſe ſucceſſions of Biſhops it were a long worke to rehearſe, we require to haue recourſe, for triall of our Faith to the Traditiõ of Doctrine of the Roman Church, which he termeth, Greateſt, Oldeſt, beſt known to all, founded & ſet vp by the two moſt glorious Apoſtles, Peter and Paul. We appeale to the Faith of that Church, taught abroad in the world, and by ſucceſſions of Biſhops brought downe vnto vs. For to this Church, (b) ſaith Irenæus, muſt all the Church of Chriſt repaire, whereſoeuer it be, for that it is the chiefe of al, & for that the Tradition of the true Doctrine, which the Apoſtles left behind them, (c) is there faithfully kept. Wherefore if ye would, after the counſell of Irenæus, reſort to Rome for deciſion of the Controuerſies that be betwixt you and vs, and would them to be tried by that ſenſe of Doctrine, (d) which hath continued by ſucceſſions of Biſhops euen from Peter to Pius the Fourth, now Pope, & would ſtand to the Authority of that See Apoſtolike, all ſtrife were ended, we ſhould be at accord. But we haue little hope ye will follow this Godly Counſell of S. Irenæus, that bleſſed Martyr, whoſe body your brethren, the Huguenots of France, villanouſly burned at Lyons, Anno Do. 1562. after it had reſted there thirteene hundred yeeres, and more. *Lib. 3. The Preeminence that Irenæus giueth to the Church of Rome, ſtandeth in Conſent, and Vnity, and Agreement of Doctrine; not in Superiority, or Gouernment ouer all the World. For proofe whereof, ye may vnderſtand that Irenæus in the ſame place likewiſe ſpecially noteth the Church of Smyrna, planted by Polycarpus; and the Church of Epheſus, planted by S. Iohn; and generally ſundrie other great Churches, planted by men of Apoſtolicall Dignity: vnto which he willeth vs in like maner to repaire: and not only to the Church of Rome. The Emperour Theodoſius willeth his Subiects to conforme themſelues in Doctrine, not only to the Roman Biſhop, but alſo, either to Nectarius the Biſhop of Conſtantinople: or to Timotheus the Biſhop of Alexandria: or to Pelagius the Biſhop of Laodicea: or to Diodorus the Biſhop of Tharſus: or to Amphilochius the Biſhop of Iconium: or to Optimus the Biſhop of Antioch: or to Helladius the Biſhop of Cæſarea: or to Otreius the Biſhop of Melite: or to Gregorius the Biſhop of Nice: or to Terennius the Biſhop of Scythia: or to Marmarius the Biſſiop of Martianopolis. Vnto all and euery of theſe notable great Churches, the Emperour willeth all other inferiour Churches to repaire.

Tertul. contra Marcion. lib. 4.

So ſaith Tertullian: Videamus quod lac à Paulo Corinthij hauſerint: ad quam Regulam Galathæ ſint recocti: quid legant Philippenſes, Theſſalonicenſes, Epheſij: quid etiam Romani de proximo ſonent, quibus Euangelium Petrus & Paulus, ſanguine quoque ſuo ſignatum, reliquerunt: Let vs ſee what milke the Corinthians ſucke of S. Paul: after what Patterne the Galathians were reformed: what the Philippians reade, what the Theſſalonians, what the Epheſians: what ſound the Romans giue, that are ſo neere vs, vnto whom Peter and Paul haue left the Goſpell, ſealed and confirmed with their Blood. In like ſort writeth Nazian. Epiſt. 18.

Gregory Nazianzene of the Church of Cæſarea: Cuiuſlibet Eccleſiæ, tanquam Corporis Chriſti, habenda eſt ratio; maximè verò noſtræ (Cæſarienſis) quę & ab initio fuit, & nunc eſt, Mater propè omnium Eccleſiarum: Eam Chriſtiana Reſpublica, velut Centrum ſuum Circulus, vndique obſeruat, non ſolùm propter Orthodoxam Doctrinam vbique ab initio prædicatam, ſed etiam propter conſpicuam Concordiæ Gratiam, quem diuinitus accepit: We muſt make great account of all Churches, euen as of the Body of Chriſt; but ſpecially of this our Church of Cæſarea; for that it hath been from the beginning, and ſtill is in a maner the Mother of all Churches. The whole Chriſtian Common Weale beholdeth this Church of euery ſide, euen as the Circle beholdeth the Center; not only for the Catholike Doctrine that from thence hath been publiſhed euery where, but alſo for the notable Grace of Concord that it hath receiued from aboue.

Thus the Ancient Godly Fathers willed the Faithfull to haue recourſe vnto euery of theſe Churches, of Smyrna, of Epheſus, of Conſtantinople, of Alexandria, of Laodicea, of Tharſus, of Iconium, of Antioch, of Cæſarea, of Melite, of Nice, of Scythia, of Martianopolis, of Corinthus, of Galatia, of Philippi, of Theſſalonica, of Epheſus, and of Rome: not for any ſecret vnremoueable vertue in them conteined, but only, as Irenæus ſaith, faith, for that the Tradition and Doctrine of the Apostles had continued there still without corruption.

Iren. li. 3. ca. 3.

Therefore Tertullian saith; Percurre Ecclesias Apostolicas, apud quas ipsæ adhuc Cathedræ Apostolorum suis locis præsidentur: apud quas ipsæ Authenticæ Literæ eorũ recitantur, sonantes vocem, & repræsentantes faciem vniuscuiusq; Proxima est tibi Achaia: habes Corinthum. Si non longè ps à Macedonia, habes Philippos, habes Thessalonicenses. Si potes in Asiã tendere, habes Ephesum. Si autẽ Italiæ adiaces, habes Romam: vnde nobis quoq; Authoritas præstò est: Run ouer and behold the Apostolike Churches, whereas the Apostles Chaires are yet still continued, and whereas the Authenticall Writings of the Apostles are openly pronounced, sounding ouer the voice, and representing the face of each one of them. The next Countrey to you is Achaia: There haue you the Church of Corinth. If ye be not far from Macedonia, there haue ye the Church of Philippi, and the Church of Thessalonica. If ye may go ouer in Asia, there haue yee the Church of Ephesus. If yee border neere to Italie, there haue yee the Church of Rome, from whence wee also (dwelling in Aphrica) may with speed receiue authority.

Iren. li. 3. ca. 3. In qua semper conseruata est ea quæ est ab Apostolis Traditio.

Tertul. de præscript. contra Hæreticos.

The Patterne of Faith.

Againe, touching the name of a Church Apostolike, whereby ye would euermore seem to vnderstand the Church of Rome, he saith thus: Tot ac tantæ Ecclesiæ, vna est illa ab Apostolis Prima, ex qua omnes. Sic omnes primæ, & omnes Apostolicæ, dum vnam omnes probant vnitatem: These so many, and so great Churches, are all that same one first Church planted by the Apostles, from whence issued all the rest. And so are they all first Churches, and all Apostolike, in that they all follow one Vnity.

Tertul. de præscript. contra Hæreticos.

Thus the Ancient Fathers taught the people to reforme themselues by the Example and Doctrine, not onely of the Church of Rome, but also of all other Notable Apostolik Churches.

Neither were they directed onely by the Authority of Ancient Churches, but also by the Authority of certaine particular worthy men. For resolution in cases of doubt, some sent to S. Augustine: some to S. Hierome: some to the Bishops of France: some to the Bishops of Rome: and some to others. S. Hierome thus writeth vnto S. Augustine: Tu, vt Episcopus in toto orbe notissimus, debes hanc promulgare Sententiam, & in Assensum tuum omnes Coepiscopos trahere: Thou, as the most notable Bishop in all the world, oughtest to publish this Decree, and to draw al thy fellow-Bishops vnto thy Iudgement. Yet was S. Augustine the Bishop of Hippo in Aphrica, not of Rome. Certainly where soeuer any flame of Truth and Learning may appeare, out of what place soeuer it breake forth, men will of themselues willingly and greedily flee vnto it.

Euseb. li. 5. ca. 3.

Aug. Epist. 11.

Damasus the Bishop of Rome wrote vnto S. Hierome in doubtfull Cases, to know his Counsel. S. Hierome himselfe saith: Filius meus Apodemius de Oceani Littore, atq; vltimis Galliarum finibus, Roma prætérita, quæsiuit Bethlehem: My son Apodemius, comming from the shoare of the Ocean Sea, and from the furthest Coast of France, leauing Rome, sought for Bethlehem (where I dwell, to conferre with me.)

Damas. Hier. Hieronym. ad Algasiam.

Thus we see, Godly men, desirous to know the Truth, and to be resolued of their doubts, left the Bishop of Rome, with all his Cardinals, and went eight hundred miles further to seeke Counsel of poore Hierome. Likewise S. Ambrose saith: Post Alexandrinę Ecclesiæ, Episcopi quoq; Romanæ Ecclesiæ Definitionem, per Literas plerìq; meam adhuc expectant Sententiam: After the Resolution of the Church of Alexandria, and also of the Bishop of the Church of Rome, many men yet write Letters vnto me, and would also vnderstand my iudgement. Pope Liberius himselfe writeth thus vnto Athanasius the Bishop of Alexãdria: Si mecũ sentis, quæso subscribas, quò certiores reddamur, num eiusdẽ nobiscũ suffragij sis, eademq; statuas de Vera Fide: vt & ego securior efficiar, tuaq; mãdata indesinenter obeam: If ye be of my Iudgement, then I beseech you to subscribe (your name vnto these Articles) that I may be out of doubt, whether you think as I think, touching the True Faith: and that I may be the better confirmed in my selfe, and may euermore doe your Commandements without delay. Here you see, your Head of the Church offereth himselfe with al his Vniuersall Power, to be at the Commandement of another inferiour Bishop. Bernard being but an Abbat, writeth thus vnto Pope Eugenius: Aiunt, non vos esse Papam, sed me. Et Vndiq; ad me confluunt, qui habent Negotia: They say that I am Pope, and not you: and one euery side, they that haue sutes, come running vnto me.

Ambr. lib. 10. Epist. 83.

Apud. Athan. Tom. 1.

Ber. Epist. 238

Thus were men wont to seeke for Counsel, not onely at Rome, but also whersoeuer it might be found. And therefore was Origen called, Magister Ecclesiarum, The Enformer or Master of the Churches. S. Basil, Canon Fidei, The Ruler of the Faith. Eusebius Samosatensis, Regula Veritatis, The Standard of the Truth. Athanasius, Orbis oculus, The eie of the World. And in doubtfull Cases they were as diligently sought vpon as the Pope.

Hier. in Apol. aduers. Ruffin. Nazianz. ad Simplicium. Nazianz. ad Heronem. Gregor. Li. 12. Ind. 7. ca. 9.

The Paterne of Faith.

Here by the way it were a worthy matter to consider some of the Profound and Learned Resolutions that we haue receiued from the See of Rome. Augustine the Italian Monke, whom some haue called the Apostle of England, demanded of Pope Gregorie, by way of great counsell whether a Woman with Childe might be Baptized, or no: and how long afterward it might be lawfull for her to come to the Church.

Inter Decret. Zachariæ.

Bonifacius the Apostle of Germany, demanded the like questions of Pope Zachary, whether Iaies, Dawes, Storks, Beauers, Otters, Hares, and Wilde Horses, be mans meat, or no: What order were to be taken with Man, or Horse, hauing the falling sickneſſe: At what time of the yeere it may be lawfull, or wholesome, for folkes to eat Bacon: and, if a man list to eat it Raw, how old it ought to bee before he eat it: What may bee done, if a Priest haue a blacke in his eie: Who may hallow oile: Who may weare the Pall: At what time, in what place, in what sort, ouer or vnder, openly or secretly, it may be lawfull to weare it.

Inter Decret. Alexandr. 3. Part. 30. ca. 2. Simaculam in oculo.

Inter Decret. Gregor. 2. ad Bonifacium.

To these, and other like doubtfull and profound questions, the Pope hath giuen out his Answers, and that in such graue and solemne sort, as if no other creature vnder Heauen, besides his Holinesse, were able to vnderstand such high Mysteries.

Aug. de Ciu. l. 20. c. 26. Viues.

There fell out sometime an Odious quarrel betweene the Thomists and Scotists, whether the Blessed Virgin were conceiued in sinne, or no. The one side said, Yea: the other cried, Nay. There were learned men of both sides: Parties grew: The Schooles were inflamed: The World was troubled: No Conference, no Doctor, no Councel, was able to quiet the matter, and to make them friends. The Scotists alleged for themselues the Councell of Basil: The Thomists cried out, the Councel of Basil was disorderly summoned, and therefore vnlawfull. In the midst of this heat, Pope Sixtus toke vpon him to be Iudge betweene them, and to determine the bottome of the cause. In conclusion, when all the World looked to be resolued, and satisfied in the question, the Pope commanded both the Thomists and the Scotists to depart home, and to dispute no more of the matter, but to let all alone: and so left them as doubtfull as he found them. This was a Resolution for a Pope.

Ioh. Calvin. de Reliquijs.

A great contention fell out betweene them of Ratispone in Germany and the Abby of S. Dennis in France, whether of them had the whole Body of S. Dennis: for that either part said, and bare the world in hand, they had the whole. To Rome they went: The Pope sate sadly in Iudgement, and examined their Allegations, & grew to conclusion: and in the end gaue his aduised and definitiue Sentence that either part, as well they of France, as also the others of Germany, had the whole Body of S. Denis: and that whosoeuer would say nay, should be an Heretike. Of such substance and certainty are the Oracles of your See of Rome.

Nic. Cusan. ad Boham. epist. 2.

Some of your friends haue said: Veritas per Christum Cathedræ alligata est, non personis: Christ hath fastened his Truth, not to the Popes persons, but to his Chaire. Meaning therby that the Pope, whatsoeuer he decree or say, sitting in S. Peters Chaire, cannot erre. And thus by this Doctors Iudgement, we are taught to giue credit rather to the Popes Chaire, then to the Pope.

Ex. Ir. 5. c. 23. Cyprian. ad Pompeium. Inter Epistol. Aug. Epist. 91. Eraſm. Ambr. de Sacr. lib. 3. cap. 1.

Yet neuertheleſſe the same Irenæus, whom yee haue here alleged, openly reproued Pope Victor: and S. Cyprian likewise reproued Pope Steuen; for that they thought, notwithstanding their Chaire, they were in error. Eraſmus speaking of the Answer of Pope Innocentius vnto the Councel of Carthage saith thus: In hac Epistola, & Dictionem, & Ingenium, & Eruditionem, tali Præsule dignam, cogimur desiderare: In this Epistle we misse both Eloquence, and Wit, and Learning, meete for such a Prelate. S. Ambrose saith: In omnibus cupio sequi Ecclesiam Romanam: Sed tamen & nos Homines sensum habemus. Ideò quod alibi rectiùs seruatur, & nos rectè custodimus: I desire in all things to follow the Church of Rome. Howbeit, we our selues, for that we be men, haue vnderstanding and Iudgement too. Therefore whatsoeuer is better kept in other places, we do wel to keepe the same.

Arnulph. in Con. Remen.

But touching the State of Rome that now is, Arnulphus said openly in the Councell of Remes: Cùm hoc tempore Romæ nullus sit, vt fama est, qui Sacras Literas didicerit, qua fronte aliquis illorũ docere audebit, quòd non didicerit? Forasmuch as now adaies, as it is reported, there is none in Rome (neither Pope, nor Cardinal) that hath Learned the Scriptures, with what face dareth any of them to teach vs that thing that he himselfe neuer learned.

Hiero. in Osee Lib. 1. Cap. 4.

It is not sufficient to say, The Pope sitteth in Peters Chaire. As Antichrist may sit in place of Christ, so may Iudas sit in the place of Peter. S. Hierõe saith: Bethel, quæ priùs vocabatur Domus Dei, postquã Vituli in ea positi sunt, appellata est Bethauen, id est, Domus inutilis, & Domus Idoli: Bethel, that before was called the House of God, after that Hieroboams Hieroboams golden Calues were set vp in it, was called Bethauen, that is to say, a House vnprofitable, and the House of an Idol. And what marueil is it if the like haue happened to the Church of Rome.

The Paterne of Faith.

Therfore we thinke it better to examine and try the grounds of your Religion by the Word of God, that is one, and vniforme, and endureth for euer, then by your touch of Rome, that is so vncertaine, and so mutable, and so often hath deceiued vs. S. Cyprian saith: Si ad Diuinæ Traditionis Caput & Originem reuertamur, cessat error humanus: If we returne to the Head and Originall of the heauenly Tradition (which is the Word of God) all humane error gineth place. Cyprian ad Pompeium.

Touching the rest of your needlesse talke, our Brethren in France, whom in your pleasant maner ye call Huguenotes, burnt not the Body of Irenæus. They knew hee was a Blessed Martyr of God: and his Body sometime the Temple of the Holie Ghost. Without any reproach or villanie, either done or meant to that Holy Father, if they burnt any thing which also may well be doubted, they burnt onely an Idoll, that you had so vnreuerently set vp against the Glorie of God. Chrysostome saith: Ioseph moriens, ait, Ossa mea efferetis hinc vobiscum, ne Ægyptij memores beneficiorum eius, Corpus iusti haberent in occasionem Impietatis: Ioseph lying in his death bead, said vnto his Children, and Nephews, ye shall carrie my bones with you forth out of Ægypt: Lest the Ægyptians remembring the good things he had done, should vse that good mans Body to an occasion of Wickednesse or Idolatry. Chrysost. in Gen. hom. 67.

So saith S. Augustine: Nemo conscius erat sepulchri Mosis, ne populus, si cognouisset vbi esset, adoraret: No man was made priuie to Moses Graue: lest, if the people had known where his Body had beene, they should adore it. Aug. de mirabili, Sacr. Scri. li. 1. ca. vltimo.

Your obiection of the Sacrifice is otherwhere answered more at large. S. Augustine saith: Nunc manibus non offerimus Carnem, sed corde & ore offerimus laudem: Now we offer not vp flesh with our hands, but with heart and mouth we offer praise. Againe he saith: Intùs habeo Sacrificium, quo flectam Deum meum: Within my selfe I haue a Sacrifice, wherewith I may pacifie my God. In the Former Reply. Art. 17. Aug. contra Iudæos, cap. 9. August. in Psalm. 41.

The Apologie, Chap. 17. Diuision 1. & 2.

WHen Esdras went about to repaire the ruins of the Temple of God he sent not to Ephesus, although the most beautifull & gorgeous Temple of Diana were there: & when he purposed to restore the Sacrifices and Ceremonies of God, he sent not to Rome, although peraduenture he had heard that there were the solemne Sacrifices called Hecatombæ, & other called Solitorilia, Lectisternia, and Supplicationes, and Numa Pompilius Ceremoniall Bookes, or Manuals, or Portueses, containing the seruice of their Gods. He thought it enough for him, to set before his eies, and follow the patterne of the Old Temple, which Salomon at the beginning builded, according as God hath appointed him, and also those Old Customes and Ceremonies which God himselfe had written out by speciall words for Moses.

The Prophet Aggæus, after the Temple was repaired again by Esdras, and the people might think, they had a very iust cause to reioice on their own behalfe, for so great a benefit receiued of Almighty God, yet made he them all burst out into teares, because that they which were yet aliue, & had seen the former building of the Temple before the Babylonians destroied it, called to minde, how far off it was yet from that beauty & excellency which it had in the old times past before. For thē indeed would they haue thought the Temple worthily repaired, if it had answered to the ancient Pattern, & to the Maiesty of the first Temple. S. Paul, because he would amend the abuse of the Lords Supper which the Corinthiās euen then begun to corrupt, he set before them Christs Institution to follow, saying: I haue deliuered vnto you that thing that I first receiued of the Lord. And when Christ confuted the error of the Pharisеis, ye must, saith hee, returne to the first beginning: for from the beginning it was not thus. And when he found great fault with the Priests for their vncleannes of life, & couetousnesse toulneſſe, & would cleanſe the Temple from all euill abuſes, This houſe, ſaith he, at the firſt beginning it was a houſe of Praier, wherein al the people might deuoutly and ſincerely pray together. And ſo it were your part to vſe it now alſo at this day. For it was not builded to the end it ſhould be a den of Theeues. Likewiſe alſo the good & commẽdable Princes mentioned of in the Scriptures, were praiſed ſpecially by theſe words that they had walked in the waies of their Father Dauid: that is, becauſe they had returned to the Firſt & Original Foundation, and had reſtored the Religion euen to the perfection wherein Dauid left it. And therfore when we likewiſe ſaw, that all things were quite troden vnder foot by theſe men, and that nothing remained in the Temple of God, but pittiful ſpoiles, and decaies, we reckoned it the wiſeſt & the ſafeſt way, to ſet before our eies thoſe Churches, which we know for a ſurety that they neuer had erred: yet neuer had neither Priuate Maſſe, nor Praiers in a ſtrange & Barbarous language, nor this corruption of Sacraments, and other toies.

And forſomuch as our deſire was to haue the Tẽple of the Lord reſtored anew, we would ſeek none other Foundation, then the ſame which we knew was long ago laid by the Apoſtles, that is to wit, Our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt. And forſomuch as we heard God himſelfe ſpeaking vnto vs in his Word, and ſaw alſo the notable examples of the Old and Primitiue Church: again, how vncertaine a matter it was to wait for a Generall Councel, & that the ſucceſſe therof would be much more vncertaine: but ſpecially, forſomuch as we were moſt aſcertained of Gods wil, & therefore coũted it a wickednes to be too careful, & ouercombred about the iudgements of mortal Men, we could no longer ſtand taking aduiſe with fleſh & blood, but rather thought good to doe the ſame thing that both might rightly be done, & hath many a time bin done, alwel of other good men as alſo of many Catholik BB. that is, to remedy our own Churches by a Prouincial Synod. For thus we know, the Old Fathers vſed to put matters in experience, before they came to the Publik Vniuerſal Coũcel. Ther remain yet at this day ſundry Canons, written in Councels of free Cities, as of Carthage vnder Cypriã, as of Ancyra, Neocæſarea, & Gangra, which is in Paphlagonia, as ſome think, before that the name of the General Councel at Nice was euer heard of. After this faſhiõ in Old time did they ſpeedily meet with & cut ſhort thoſe Heretiks the Pelagians, and the Donatiſts at home, by priuate diſputation, without any General Councel. Thus alſo when the Emperor Cõſtantinus euidently & earneſtly took part with Auxentius the Biſhop of the Arians faction, Ambroſe the Biſhop of the Chriſtians, appealed not vnto a General Councel, where he ſaw no good could be done, by reaſon of the Emperors might and great labor: but only to his own Clergy and people, that is to ſay, to a Prouinciall Synod. And thus it was decreed in the Coũcel at Nice, that the Biſhops ſhould aſſẽble twice euery yeere. And in the Councell at Carthage it was decreed that the Biſhops ſhould meet together in each of their Prouinces, at leaſt once in the yeer: which was done, as ſaith the Councel of Chalcedon, of purpoſe, that if any Errors or Abuſes had hapned to ſpring vp any where, they might immediately at the firſt entrie be deſtroied, euen where they firſt began. So likewiſe when Secundus & Palladius reiected the Councel of Aquileia, becauſe it was not a General & Commõ Councel, S. Ambroſe Biſhop of Millain, made anſwer, that no man ought to take it for a new or ſtrãge matter that the BB. of the Weſt Part of the World did call together Synods, & make Priuat Aſſẽblies in their Prouinces, for that it was a thing before that time not ſeldom vſed by the Biſhops of the Weſt Church & by the Biſhops of Græcia vſed oftentimes, & commonly to be done. And ſo

Charles

Charles the great, being Emperour held a Prouinciall Councell in Germany, for putting away Images, contrary to the Second Councell at Nice. Neither pardy euen amongst vs is this so very a strange & a new trade. For wee haue had ere now in England, Prouinciall Synods, and haue gouerned our Churches by home-made Lawes. What should one say more? Of a truth, euen those greatest Councels, & where most Assembly of people euer was, (whereof these men vse to make such an exceeding reckoning) compare them with al the Churches which throwout the world acknowledge & professe the Name of Christ, & what els, I pray you, can they seem to be, but certaine Priuate Councels of Bishops, & Prouinciall Synods? For admit peraduenture Italy, France, Spaine, England, Germany, Denmarke & Scotland meet together: if there want Asia, Græcia, Armenia, Persia, Media, Mesopotamia, Ægypt, Æthiopia, India, and Mauritania, in all which places there be both many Christian men, and also Bishops: how can any man, being in his right mind, thinke such a Councell to be a Generall Councell? And where so many parts of the world do lacke, how can they truly say, they haue the consent of the whole world? Or what maner of Counsell ween you, was the same last of Trident? Or how might it be a Generall Councell, whereas out of all Christian Kingdomes and Nations there came vnto it but only forty Bishops, & of the same, some so cunning that they might be thought meet to be sent home againe, to learne their Grammar, and so wel learned, that they had neuer studied any part of Diuinity?

M. Harding.

Your waiting for a Generall Councell, was not vncertaine. For at the setting forth of your Apologie, it was farre and well entred and almost ended. Whatsoeuer successe thereof should follow, ye ought not to haue refused it, (a) being in all respects lawfull.

(a) Vntruth. For in many respects it was vnlawfull.

Your assurance of Gods will is none. That is but your common by word, as it hath alwaies beene of Heretikes. Ye ought to haue shewed good euidence for your being sure of Gods will, before ye attempted these great and dangerous changes in Religion. Neither becommeth it you to call the determinations of a Generall Councell, the iudgments of mortall men, so much as concerneth declaration of necessary points of Faith, but the prompting and teaching of the Holy Ghost.

As for your Prouinciall Synod, it was none. Synods cannot be kept without Bishops. Before ye claime the name of a Synod for your packing and hudling together, ye must prooue your selues Bishops, which ye are not able to do. Whatsoeuer ye say (b) there were neuer good men, nor Catholike Bishops, that kept Prouinciall Synods, contrary to approoued and lawfull Generall Councels, (c) as your Synod is most contrary. Neither can ye pretend, that ye followed any old Fathers, putting things in experience before the coming to an Vniuersall Councell.

(b) Vntruth, by many examples soone reproued.

(d) Vntruth For our Synod is most agreeable to the old Councels.

Your Councell Prouinciall holden in Germany by Charles the Great, against the second Nicene Councell Generall, (d) is a false forged matter, as the Booke against Images is, which one Eli Phili the man in the Moones sonne, Caluine, Illyricus, and other Heretikes haue fathered vpon that most godly and Catholike Emperour.

(d) A great Vntruth As it may soone appeare.

The Councell which ye meane, was a godly and a Catholike Councell, holden at Franckford by Pope Adrian and Charles the Great, *against the wicked Councell of the Heretikes, named *Image-breakers which they held a little before that at Constantinople, which of those Heretikes was called the seuenth and generall of the Catholikes Pseudosynodus, that is to say, the false or forged Councell. Of both these Councels, thus writeth Abbas Vrspergensis so much commended of Melancthon. The Councell which a few yeers before was assembled at Constantinople, in the time of Irene and Constantine her son, of them called the seuenth and Generall, (in this Councell holden at Franckford) was repealed and put away by consent of all, as void and superfluous, so as from thencefoorth it should be named neither the seuenth nor ought else.

*In præfat. ad Duc. Bauariæ.

* Vntruth. For the words be plaine: Pseudosynodus pro adorandis Imaginibus, abdicata est. Ado.

If you beleeue not this as the witnesse of a Catholike Writer, then beleeue Anselmus Rid an earnest professour of your owne the newest Gospel, who writeth that Adrian the Bishop of Rome, & King Charles, at the Councell holden at Franckford, execrated and accursed as Hereticall, the Councell of the Empire of Constantinople and of the Greekes, which they held for the abolishing of Saints Images. Those be his very words; Beleeue Peucerus Philip Melancthons Sonne in law, writing that the Councell of Nice was kept by common consent of the Greeke Emperor & of Charles. If the second Councell of Nice which was altogether for Images, was holden by consent of Charles, how held he a Councell in Germany, for putting away Images, against the Councell of Nice? Beleeue Carion, & specially Pantaleo of Zurich, a man of your owne, the most Euangelicall Religion, who vpon warrant of the authority of Regino, writeth that the Councell of Franckford abrogated and disanuiled the Greekes Councell, that was against the worship of Images. Briefly, how falsly you and sundry other of your sect haue herein belied that worthy Prince Charles the Great, it may easily appeare by that Paulus Æmylius writeth of him. That he sent twelue Bishops out o France to the Councell then holden at Lateran in Rome, in which the Image-breakers false name and forged Councell was abrogated.

*In Catalogo autorum & primum, &c. Lipsiæ impresso anno 1550. In additionibus ad Carion. Pantaleo.

Where, of Generall Councels ye make priuate and prouinciall Synods, ye do besides learning, reason, and custome of the Church. A Councell is not accounted generall, because Bishops of all Countries vnder

(e) By this rule the Councell of Trident was no Generall.

(f) Vntruth, without shame or measure.

(g) Vntruth, manifest. Reade the Records & Subscriptions of the same Councell.

der Heauen be assembled, (e) but because many be assembled, and all be lawfully called. Else in times when Heresies raigne, the Church should neuer haue the necessary remedie of a Generall Councell: for alwaies Heretikes would refuse to come to it, as ye haue, to come to the late Councell at Trident.

In Persia, Media, Ægypt, Mauritania, I weene ye find few Bishops at this day, nor many in the other Countries which ye reckon, and those in maner altogether ignorant and schismatikes. Yet the Patriarkes of Assyria, or Syria Orientalis, and of Armenia, who of late yeeres were at Rome, haue for their Prouinces both subscribed to the Councell of Trent (f) and receiued the whole Decrees of the same for their people.

Your report of forty Bishops onely present at the Councell of Trent, and of their slender learning is as true as your Doctrine contrary to that Councell is, (g) that is to say, in plaine termes, stark false. It is well knowen there were at this late Councell of Trent in this Popes time welneere two hundred Bishops.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

What hope we might conceiue of your Late Chapter of Trident, we were sufficiently warned by the former, holden vnder Pope Paulus 3. and Pope Iulius 3. wherein, notwithstanding your many yeeres study, and great conference of so many, and so learned, and so excellent, and so much adoe, yet in the end, ye were neuer able, neither to suppresse your open Stewes, nor to auoid your Priests Concubines, nor to cause your Bishops to be resident vpon their charge, and to doe their duties, nor to resolue vs, whether the Pope be aboue the Councell, or the Councell aboue the Pope. In the Summon and first entrie of your Assembly there, Pope Paul had forgotten Christ, and left him quite out of Company, and supplied the want of him with the authority, of Peter and Paul, as it is plaine and euident by his Bull. Another of your Reuerend Fathers there, maketh Mary the Blessed Virgin, Equall with Christ, and calleth her, his most Faithfull Fellow: Fidelissimam Christi Sociam. Another of the same Companie telleth vs, that the Pope is the Light, that is come into the World: Papa Lux venit in Mundum. To be short, the whole Issue and Conclusion of all your doings there, by the full agreement of all your Fathers, hangeth vpon the Popes onlie pleasure, as by expresse words vttered in the sixth Session of the same Councell it may appeare. And, by your Doctrine, the Pope may not be controlled, whatsoeuer he doe, neither by the Clergie, nor by all the whole World. And whatsoeuer the Pope shall will to stay or passe, your Doctours tell vs: His only Will must stand for Law.

Hilar. contra Arianos & Auxentium.
Basil. epist. 72.
Σὺνοδον δὲ ἀσεβῶν πῶς ἀποκαλεῖτε, μὴ ἐχόντων ἐπισκόπους αὐτοὺς λέγειν. Κατὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ ἡμᾶς ἀσεβεῖς εἶναι αὐτοὺς ὁμολογεῖτε, ἐπεὶ ἐν αἱρετικοῖς ἡμᾶς πεποιῆσθε ἀσεβεῖς.
Basil. epist. 82.
φεισάμενος τῷ μὴ εἰς ἀκοὰς ἡμῶν ἐλθεῖν, ἀσεβοῦντάς ἡμᾶς, ὡς ἐπισκόπους.

For these and other like causes, both the Emperour Charles 5. and also Francis the French King, besides sundrie other Christian Princes, made open Protestation against your said Tridentine Conuenticle, being then remooued to Bononia, and said, it was no lawfull Generall Councell, but onlie an assemblie of a few certaine persons, to serue one mans affection, and to seeke for gaine. Such is the opinion that your owne Princes haue of your Assemblies.

It becommeth vs not (ye say) to call the determinations of your Generall Councels, the iudgment of mortall men. Yet it became S. Augustine to call the same, Concilia Contendentium Episcoporum: The Councels of quarrelling Bishops.

And againe: Humanarum contentionum animosa & pernicioſa certamina: The bold and hurtfull contentions of worldly quarrels. If it like you not, that your Councels should be called the Iudgments of men, then call them, as S. Augustine doth, The Councels of quarrelling Bishops: or, The hurtful contentiõs of worldly quarrels. But what need we many words? Your owne Panormitane saith: Leges Summorum Pontificum, & Conciliorum appellantur Statuta Humana: & sic stricte non possunt dici ius Diuinum: The Lawes and Determinations of Popes, and Councels, are called the Determinations and Lawes of men, and so in strait maner of speech, they cannot be called the Lawes of God.

Ye say, We are no Bishops, and therefore haue no authority to hold a Synod. Euen so your Fathers in old time said, that S. Paul was no Apostle, and that S Basil and S Hilary were no Bishops. Of S. Paul, it is plaine, therefore he saith in his owne Defense: Am not I an Apostle? Am not I a free man? Haue I not seene the Lord Iesus? S. Hilary saith of himselfe: Auxentius de persona mea calumniatus est, damnatum me à Saturnino, audiri, vt Episcopum non oportere: The Heretike Auxentius laieth a quarrell to my person: and forasmuch as Saturninus the Heretike, hath condemned me, he saith, I may not be heard as a Bishop.

Likewise the Arian Heretikes vsed to say, that S. Basil and other like learned and Catholike Fathers of that time were no Bishops. S. Basil thereof writeth thus: They call the Councell of Catholike Bishops, a Councell of wicked men: neither will they once vouchsafe to name them Bishops, lest they should seem to allow the Decrees, that they haue made against the. And they challenge them to be no Bishops for that, as they say, they are the Captaines of a wicked Heresie. In like sort he writeth vnto Patrophilus, of the Heretike Eustathius: He taketh great heed, lest he should happily be forced to call vs Bishops. Thus, M. Harding, in denying vs vs to bee Bishops, yee doe none otherwise, but as other your Predecessours haue done before you.

Of the Bishops and Prelats of your side, I wil say nothing. What your own friends haue thought of them, I haue said before.

As for vs it shall be sufficient, if we be onely the voice of a Crier in the Wildernesse. Marke 1.
S. Paul to auouch his Apostleship, said openly thus: Gratia Dei sum id quod sum: By the 1. Cor. 15.
Grace of God, I am, that I am.

Councels Generall repealed by Prouinciall.

Ye say, A Prouinciall Councell may not repeale a Councel Generall. As if the authority of your Councels stood onely in number, and not in truth. Howbeit the simple truth of God shall ouerweigh falshood, be it neuer so generall. But euen thus said Auxentius, the Arian Heretike, against S. Hilary. These be his words: Ego quidem, piissimi Imperatores, existimo, non oportere sexcentorum Episcoporum Vnitatem, post tantos labores, ex contentione Paucorum hominum refricari: My most gracious Lords, in my iudgement, it is not meet, after so great paines taken, for the contentious striuing of a few, to hazard the consent & Vnity of Six hundred Bishops. Thus the Heretike Auxentius alleged great multitudes of his cõpanions against S. Hilary, and the Catholikes: which he said, were but a few.

Notwithstanding, it were no hard matter to shew euident examples of General Cõcels, that haue bene ouerruled by Particulars. The Generall Councel of Nice determined as you say, but you say it vntruly, that all appeales, out of all parts of the world, should lie to Rome. Yet the Particular or Prouincial Councel of Aphrica, saith: Si prouocandum putauerint, non prouocent, nisi ad Aphricana Concilia. Ad transmarina autẽ qui putauerit appellandum, a nullo intra Aphricam in Communionem recipiatur: If they Conc. Aphric. cap. 92.
shall thinke it good to appeale, let them not appeale but only to such Councels, as shall bee holden within Aphrica. But whosoeuer shal appeale beyond the Seas (that is to say, to the Bishop of Rome) let no man within Aphrica receiue him to his Communion.

The Generall Councel of Nice durst not to dissolue Priests Mariage: The Particular Councel of Carthage dissolued it vtterly. The order of Priuate or Auricular Confession, which in your fantasie, was receiued generally throughout the whole Church of God, was notwithstanding quite abolished in the Church of Constantinople, only by the particular aduice of Nectarius. Sozo. li. 1. c. 23. Concil. Carthag 2. cap. 2 Soc. lib. 5. ca. 9

Your Blacke Friars, in their Particular Chapters, haue controlled and cut off the Generall Determination of the Councel of Basil, touching the conceiuing of our Lady in Originall sinne. And Albertus Pigghius by his like Particular authority, telleth you, that as well this Councel of Basil, as also the Councel of Constance, being both General (in that they said, The Councel is aboue the Pope) Decreed plainly against Nature, against the manifest Scriptures, against all Antiquity, and against the Catholike Faith of Christ. Aug. de Ciuit. lib. 20. cap. 6. Vines. Albert. Piggh. in Hierarch.

Certainly, the Truth of God is not bound neither to person nor to place. Wheresoeuer it be, either in few or in many, it is euermore Catholike, euen because it is the Truth of God. In the Councel of Constantinople, it is written thus: Definierunt pariter, vt si quid in Prouincia qualibet emergeret, Prouinciæ Concilio finiretur: The Fathers agreed Hist. Trip. lib. 9. cap. 13.
all together, that if any matter should happen to grow in the Prouince, by a Councel of the Prouince it should be ended. Likewise saith Isidorus: Manifestum est, quòd illa, quæ sunt per vnamquanque Prouinciam, ipsius Prouinciæ Synodus dispenset, sicut Niceno constat decretum esse Concilio: It is cleare, that matters happening in euery Prouince, by a Prouincial Synod may be ordered, as it is concluded in the Councel of Nice. Likewise S. Ambrose saith: Sciebant esse consuetudinem, vt in Oriente, Orientalium esset Concilium: Intra Occidentem, Occidentalium: They knew it was a Custome that a Councell of the East Bishops should be holden in the East, and a Councel of the West Bishops should be holden apart in the West. S. Augustine saith: Literas Episcoporum, & per Sermonem fortè Sapientiorum cuiuslibet in ea re peritioris, licet reprehendi, si quid in eis fortè a Veritate deuiatũ est: Bishops Letters, if they swarue any thing from the Truth, may be controlled by the discretion of any other man, that hath more skill in the matter. Ibid. in Præfat. in Concilia. In Concilio Aquileien. Aug. de Baptism. cõtra Do. lib. 2. cap. 3.

In like sort Abbat Panormitane your owne Doctour saith, as it hath bene alleged before: In concernentibus Fidem, etiam dictum Vnius Priuati esset præferendum dicto Papæ, si ille moueretur melioribus rationibus Noui & Veteris Testamẽti: In matters concerning the Faith, the saying of any one Priuate man were to be taken before the saying of the Pope, if he were mooued with better reasons of the Old and New Testament, then the Pope. Extra, de Electi. & Electi potest. Significasti. Abb.

Howbeit we haue not by our Prouincial Councel remoued or shaken the authority of any one Ancient Generall Councell, M. Harding. For of all the Ancient Councels that haue bene, touching the cases that lie betwene vs in controuersie, ye are not yet able to allege one. We haue vpon good causes remoued your Vanities and vnseemly Follies: and haue restored againe, so much as in vs lie, the Decrees and Canons of the Ancient Councels.

Hincmarus Rem. c. 1. 20.

Councell of Frankford.

Councels. Hincmarus the Biſhop of Remes, ſaith thus: Cùm duarum aut trium Prouinciarum Præſules in vnum conueniunt, ſi Antiquorũ Canonum inſtitutione muniti, aliquid prædicationis, aut dogmatis inſtituunt, quod tamen ab Antiquorum Patrum dogmatibus non diſcrepit, Catholicum eſt, quod faciunt: & fortaſſe dici poteſt, Vniuerſale: When the Biſhops of two or three Prouinces meet together, if they by the warrant of the Old Councels appoint any matter of Preaching or doctrine, ſo that it diſagree not from the doctrine of the ancient Fathers, it is Catholike that they doe, and perhaps may be called Vniuerſal. Such are our doings, M. Harding: they agree with the doings of the ancient Fathers, and haue the warrant of the Councels of the Primitiue Church, and therefore they are Catholike.

The credit of the Emperour Charles booke, reporting the Decrees of the Councel of Frankford, touching the Adoration of Images, I leaue wholly to the indifferent diſcretion of the Reader.

It was Printed not at Geneua, as you ſurmiſe, but in Paris. The ſetter out proueth it not to be forged by many good and likely reaſons. An ancient Copy of the ſame is yet ſtill to be ſeene in Rome in Laterane, euen in the Popes owne Library. Auguſtinus Steuchus the Maſter of the ſame Library, reporteth the ſame. The Emperour Ludouicus, Sonne vnto Charles, wrote a Booke yet extant, and remaining in France, to like purpoſe. Eckius alſo beareth witneſſe vnto the ſame Booke of the Emperour Charles, although vntruly and guilefully, as his maner is. For he ſaith that Charles wrote foure Bookes in Defenſe of Images, whereas indeed the Bookes are directly written againſt Images.

Aug. Steuc. de Donat. Conſt. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Ecki. de Imaginibus.

Although ye thinke Eli Phili, or I know not who, may eaſily be charged with corruption and forgery, yet why the Pope himſelfe ſhould corrupt and forge his owne Booke in his owne Library againſt himſelfe, it were hard for you to ſhew good reaſon.

Auentin. fol. 337.

The Councel of Franckford (ye ſay) was Godly and Catholike, and made Decrees againſt Image breakers, in the behalfe of Images. Yet notwithſtanding Auentinus ſaith: In Frankfordienſi Concilio Scita Græcorum, de Adorandis Imaginibus, reſciſſa ſunt: In the Councel of Frankford the Græcians Decrees for the Adoration of Images, were quite aboliſhed.

Regino.

Regino ſaith: Pſeudoſynodus Græcorum, quam pro Adorandis Imaginibus fecerunt, reiecta eſt: The Falſe Councel of the Greekes, which they had made for Adoration of Images, was repealed in the Councel of Frankford.

Ado.

Likewiſe Ado ſaith: Pſeudoſynodus, quam Græci Septimam vocant, pro Adorandis Imaginibus, abdicata eſt penitus: The Falſe Councel, which the Greekes call the ſeuenth, wherein Decrees were made for the Adoratiõ of Images, was there vtterly put away.

Hincmar. c. 20.

Hincmarus the Archbiſhop of Remes, ſpeaking of the ſame Councel of Frankford ſaith thus: Pſeudoſynodus Græcorum deſtructa eſt, & penitus abdicata. De cuius deſtructione, non Modicum Volumen, quod in Palatio adoleſcentulus legi, ab eodẽ Imperatore Romam eſt per quoſdam Epiſcopos miſſum: The Falſe Councel of the Greekes was repealed and vtterly ouerthrowne in the Councel of Frankford. Whereof, when I was a yong man, I read a prety big Booke in the Popes Palace in Rome, which Booke was ſent thither by certain Biſhops from the ſaid Emperor Charles.

Citãtur in libro Carol. Magni.

Certaine words of the ſaid Lewd or Falſe Councel of the Greekes, amongſt others are theſe: Qui timet Deum, Adorat Imagines, vt filium Dei: Qui Adorat Imaginem, dicit, Hoc eſt Chriſtus, non peccat: Peccat qui nõ Adorat Imaginem. Qui non Adorat Imaginẽ, eſt Hæreticus: Imago Adoranda eſt eodem cultu, quo Sancta Trinitas: He that feareth God Adoreth an Image, as he would Adore the Sonne of God: He that Adoreth an Image, and ſaith, This is Chriſt, offendeth not: He offendeth that Adoreth not an Image: He that Adoreth not an Image, is an Heretike: wee muſt Adore an Image with the ſame Reuerence wherewith we Adore the holy Trinity.

Now whether theſe and other like worthy ſayings and ſentences were to be reproued, or no, it may pleaſe you, M. Harding, to conſider.

That Councel (ye ſay) is called General, not whereunto al Chriſtian Nations do reſort indeed, but whereunto al Chriſtian Nations are lawfully ſummoned. As this anſwer is true, and not denied, ſo by the ſame, your late Councel of Trident, may in no wiſe be called General. For what lawfull Summons ſent your Pope Pius either to Peter Gian into Æthiopia: or to other Biſhops and Chriſtians in India or (Europa onely, and that not whole, excepted) what Summons ſent he into any other Kingdome or Country of the World?

But ye ſay, In Perſia, Media, Egypt, Mauritania, & in other Coũtries adioining, there are few Chriſtians at this day to be found. Yet the authors of Nouus Orbis, deſcribing the ſtate of the world ſay thus: In all Countries whitherſoeuer ye come, there be ſome Chriſtians. Againe: In India many Kings and Princes profeſſe Chriſt. And againe: In Armenia and Cilicia, in a maner the whole people is Chriſtened. Onely they are ſubiect to the Cham of Tartary. Their Prieſts be married: and whoſo is vnmarried may be no Prieſt.

Nouus Orbis.

Ye say: The Patriarkes of Assyria and Armenia (that neuer saw neither the one Country, nor the other) were at Rome (ye know not when) and subscribed to al the Articles of your Councel of Trident. M. D. Harding, ye can get no great credit by open mockery. It is no hard matter for your Pope, out of his owne gard, to make such Patriarkes enow, one for Hierusalem, another for Constantinople, another for Alexandria, another for Antioch, another for Sidon, another for Tyrus: And I maruell if there be not some Patriarke, one or other, for Sodome and Gomorrah. These poore Holy and Hungry Fathers are contented at al times to yeld their Submissions, and to set their hands to whatsoeuer they shall be required, and in the names of those Countries that they scarcely euer heard of, to confesse the Pope, their maker, to be al, and more then all. With such vaine shewes and visards it pleaseth you to smoth the world. Fol. 324. A Councel general.

If ye doubt hereof, ye may easily finde that one Augustinus de Roma, in your late Councell of Basil, bare the name of the Archbishop of Nazareth in Iurie: and yet, poore man, had he neuer seene Nazareth in all his life. Likewise, that one Petrus Paludensis, a poore Frier Obseruant, not long sithence, bare the name of the Patriarke of Hierusalem: and yet had he neuer seene Hierusalem, nor knew which way to goe to it. But what need moe Examples? Your owne Ceremoniary of Rome telleth you thus: Consueuerunt Antiqui ponere Patriarchas quatuor Ecclesiarum Principalium, inter Episcopos Cardinales mixtim. Nostro tempore ponuntur immediatè post Cardinales. Sunt enim quodammodò Titulares: They were wont in old times to place the Patriarkes of the foure Principal Churches together with the Cardinall Bishops, one with another. But now adaies they are placed next beneath al the Cardinals. For in a maner they haue now nothing else, but the name of Patriarks. Such guests were your Patriarkes of Assyria and Armenia, that subscribed to your Councel of Trident. They bare the names of these Countries, M. Harding: but the Countries they had neuer seene. Conc. Basilien. Petr. Paluden. Patriar. Hierosolymitanus. Ceremoniarum lib. 1. section. 3.

It is most certaine, that the Christian Patriarkes, and Bishops of those Countries, will neither Communicate with the Pope, either in Sacraments, or in Prayers, nor any wise yeeld to his Authority, nor giue any maner of honour or reuerence to his person, no more then to Mahomet, or Antichrist, as I haue sufficiently shewed before.

Touching the Number of Bishops present at your Former Assembly at Trident, I referre my selfe to the Records of the same. If ye finde there more then Forty Bishops, I am content to lose my credit. And yet of the same number, Blind Sir Robert of Scotland, as I haue said before, and M. Pates of England, were silly poore Bishops, God knoweth, endewed only with bare names, without Bishopricks. In your latter assembly, two of your Holy Fathers were slaine there presently in Aduoutery. By meane of which misfortune, your number by so much was abated. Flacius Illyric. in protestatione aduersus Concil. Tridentin.

These be the great worthies of the world: These, Cornelius Bitontinus, one of the same Company, calleth the Starres of the Churches, and the Mighty Army of Gods Angels. These haue power to determine matters that they neuer vnderstood, by Authority only, but not by knowledge.

Alphonsus de Castro, as I haue shewed you before, saith thus: It is certaine, that some Popes be so voide of Learning, that they vnderstand not the Grammar Rules. Erasmus, speaking of sundry the great Learned of your side, saith thus: Sibi videntur Semi-dei, miro supercilio præ se despicientes Grammaticos: Qui si Grammaticæ litarint, non ad hunc modum se pueris deridendos propinarent: They thinke themselues halfe Gods, and with high looke they despise poore Grammarians: But if they had well Learned their Grammar, they would not offer such occasions, that Children and Babes should scorne at their folly. Alphon. aduersus Hæreses, Lib. 1. Cap. 4. Erasm. in Epistolam Hieron. ad Eustochiũ.

Concerning the whole matter, your Doctours of Sorbona in Paris haue concluded thus: Vt Concilium legitimè congregetur, sufficit, quòd solennitas & forma Iuris solenniter sit seruata. Quia si quis trahere velit hoc in disputationem, vtrùm Prælati, qui ibi sedent, habeant Rectam Intentionem, & vtrùm sint Docti, & vtrùm habeant Scientiam Sacrarum Literarum, & animum obediendi Sanæ Doctrinæ, esset processus in infinitum: That the Councell be lawfully assembled, it is sufficient that the Solemnity and forme of Law be solemnly obserued. For if a man would cast doubts, whether the Bishops that sit in Councell haue a good Meaning, and whether they bee Learned, and whether they be skilful in the Scriptures, and whether they haue a minde to obey sound Doctrine, or no, then we should neuer make an end. Articul. 22.

These be they, M. Harding, to whom ye would haue vs to giue eare, whatsoeuer they say, euen as to the Secretaries of the Holy Ghost. But S. Augustine saith: Ecclesiæ inter nos agitur causa, non mea. Ecclesia in nullo homine spem ponere, à suo didicit Redemptore: It is the Churches cause that we talke of: It is not mine. The Church hath learned of her Redeemer, to put no trust in any man. August. contra Crescon Lib. 3. Cap. 80.

The Apologie, Chap. 18. Diuision 1.

The building of Gods Church.

HOwsoeuer it be, the truth of the Gospell of Iesus Christ dependeth not vpon Councels, nor as S. Paul saith, vpon the Iudgements of Mortall Creatures. And if they which ought to be carefull for Gods Church, will not be wise, but slacke their duty, and harden their hearts against God, and his Christ, going on still to peruert the right waies of the Lord, God will stir vp the very stones, and make children and babes cunning, that there may euer be some to confute their lies.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Hereto M. Harding answereth nothing else, but thus: The Councel is the Schoole of Truth: The Bishops cannot foreslow their duties: The Church of Rome cannot erre. Which tales we haue so often, and not without wearinesse heard already. Petrus de Palude, amongst other your Doctours, saith: Non est credendum, Ecclesiam Romanam errasse à Fide. Ipsa enim potest è contrario cum Christo dicere, Ego Testimonium perhibeo de meipsa, Testimonium meum verum est: No man may beleeue that the Church of Rome may erre from the Faith: Contrariwise that Church may say with Christ, I beare witnesse of my selfe: & my witnesse is iust and true. Therefore so long as the Church of Rome can speake for her selfe, there is no doubt but all is well.

Petr. de Palude de Potest. Papæ. Artic. 4.

The Apologie, Chap. 18. Diuision 2.

For God is able (not only without Coūcels, but also, wil the Coūcels, nil the Councels) to maintaine & aduance his own Kingdom. Ful many be the thoughts of mans heart (saith Salomon) but the Counsel of the Lord abideth stedfast: There is no wisdom, there is no knowledge, there is no counsell against the Lord. Things endure not (saith Hilarius) that be set vp with mans workemanship: By another maner of means must the Church of God be builded and preserued: For that Church is grounded vpon the Foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, and is holden fast together by one corner stone, which is Christ Iesus.

Hilarius in Psalm. 126.

M. Harding.

Where ye say, that by another maner of meanes the Church of God must be builded and preserued, shew vs what other means they are, & we must say ye are very cunning men, who correct, I wil not say, Magnificat, but Christs owne ordinance for gouernment of his Church, who hath ordeined * Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, Shepheards, & Teachers, (as is before mentioned) In ædificationem Corporis Christi, To the building vp of the Body of Christ, which is his Church. Ye shal pardon vs if we beleeue S. Paul before you. We see what is the marke ye shoot at, that the lawful successors of the Apostles, Prophets, & Euangelists, & the lawful Shepheards & Doctors being put from the building of Christs Body the Church, your selues may take the worke in hand, and gouerne al. Set your hearts at rest: It shal not be so.

*By this reckoning it appeareth not, that God euer ordeined Popes or Cardinals, to build his Church.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Indeed Christ hath ordeined Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, Pastours, and Teachers, for the gouernment of his Church; notwithstanding the same be not alwaies allowed to sit in Councels, nor be alwaies knowne by Rochets, or Miters. If God had not prouided other Pastours and Feeders, besides your Prelats, the whole Church might starue for hunger. S. Pauls Words be true: but your idle Constructions are vntrue. We finde not fault with Gods Ordinance: but we reioyce in Gods Mercy, for that it hath pleased him to visit his people, and to discouer the multitude of these Vanities, wherewith you haue so long, and so vncourteously, beguiled the World. Therefore we correct not Magnificat, M. Harding, as you say: but rather we humbly sing, Te Deum laudamus, and reioyce in God our Sauiour. The right and onely way of building Gods House, is, to lay the Foundation thereof vpon the Euerlasting Word and Will of God. S. Paul saith: Other Foundation no man can lay, but the same that is laid already, which is Christ Iesus. The Prophet Esay saith, To the Law (of God) and to the Testimony. If they speake not according to this Word, they shall haue no morning Light. Therefore S. Hilary saith, as it is alleged in the Apology: Aliter extruenda, aliter custodienda Ecclesia est: Fundamentum eius super Prophetas & Apostolos collocandum est. Ecclesia ita à Deo, id est, Doctrinis Dei, ædificata,

1. Corinth. 3. Esai 8.

Hilarius in Psalm. 126.

ædificata, non concidet: Otherwise must the Church be built, and otherwise must it be kept. The Foundation of it must be laid vpon the Apostles and Prophets. The Church being thus built by God, that is to say, by the Doctrine of God, shall neuer fall.

The Apologie, Chap. 19 Diuision. 1.

BVt maruellous notable, and to very good purpose, for these daies, be S. Hieromes words: Whomsoeuer (saith he) the Diuell hath deceiued, and entised to fall asleepe, as it were, with the sweet and deadly enchantments of the Maremaids the Sirens, those persons doth Gods Word awake vp, saying vnto them, Arise thou that sleepest: Lift vp thy selfe, and Christ shall giue thee light. Therefore at the comming of Christ, of Gods Word, of the Ecclesiasticall Doctrine, and of the full destruction of Niniue, and of that most beautifull Harlot, then shall the people, which heeretofore had been cast in a transe vnder their Masters, be raised vp, and shall make haste to go to the Mountaines of the Scripture: & there shall they find Hils, I meane Moses, & Ioshua the son of Nun: other Hilles also, which are the Prophets: and Hilles of the New Testament, which are the Apostles, and the Euangelists. And when the people shall flee for succour to such Hils, and shall be exercised in the reading of this kind of Mountaines, though they find not one to teach them, (for the haruest shalbe great, but the labourers few) yet shall the good desire of the people be well accepted, in that they haue gotten them to such Hilles, and the negligence of their Masters shalbe openly reprooued. These be S. Hieromes words, and that so plaine, as there needeth no Interpreter. For they agree so iust with the things we now see with our eies haue already come to passe, that we may verily thinke he meant to foretel, as it were, by the Spirit of Prophecie, and to paint before our face the Vniuersall state of our time: the fall of the most gorgeous Harlot Babylon: the repairing againe of Gods Church: the blindnesse and sloth of the Bishops, and the good will and forwardnesse of the people. For who is so blinde, but he seeth these men be the Masters, by whom the people, as saith S. Hierome, hath been led into error, and lulled asleepe? Or who seeth not that Rome, that is their Niniue, which sometime was painted with faire st colours, now, her visard being pulled off, is both better seen, and lesse set by? Or who seeth not, that good men, being awaked, as it were, out of their dead sleepe, at the light of the Gospell, and at the voice of God, haue resorted to the Hilles of the Scriptures, waiting not at all for the Councels of such Masters.

Hieronymus in Naum. Cap. 3.

Ephes. 5.

M. Harding.

Ye wrest the saying of S. Hierome to your purpose, that is to say, so as it may seem to be spokē again the Church that now is, wherein ye make him a Prophet. And that this place might sound the more against the Clergy, to the commendation of the people, & to stirre them to read the Scriptures, after your accustomed maner, ye sticke not to adde somewhat of your owne in one place; to take away a little of the Doctor in another place; to alter the words in another place. Who looketh so narrowly for trifles all of this, as your Secretary thought maliciously when he wrote it, by diligent conference of this Apologie with S Hierome, he shall find it.

Now concerning the right sense of the place, S. Hieromes intent was not to foretell & paint before our face (as you say) the vniuersall state of our time, but to tell & declare the meaning of the Prophet Nahum, (a) signifying the state of the time now past, to wit, the time of Christs first comming into the World: for the words do expresly speake thereof. After S. Hieromes exposition, by Niniue, that Prophet meaneth the world: by the Assyrian King, the Diuell. And there he prophecieth the ruine of the world and of the Diuell, at the comming of Christ. S. Hierome (b) speaketh neuer a word of your Harlot Babylon, whereof ye and your vnlearned Ministers haue neuer done babling, meaning thereby the Holy Roman Church.

(a) Vntruth. For S. Hierome in the same place saith: Hæc in consummatione Mundi magis complentur, &c. Hucusq; de mundi ruina.

(b) Vntruth. For he speaketh often times of her: and saith plainly that Rome is Babylon.

First you, Sir Defender, that penned this geare, haue plaid a false part, by diuiding the one member of the sentence into two: or rather, by putting in one word, & leauing out another. For where S. Hierome hath thus, Et consummationis Niniue speciosissimæ quondam Meretricis, whereby he meant the vndoing of the Diuels power in the world once, that is to say, (c) before the comming of Christ, a most beautiful harlot, that you might giue occasion of reproch to the Roman Church, which, falsifying the Doctors sēse, you vnderstād by Niniue, you haue set it forth thus: Et consummationis Niniue, & speciosissimæ Meretricis. Then you descant vpon it, as though S. Hierome had so written, & say, that he setteth before our face the fall of the most gorgeous Harlot Babylon, which you interpret to be Rome. And then further corrupting S. Hieroms sēse, you make him to speak of the repairing again of Gods Church, as though at this

In Comment. in Nahum. Cap. 3.

(c) As though sithence the Birth of Christ there neuer had been neither Niniue, nor Babylon, nor Ignorance, nor Negligence in the Clergy.

this day it were by default of the Catholike Clergy, fallen downe, & should be set vp againe by you & your Ministers: also of the blindnes of the Bishops of our time, that they be the masters by whom the people hath been led into error, and lulled asleepe. And heereto ye adde, as saith Hierome, where S. Hierome saith not so, neither of the masters at Christs first comming, but of the Diuell, who brought the people asleepe, by whom he vnderstandeth (d) not the people that liueth now, but them that were deceiued by the Diuell vnder euill masters, before the comming of Christ.

(d) No doubt, if there be credits sufficient in this Commentarie.

But because this Defender thinketh he hath acquited himselfe like a Clerke, by alleging this place out of S. Hierome, against the Catholike Church, I require all the learned to reade ouer what S. Hierome writeth vpon the end of the Prophet Nahum from these words of the Text, Ecce super montes pedes euangelizantis & annuntiantis pacem, forth to the end of the Chapter, & most diligently to mark that goeth immediately before the place by this Defender alleged. As for thee, good Reader, that vnderstandest not the Latine tong, I assure thee, S. Hierome speaketh those words of *Heretikes, * of Teachers of euil Doctrine, of such as will not heare the voice of the Church, of which sort this new English Clergy is. And in that discourse he commendeth to true beleeuers, not only the Hilles, that is, the written Scriptures, but also the Doctrine of the Church (as thou seest in the allegation put in the Apology) and before that he commendeth likewise Latibula Doctorum, the Caues of the Doctors, in which the faithful people also, as by flying to the hils, couch themselues safe from danger of the Diuell, stirrer of Heresies. So that if the place be wel scanned, by that allegation they shall seem to haue made a rod to whip themselues. The whole place being ouer long to recite heere, a sentence or two, that are specially meant of such as they be, may suffice.

Jn Nahum 2.

* As though the Popes Clerkes were not Heretikes & teacher of false doctrine

Rome. Niniue. Babylon.

Vae itaque his, &c. Woe then to those which are Teachers of peruerse Doctrines in Niniue, by which is signified the World. And aptly to them it is said, Thy Shepheards haue slept, for they haue giuen sleep to their eies, and slumbering to their eie-lids. And therefore haue they not found a place for our Lord, nor a Tabernacle for the God of Iacob. Neither haue they heard out of Ephrata, that is to say, Frugifera Ecclesia, the fruitfull Church. Nor haue they found the Church in the thickets of the woods. Neither only the Shepheards of this rifraffe (mixticij huius, he meaneth by συμμικτοι, which is the word of the seuenty Translators, all sorts of people deceiued by false Teachers) and of the locust (they are the Captaine Heretikes) which in time of frost sitteth in the hedges, haue slept: but by the King of Assyrians (who is the Diuell) they haue been lulled asleepe. For alwaies it is the study of the Diuell, how he may bring asleepe waking soules. Thus S. Hierome. Psalm. 131.

Now I report me to those that haue eies to see, whether our new Clergy may not seeme those whom the Diuell lulled asleep (gladly I vse their owne terme) in their new deuices, in their own liked conceits, in their Schismes and Heresies, in their vniust possession of Benefices and Bishopricks, those yet liuing, to whom the right belongeth, in their presumption of that Office they are not duly called vnto, in their malice toward the Church, in the continuall satisfying of their fleshly lusts, and in their vnlawfull and lecherous imbracings.

Let them feare the dreadfull saying of S. Hierome, following straight after their allegation: Non est sanitas contritioni tuæ, &c. There is no health for thy bruize: Thy wound sweileth. Therefore the rifraffe of Niniue cannot be healed, because he laieth not downe his pride, and the wound is alwaies fresh, and daily he is wounded, whiles the diuell strike at him. And when all commeth to all, there is no health for his bruize. For although he seeme to himselfe whole, yet is his soule broken, and crushed with the beetle of the whole earth, that founceth downe vpon it. And it is not healed, because continually it is lifted vp with pride. But if it become humble, and submit it selfe to Christ, a contrite and humble heart Psalm. 50. God despiseth not. Thus describeth S. Hierome these men. Neither let them say, they submit themselues to Christ, whom and whose Gospell they haue so much in their mouthes, vntill they follow his Doctrine, saying of the Gouernors of his Church, He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth Luc. 10. you, despiseth me. And thus much for answer to the place of S. Hierome.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Heere is a maruellous worke: Sir Defender singeth descant, and quiteth himselfe like a Clerk. He altereth S. Hieromes minde: He saith S. Hierome saith so, whereas S. Hierome saith not so: He, of proud Niniue, hath made the Church of Rome: He, of the Diuell, hath made Antichrist: He babbleth about Babylon: He diuideth one sentence into two: He putteth in one word, and leaueth out another: He is lulled asleepe: He scattereth his rifraffe: He doth, and saith. I know not what, whatsoeuer it shall please M. Harding of his courtesie to report.

Touching this hainous imagined corruption, and altering of S. Hieromes minde, S. Chrysostome saith: Qui mendax est, neminem putat verum dicere, ne ipsum quidem Deum: He that himselfe is a liar, imagineth that no man saith the Truth, no not God himselfe. With such corruption and change of words, Palladius, a leand fellow thought himselfe sometime able to charge S. Hierome. S. Hieromes words thereof are these: Concionatur me esse Falsarium: me Verbum non expressisse de Verbo: pro Honorabili, dixisse Charissimum: Hæc & huiusmodi nugæ meæ crimina sunt: He preacheth and publisheth abroad, that I am a Falsary: that I haue not precisely translated word for word: that I, in stead of this word, Honourable, haue written these words, dearely beloued. These things, and such trifles, are laid to my charge.

Chrys. in Mat. Hom. 19. in opere imperfecto.

Hieronymus ad Pamma. de optimo genere interpretandi. Tom. 2.

To these follies S. Hierome answereth thus: Cùm ipsa Epistola doceat, nihil mutatum esse de sensu, nec res additas, nec aliquod dogma confictum, faciunt ne isti intelligendo vt nihil intelligunt: & dum alienam imperitiam volunt coarguere, produnt suam: Whereas the Epistle it selfe declareth, that there is no alteration made in the sense, and that there is neither matter of substance added, nor any Doctrine imagined, verily, by their great cunning, they proouе themselues fooles, and seeking to reproue other mens vnskilfulnesse, they betray their owne.

In eadem Epist.

Yet

Ye say: S. Hierome in these words spake nothing, neither of the Church of Christ, nor of your Clergy of Rome. For triall whereof, let S. Hierome himselfe be heard to speake, as a witnesse indifferent of himselfe. First, in other places he saith thus: (To this place we shall resort afterward) Dicimus, Non venient super nos mala. Audiamus sententiam Domini: Sion, & Hierusalem, & Mons Templi speculatorium, & visio pacis, & Templum Christi in Consummatione, & in fine: We say, There shall no hurt come vpon vs. Let vs heare the saying of our Lord. Sion, and Hierusalem, and the Mount, that is the Watch Tower of the Temple, and the sight of peace, and the Temple or Church of Christ shal be consumed, and brought to an end. Hieronym. in Micha. Cap. 3.

Rome.
Niniue.
Babylon.

These words be plaine, not onely that the haut Lady Niniue, but also that the Church or Temple, that beareth the Name of Christ, shall be consumed and brought to an end.

Likewise he saith: Quos Deus inseruit ex Oleastro in radicem Bonæ Oliuæ, si illi immemores recesserint à Conditore suo, & adorauerint Assyriam, cur illos Deus non euertat, & ad eandem sitim reducat, in qua priùs fuerunt? Euen they whom God hath grafted from out of the wilde Oliue tree, into the root of the good Oliue (that is to say, the Children of the Church) If they forget themselues, and flee from their Maker, and worship the King of Assyria (that is to say, Antichrist, or any other Creature that is not God) why may not God ouerthrow them, and bring them to the same thirst and drouth they were in before? Hieron. in Sophoniam, ca. 2.

Marke, M. Harding, S. Hierome applieth these words, not onely vnto Niniue, but also vnto the Church of God. Againe he saith: Abominatio Desolationis, intelligi potest omne Dogma Peruersum: quod cum viderimus stare in Loco Sancto, id est, in Ecclesia, debemus fugere de Iudæa ad Montes: The Abomination of Desolation may be taken for any Wicked Doctrine: which when we shall see standing in the Holy Place, that is to say, in the Church of Christ, then wee must flee from Iury, to the Mountaines (of the Scriptures.) Hier. in Mat. Ca. 24. Lib. 4

And againe likewise he saith: Paxillus auferetur de loco Fidei, hoc est, de Ecclesia, per impietatem quotidiè succrescentem: & qui super eum antè pependerant Fide, postea infidelitate frangentur, & cadent, & peribunt: The pinne or barre (whereby hee meaneth Christ, for that the Faithful hang vpon him, as in a house things are hanged vp safely vpon a Pin) shal be taken away from the place that was Faithful, that is to say from the Church, because of the wickednesse that daily groweth. And they that before hung vpon him by Faith, afterward by infidelity shall be broken downe, and fall, and perish. Hieron. in Esai Cap. 23.

Whatsoeuer Glosse ye shall giue to the other words of S. Hierome, certainly these words are plaine and euident, and will not easily receiue your Glosse. Likewise S. Gregory, speaking, not of the First comming of Christ, but of the time that is described to be before the end of the world, saith thus: In diebus illis Ecclesia, quasi quodam senio debilitata, per Prædicationem parere filios non valebit: In those daies the Church, as being ouermuch weakened with age, shal not be able by preaching to beare Children. Gregor. in Iob. c. 9. lib. 19. c. 29

Now touching your Clergy, S. Hierome himselfe saith: Ipsi quoque Sacerdotes, qui Legem Domini docere deberent, & subiectos sibi populos à Leonis furore defendere quodam stupore infatuati, vertentur in amentiam: The Priests themselues that ought to teach the Law of our Lord, and to defend the people committed to their charge, from the furie of the Lion, (that is the Diuell) being amazed, and bereft of their wits, shall be turned into madnesse. Hier. in Ieremi. lib. 1. cap. 4.

Againe he saith: Scit Rex Assyrius non posse se oues decipere, nisi Pastores antè consopierit. Semper Diaboli studium est, vigilantes animas consopire: The King of Assyria (that is the Diuell) knoweth that he can neuer deceiue the Sheepe, vnlesse first hee cast the Sheepheards into a transe. It is euermore the Diuels pollicie, to lay watchfull soules asleepe. Hieronym. in Naum. 3.

And therefore againe he saith: Auferet Dominus nomina Vanæ Gloriæ, & Admirationis falsæ, quæ versantur in Ecclesia. Sed & nomina Sacerdotum cum Sacerdotibus, qui frustra sibi applaudunt in Episcopali nomine, & in Presbyterij Dignitate, & non in opere: God will take away the names of Vaine Glory, & Falſe Credit, that are in the Church, and the names of Priests, together with the Priests themselues, that vainly boast themselues of the Names of Bishops, and of the Dignity of Priesthood, but doe nothing, Hitherto, I trow, it is plaine, that S. Hierome by these words, meant not only Niniue, as you say, but also the Church, and the same Church that is called the Church of God. Hieron. in. Sophoniam, ca. 1.

Hier. in Catal. Scrip. Eccles. in Marco.

But about Babylon (ye say) ye neuer make an end of babling. What babling then I pray you, made S. Hierome, when he said, Petrus in prima Epistola, sub nomine Babylonis, Romam significat? S. Peter in his first Epistle, meant Rome, vnder the name of Babylon.

Aug. de Genes. cont. Manich. Lib. 2. Cap. 1.

S. Augustine saith: Roma est quasi Secunda Babylon: Rome is as the Second Babylon.

Againe he saith: Ciues Babyloniæ nos fecerunr: Dimisimus Creatorem: Adorauimus Creaturam: Dimisimus eum à quo facti sumus: Adorauimus illud quod fecimas: They haue haue made vs the Citizens of Babylon: (For) we haue left our Creator and haue worshipped a Creature: we haue left him that made vs; and haue adored that thing that we made our selues.

Primasius in Apoc. cap. 16.

Likewise saith Primasius: Tunc Babylon cadet, quando nouissimè potestatem persequendi Sanctos acceperit: Then shall Babylon come to ground, when she shall last of all take power to persecute the Saints of God.

In idem caput.

And againe: Vidi mulierem sedentem super vestem coccineam, plenam Nominibus Blasphemiæ, habentem Capita Septem. Septem Capita dicit Septem Montes: Romam, quæ super Septem Montes præsidet, significans: I saw a Woman sitting vpon a scarlet robe, full of Names of Blasphemie, hauing Seuen Heads. Seuen Heads hee calleth the Seuen Mounts, vpō which Rome was built: meaning therby, Rome that sitteth vpon Seuen Hils.

The people shall flee to the Scriptures

Ye say: S. Hierome meant not the state of our time, but onely the state of the time now past: that is to say, as it is said before, The time of Christs first comming into the world. And this, in your Margin, ye call the right sense of S. Hierome, truly reported. Howbeit, your Reader, that hath eies to see, may easily finde that this is your owne only sense, M. Harding, and not S. Hieromes. For I beseech you, how was Niniue fully destroied, or what Gospels were there written, at the first comming of Christ into the World? S. Hieromes meaning and speech is plaine: The people, before the Second Comming of Christ, which shal be in Glory, shall leaue their negligent and idle Schoolemasters, which haue of long time deceiued them: and shall flee to the Mountaines of the Scriptures. And albeit they finde not one to teach them, yet shal their desire and endeauor be accepted before God, for that they haue sought vnto these Mountaines: and the negligence and slothfulnesse of their Masters shall be reproued.

Hieronymus in Naum Cap. 3.

The true sense of S. Hieromes words.

Chrys. in Gen. Homil. 35.

To like purpose S. Chrysostome saith: Fieri non potest, vt is qui Diuinis Scripturis magno studio feruentiq; desiderio vacat, semper negligatur. Licèt enim desit nobis hominis Magisterium, tamen ipse Dominus, supernè intrans in corda nostra, illustrat mentem: rationi iubar suum infundit: detegit occulta: Doctorq; fit eorum quæ ignoramus: tantùm si nos ea, que à nobis sunt, afferre velimus: It cannot possibly be, that hee that with earnest studie and feruent desire readeth the Scriptures, should euermore be forsaken. For although we want the instruction of Man, yet God himself from aboue entering into our hearts, lightneth our minde: powreth his beames into our wits: openeth things that were hidden, & becommeth vnto vs a Schoolemaster of that we know not: only if we will doe so much as in vs lieth.

Hier. in Esai Lib. 13. Ca. 49.

So saith S. Hierome: Postquam conuersi fuerint, & Clarum Christi Lumen aspexerint, pascent in vijs, & in semitis Sanctarum Scripturarum: & dicent, Dominus pascit me, & nihil mihi deerit: When they shall be turned, and shall behold the Cleere light of Christ, they shall feed in the paths and waies of Holy Scriptures: and shall say, The Lord feedeth mee, and I shall want nothing.

Psalm. 23.

Hieronymus in Naum. Cap. 3.

Againe he saith: Circundabit sibi, quasi murum firmissimum, Scripturarū Doctrinam, ne ad interiora eius possit hostis irrumpere: He will enclose himselfe with the Doctrine of the Scriptures, as with a strong wall, that the enemie may not enter into his heart. Againe he saith: Hæc est via: Ambulate in ea. Neque ad dextram, neq; ad Sinistram. Tunc omnes Errores, & Idola, & Similitudines Veritatis comminues, atq; disperges, & ita iudicabis immunda, vt ea menstruatæ mulieris sordidissimo Sanguini compares: This is the way: Walke in it. Goe neither to the Right hand, nor to the Left. Then shalt thou breake and scatter all Errors, and Idols, and Counterfeit likenesse of the Truth: and shalt iudge them to be so filthy, that thou shalt liken them to most vile and lothsome Blood.

Hiron. in Esai Lib. 9. Ca. 30.

But forasmuch as yee say, All these words of S. Hierome pertaine vnto some other matter, I know not what, and not vnto the ouerthrow of Babylon, or fall of Antichrist that shall be before the end of the world, notwithstanding S. Hieromes words of themselues be plaine enough, yet it may please you to consider these words of S. Chrysostome, touching the same. Thus he saith: Tunc qui in Iudæa sunt, fugiant ad montes, id est, qui sunt in Christianitate, conferant se ad Scripturas. Montes sunt Scripturæ Apostolorum, & Prophetarum, &c. Sciens Dominus tantam confusionem rerum in nouissimis diebus esse futuram, ideò mandat vt Christiani, Chrys. in Matthæ. Homil. 49.

Christiani, qui sunt in Christianitate, volentes firmitatem accipere fidei veræ, ad nullam rem fugiant, nisi ad Scripturas. Alioqui si ad alias res aspexerint, scandalizabuntur & peribunt, non intelligentes quæ sit Vera Ecclesia. Et per hoc incident in Abominationem Desolationis: Then let them that be in Iewrie, flie to the Mountaines: that is to say, let them that be in Christs profession, flie to the Scriptures. The Scriptures of the Apostles & Prophets be the Mountaines, &c. Our Lord knowing that there should be such confusion in the last daies, therfore cõmandeth, that Christian men, that beleeue in Christ, willing, o haue an assurance of the True Faith, should haue recourse to nothing else, but vnto the Scriptures. Otherwise if they haue regard to any other thing, they shall be offended and perish, not vnderstanding what is the True Church. And by meane heereof they shall fall into the Abomination of Desolation.

The people shall flie to the Scriptures.

Here, M. Harding, no Gloſſe will ſerue you. Certainly theſe words were ſpoken not of the First comming of Chriſt into the World, as you imagine, but of the Kingdome of Antichriſt, and of the End and Conſummation of the World.

Heereof S. Gregory ſaith thus: Eccleſia poſt eoſdem dies, quibus deprimitur, tamen circa finem temporum grandi prædicationis Virtute roborabitur: The Church after theſe daies of her affliction, ſhall afterward notwithſtanding be ſtrengthened with great Power and might of Preaching. Greg. in Iob. c. 29. lib. 19. ca. 9.

The Apologie, Chap. 20. Diuiſion. 1.

But by your fauour, ſome will ſay, theſe things ought not to haue been attempted without the Biſhop of Romes commandement, forſomuch as he only is the knot and band of Chriſtian Society. He only is that Prieſt of Leuies Order, whom God ſignified in the Deuteronomie, from whom counſell in matters of weight, and true iudgement, ought to be fet: and whoſo obeieth not his iudgement, the ſame man ought to be killed in the ſight of his brethren: and that no Mortall Creature hath Authority to be Iudge ouer the Pope whatſoeuer he do: that Chriſt raigneth in Heauen, and the Pope in Earth: that the Pope alone can doe as much as Chriſt or God himſelf can do, becauſe Chriſt and the Pope haue but one Conſiſtory: That without him is no Faith: no Hope: no Church: and who ſo goeth from him, quite caſteth away & renounceth his own Saluation. Such talke haue the Canoniſts, the Popes Paraſites, but with ſmall diſcretion or ſoberneſſe. For they could ſcantly ſay more, at leaſt they could not ſpeake more highly of Chriſt himſelfe.

M. Harding.

What ſome will ſay wee know not. We tell you that your charge of Religion and manifold Hereſies ought not to haue beene attempted at all, neither without the Biſhop of Romes commandement, nor with his commandements. Touching the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe you haue neuer done with him. Hee is a great blocke in your way. And ſo hath he euer been in the way of all Heretikes. Yet could he neuer by you or them be remoued. To your ſcoffes againſt him, and belying of the Canoniſts before by you vttered, and here idly repeated, my former anſwer may ſuffice.

The Apologie, Chap. 20. Diuiſion 2.

As for vs, truly we haue fallen from the Biſhop of Rome vpon no maner of worldly reſpect or cõmodity. And would to Chriſt, he ſo behaued himſelfe, that this falling away had not needed: But ſo the caſe ſtood, that vnleſſe we left him, we could not com to Chriſt. Neither will he now make any other league with vs, then ſuch a one as Nahas the King of the Ammonites would haue made in times paſt with thẽ of the City of Iabes, which was to put out the right Eie of each one of the Inhabitants, and ſo to receiue them into his friendſhip. Euen ſo will the Pope pluck from vs the Holy Scripture, the Goſpell of our Saluation, & all the Confidence which we haue in Chriſt Jeſu, as the eie from our head, and vpon other condition can he not agree vpon peace with vs.

M. Harding

M. Harding.

Ye are not fallen from the Biſhop of Rome only, which were a damnable ſchiſme, but yee are fallen from Chriſts Church. Your compariſon of the Pope with King Nahas is not verie agreeable But Sirs, ye ſpeake more maliciouſly then credibly. Be ye good Chriſtian men, and conforme your ſelues to the Catholike Faith (and denie Chriſt and his Goſpell: For this alſo ye ſhould haue added) and I warrant you, the Pope will not plucke from you, neither the Scriptures, nor your confidence in Chriſt Ieſu, no more then he doth from vs.

The Apologie, Chap. 20. Diuiſion. 3.

The Pope cannot Erre.

For whereas ſome vſe to make ſo great a vaunt, that the Pope is only Peters Succeſſor, as though thereby he carried the Holy Ghoſt in his boſome, and could not erre, this is but a matter of nothing, & a very trifling tale. Gods grace is promiſed to a good minde, & to any one that feareth him, not vnto Sees and Succeſſions. Riches, ſaith S. Hierome, may make one Biſhop to be of more might then the reſt: but al Biſhops whatſoeuer they be, are the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles. If ſo be the Place and Conſecration only be ſufficient, why then Manaſſes ſucceeded Dauid, & Caiaphas ſucceeded Aaron. And it hath been often ſeene, that an Idol hath bin placed in the Temple of God. In old time Archidamus the Lacedemonian boaſted much of himſelfe, how he came of the blood of Hercules, as the Pope this day boaſteth himſelf of the Succeſſion & Place of Peter. But one Nicoſtratus in this wiſe abated his pride: Nay, quoth he, thou ſeemeſt not to deſcend from Hercules. For Hercules deſtroied euil men, & thou makeſt good men euill. And when the Phariſes bragged of their Linage, how they were of the kindred & blood of Abraham. Yee, ſaith Chriſt, ſeeke to kill me, a man which haue told you the truth, as I heard it from God. Thus Abraham neuer did. Ye are of your Father the Diuell, and will needs obey his will.

Iohn 8.

M. Harding.

The Pope ſucceedeth Peter in authority and power. But whereas the Sheepe of Chriſt continue to the Worlds end, he is not wiſe that thinketh Chriſt to haue made a ſhepheard temporary, or for a time, ouer his perpetual flocke. Then what ſhepheardly endowment our Lord gaue to the firſt ſhepheard, at the inſtitution of the ſhepheardly office of the Church: that is he vnderſtanded to haue giuen ordinarily to euery Succeſſour. To Peter hee gaue that he obtained by his prayer made to the Father, that his Faith ſhould not faile. Againe to him he gaue grace that to performe, the performance whereof at him he required, to wit, that he confirmed and ſtrengthened his Brethren, wherefore the grace of ſtedfaſtneſſe, of faith, and of confirming the wauering & doubtful in Faith, euery Pope obteineth of the holy Ghoſt for the benefit of the Church. And ſo the Pope although he may erre by perſoned error, in his own priuate iudgement, as a man, and as a particular Doctor in his own opinion: * yet as hee is Pope, The Succeſſor of Peter, The Vicar of Chriſt in Earth, the Shepheard of the Vniuerſall Church, in publike iudgement, in deliberation and definitiue ſentence *he neuer erreth; * not neuer erred. For whenſoeuer he ordaineth or determineth any thing by his high Biſhoply authority, intending to binde Chriſtian men to performe or beleeue the ſame, hee is alwaies gouerned and holpen with the grace and fauer of the holy Ghoſt. This is to Catholike Doctors a very certainty, though to ſuch doughty Clerkes as ye are, it is but a matter of nothing and a very trifling tale.

*Vntruth, ioined with impudent flatterie and extreame folly.

* This place of S. Hierome is anſwered before Part 2. chap. 3. Diuiſion 5.

Gods grace in one reſpect is promiſed both to a good mind, and to one that feareth God; and alſo in another reſpect to the ſucceſſors of Peter. S. Hieroms ſaying to Eugrius, which now you haue alleged three or foure times, will not handſomely ſerue you for ſo diuers points, as a ſhipmans hoſe for diuers legs. * Once againe I tel you, thereby he meaneth nothing elſe, but that the greatnes of Rome ought not to giue authority to a wrong priuate cuſtome, (by which, Deacons in certaine caſes were preferred before Prieſts) againſt the right generall cuſtome of the World. And Biſhops be the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, we grant, yet is the Pope the Succeſſor of Peter, * who was ſhepheard of al Chriſts Lambes and Sheepe, and therefore alſo * of the Apoſtles themſelues and ſo hath a higher authority.

* Peter was the Shepheard and the Apoſtles the Sheepe. A vaine vntruth without fauour, Cyprian ſaith; Chriſtus parem dedit Apoſtolis omnibus poteſtatem.

The Pope Succeedeth in power, but not in holineſſe.

As for your example of Archidamus, who boaſtingly fetched his Petigree from Hercules, you muſt conſider, Succeſſion of Vertue alwaies followeth not ſucceſſion of blood Now we doe acknowledge in the Pope a Succeſſion of Shepheardly power, euen ſuch as was in Peter. * Which power is not taken away by lacke of Peters holineſſe.

* All this may be called the Succeſſion of folly.

Chriſt likewiſe by his anſwer to the Phariſeis, though hee affirmed they ſucceeded not Abraham in loue of truth, and that for their mallice they were of their father the Diuel: yet he denied not, but that they came lineally of Abraham and were of his blood, though not of his godlineſſe. Such Succeſſion meane not we ſpeaking of the Pope, whoſe Succeſſion is denied of Peter: but the Succeſſion of power and authority, * and of infallibility of Faith in iudgement and ſentence definitiue.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Heere we haue found one Pope with two capacities. In one respect he is a Man: in another respect he is more then a Man: but whether in that respect he be Angell, or Archangell, it is past in silence. One way he succeedeth Peter: another way he succeedeth I know not whom. One way he may Erre: another way though he would neuer so faine he cannot Erre. In his Bed, at his Table, on Horsebacke, or elsewhere, we may well mistrust him: for in these places he may be deceiued aswell as others. But in Councell, in Consistory, and in Place of iudgement, it is most certaine, ye say, he cannot erre. For in these places he hath the Holy Ghost I trow, at his commandement. His Power Pastorall, his Succession in authority and infallibility of Faith, his Place, his Chaire, and his Consecration, are sufficient for euer to preserue him from errour. To like purpose Salust sometime said of Cicero: Aliud stans, aliud sedens, de Republica sentit: While he standeth vp he hath one minde, touching the common State, when he sitteth downe he hath another. It is fit for a Pope to haue shift of mindes. Apolloes Nunne, while shee sate mewed in her caue, was inspired and Prophesied and gaue Oracles: but after that shee came abroad, she was no wiser, then another woman. Thus your Doctors say, as it is before reported: Veritas adhæret Cathedræ: Papa Sanctitatem ricipit à Cathedra: The Popes Truth is fastened vnto his Chaire: The Pope from his Chaire receiueth his Holinesse.

The Pope cannot Erre.

Salustius in Ciceronem. Nic. Cusan. ad Bohemos ep. 2.

It shameth me, M. Harding, to see you so vainely occupied about these vanities. Wee may well be liberall in dealing heereof. They cost you but little: they are only your owne. Scriptures, Doctors or Councels to witnesse your sayings ye allege none. For further declaration of this whole matter, I beseech thee, good Christian Reader, to consider the short treaty that I haue written before touching the sundry Errors and euident Heresies, that haue been notablie found in Popes. Alphonsus de Castro, one of M. Hardings owne speciall Doctors, saith: Non dubitamus an Hæreticum esse, & Papam esse, coire in vnum possint, &c. Non enim credo aliquem esse adeò Impudentem Papæ Assentatorem, vt ei tribuere hoc velit, vt nec Errare, nec in Interpretatione Sacrarum Literarum hallucinari possit: We doubt not whether one man may be a Pope and a Heretike both together. For I beleeue there is none so shameleſſe a flatterer of the Pope, that will say (as you say, M. Harding) The Pope can neuer Erre nor be deceiued in the Exposition of the Scriptures. There is no flatterer so shameleſſe, that will so say.

Part. 6. cap. 5. Diuision. 2. Alphons. De Hær. li. 1. ca. 4.

Likewise Erasmus saith: Si verum est, quod quidam asseuerant, Romanum Pontificem Errore Judiciali Errare non posse, quid opus est Generalibus Concilijs? Quid opus est in Concilium accersere Iurisconsultos, ac Theologos eruditos? Si Papa pronuncians labi non potest, cur datus est Appellationi locus, vel ad Synodum, vel ad eundem rectiùs edoctum? Quorsum attinet, tot Academias in tractandis Fidei quæstionibus distorqueri, cùm ex vno Pontifice, quod verum est, audire liceat? Imò qui fit, vt huius Pontificis decreta cum illius Pontificis decretis pugnent? If it be true that some men say, that the Bishop of Rome can neuer erre in Error of Iudgement, what need we then so many generall Councels? And in the same, what need we so many Lawyers and learned Diuines? If the Pope cannot Erre in giuing sentence, wherefore lieth there any appeale from the Pope, either to a Councell, or else to the Pope himselfe, being better informed? What need we to trouble so many Vniuersities, in discussing of Matters of Faith, whereas we may learne the Truth of the Pope alone? Nay how commeth it about that one Popes Decrees are found contrary to anothers, if it be so certaine, that the Pope, whosoeuer he be, and whatsoeuer he say, can neuer Erre.

Eras. in Annot. in 1. Cor. 7.

That ye speake of Peters Succession, is vaine and childish. Of such follie Athanasius saith: Persuasus est in Magnitudine Vrbium Religionem esse sitam: This wise man imagineth that Religion standeth in the Greatnesse of Cities. S. Hierome saith: Potentia Diuitiarum, & Paupertatis Humilitas, vel Sublimiorem, vel Inferiorem Episcopum non facit. Cæterùm omnes Apostolorum Successores sunt, The wealth of Riches and the basenesse of Pouerty maketh a Bishop neither Higher nor Lower. But all Bishops be the Apostles Successors.

Athan. In Apoleg. Secunda. Hieronym. ad Enagrium.

The Apology, Chap. 21. Diuision 1.

YEt notwithstanding, because we will grant somewhat to Successiõ tell vs, hath the Pope alone succeded Peter? And wherein, I pray you? In what Religiõ, in what Office, in what peece of his life hath he succeded him: What one thing (tell me) had Peter euer like vnto the Pope, or the Pope like vnto Peter? Except peraduenture he will say thus: That Peter, whẽ he was at Rome, neuer taught the Gospell, neuer fed the Flock, took away away the keies of the Kingdome of Heauen, hid the Treasures of his Lord, sate him downe only in his Castle of S. Iohn Laterane, & pointed out with his finger all the Places and Chambers of Purgatory, & kindes of punishments, committing some poore Soules to be tormented, & other some againe suddenly releasing thence at his owne pleasure, taking Mony for so doing: or that he gaue order to say Priuate Masses in euery Corner: or that he mumbled vp the Holy Seruice, with a loud voice, and in an vnknowen language: or that he hanged vp the Sacrament in euery Temple, & one euery Altar, and carried the same about before him whither soeuer he went, vpon an ambling Iannet, with lights and bels: or that he Consecrated with his holy Breath, Oile, Wax, Wooll, Belles, Chalices, Churches, and Altars, or that he sold Iubilees, Graces, Liberties, Auousons, Preuentions, First fruits, Palles, the wearing of Palles, Bulles, Indulgences, and Pardons: or that he called himselfe by the name of the Head of the Church, the Highest Bishop, the Bishop of Bishops, alone most holy: or that by vsurpation, he tooke vpon himselfe the right and authority ouer other Bishops Churches: or that he exempted himselfe from the power of any Ciuell Gouernment: or that he maintained warres, and set Princes together at variance: or that he sitting in his Chaire, with his Triple Crown full of Labels, with sumptuous and Persianlike gorgeousnesse, with his Royall Scepter, with his Diademe of gold, and glittering with stones, was carried about, not vpon a palfray, but vpon the shoulders of Noble men. These things, no doubt, did Peter at Rome in times past, and left them in charge to his Successours, as you would say, from hand to hand: for these things be now adaies done at Rome by the Popes, and be so done, as though nothing else ought to be done.

Peters successours.

M. Harding.

The Pope alone hath succeeded S. Peter, Aske you wherein? In what Religion? In what Office? We tell you, he succeeded in Peters chaire, in which he sate at Rome, and ruled the Church, in Christian Religion (a) in that office which Christ committed to Peter when he said, Pasce Oues meas: Feed my Sheep. Than with Office he neuer gaue greater, nor with like circumstance of charge, (b) nor to any other gaue he it, then to Peter. For to him alone he said, Feed my Sheep. What aske ye vs of this Officers life?

(a) Vntruth. For the Pope feedeth not.

(b) Vntruth. For the same power was giuen to all the rest.

(c) And well proued.

You aske what thing had Peter euer like vnto the Pope, or the Pope like vnto Peter? Wee tell you. Peter had authority to feed Christs sheep, like vnto the Pope. And the Pope hath authority to feed Christs sheep, like vnto Peter. (e) Like power, like commission. Hee that gaue them authority to feed, gaue them also authority to doe whatsoeuer may partaine to feeding.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

For that ye tell vs so many faire tales of Peters Succession, we demand of you, wherein the Pope Succeedeth Peter: You answer, He succeedeth him in his Chaire: as if Peter had been sometime installed in Rome, and had sate solemnly all day with his Triple Crowne in his Pontificalibus, and in a Chaire of Gold. And thus hauing lost both Religion and Doctrine, ye thinke it sufficient, at least to hold by the Chaire, as if a Souldier that had lost his Sword would play the man with the Scabberd. But so Caiaphas succeeded Aaron: So wicked Manasses succeeded Dauid: So may Antichrist easily sit in Peters Chaire.

Dist. 40. Multi.

Chrysostome saith: Non Cathedra facit Sacerdotem: sed Sacerdos Cathedram: Nec locus Sanctificat Hominem: sed Homo locum: It is not the Chaire, that maketh the Bishop: but it is the Bishop that maketh the Chaire. Neither is it the Place that halloweth the Man, but it is the Man, that halloweth the Place. Likewise S. Hierome saith: Non Sanctorum Filij sunt, qui tenent loca Sanctorum: They are not alwaies the Children of holy men that sit in the roomes of holy men.

Dist. 40. Non est facile.

He doth great wrong vnto S. Peter that placeth such a one in such a Chaire: For neither is the Pope in any thing like S. Peter: nor was S. Peter in any thing like the Pope. When Simeones saw, that Arsacius an vnlearned & an vnworthy old doting Man, was placed in Chrysostomes roome, he cried out, Prò pudor, Quis, Cui? Out for shame: what a sorry hinde is this? & in whose place haue we set him? Euen so may we iustly say of the Popes sitting in Peters Chaire, Prò pudor, Quis, Cui? If he haue any regard of himselfe, he cannot thinke of S. Peter without blushing.

Niceph. li. 13. cap. 28.

The

The Apology, Chap. 21. Diuision 2.

Or contrariwise, peraduenture they had rather say thus, that the Pope doth now al the same things, that we know Peter did many a day agoe: that is, that he runneth vp & downe into euery Country to preach the Gospel, not only openly abroad, but also priuately from house to house: that he is diligent, and applieth that businesse, in season & out of season, in due time and out of due time: that he doth the part of an Euangelist, that he fulfilleth the work and ministery of Christ, that he is the watchman of the House of Israel, receiueth answers & words at Gods mouth: & euen as he receiueth them, so deliuereth thē ouer to the people: That he is the Salt of the Earth: That he is the Light of the world: That he doth not feed himselfe, but his flock: that he doth not intangle himselfe with the worldly cares of this life: that he doth not vse a Soueraignty ouer the Lords people: That he seeketh not to haue other men Minister vnto him, but himselfe rather Ministreth vnto others: that he taketh all Bishops as his Fellowes and Equals: that he is Subiect to Princes, as to persons sent from God: that he giueth to Cæsar, that which is Cæsars: and that he, as the Old Bishops of Rome, did without contradiction, calleth the Emperor, his Gracious Lord. Vnlesse therefore the Popes doe the like now adaies, as Peter did, there is no cause at all, why they should glory so much of Peters name, and of his Succession.

M. Harding.

The Pope now runneth not vp and downe into euery Country, hee goeth not openly and priuately from house to house, and to euery Alehouse, as ye would him to doe, like one of your Ministers: Neither I trow, ye Masters that be Superintendents your selues, thinke it conuenient that ye go from house to house, to preach your Gospel at these daies. And would ye the Pope to abase himselfe to that ye think becommeth not your selues? he hath (as meet it is) other fit men to help to beare his burden with him. And whereas one body sufficeth not for so great & so many affaires; for counsel, he hath many heads; for ouersight, many eies; for care, many hearts; for preaching, many tongues; for worke, many hands; for knowledge, many eares; for expedition of matters, many feet; for the great weight of his charge, many shoulders. Briefly, for al necessary and behoueful cases, conuenient helps. The like helps would S. Peter vse, were he now liuing.

The Bishop of Saxisbury.

To speake of the Popes running vp and downe from Alehouse to Alehouse, it is great folly. It should bee sufficient, if he would goe from Church to Church, and remember his Charge, and Feed the Flocke, and Preach the Gospel. Ye say, The Pope hath many heads, many eies, many hearts, many tongues, many hands, many eares, many shoulders. And thus, of your Pope ye make a Monster, with many eies, eares, tongues, and hearts of others, and none of his owne. A wise man sometime said: Improbè facit, qui, cùm alienis oculis omnia ei agenda sint, postulet aliorum vitas committi sibi: It is but lewdly don, if a man, that must ouersee all things with other mens eies, desire to haue the liues of others committed ouer to his charge. Titus Liuius.

God giue him eies to see, and eares to heare, and heart to vnderstand: that hee may know the time of Gods Visitation.

The Apologie, Chap. 22. Diuision, 1.

MUch lesse cause haue they to complaine of our departing, & to cal vs againe to be fellowes & friends with them, & to beleeue as they beleeue. Men say, that one Cobilon a Lacedemonian, when he was sent Ambassador to the King of the Persians, to treat of a league, & found by chance them of the Court playing at Dice, he returned straightway home againe, leauing his message vndon. And when he was asked why he had slacked to do the things which he had receiued by publik Cōmission to do, he made answer, he thought it should be a great reproch to his Cōmonwealth to make a league with Dicers. But if we shold cōtent our selues to returne to the Pope, and to his Errors, & to make a couenant, not onely with with Diers, but also with men farre more vngracious, and wicked, thē any Diers be: besides that this shold be a great blot to our good name, it should also be a very dangerous matter, both to kindle Gods wrath against vs, and to clog and condemne our owne soules for euer.

M. Harding.

(a) We flie wicked company, as he did.
(b) Vntruth. For where did Christ euer send vs to the B. of Rome?
(c) By this rule the Pope is left voide of life: for that he is diuided from Christ, that is the head.

Ye doe wel to compare your selues with this Cobilon. * For indeed(a) ye doe as he did. Ye were sent(b) by Christ to his Vicar, Peters Successour, to be fed and gouerned like sheepe vnder the shepheard. Christ and his Church be a perfect body, he the Head, the true beleeuers knit together in charity the members, each one in his order and degree. He is the vine, we the boughes and branches. (c) What member cut off from the body, liueth? What bough broken from the tree, groweth? As euery such member dieth, and bough withereth, so if ye remaine not in the Catholike Church, which is the body of Christ, ye draw no life from the head, ye haue no part of the Spirit that from thence redoundeth to euery member, ye haue no portion of the vital iuice that issueth from the root. Then what remaineth, but that ye be cast into the fire? For this cause S. Cyprian and other Fathers oftentimes haue said, that out and besides the Church, there is no saluation.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Christ neuer told vs, neither of any his Vicar Generall: nor of Rome: nor of Lateran: nor of Peters Chaire: nor willed vs to haue recourse to the Bishop of Rome, more then to any other seuerall Bishop. Therefor, M. Harding, we must reckon this amongst the rest of your vntruthes.

It is true that you say, A member diuided from the body cannot liue. But your conclusion is vntrue, like the rest. For Rome is not the Body, but onely a Member of that Body: Rome is not the Tree, but only a Bough: Rome is not the Head, but only a Spring: And therefore, seeing it is now diuided from that Body: seeing it is broken from that Tree: seeing it is cut off from that Head, it is no maruel, though it be seered, though it be withered, though it be left drie, without either Spirit or Life: as this day it appeareth to the eies of all them, that will behold it.

The Apologie, Chap. 22. Diuision. 2.

For of very truth, we haue departed from him, who we saw had blinded the whole World this many a hundred yeere: from him, who too far presumptuously was wont to say, He could not erre, & whatsoeuer he did, No mortall man had power to condemne him, neither King, nor Emperor, nor the whole Clergy, nor yet al the people in the World together, no though he should carry away with him a thousand Soules into Hel: from him who tooke vpon him Power to command, not onely men, but euen the Angels of God, to go, to returne, to lead Soules into Purgatory, and to bring thē backe againe when he list himself: who Gregory saith, without al doubt, is the very forerunner & standard bearer of Antichrist, and hath vtterly forsakē the Catholike Faith: From whom also these ringleaders of ours, who now with might and maine resist the Gospell, & the truth, which they know to be the truth, haue ere this departed euery one of their owne accord & good wil: and would euen now also gladly depart from him againe, if the note of inconstancy and shame, and their own estimation among the people, were not a let vnto them. In conclusion, we haue departed from him, to whom we were not bound, and who had nothing to say for himself but only, I know not what, Vertu or Power of the place where he dwelleth, and a continuance of Succession.

M. Harding.

*M. Hardings reuerend Fathers cōtinued twenty yee stogether in Hypocrisie.

As ye confesse your departing, so would God ye vnderstood your guilt.

Those reuerend Fathers and godly learned men, whose roomes ye hold wrongfully, whom it liked your interpreter to cal ringleaders, resist not the Gospel, but suffer persecution for the Gospel. Your Gospell, that is to say, your vile heresies & blasphemies, worthily they detest. Your new troth, that is to say, your false & wicked lies, they abhor. Neither euer departed they from any part of the duty of Catholike men, * by their owne accord and good will, as ye say. * But wherein they stept a side they were compelled by such feare, as might happen to a right constāt man, I mean the terror of death, which as Aristotle saith, of al terrible things is most terrible. Now because yet they finde the terrour of a guilty conscience,

conſcience,more terrible then death of their perſons,they intend, by Gods grace aſſiſting them,neuer ſo to ſteppe aſide againe, but rather to ſuffer whatſoeuer extremities. Whoſe blood, or the blood of any of them, if God to his honour ſhall at any time permit you to draw, which ſo much ye thirſt, ſoone after looke ye for the returning of the Iſraelites againe: that Text being then fulfilled, Completæ ſunt iniquitates Amorrhæorum.

Truth preuaileth.

Were not they wel aſſured of the truth,moſt certaine it is,whatſoeuer ye ſay,they would not make ſo fooliſh a bargaine as your ſelues doe, as to buy vaine eſtimation among the people, with the certaine loſſe of their ſoules.

Certaine of your friends (whom yee call Reuerend Fathers) ſuffer impriſonment (yee ſay) and perſecution for the Goſpell. Notwithſtanding, it is not ſo long ſithence the ſaid Reuerend Fathers were themſelues the Burners and Perſecutours of the Goſpell. Such complaint ſometime made Arius the wicked Heretike. For thus he writeth: I Arius, that ſuffer perſecution for the Truth, that euer preuaileth. Ruffinus, notwithſtanding he were a great Epiphanius. Διὰ τῆν ἀλήθειαν διωκόμενος. fauourer of the Origenian Heretikes, yet he ſaid euen as you ſay: Noſtra Fides perſecutionis Hæreticorum tempore, cùm in Sancta Alexandrina Eccleſia degeremus, in Carceribus & Exilijs, quæ pro fide inferebantur, probata eſt. While we lined in the Holy Church of Alexandria, in the time of the perſecution of Heretikes, our Faith was proued in Priſons and Baniſhments, which were laid vpon vs for the Faiths ſake. Hier. aduerſus Ruffin. Lib. 2. Vnto whom S. Hierome in his pleaſant maner anſwereth thus: Miror quòd non adiecerit, Vinctus Ieſu Chriſti: Liberatus ſum de ore Leonis; Alexandriæ ad beſtias depugnaui: Curſum conſummaui: Fidem ſeruaui: Supereſt mihi Corona Iuſtitiæ: I marueil much that he ſaid not further, Ruffinus the Priſoner of Ieſus Chriſt: I was deliuered out of the Lions mouth: I was throwen amongſt wilde beaſts at Alexandria: I haue paſt my Courſe: I haue kept the Faith: Now there remaineth for me the Crowne of Righteouſneſſe. Hier. eod. loco.

Thus the Wolfe, when he is reſtrained from ſpoile and rauen, may likewiſe complaine of Perſecution.

S. Hierome writing vnto Apronius of the ſtate of the Eaſt Churches, where he then lined, ſaith thus: Hic quieta ſunt omnia. For albeit they haue not left the poiſon of their hearts, yet they dare not open their wicked mouthes: But they are as the deafe Serpents, ſhutting vp their eares, and will heare nothing.* Hieronym. ad Apronium.

The ſaid Reuerend Fathers, that as now ſit ſo firmely of your ſide, not long agoe, were well contented both to maintaine, and to publiſh the contrary, as wel as you. Howbeit all this (you ſay) they did not of good wil, but only of feare, and of ſuch feare as may happen vpon a conſtant man. That is to ſay, of mere Hypocriſie and Diſſimulation, and by open flattering of their Prince.

And thus, to ſaue your Fathers from being Schiſmatikes, ye are wel content to make them Hypocrites. Thus ſay you. But your ſaid Reuerends themſelues would haue tolde you farre otherwiſe.

Doctour Gardiner of himſelfe ſaith thus: In the diſcuſſing and triall of the truth, I did not ſo eaſily content my ſelfe. But I ſo framed my ſelfe, that as it had beene in asking the iudgement of al my ſenſes, vnleſſe I perceiued that I firſt of al heard them with mine eares: ſmelled them with my noſe, ſaw them with mine eies, and felt them with mine hands, I thought I had not ſeene enough. Steph. Gardin. de vera Obed. He examineth the matter with al his ſenſes.

Againe he ſaith: This aduiſed conſideration hath pulled away all ſcrupulous doubts: And by the working of Gods grace, hath conueied and brought them into the light of the Veritie. Hee is perſwaded by the working of Gods grace.

And againe: Indeed, to tel you at a word, that compelleth me, that compelleth all men, euen the mightie power of the Truth. He is compelled by the power of the Truth.

Likewiſe ſaith Doctor Bonner, touching the ſame: The matter was not raſhly taken in hand: but with Iudgement and Wiſdome examined and diſcuſſed. Againe he ſaith: The Biſhop of Wincheſter had long agoe thorowly boulted this matter, euen vnto the branne. Doct. Bonner in Præfation. in veram Obed. He examineth the matter to the vttermoſt.

If theſe tales be true, M. Harding, then is your tale moſt vntrue. If ye wil iuſtifie your ſelfe, ye muſt needs condemne your Reuerend Fathers. Certainely your tales being directly contrarie, to make them both true, it is not poſſible.

But heere ye beginne to fray vs with your Prophetical! threats. If we once begin to touch your blood, then (ye ſay) your Louanian Iſrael immediately afterward ſhall be reſtored. I thinke you meane, Domus Iacob de populo Barbaro.

be done with mercy, as it ſhall ſæm good in his eies. But if ye preuaile againe, yæ ſhall preuaile to your owne confuſion. Well ye may repreſſe the Truth of God, as your Fathers haue often done before: but vtterly to abolish it ye ſhall neuer be able.

Chryſ. in Orat. contra Iudæos.

Such vaine hope had the Iewes in old times to recouer their Religion and Ceremonies, and vtterly to ouerthrow the Goſpell of Chriſt. They conſpired together, got Maſons and Carpenters, and began to caſt the Foundation, to repaire their Temple. Immediatly the Emperour Conſtantine raiſed a power, and ſet vpon them, and put them to the ſword, as Rebels and Traitours. Others that he ſpared aliue, he made ſlaues, and cut off ſome their tongues, ſome their hands, ſome their eares, ſome their noſes: ſome he burnt in the face, and ſo ſent them abroad for an example, from Towne to Towne, throughout the world.

Ambroſ. Lib. 5. Epiſt. 29.

Afterward, when the wicked Emperour Iulian, in deſpight of Chriſt, had giuen the Iewes leaue to build and repaire their Temple, as is ſaid before, and the Princes power aſſiſting them, no power ſæmed able to withſtand their purpoſe, then God himſelfe from Heauen aboue encountred with them. Earthquakes brake out, and ouerthrew their buildings. Lightnings fell downe, and burnt both the tooles in their hands, and the coats on their backs. Then was the Goſpell of Chriſt more beautifull, and more glorious, than euer it had bæn before.

And what is it to reſtore againe* Dagon into his place, but diſcreetly and aduiſedly to examine the ſtate of Idolatrie? And foraſmuch as the better the Errour of Idolatrie is ſeene, the better it is condemned, therefore it followeth further, They riſing in the morning, found Dagon lying flat vpon his face, before the Arke of the Lord.

Euen ſo M. Harding, if ye raiſe vp your Dagon once againe, once againe he ſhall come to ground, and ſhall ſquat his hands and fæt, and be vtterly diſmembred by the fall, and ſhall lie groueling, as a blocke, before the preſence of the Arke of God. There is no Counſell againſt the Lord.

Prouerb. 21.

The Noble Prince Ioſua, after that he had once, by Gods Commandement, deſtroied the City of Iericho, adiured all his poſterity in this ſort: Accurſed be he before the Lord, that ſhall ſtand vp, and reſtore againe this City of Iericho. In the death of his eldeſt ſonne he ſhall lay the foundation: and in the death of his yongeſt child he ſhall cloſe the gates.

Theodoretus ſaith: The wicked ſhall not be able to preuaile againſt God. But if they once get the ouer hand, yet ſhall they come downe againe, as it is written by the Prophet Eſay.

As for drawing of your blod, yæ næd not ſo greatly to complaine. The Goſpell of Chriſt is not blody. It hath hitherto preuailed without any one drop of all your blod. God giue you grace to repent, leſt your owne blod be vpon your owne head in the Day of the Lord. Fire, and Sword, and mercileſſe Crueltie, are the onely inſtruments of your Doctrine. And therefore yæ ſæme now to ſay in your blind hope, as curſed Eſau ſometime ſaid of his brother Iacob: Venient dies luctus patris mei, & occidam Iacobum fratrem meum: The daies ſhall come that my Father ſhall die: Then will I kill my Brother Iacob.

We will ſay vnto you with S. Auguſtine: Illi in vos ſæuiant, qui neſciunt quo cum labore verum inueniatur, & quàm difficilè caueantur errores: Let them perſecute you, and vſe cruelty ouer you, that know not what a labour it is to find the truth, and how hard it is to beware of errour.

Againe he ſaith: Nemo de præteritis inſultat Erroribus, niſi qui diuinam Miſericordiam expertus non eſt, vt careret Erroribus. We will ſay of you as S. Harding may we ſay to you. As for your blod, we long not for it.

The

The Apologie, Chap. 23. Diuision 1.

AND as for vs, we of al others haue most iustly left the Pope. For our Kings, yea euen they which with greatest Reuerence did follow and obey the Authority and Faith of the Bishops of Rome, haue long sithence found & felt the yoke and Tyranny of their kingdome. For the Bishops of Rome sometime tooke the Crowne from the Head of our King, Henrie the Second, and compelled him to put aside al his Princely Estate & Maiesty, & like a meere Priuate man, to come vnto their Legate with great submission & humility, so as al his Subiects might laugh him to scorne. More then this, they caused Bishops, and Monkes, & some part of the Nobilitie, to be in the field against our King Iohn, and set all the people at liberty from their oaths, wherby they ought allegeance to their king: & at last, wickedly, and most abominably, they bereaued the same King, not only of his kingdome, but also of his life. Besides this, they Excommunicated and cursed King Henry the Eight, that most famous prince, and stirred vp against him, sometime the Emperour, sometime the French King: and, as much as in them was, put our Realme in hazard, to haue beene a very prey, and spoile vnto the Enemie. Yet were they but fooles and mad men, to thinke, that either so mighty a Prince could be fraid with bugs and rattles, or else, that so Noble and great a Kingdome might so easily, euen at one mossell, be deuoured and swallowed vp.

Persecutiõ.

M. Harding.

Concerning the case betweene these three Kings of England, and the Bishops of Rome, for the time being, I say little. If they did wel, and the Bishops euill, they haue their reward, the other their punishment: If otherwise, or howsoeuer, each one at Gods iudgement shall haue his deserued measure. But be it granted, all were true ye say, though we know the more part to be false. What though King Henry the Second were euill treated of Pope Alexander, about the murdering of S. Thomas the Archbishop of Canturbury, & King Iohn likewise of that zealous & learned Pope Innocentius the third, &c.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Notwithstanding the Pope, as his maner hath beene, raise Commotion within the Realme, and arme the Subiects against their Soueraigne, and pull the Crowne Emperiall from his head, yet by your Doctrine, whosoeuer dare speake in his Princes right, is a fole, and killeth himselfe: as if there were no life or saluation, but only vnder the frantike gouernment of the Pope. Such obedience and loialty the Pope hath taught you towards your Prince.

The Apologie, Chap. 23. Diuision. 2.

And yet, as though al this were too little, they would needs haue made al the Realme Tributary to them, & exacted thence yeerely most vniust and wrongful Taxes. So deare cost vs the friendship of the Citie of Rome. Wherefore, if they haue gotten these things of vs by extortion, through their fraud & subtil sleights, we see no reason why we may not plucke away the same from them againe, by lawful waies, & iust meanes. And if our Kings in that darknesse & blindnesse of the former times, gaue them these things of their own accord & liberality, for Religions sake, being moued with a certaine opinion of their fained holines: now, when the ignorãce & error is espied out, may the Kings, their Successors, take them away againe, seeing they haue the same Authority the Kings their Ancestors had before. For the gift is void, except it be allowed by the wil of the giuer: & that cannot seeme a perfect Wil, which is dimmed and hindered by error.

The Popes Exactions.

M. Harding.

As for Peter pence, and what other sums of mony soeuer were yeerely paid to the Church of Rome, whichwere not by extortion and subtill sleights by the Popes gotten; as ye slander, but freely and dis-ſcreetly by the Prince & the Realme,* for a great cauſe granted. It is not a thing that ſo much grieueth the Pope, as your departure from the true Faith & Church doth, as it may well appeare by that which happened in Queene Maries raigne, in which time, although the Pope were acknowledged, yet himſelf neuer was knowen to haue demanded his Peter pence, or any other yeerely paiments againe. But what is this to your Schiſmes & Hereſies? This helpeth you nothing for anſwer to the haineus crime of your Apoſtaſie. The liberality of our Countrie to the See of Rome, which is the mother of al the West Churches, hath beene ſo ſmall in compariſon of certaine other Realmes, as with the honour of the Realme it might not ſeeme to finde it ſelfe grieued therewith. Yet heere ye ſet a Gnat to an Elephant, & make great adoe about a little. The Realme is not ſo much enriched by retaining that ſmal ſumme from the Pope, as it is diſhonoured by your vndiſcreet talke, ſauouring altogether of miſery & niggardneſſe. Ye ſhould haue ſhewed better ſtuffe at leaſt in the end of your Booke. The laſt Act of a Fable, by rules of Poetry, ſhould be beſt. Ye haue done like a fooliſh Poet, making your end ſo bad. The Pope ſeeketh not your money: he ſeeketh you. He ſeeketh the ſafety of your ſoules.* He ſeeketh, like a good Shepheard, how to reduce the ſtraied ſheepe of England vnto the fold of Chriſts Church. God grant we may ſee his good intent happily atchieued.

* No doubt. For the very cauſe hereof was auarice and treachery.

The Popes Exactions.

*But remember the old Verſe: Curia Romana nanon captat Quem ſine lana.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

The Pope hath enriched himſelfe, and gotten the treaſures of the World into his owne hands, not by fraud or guile, as you ſay, but only by the free liberality of Kings and Princes: Yet S. Auguſtine ſaith: Non poſſumus dicere, Nemo nos inuaſores arguit: Violentiæ nullus accuſat: Quaſi non maiorem interdum prædam à Viduabus Blandimenta eliciant, quàm Tormenta. Nec intereſt apud Deum, vtrùm vi, an circumuentione quis res alienas occupet; dummodò quoquo pacto teneat alienum: We cannot ſay, No man chargeth vs with extortion: No man accuſeth vs of violence. For often times of poore Widowes a man may get more by flattery, then by racking. And there is no difference before God, whether a man hold another mans goods by open violence, or by guile, if the thing that hee holdeth be not his owne.

Aug. de verbis Domin. ſecund. Mat. Ser. 19.

But how may this by your learning, M. Harding, be called the Liberality of the Prince? He is liberal, that is free in beſtowing of his owne. But you tel vs, that all the Temporal goods of the world are the Popes, and not the Princes: and that the Prince hath nothing, but by fauour and ſufferance of the Pope. Your Doctours words be theſe Papa eſt Dominus omnium Temporalium, ſecundùm illud dictum Petri, Dabo tibi omnia Regna mundi: The Pope is the Lord of all Temporall goods, according to that ſaying of S. Peter (that S. Peter neuer ſpake: for they are the words of the Diuel) I will giue thee all the Kingdomes of the World.

Archidiac. de Hæreſ. Ver. Et quia. tanta. fol. 15.

Another of your Doctors ſaith thus: Dicunt, quòd ſolus Papa eſt verus Dominus Temporalium, ita quòd poteſt auferre ab alio quod aliàs ſuum eſt. Sed Prælati cæteri, & Principes, non ſunt Domini, ſed Tutores, Procuratores, & Diſpenſatores: They ſay, that the Pope only is the very Lord of Temporall things, ſo that he may take from any man, that is his owne. As for other Prelates and Princes, they be the Ouerſeers, and Farmours, and Stewards of worldly things, but not the Lords. And Matthias Pariſienſis ſaith, that Pope Innocentius 3. called King Iohn the King of England, Vaſalbum ſuum, that is to ſay, his Feod-man, or his Tenant, meaning thereby, that the Realme of England was the Popes, and not the Kings. If all this be true, how can the Kings of England, in granting any thing to the Pope, bee counted liberall? Verily it is an eaſie kind of liberality, for a man to giue that thing that is not his owne.

Matth. 4. Citatur à Felino, de Offic. & Poteſt. Iudicis delegati. Ex parte. 1. Iohan. de Pariſijs, de Poteſt. Reg. & Papal. Matth. Pariſ. in Iohan.

But the Pope (ye ſay) ſetteth no more by al his reuenues out of Englād, then an Elephāt by a gnat & that therfore, during the whole time of Queene Mary, he neuer demanded of vs any maner of yeerely paiment. We muſt beare with your error heerein, M. Harding, for that ye neuer were the Popes Collector, and therefore not much acquainted with his Bookes. Otherwiſe ye might haue remembred, that Cardinal Poole, being not the Pope, but only a Legate, or meſſenger from the Pope, had a thouſand pounds paid him yeerely out of one Biſhopricke in England towards the prouiſion of his kitchin. Ye might haue remembred, that all the Biſhops of England paid the Pope the whole firſt fruits of al their Liuings, which, by anie common eſtimation, amounted to more ſomewhat then a Gnat. And although I were neuer neither skilful, nor curious in the Popes Collections, yet, as wel for the diſcouery of ſo great vntruth, as alſo for the better ſatisfaction of the Reader, I haue thought it good briefly and by the way, to touch what may be found in old Records of good credit, touching the ſame.

First therefore the Archbiſhop of Canturbury paid vnto the Pope for his Annates, or First fruits, at euery vacation, ten thouſand Florens, beſides other fiue thouſand Florens for the vſe and right of his Pall.

The Archbiſhop of Yorke paid likewiſe for his First fruits, ten thouſand Florens, and as it is thought, other fiue thouſand Florens for his Pall.

The Biſhop of Elie paid for his First fruits ſeuen thouſand Florens.

The

The Popes Exactions.

The Biſhop of London paid for his Firſt fruits three thouſand Florens.
The Biſhop of Winchester paid for his Firſt fruits xij. thouſand Florens.
The Biſhop of Exceter paid for his Firſt fruits ſix thouſand Florens.
The Biſhop of Lincolne paid for his Firſt fruits fiue thouſand Florens.
The Biſhop of Lichfield and Couentrie paid for his Firſt fruits three thouſand Florens.
The Biſhop of Hereford paid for his Firſt fruits one thouſand and eight hundred Florens.
The Biſhop of Sarisburie paid for his Firſt fruits foure thouſand and fiue hundred Florens. And ſo the reſt, each man accordingly after his rate.

Here is to be noted, that a Floren is an Italian Crowne, of the value of foure ſhillings and ſix pence ſterling.

Thus much I haue noted onely for example. By theſe few the diſcreet Reader may eaſily gheſſe the Exactions and paiments of the other Biſhops.

The whole value of the Popes Firſt fruits throughout Europe, as I finde in one Record (although very vnperfect, ſo that it lacketh ſundry great, knowen, and notable Biſhopricks, as Durhã, Carlile, Worceſter, Norwich, Bath, Chicheſter, which with many other moe Archbiſhopricks and Biſhopricks, as well within the Dominions of our Kings of England, as alſo in ſundry other Chriſtian Kingdomes and Countries, are left vnreckoned) ariſeth to the ſumme of two thouſand thouſand, foure hundred threeſcore thouſand, eight hundred, forty and three Florens. Legatio Adrian. Papæ 6. Excuſa Wittenb. Anno 1538.

Notwithſtanding ye make your Pope as big as an Elephant, yet, M. Harding theſe reckonings are ouer huge, in any reſonable proportion, to be reſembled to a Gnat. Here I leaue out the yeerely perquiſities that the Pope made of his Elections, Preuentiõs, Diſpenſations, Pluralities, Trialities, Totquots, Tolerations: for his Bulles, his Seales, his Signatures: for Eating Fleſh, for Egs, for White meat, for Prieſts Concubines, and for other like merchandiſe, I know not what. The ſumme whereof notwithſtanding amounteth to more then nine hundred thouſand Florens. As for your Smokefarthings and Peter pence, I make no reckoning, by the vile & contemptuous report whereof, ye ſhew your ſelfe, not only ignorant and vnſkilfull in that ye write, which argueth ſome follie, but alſo iniurious vnto your Countrey. Read Matthias pariſienſis, and ye ſhall finde both by what tyrannie & treacherie, and alſo what maſſes and intollerable ſummes of mony, the Popes Miniſters haue carried out of this Realme.

The Pope (ſaith he) being diſeaſed with a ſpirituall dropſie, that is to ſay, with an vnquenchable thirſt of mony, ſhooke out all the Prieſts purſes, and ſpoiled the Abbeis of al their Treaſures Anno. 1215.

Againe: The Pope made a Decree in Rome, that the goods and monies of all Biſhops and Prieſts, deceaſed within England, ſhould be taken to his vſe. Anno 1246.

The Pope gaue ſtrait commandement to the Biſhops of England, that all Parſons and Vicars, being reſident vpon their Benefices, ſhould pay yeerely vnto him the third part of all the values of their ſaid Benefices; And that all Parſons and Vicars being not reſident, ſhould pay vnto him yeerely the one full halfe part of their Benefices. All theſe paiments to continue during the ſpace of three whole yeeres. Which amounteth at the leaſt to the ſumme of a hundred and threeſcore and ten thouſand pounds. Eodem Anno.

The Biſhops of England, after great and forceable intreaty, agreed together to giue the Pope a Contribution of eleauen thouſand Markes. Anno 1247.

At that time the poore Prior of Wincheſter was forced to pay yeerely three hundred three ſcore and fiue Markes towards the furniture of the Popes Table. Eodem. Anno.

The Pope made a ſtrait Decree, that all Biſhops elect ſhould immediatly trauell out of England to Rome, to attend vpon his Holineſſe, as Matthias ſaith, Vt Romanorum loculos impregnaret, in ruinam Regni Angliæ: To ſtuffe the Romans purſſes, and to decay the Kingdome of England. Eodem Anno.

The Pope had the Tenths of all the Spirituall Liuings in England, during the ſpace of ten whole yeeres. Matthæ. Weſtmonaſterienſis. Anno 1301.

Ruſtandus the Popes Legate, exacted intollerable great paimẽts of the Clergy of England, in a Synod holden in London, as Matthias ſaith, Per ſcripta Papæ, plena iniurijs & iniquitate, quæ poſſent patientiſſimum cor virulenter ſauciare: Al this he did by the Authority of the Popes Letters, ful of iniuries and iniquity: which were able moſt cruelly to wound any heart, were it neuer ſo patient. The Biſhop of London & Worceſter anſwered the Popes Legate, that they would rather loſe their liues, then they would giue their conſent to ſo open iniurie, and ſeruitude, and intollerable oppreſſion of the Church. Anno 1255.

Principibus ſpoliare te Imperio omni quod obtines: What then, my Lord Pope, is it your minde to ſpoile all the Kings and Princes of the Weſt, of their Townes and Territories, or elſe to force them to beare you an yeerely tribute? Nay, in my iudgement it were farre meeter that they ſhould ſpoile you of all that Empire that you haue gotten. Thus wrot Laurentius Valla an hundred yeeres and more before Luther began to preach. And therefore whatſoeuer hee were, I trow, at leaſt he was no Lutheran. The Popes Exactions.

Rome (ye ſay) is the Mother Church of all the Weſt. And therefore, I trow, wee are bound to pay whatſoeuer paiments ſhe ſhall require. If we allow ſuch ſimple reaſons, then is the Pope likewiſe bound to pay to the Church of Hieruſalem whatſoeuer paiment ſhee ſhall require. For Hieruſalem is indeed the Mother Church, not only of the Weſt, but alſo of all the whole World. Howbeit, it is a cruell Mother that deuoureth vp her owne Children, S. Paul ſaith: Non debent filij parentibus theſaurizare, ſed parentes filijs: The children ought not to lay vp treaſure for their parents, but the parents for their children. But Iohannes Sarisburienſis in his Polycraticon ſaith: Roma nunc non tam matrem exhibet, quàm nouercam: Rome now ſheweth her ſelfe not ſo much a naturall Mother, as a Stepdame. For ſhee ſpoileth and deuoureth her Children. 2. Corint. 12. Lib. 6. Cap. 24.

This defender (ye ſay) in making his end ſo bad, hath plaied the part of a fooliſh Poet. Yeere M. Harding, we haue good cauſe to thinke your Diuinity is waxen cold, ſeeing you are thus driuen to plead in Poetrie. But may we beleeue the Church of Rome is of late growne ſo Holy, that money is now become the vileſt part of all her Play? Certainely if your Pope once loſe his money, all his Plaiers will ſone fit a cold. One of your owne Doctors ſaith thus: Ceſſante tali redditu, qui maximus eſt, attenta hodierna Tyrannide, Sedes Apoſtolica contemneretur: If this rent (of Simony) which is very great, were once ſtaid, conſidering the Tyranny of Princes that now is, the Apoſtolike See of Rome would be deſpiſed. In which words thus much is alſo to be noted by the way, that whatſoeuer Prince will not ſuffer the Pope to take what him liſteth, muſt be taken, and iudged as a Tyrant. Therefore Iohannes Andreæ, one of your greateſt Canoniſts, ſaith thus: Roma fundata fuit à Prædonibus, & adhuc de primordijs retinet: dicta Roma, quaſi rodens manus. Vnde verſus, Roma manus rodit: Quos rodere non valet odit: The firſt foundation of Rome was laid by Theeues: and hitherto ſhe fauoureth ſtill of her beginning, and is called Roma, quia rodit manus. Thereof commeth the common verſe, Rome biteth you by the hands. And whom ſhe cannot bite, them ſhe hateth. Felin. de Offic. & Poteſtat. Iudicis delegati. Ex parte 1. In Sexto. de Elect. & Elect. poteſt Fundament. In Gloſſa.

The ſtate of the Roman Popedom ſprung firſt of money, and encreaſed by money, and ſtandeth now neither by Truth of Doctrine, nor by ſeuerity of Diſcipline, nor by Prayer, nor by Holineſſe, nor by ought elſe, but onely by money. Set money apart, and the Pope is equall with other Biſhops. Codrus Vrceus ſaith: Pontifex Maximus, ſi non Virtute, tamen Pecunia: The Pope is the greateſt Biſhop, although not in Vertue, yet at leaſt in money. Therefore we may ſay of the Pope as Diphilus ſometime ſaid of Pompeius: Noſtra miſeria Magnus es. Codrus Vrceus Serm. 1. Cicero ad Attic. Lib. 2.

Baptiſta Mantuanus, ſpeaking of the ſtate of Rome, ſaith thus:

Venalia nobis
Templa, Sacerdotes, Altaria, Sacra, Coronæ,
Ignis, Thura, Preces, Cœlum eſt venale, Deúſque.

Amongſt vs in Rome, Churches, Prieſts, Altars, Maſſes, Crownes, Fire, Incenſe, Prayers, and Heauen are ſet to ſale. Yea God himſelfe amongſt vs may be had for money. Budæus in Pandectis.

Budæus ſaith: Sanctiones Pontificiæ non moribus regendis vſui ſunt: ſed propemodum dixerim, Argentariæ faciendæ Authoritatem videntur accommodare: The Popes, Canons ſerue not now to guide mens liues: but if I may ſo ſay, they ſerue rather to make a banke and to get money.

Bernard of Clunice ſaith thus:

Roma dat omnibus omnia dantibus: Omnia Romæ

Rome giueth all things to them that giue all things: All things at Rome will paſſe for money.

Euen in the Popes owne Decretals ye ſhall finde it noted thus: Roma eſt Caput Auaritiæ. Idcò omnia ibi venduntur: Rome is the Head of all couetous trechery. And therefore all things there are ſet to ſale. In ſexto. de Elect. & Electi. Poteſt. Fundament. In Mar.

full disobedience, and Treason committed against his Prince, he had for aide and succour fled to Rome, and saw that nothing would be wrought there without money, thus hee wrote thereof to the Bishop of Menze: Mater Roma facta est Meretrix, & prostituta est pro mercede: Rome our Mother is become an Harlot, and for money and Meed laieth her selfe to sale. To be short, ye know that our Fathers, long sithence, were wont to say,

In Epistola ad Archiepiscop. Moguntinum.

Curia Romana non captat Ouem sine lana:

The Court of Rome will not take the sheepe without the fleece.

Therefore, M. Harding, your Poet concluded in good order, and went not so far besides his Rules. For money is both the First and the Middle, and the Last Act of al your Fable.

Matth. 25. Christ sometime thrust such Buyers, Sellers, Brokers, and Scorsers, out of the Temple: But contrariwise, ye haue receiued in Buyers and Sellers, and thrust out Christ, and so haue turned the House of God into a Caue of Theeues. S. Paul saith thus Actor. 20. vnto the people of Ephesus: Argentum & Aurum nullius concupiui: I haue desired no mans Gold or Siluer. Upon which words, in the Glosse it is noted thus: Per hoc Lupi cognoscuntur, qui talia concupiscunt: Hereby they that desire such things, are knowen for Wolues.

1. qua. 1. Nunquam Diuinatio S. Hierome saith: Quia Prophetæ pecuniam accipiebant, Prophetia eorum facta est Diuinatio: For that the Prophets fell to taking of money, therefore their Prophecie was become a Soothsaying: that is to say, it was of the Diuell, and not of God.

Thus, M. Harding, to conclude, whatsoeuer fault yee can finde with the Defenders Poetry, verily, by the iudgement of your neerest friends, Money was the best part of all your Fable.

The Recapitulation of the Apologie.

THus thou seest, good Christian Reader, it is no new thing, though at this day the Religion of Christ be entertained with despights and checks, being but lately restored, and as it were, comming vp againe anew; for somuch as the like hath chanced both to Christ himselfe, and to his Apostles: yet neuertheless, for feare thou maiest suffer thy selfe to be led amisse, and to be seduced with these exclamations of our Aduersaries, we haue declared at large vnto thee the very whole maner of our Religion, what our Faith is of God the Father, of his onely Sonne Iesus Christ, of the Holy Ghost, of the Church, of the Sacraments, of the Ministery, of the Scriptures, of Ceremonies, and of euery part of Christian Beleefe. We haue said, that we abandon and detest, as plagues and poisons, all those old Heresies, which either the sacred Scriptures, or the Ancient Councels haue vtterly condemned: That we cal home againe as much as in vs lieth, the right Discipline of the Church, which our Aduersaries haue quite brought into a poore and weake case: That wee punish all licentiousnes of life, and vnruinesse of maners, by the old and long continued Lawes, and with as much sharpenesse as is conuenient, and lieth in our power: That we maintaine still the state of Kingdomes, in the same condition & state of honour, wherein wee found them, without any diminishing, or alteration, reseruing vnto our Princes their Maiesty & worldly preeminence, safe & without empairing, to our possible power: That we so haue gotten our selues away frō that Church, which they had made a Den of Theeues, and wherin nothing was in good frame, or once like to the Church of God, and which, by their own cōfessions, haderred many waies, euen as Lot in times past gat him out of Sodome, or Abraham out of Chaldee, not vpon a desire of contention but by the warning of God himself: And that we haue searched out of the Holy Bible, which we are sure cannot deceiue vs, one sure forme of Religion, and haue returned againe vnto the Primitiue Church of the Ancient Fathers and Apostles, that is to say, to the ground and beginning of things, vnto the very foundations and headsprings of Christs Church.

Neither

Neither haue we tarried in this matter for the Authority or consent of the Tridentine Councell, wherein we saw nothing done vprightly, nor by good order: where also euery body was sworne to the maintenance of one man: where Princes Embassadors were contemned: where not one of our Diuines could be heard, and where parts taking and ambition was openly, and earnestly procured and wrought: but as the Holy Fathers in former time, and as our predecessors haue commonly done, we haue restored our Churches by a Prouincial Conuocation, & haue cleane shaken off, as our duty was, the yoke & tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, to whom we were not bound: who also had no maner of thing like, neither to Christ, nor to Peter, nor to an Apostle, nor yet like to any Bishop at al. Finally, we say, that we agree amongst our selues, touching the whole iudgement and chiefe substance of Christian Religion, and with one mouth, and with one spirit doe worship God, and the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Wherefore, O Christian and Godly Reader, forsomuch as thou seest the Reasons and Causes, both why we haue restored Religion and why we haue forsaken these men, thou oughtest not to maruell though wee haue chosen to obey our Master Christ, rather then men. S. Paul hath giuen vs warning that we should not suffer our selues to be carried away with such sundry learnings, and to flie their companies, specially such, as would sow debate and variance, cleane contrary to the Doctrine which they had receiued of Christ and the Apostles.

Long sithence haue these mens crafts and trecheries decaied and vanished & fled away at the sight and light of the Gospel, euen as the Owle doth at the Sun rising. And albeit their trumpery bee built vp, and reared as high as the Skie, yea euen in a moment, and as it were of it selfe, falleth it downe againe to the ground and commeth to naught.

For you must not thinke that all these things haue come to passe by chance or at aduenture: It was Gods pleasure, that against all mens wils welnigh, the Gospel of Iesus Christ should be spread abroad thorowout the whole World at these daies. And therfore men following Gods commandement, haue of their owne free will resorted vnto the doctrine of Iesus Christ.

And for our parts, truly we haue sought hereby, neither Glory, nor Wealth, nor Pleasure, nor Ease. For there is plenty of all these things with our Aduersaries.

And when we were of their side, wee enioied such Worldly commodities much more liberally and bountifully, then we doe now.

Neither do we eschew Concord and Peace. But to haue peace with man, we may not be at war with God. The name of Peace is a sweet and pleasant thing, saith Hilarius: But yet beware, saith he, Peace is one thing, and bondage is another. For if it should so be, as they seeke to haue it, that Christ should be commanded to keepe silence, that the truth of the Gospell should be betraied, that horrible errors should be cloked, that Christian mens eies should be bleared, and that they might be suffred to conspire openly against God: this were not a Peace, but a most vngodly couenant of seruitude. There is a Peace, saith Nazianzene, that is vnprofitable: againe, there is a Discord, saith he, that is profitable. For we must conditionally desire Peace, so far as is lawfull before God, and so far as wee may conueniently. For otherwise Christ himselfe brought not Peace into the World, but a Sword. Wherefore if the Pope will haue vs reconciled to him, his duty is first to be reconciled to God: For from thence, saith Cyprian, spring Schismes and Sects, because men seeke not the Head, and haue not their Matth. 10.
